S. B. ADKINS & CO.
Printers & Binders,
RICHMOND, VA.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS * FRUSTRA * NISI 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 1, 1921. No. 1

The New Year

But once I pass this way,
And then--no more.
But once--and then the Silent Door
Swings on its hinges,--
Opens . . . closes,--
And no more
I pass this way.
So while I may,
With all my might
I will essay
Sweet comfort and delight
To all I meet upon the Pilgrim Way.
For no man travels twice
The Great Highway
That climbs through Darkness up to Light
Through Night
To Day.

—John Oxenham

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-second year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1920. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., RECTOR

CHATHAM Episcopal Institute

FOR GIRLS CHATHAM, VA.

Rt. Rev. A. M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Episcopal Visitor
Rev. C. Orlando Fruden, Rector. Beautiful and healthful location. 10-acre campus. Modern equipment. Athletics, Gym. College Preparatory. Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Catalog.
Mrs. Elizabeth May Willis, B.P., Principal, Box 13

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Love will take care of politeness."

The workshop of character is everyday life.

"God has eternity in which to adjust the egnities."

Peter believed first in Christ because He believed in Andrew.

God never helped any one tomorrow. He is a very present help.

Let us go into the next life having learned how to be faithful.

If you fear, cast all your care on God; that anchor holds.—Tennyson.

The law of service is taken from the very heart of God; nothing else is great.—Selected.

God suits His revelations to man's condition—angels appeared to the shepherds, a star to the astrologers.

"Time goes," you say? Ah, no!
Alas, Time stays; we go.
—Austin Dobson.

Let us be thankful, thankful for the prayers
Whose gracious answers were long, long delayed,
That they might fall upon us unawares,
And bless us, as in greater need we prayed.
—James Whitcomb Riley.

A note does not bind until we endorse it. It is not feeling the temptation, but yielding, that is sinful.—Babcock.

Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas gave a beautiful interpretation of the word "responsibility" to a few friends at Northfield; "responsibility—man's response to God's ability."

With a world that needs so much, and with a God Who knows its needs and Who loves it and pities it so tenderly, there must be in the long year some approach of His life to its life, some coming of the Lord!—Phillips Brooks.

No distant Lord have I
Loving afar to be
Made flesh for me He cannot rest
Until He rests in me.

I need not journey far,
This dearest Friend to see;
Companionship is always mine,
He makes His home with me.
—Selected.

Whether the time be slow or fast,
Enemies, hand in hand,
Must come together at the last
And understand.
No matter how the die is cast,
Or who may seem to win—
We know that we must love at last—
Why not begin?
—Winter Bynner.

Emerald Hodgson[illegible]

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR N[illegible]
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUT[illegible]
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best[illegible] be had for development of Nurses. For[illegible] formation, address,
REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE,[illegible]

St. Christopher's Schoo[illegible]

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for [illegible] under the auspices of the Episcopal Church [illegible] Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 192[illegible] Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmas[illegible]

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course or graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLES TOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Epis[illegible] in the Shenandoah Valley. College prepara[illegible] Courses. Music and Art. Athletics. O[illegible] Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL
(Former Principal Stuart H[illegible]

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Founded by Bishop Alonzo Potter in 1862.

Special students admitted. Privilege of attending course of special study at the University of Pennsylvania.

For information address the Rev. George G. Bartlett, S. T. D., Dean, 5000 Woodland Avenue.

National Cathedral School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof buildings in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College Preparatory. Advanced and Special Courses. Music and Art.

The Bishop of Washington,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal.
Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head
Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

ST. MARY'S, An Episcapal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector, Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

All our works, even the greatest, are little in relation to the world's need; all our works, even the least, are great in relation to the doer's faithfulness. If you do your work with complete faithfulness, you are making just as genuine a contribution to the substance of the universal good as the most brilliant worker the world contains.—Selected.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 1, 1921. No. 1

THE NEW YEAR.

There is a little book by Arnold Bennett, published some years ago, which has a title that is a good text for the New Year. It is called "How to Live On Twenty-four Hours a Day."

In the greatest of imaginable gifts we are all equally rich. The stuff of which everything in life must be woven is time. Given time, the courageous spirit can accomplish almost anything. When time comes to an end, everything that we possess, so far as this world is concerned, is valueless. In each day of this coming year every one of us has twenty-four hours. We can waste its golden moments, or we can coin them into the riches of real achievement.

It is by no chance circumstance that the results of life are ordered. The strong will which follows the clear vision can reach ends which, to the slack spirit, seem impossible. On the threshold of the New Year we need to pause and determine for ourselves, each one, whether we shall be unworthy spendthrifts or good stewards of the priceless gift of time.

THE ENDING OF THE YEAR.

For sensitive consciences there is always a certain sadness in the ending of a year. Men whose ideals have been high look back over the days and realize, both for themselves and for the nation, that the spiritual successes seem small and that the bulwarks of old evils are still unshattered. High crusades that rode forth in the morning of the year with banners flying turn back with torn flags and broken swords. Ignorance and selfishness have proved at many points too obdurate for the forces of the spirit to overcome. Then with this realization there comes the temptation to listen to the pessimistic voices which speak of the hopelessness of ever accomplishing anything very idealistic in this actual world of ours. "There is too much vague talk of 'ideals,'" says the man whom experience has made cynical. "We live in a hard world. We deal with a human nature that is hard, too. Let us take it and recognize it for what it is."

Human nature! With what gloomy fatalism we are bidden often to interpret those words! Men use them sometimes as a cloak for moral apathy, and as an excuse for discouraging great hopes when some new spiritual standard is lifted up. The great reformer comes who would try to aid human society to build its relationships according to the pattern of the Kingdom of God. Men shrug their shoulders and say, "He does not know human nature." The statesman consecrated to a mighty purpose rises with a vision of a world redeemed from war, and men laugh and say, "Let him look at human nature, and not be a fool in the face of old facts."

But the message of the Christmas season through which we have been passing is expressly this: that into the old life there has come a new life; into the old nature has come the new nature of the Christ; and that nature we, through the gift of God, are to hope to share. The glory of the Christian faith is not simply that the Child Jesus was born in Bethlehem, but that because of that a new glory of the divine ideal has been born in men. The business of the Christian is to take the old human nature of the brute, the long inheritance of the grossness of man's beginning, and subdue it by the power of the new nature that came in Jesus. There is to be a second nature that is to overcome the first, the impulse of a higher faith to lift us from our ancient limitations. The incarnation is no theological phrase. It is the flag of an eternal hope in the higher destinies of mankind, worked out with new courage into practical betterment every day and everywhere.

A NEEDED FACTOR FOR THE CHURCH'S GROWTH.

The Sunday after Christmas was St. Stephen's Day, and in the thought of the life of that hero-martyr, there is a stirring suggestion which links itself with the very particular realization of a present need in the Church and a way to meet it.

In the last edition of the Living Church Annual, the review of the year 1920 shows that the increase in communicants for the year was only 11,827, or slightly over 1 per cent. Up to a half-dozen years ago the annual gain was slightly in excess of 2 per cent. This past year, as also in the year before, the rate of increase of the Church has fallen below the none too creditable rate of a few years earlier.

Many reasons might be assigned for this, but what we are mainly concerned about is to try to find a way to change it. One way is the way which the life of St. Stephen teaches. He was chosen in the early Church to be a deacon. All he was supposed to do was to take care of the "serving of tables," which the apostles wanted to be relieved from. He was to superintend the distribution of the alms. It was what we should call a rather secular sort of business. It was a matter of the administration of the congregation's practice of good works which any well-intentioned and tactful person could take care of without possessing unusual spiritual gifts.

The ordinary man might have been content with the routine of his assignment. He would have said, "I am not responsible for spiritual ministry, and I will leave that to those who are responsible." But Stephen did not have that sort of routine mind. We find him presently preaching in the synagogue. We find him going out to bear his eager, voluntary witness to the glory of his Master. He was not going to be content only with "serving tables" either. He could say, as St. Paul afterwards said, and as every Christian ought to say, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

Is there not a message here for laymen in the Church? The trouble with the Church is that so many people are content to draw a sharp line between the few practical matters in which they are willing to serve the Church, and a more vital spiritual ministry. They imagine that the clergy, because they are especially ordained, are the only ones who have anything to do with evangelization.

They are the only ones whose business it is to try to recruit other disciples for Christ. It is not natural, they think, for anybody else to speak on religious themes, or to pray in public, or to be fishers for the souls of men.

That wrong idea is paralyzing the growth of the Church. Instead of every Christian communicant being a center for the definite propagation of Christian influences, the work of the Church's recruiting is passed back to the few. The conception of lay responsibility is shrunken and unworthy. If the Church is mightily to grow, her laymen and laywomen must realize their own priesthood of influence. They, like St. Stephen, must add to such responsibility for the Church's temporalities as may be given to them. The adventurous desire to be witness-bearers and winners of souls for Christ.

THE PROMISE WHICH WAITS.

"On earth, peace." Centuries ago the Christmas angels proclaimed that promise, but it has never yet been fulfilled among the restless peoples of this world. The pages of history for 2,000 years are dark with the record of war. In our own generation, when we had built a civilization that seemed secure, and that was supposed to be Christian, the world was thrown into chaos by the most dreadful war of all; and even now its effects, like the after-shocks of some vast earthquake, convulse with agonies whole provinces of our world.

Why is it that the promise still seems in vain? Is it because God's purpose has changed, or His will is insufficient? No; it is because the factor of humanity's deliberate co-operation has never yet been made obedient. God will not over-ride the freedom of the human will; He will not force us into redemption, either for the individual soul or for the life of peoples. His will for peace is true and dependable. He sets in motion in the conscience of men impulses which are powerful enough to bring about results if we will believe in these, organize them, and let them have unhindered way. The mightiest possibility for our world today is the chance so to organize our international relationships that we may really bring about that peace which the angels promised long ago. In the mood of weariness which succeeded the war, we have been in peril of losing the faith that should make us able to seize our opportunities, but even yet the hour is not wholly passed. If the conscience of America will insist that some way be found to throw America's force into plans for a world reorganization, the hope of peace can be built into fact.

Book Notices

BOOK NOTICES.

The Living Church Annual and Churchman's Almanac for 1921. Morehouse Publishing Co., Milwaukee. Paper, 85 cents; cloth, $1.15; postage extra.

It is needless to say more than that the Annual for the new Church year is out; packed full, as always, with all the facts, names, addresses, statistics and general information which every clergyman and up-to-date layman needs constantly to have at his elbow. The lessons in the Calendar are those authorized for trial use during this year. All the new bishops smile upon us from its opening pages, and the "Annual Cyclopedia of the Church," covering forty pages, is worthy of its title. The book is a marvel of completeness and accuracy.

Milnor Jones; Deacon and Missionary. By Bishop Joseph Blount Cheshire. The Carolina Churchman, Raleigh, N. C. Paper, 50 cents.

Bishop Cheshire writes attractively of an eccentric but devoted man who worked for a number of years after his own fashion in the mountains of North Carolina and made a multitude of friends, and not a few enemies, for the Church as well as for himself. He hadn't it in him to become the conventional parson of a conventional parish, even after passing through a conventional theological seminary, but was wise enough to find the environment suited to his undoubted capacities and to labor there according to his desires and convictions as a pioneer. There is room in the Lord's vineyard for such men, even if they do not conform to type, if so be they find it and have sufficient strength of character to abide therein and make their individuality tell.

The Awaiting World. A United Thank Offering Pageant. By the Rev. Carroll Lund Bates. Written for and published by the Woman's Auxiliary. 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Mr. Bates has written a number of pageants which have met with much favor. This was written by him at the request of a prominent officer of the Woman's Auxiliary to present in a vivid way the call of the United Thank Offering of 1922, and has met with approval in that organization. The waiting world, the voice of Holy Scripture, the Church, the spirit of Christian womanhood, and of past united offerings and of the next to come, and several Christian virtues, are among the characters represented, and the action as well as the text seems dignified and devout. It may be recommended to Auxiliary branches that desire a graphic representation of the plea of the Blue Box.

Christian Practice. By Selden Peabody Delany, D. D. New York. Edwin S. Gorham. Pp. 242.

This book, by the associate rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, is written, according to its preface, to "supply in convenient form simple directions for the faithful on the practical side of Christian living." It is made up of that curious compound of truth and error which is characteristic of the pastoral teaching of the Roman Church. There are many paragraphs, sometimes as many as three or four pages together, which are thoroughly evangelical—pure waters from the fountain of Holy Scripture. Then invariably comes the admixture of error, born of priestcraft and superstition, to becloud and adulterate the whole. And the worst of it is that these strange teachings are given under a false cloak. When a minister of this Church tells his people what "the Church" teaches in regard to details of faith and practice, the guileless minds of simple folk in the pews suppose him to mean the particular Church in which he is an ordained minister and to whose instruction in spiritual things they have submitted themselves. It is a serious matter when this confidence is betrayed; as, for instance, in such instructions as these:

"God bestows it (the gift of forgiveness) upon us in the same way as He bestows upon us our daily bread. He bestows it through the mediation of human agencies. We have no revealed ground for supposing that God gives us the grace of forgiveness directly. . . . But just as it is necessary for us to work in order to earn our daily bread, so is it necessary that we should do something to win God's forgiveness."

"She (St. Mary) of course is in a distinct position of honor, a position which differs from that of all other saints, because she was taken up by God into the very counsels of the Godhead—taken up, one might say, into the divine family of the three Persons. God made her an instrument in His merciful work of redemption when He chose her to be the mother of His Son; she was the means by which our salvation was accomplished. Therefore she stands in quite a different relationship to us from the other saints. It is not false emphasis that has led the Church in her devotional formularies and in her offices to use the Hail Mary immediately after the Our Father. There is nothing inconsistent nor heretical in that, for it is true that as God is our Father through our incorporation into the body of His Son, so Mary is our mother. She is the mother of our new nature that we have through Christ—the mother of our regenerate life."

"I remember seeing an Irish play some time ago—I can't remember the name of it—in which the heroine spoke to St. Patrick through his picture on the wall before her. She not only asked him to pray for her, but she spoke to him most vociferously, begging him over and over again to help her horse to win the race. There had been some reason why she had been compelled to remain at home, instead of going to the races; and she spent her time begging St. Patrick to help her horse win. How Irish, you may say! Yes, but how Catholic and Christian! It is what we all should do. The saints are just as near to us as their pictures on the walls, and we may go to them at any moment of trial or difficulty. They have been through the struggle; they know the difficulties that beset us; they can help us and can enable us to profit by their experience."

Not all of Dr. Delany's book is as untrue, as nearly blasphemous, or as supremely silly as this; but these excerpts show to what extremes men will go when they leave the word of God to follow cunningly devised fables.

Pilate Gave Sentence. By C. M. Cresswell. George W. Jacobs & Co. Philadelphia.

A novel; the scene laid at Jerusalem at the time of the crucifixion. We greatly dislike novels of this character and cannot recommend them; though one who has read it says this is less objectionable than some.

The Call of the Word. By a Circuit Rider. J. P. Bell Co., Inc., Lynchburg, Va. $1.

Designed to show that a sufficient "call" to preach the gospel is to be found in God's word, without waiting for a mysterious "special call."

EXTRACT FROM "A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCHES": FROM THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

. . . What is the work to which our Master summons us? It is to help men everywhere to realize the kind of life that befits free personalities who accept the standards of Jesus Christ. We must show men not by word only, but by deed, what Christian discipleship means for men living in such a world and facing such conditions as confront us today—what it means for the family, what it means for industry, what it means for the relation of race to race and of nation to nation.

We must show them what it means for the family. In the home God has given us in miniature a picture of what He means His world to be—a society in which the welfare of each is the concern of all and he is greatest who serves most. The home is the nursery of religion and where family life is neglected, the family altar forgotten, the sanctity of marriage questioned, the opportunity lost which the Lord's day affords for rest, fellowship and spiritual nurture, and pleasure substituted for duty as the law of life, there can be small hope of producing men and women who will be Christian in their business and their civic life.

We must show men what Christian discipleship means for industry. Whether it be manufacturing or commerce, farming or finance, all forms of business are primarily concerned with human personalities, in whom Christ's Church has a rightful interest, and need for their true success the mutual confidence and helpfulness His Spirit inspires. We must make human welfare our test of business success and judge the machinery of industry by what it does for those who use it. We must grant to those who labor the same freedom of association and representation which those who own capital claim for themselves and require of both alike that they use the right of association, freely granted, for the interest of all those whose welfare is dependent upon the product of their work.

We must show what discipleship means for the relation between men of different races. Deeper than all differences of color is our kinship of spirit in the family of God. This kinship requires mutual respect and the free expression of the aspirations of personality, and should lead to the persistent endeavor on the part of all to secure justice and fair dealing in all human relationships and to safeguard the rights of all peoples to their share in our common heritage of Christian democracy.

We must show what discipleship means for our international relations. With all the power we can command we must protest against the claim that the nation is exempt from the obligation of the moral law which controls the life of the individual. We bear witness that God requires of the nation as of the individual to do justly and to love mercy, and that the nation which violates that law in its dealings with other nations He will hold to account. Of the nation as of the individual it is true that the way of love and trust is the way of salvation, and that he that would be greatest must be servant of all. We welcome, therefore, the development of a League of Nations which shall be in truth an association of free peoples for the achieving of world peace, for mutual disarmament, and for constructive service, and we call upon our own nation to join with other nations in moving along this new pathway of hope.

Above all, we must show what Christian discipleship means for the individual human life. Home and business and nation and race will be what the men and women who compose them make them. Most important, therefore, of all the responsibilities that rest upon the Church today is to educate men and women and children in the meaning of the gospel and its consequences for the life of the individual and of society. Through our churches and Sunday schools, in our schools and colleges, by the printed and the spoken word, by all the avenues through which mind touches mind, we must bring our Christian message home with convincing power.

But that our witness may be effective, our conduct must match our profession. A self-centered church cannot rebuke the selfishness of business. A self-complacent church is helpless before the arrogance of race. A church which is itself the scene of competition and strife is impotent in face of the rivalries of the nations. When men see Christians forgetting their differences in common service, then, and not till then, will they believe in Christ's power to break down the barriers between classes and between races.

We welcome, therefore, the voice that comes to us across the sea from our fellow Christians in Lambeth, joining with us in calling the churches to more complete unity. We reciprocate the spirit of their most Christian utterance. We believe with them that we are already one in Christ and are persuaded that the way to manifest the spiritual unity which we now possess, and to make possible its increase in ever-enlarging measure, is for all those who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ to join in discharging the common duties whose obligation all alike recognize.

In this hour fraught with the possibilities of healing or of disaster, one thing only can save the nations, and that is a will to united service, born of faith in the triumph of the good. To this faith we summon all men in the name of Him who died that we might live, and who is able by His spirit to bring out of the failure and disappointment of the present a far more abundant and satisfying life. In this faith we would rededicate ourselves to the service of the living God, whose kingdom is righteousness and peace and joy.

TURNING OVER LEAVES.

Alan Pressley Wilson.

As the old year slips quietly into oblivion and the new silently takes its place, we have gotten into the habit of looking backward over the past and forward into the future: we seek to learn where we have made mistakes in the months that have gone and try to correct them in those that are to come. We call this custom by various names, such as "Making new resolutions," "Turning over a new leaf," etc., etc. By whatever name we call this custom, the principle is the same; i. e., what the business man knows as taking account of stock."

In every business house the latter part of the month of December is utilized in making an inventory of the goods that remain on hand in order that an annual trial balance may be struck that the owner or proprietor of the enterprise may know just where he stands in a financial way. He wants to learn what and how much he has made in the year that has gone: what goods have been salable and what have been on the shelves so long that they have become shop-worn. The latter he knows comprise the kind he should avoid in the year ahead of him, because he recognizes that his customers do not call for such goods.

In like manner we strike a trial balance of our life's possessions and acquisitions: we seek out those habits we have formed in order that we may know whether they have been profitable to us through this year of our journey of life, or whether they have hindered our greatest progress therein.

"I am going to turn over a new leaf," each one says to himself, and this is exactly what the merchant does in his ledger. He balances each account on the old page and carries the balance to the new page. In reading, when we have mastered the contents of one page, we turn over and begin on a new one. This one is clean and unmarked by finger-prints, or the much more undesirable habit some have of cleaning the finger-nails on the corners or the making of dog-ears.

In the fall and early winter the trees that have been green with foliage begin to show the turning leaf. Red, brown and yellow with tints of bronze appear, and, for a time, are very beautiful to behold. Then they fall and still present a beautiful appearance on the ground. Then the leaf withers and turns into what we know as leaf-mold, and, later, this serves as a fertilizer, and the same substance appears in the form of new leaves when gentle spring induces the trees to bud and to put on a new dress in honor of the young season. Thus the tree provides a of a memorial fund to the late Archdeacon Stuck, of Alaska, and the reconstruction of many of our buildings in Liberia.

The Diocese of Western Michigan notified the department that after January 1 it would be able to prosecute its diocesan missionary work without the financial aid that has heretofore gone to it from the Church at large. A number of resignations were accepted from the domestic missionary staff, and wherever possible, upon the nomination of the Bishop, appointments were made to fill the vacancies. As the training of a native staff of clergy in Haiti is essential to the development of the Church's work there, an appropriation was provided for the purchase of theological books in French. Bishop Aves was authorized to complete the present building of Hooker School in Mexico City. The slight increase in salaries of missionaries in Porto Rico and adjacent islands necessitated by the present high cost of living was continued.

The department received with much satisfaction and hearty thanks a gift of $6,000 from an eastern Churchman for the erection of a residence for our missionaries in Changsha, China. Approval was given to a proposal to secure, if possible, a second architect for the mission in China. The experiment initiated a year ago in sending Mr. J. V. W. Bergamini has proved so successful that it is now proposed to extend it and thereby affect further economies and efficiency in the erection of new buildings. Bishop Graves was authorized to proceed with the erection of a new residence and a new school for girls in Yangchow, China. The necessary money will be provided from the income received in ground rents from valuable property owned by the Church in the city of Shanghai.

Steps were taken to secure additional workers, both clerical and lay, for our very successful mission among the Chinese in Manila. These Chinese residents have already raised an endowment fund of $15,000 for our Chinese school connected with St. Stephen's Church. The congregation is now engaged upon an effort to secure several thousand dollars towards the cost of purchasing new property and erecting a new building in order that the present church building may be turned over entirely to the purposes of the school.

The department was unable to give favorable consideration to a request from Bishop Mosher that a new mission should be established in the Island of Mindanao among a pagan tribe known as the Tiruray. The request for the mission had come to the Bishop from the American deputy governor of Awang, warmly endorsed by the chief of the tribe, Datu Bandara. The present financial conditions led the department to feel that our work should not be extended into new regions at the present time.

The resignation of Mrs. Matilda Louise Allen was accepted as matron of the House of the Holy Child, Manila. This leaves a family of forty girls without regular care. Bishop Mosher urgently calls for a woman well trained in social service and Christian work in America to come out and lend a hand.

The department was also obliged, because of lack of funds, to say no to a request from the North China Union Language School for $10,000 to enable it to purchase property in the city of Manila for the erection of greatly needed school buildings. The Language School is rendering invaluable service to our mission in Central China, as well as other missions and the diplomatic and business communities, in teaching Chinese to new-comers under modern methods. The department feels that the American Church must soon take its share in the equipment of this institution. Without the work it is doing, our missionaries would be severely handicapped.

The death of Miss Ethel H. Correll, of the Sendai Training School, was reported. Miss Correll contracted typhoid fever as a result of the unsanitary conditions that have followed in the wake of an extensive fire that destroyed a large part of the city of Sendai, in the immediate neighborhood of the Training School. Bishop McKim had purchased other property and had expected to sell the present site for a sufficient amount to pay the cost of moving the present buildings and re-erecting them on the new site. Commercial conditions in Japan have delayed the sale. The department regretted that it could not provide the $15,000 necessary for the immediate transfer of the institution. Under the circumstances it felt obliged to cable Bishop McKim advising the closing of the school for the present. This means that the training of Bible women and kindergarten teachers must be temporarily suspended to the great loss of the Church's work in Japan.

Bishop Rowe reported that he had been asked to take over the spiritual care of the Indian community at New Matlakatla. This mission, one of the most successful among the Indians on the Pacific coast, was established many years ago by the late Mr. William Duncan, a layman in the employ of the English Church Missionary Society. Differences between Mr. Duncan and the society in London led to his withdrawal as a missionary, though he continued his work among the Indians. For several years the missionary leaders of the American Church have recognized that the time would come when the American Church would have to assume responsibility for this work. Recently another communion has endeavored to secure control of the situation. Two-thirds of the people, however, have enrolled themselves as preferring our own Church and have asked Bishop Rowe to send them a clergyman. The department assured Bishop Rowe of its desire to co-operate with him in this inevitable extension of our Alaska Mission. It is expected that for the present at least most of the expense incurred will be provided for by some income from the estate of Mr. Duncan.

J. W. W.

Nation-Wide Campaign.

At the time of the meeting of the Presiding Bishop and Council on December 15th, not enough reports had come in from the dioceses to give any complete idea of the financial results of the annual canvass for 1921. In the main the reports coming in are encouraging, and although fragmentary, seem to indicate an advance all along the line.

The banner diocese in the percentage subscribed last year—East Carolina—has already reported a larger subscription than last year, and estimates that completed returns will give her 150 per cent. on her quota.

Virginia and Texas both feel confident that, judging from present returns, they will reach a higher figure than last year. North Carolina, another 100 per cent. diocese of last year, while it has not yet actually recorded pledges of 100 per cent. for 1921, has reported to the Presiding Bishop and Council that she can be depended upon for 100 per cent. Maryland reports that the general Church may count upon the same measure of support in 1921 which she has given in 1920.

While reports from northern and eastern dioceses have contained no forecast in definite figures, it is evident that gains have been made. New York, Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, Erie and New Jersey, to mention a few, are confident of increased returns this year.

In the West, California and Los Angeles particularly, bid fair to make good advances. The Missionary District of Utah reports gratifying results in every parish which has reported so far.

R. B. M.

National Social Service Conference.

The plans for the National Conference for the Social Service Workers of the Episcopal Church are going forward. In the last few days a strong committee of arrangements has been appointed.

Already great interest has been shown throughout the Church at large, and it is probable that at least 200 Church men and women interested in social service will be present, including representatives from every diocesan social service commission or department throughout the country and representatives from all the Church organizations that have to do with social service. A number of the diocesan social service commissions are already arranging in their budget to pay the expense of at least one representative to the conference. At the meeting it is planned to discuss the practical problems that face the whole Church on social service matters. It is hoped that there will result an organization of all diocesan social service commissions of our country, so that they can work on a united program, that they can get the experiences of one another and that they may have the stimulus that comes from such association.

Furthermore, this conference meets immediately before the great National Conference on Social Work. The Conference of Social Work is the great meeting for social service workers of our country. This conference is the greatest meeting of the kind in this country, probably in the world. It is hoped that a large proportion of our people can plan to stay over throughout this conference, which extends from the 22d to the 29th of June. They will find there a wealth of knowledge and experience in all matters of social service.

C. N. L.

Department of Religious Education.

On December 14 the Department of Religious Education, at its fifth meeting this year, increased its membership to fifteen.

The whole matter of efforts for the increase of the ministry was referred to the Committee on Recruiting the Ministry. This committee will have a meeting on the 29th of December and begin plans for the adequate presentation of the whole subject to the clergy in 1921.

The need of Student Loan and Scholarship Funds was discussed. The department expressed its belief in such a fund for the Church and recommend that a conference on the subject be held with the Nation-Wide Campaign Department.

Plans for Bible readings have been before the General Board of Religious Education for many years. Some of these have been presented to the Presiding Bishop and Council and referring to this department a committee to consider the subject was appointed.

In response to a request from the Synod of the Northwest for an appropriation to support chaplains in the State colleges and universities of the province, the secretary for colleges and universities was requested to survey the institutions of the province and to report on the advisability of an appropriation.

The Publicity Department reported that a series of bulletins would be provided through which this department could reach its leaders in a systematic way.

Rev. George Long, Executive Secretary of the Province of the Mid-West, asked endorsement of a plan approved by the Province of the Mid-West for the establishment of a collegiate institute for the training of Church workers at Racine. The department gave its approval, but requested Mr. Long to prepare a more detailed statement of the proposal and present it at the next meeting.

W. E. G.

Famine in China.

Fully thirty million people in North China are facing starvation. The famine area is included within the provinces of Honan, Shantung and Chihli. In this region there has been a general failure of crops, owing to lack of rain. In fourteen months only two inches of rain have fallen. The American Church has no missions in the stricken provinces. The work of the Anglican Communion in this regard is carried on by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and by the Church of England in Canada. The missionaries of the S. P. G. have appealed to our mission for help in meeting the situation. Bishop Graves has asked the American Church to give quickly at least $1,000 to help our English fellow-workers to relieve the distress of some of the Chinese Christians. It is possible to buy food in Manchuria, just to the north of the famine area. The Department of Missions of the Presiding Bishop and Council will take pleasure in forwarding gifts for Bishop Graves. Ten dollars will tide a family over the period until the next harvest.

Wanted: Men for St. John's University, Shanghai, China.

St. John's University (founded in 1879) has attained a standard equal to that of American colleges.

The faculty is recruited from young laymen of the Episcopal Church in America, who volunteer to give their services to this branch of the Church's work abroad.

Young unmarried men may offer for a three years' term of service. Afterwards, if they join the staff permanently, they are granted a year's furlough in the United States for further study.

Four men are needed to teach physics, political science and commerce; also a trained librarian and a teacher for the Preparatory School. These men should be college graduates and should have specialized on a subject to be taught, and they should be on hand to begin work in September, 1921.

We call to those who are genuinely interested in the aims of St. John's to give a sound and useful education to picked young men of China, and to bring Christian influences to bear upon their lives. China needs not only men of high intellectual qualifications, but men of Christian character. St. John's has trained men who are holding important government posts, prominent teachers, industrial directors, engineers, doctors and clergymen. Their influence is constantly increasing.

China's ancient civilization in this transition stage is being modernized. In no way can we better help to Christianize the new China that is in progress of development than by strengthening the Christian University.

Full particulars may be obtained by writing to Mr. John W. Wood, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City. At the same address Dr. F. L. Hawks Pott, the president of the university, will be glad to make appointments for interviews.

General Theological Seminary: The following trustees of the General Theological Seminary have been elected by the alumni to serve for three years from January 1: The Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D. (1890), the Rev. Dr. St. Clair Hester (1893), and Ralph Adams Cram, of Boston.

The tellers of the ballots were: Rev. Charles W. Popham (1908), Rev. J. Fred Hamblin (1916), and Rev. William W. S. Hohenschild (1917).

NEW YORK

Death of Bishop Burch: A Diocese in Mourning.

Bishop Burch is dead, and all New York mourns. Thousands within and without the Church feel sense of personal loss. He was a friend to all. The number of persons into whose life some part of his life had gone was very great. He was more than a father in God. He was that, and a personal and family friend in addition. Literally, the Church in the Diocese is stunned by his sudden end. Tributes from Christian leaders of all bodies, from the great editors, from business men, read all the same.

For a fortnight Bishop Burch had been ill of throat trouble. Many days he had spent in bed. He was so weakened that he had asked Dean Robbins to preach the Christmas sermon in the Cathedral in his stead. On Monday, December 20, the Bishop went into Riverside Drive, near by, for a walk in the winter sun. He was weak, but felt the outdoor air would do him good. He walked some ten blocks, but feeling faint, called at a family's apartment where he was well known. There he secured some medicine for his throat, but said he felt extremely weak. Presently, without warning, he fell forward and was dead within a few moments. Weakened by illness, the heart ceased to function.

At the moment word reached the Cathedral that the Bishop had died, the Diocesan Church Extension and Missionary Society was just assembling in Synod Hall. Deaconess Winser, the Bishop's secretary, broke the news to Archdeacon Pott, and he informed the meeting. No further business was attempted, and all the delegates went in silence to the Cathedral to pray. Members of the Standing Committee were notified immediately of the death. Several members changed holiday plans and remained to take charge of Diocesan affairs.

The late Bishop was a native of Michigan, but came of a New York family, which had recently removed to the West. He was born in Pinckney, Mich., in 1855, his father being Lawrence D. Burch and his mother Emily Dunning. From his mother he received his inspiration to enter upon Christian work, and very early in life he became a lay reader. Not too well provided with this world's goods, he himself earned most of the money which took him through the University of Michigan. Then he earned more money and finally got through the Western Theological Seminary. Never quitting his lay reader work until ordered deacon, he entered journalism for the sake of the pay. His first work of the kind was done as university correspondent for a Detroit paper. Later, as deacon, he went to Grand Rapids, Mich., where for nine years he was managing editor of the principal afternoon paper. He had previously seen newspaper service in two cities in Illinois.

When called as rector of historic St. Andrew's Church, Staten Island, he was still a deacon, but was soon ordained priest by Bishop McLaren, of Chicago. On Staten Island he became Archdeacon, and only six years after he had been made priest he was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of New York. The consecration took place in Grace Church on February 24, 1911. He was the first Suffragan in the Church under the present law. As Suffragan he was intensely loyal to Bishop Greer, taking care always to observe his Bishop's wishes, and rarely, very rarely, to make a decision of his own.

At the spring convention, 1919, Bishop Greer lay ill in St. Luke's Hospital, and Bishop Burch presided. Everybody was delighted at his wonderful mastery of names, at his ability as presiding officer, and at the speech with which business was transacted. Later as Bishop, perhaps no man in New York's Diocesan history presided more efficiently than Bishop Burch, or on the instant could call by name every one of the eight hundred members of the convention. His election as Bishop took place on September 17, 1919.

Bishop Burch entered with all his great might into the Nation-Wide Campaign. He was intensely interested in missions, Home and Foreign. He was also intensely interested in work by laymen, and only a few days before his illness had assured a delegation of lay readers that he approved their attempts to increase their numbers, to establish a training school, and to furnish more volunteers under his leadership. Hobart, Columbia, Michigan and the University of the South had honored him with degrees. He leaves a widow, one son, one daughter and one grandson.

Funeral Services: It seemed that almost the entire four hundred clergy of the Diocese were in the long vested line which came into the Cathedral from old Synod Hall, followed by the Bishops of Long Island, Newark, diocesan and coadjutor; Western New York, Bethlehem, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Central New York, diocesan and coadjutor; Harrisburg, Bishop Lloyd and Bishop Gailor. There were also the Russian and Greek Archbishops, and leaders among Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran and other ministers. Governor Smith, of New York, and staff attended, and there were, of course, representatives from all of the diocesan organizations.

In the chairs were many foremost men and women of the nation—bankers, lawyers, leading women, and their numbers included Jews, for no man in the Church was closer to Jewish counsels, or more in sympathy with the problems which Jews seek to face than the late Bishop. That fact explains why one of the first messages of sympathy to be received by Mrs. Burch came from Rabbi Stephen S. Wise. The choir and crossing of the Cathedral were draped heavily in black and purple, and flags of hospitals and of city institutions were at half-mast. The Cathedral choir sang, and the service was the simple Burial Office, without address or sermon.

Bishop Burgess read the opening sentences and Bishop Brent the lesson. Bishop Talbot, of Bethlehem, and Bishop Lines, of Newark, said the prayers, and Bishop Gailor gave the benediction. The Rev. Dr. Slattery, of Grace Church, said the prayers at the committal; Dean Robbins the committal service itself, and Bishop Lloyd gave the benediction. The honorary pall-bearers were the members of the Standing Committee and the Cathedral trustees.

It had been expected that burial would be in Michigan, but later it was determined to inter in the Cathedral crypt, by the side of the late Bishop Greer, and the first dean of the Cathedral, the late Dr. Grosvenor. Bishop Potter is interred there also, but in a cenotaph in St. James' Chapel, a Potter memorial.

The Standing Committee has taken charge of Diocesan matters, and will call a convention at an early date. The Rev. Dr. Stires, as president of the committee, has been authorized to secure, if possible, episcopal assistance for some of the visitations that are scheduled for January and February. These are very great in number, many great in importance. A public memorial service is planned, when voice will be given to the sense of great loss felt not by the Church alone, but by city and nation, and especially to the nation-wide plans.

C.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

The communion service, made from the personal silver of the late Miss Marianne Murdock, according to directions stated in her will, and bequeathed to St. Alban's Church, was used for the first time at the midnight Christmas Eve service at St. Alban's, when the rector, the Rev. C. T. Warner, was the celebrant. Miss Murdock was for many years a member of St. Alban's Parish.

The Rev. Dr. J. H. Nelms, rector of the Church of the Ascension, has temporarily given up his active work on account of illness. He is with his brother in Newport News, Va., where he has gone for a rest. Students from the Virginia Theological Seminary are in charge of the services at Ascension Church until other arrangements can be made.

The will of the late Mr. Samuel Philips, recently filed for probate, bequeaths one-half of his estate to the Diocese of Washington for missionary purposes, especially in the rural districts. This amount is about one million dollars, and will meet a long-felt need in the development of the Church in the country parishes of the Diocese. Mr. Philips was a representative layman of the Diocese, and was well known particularly as the inventor of the underground trolley system used in the District of Columbia. He was a vestryman of Christ Church, Rockville, Md.

A message of Christmas greeting from the rector-elect of Epiphany Parish, the Rev. Dr. Freeman, was read to the congregation of Epiphany Church on Christmas morning at the 11 o'clock service, and to the people of Epiphany Chapel on the Sunday after Christmas at 11 o'clock. Dr. Freeman will take up his duties as rector of the parish in February.

M. M. W.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Orthodox Greek Priest Participates in Christmas Service at Christ Church, Norfolk.

A unique feature of the 11 o'clock service at Christ Church, Norfolk, on Christmas Day was the presence and participation of a priest of the local Orthodox Greek Church. Newly come to this country, he speaks no English, but assisted in the administration of the Holy Communion, and also chanted (after the manner of his Church) the Holy Gospel appointed for Christmas Day in the words of the original Greek in which it was written.

This union service was made possible by reason of the different calendars of the two churches, bringing their Christmas celebrations on different dates. Many of the Greek congregation attended the service, and one of their laymen, happily introduced by the Rev. Dr. F. C. Steinmetz, rector of Christ Church, spoke graciously for a few minutes from the chancel steps. The joint service was in line with a movement throughout the world for closer relations between the Episcopal and Greek churches.

In the long procession of choir and clergy down and up the church aisles, as usual on great festivals, the Greek priest, with his oriental appearance and in the robes of his Church, lent a peculiar realism to the Christmas celebration.

R. M. H., JR.

The Missionary Society of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, held its annual Christmas service this year at the County Home for the Aged. The Rev. Professor Grice, warden of the school, made an interesting address, and through the aid of the professors and students, each of the seventeen inmates received many useful gifts, showing the interest the society has in them.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Chinese Priest Aids in Ordination Service.

For the first time in the Diocese of Pennsylvania a Chinese priest took part in ordination services in Philadelphia, December 19. The priest, Rev. M. Y. Chu, of Hankow, China, assisted Bishop Rhinelander in ordaining three priests at the Diocesan Church of St. Mary.

The clergymen ordained are the Rev. Messrs. James Crosson, of Collingdale, Pa.; Sidney T. Cooke, of Oxford, Pa., and Benjamin Horton, curate at the Church of St. Mary, Philadelphia.

The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. A. J. Arnold. The Rev. Mr. Chu is in this country taking post-graduate work in theology. He is a graduate of St. John's Seminary in Hong Kong, China, and was ordained several years ago.

Cathedral Charter Granted: Bishop Rhinelander and a number of laymen will confer soon on plans by the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Church of Christ, which is to be erected on the Parkway.

A charter for the new church has been granted after a legal battle extending over a year.

In addition to Bishop Rhinelander, the subscribers to the charter are Bishop Suffragan Thomas J. Garland, the Rev. George L. Richardson, Samuel Babcock Boothe, Benjamin Rush, William E. Scull, Andrew Wheeler, Sydney L. Wright and Charlton Yarnall.

Bishop Rhinelander says the church is to be known as "the Bishop's Church" and will be a centre for activities of the Diocese.

Episcopal City Mission Gives Christmas Gifts to Needy: The Protestant Episcopal City Mission had a busy, helpful and useful Christmas celebration.

Christmas dinners were supplied to 519 families and gifts and candy to 872 children.

Christmas services were held in ten institutions, and candy, gifts and Christmas cards were given to the inmates of as many institutions.

The Rev. Samuel H. Wood has been appointed vicar of Holy Communion Chapel, Philadelphia. He took charge Sunday, December 26, when he was presented to the congregation by the Rev. Dr. George H. Toop, rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, of which Holy Communion Chapel is a part.

When the World War began Mr. Wood enlisted with Company D, Five Hundred and Fifth Engineers, and served eighteen months in France. Returning to this country eighteen months ago, he became assistant at the Church of the Holy Apostles.

The Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution held its thirty-second annual service in old St. Peter's Church, the Rev. E. M. Jeffreys, rector, December 19, commemorating the one hundred and forty-third anniversary of the going into winter quarters of the American Army at Valley Forge.

Among members of the society who attended were George S. Washington, direct descendant of a brother of George Washington, and his son, Howard A. Washington, of Rivington, N. J.

Flags reproduced from the banners of Revolutionary War days were hung about the church.

The Rev. Harry St. Clair Hathaway, rector of St. John's Church, Norristown, and member of the society, preached the sermon.

R. R. W.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Rivanna Parish, Fluvanna County.

The value of the work in country parishes for the upbuilding of the Church is generally recognized. They are the fountains of supply for the city churches, and very largely for the ministry. This work is oftentimes difficult and discouraging on account of the constant migration from the country to the city, from lack of proper equipment, and from a scattered constituency which adds so largely to the task of reaching the people, but now and again one of these rural parishes will manifest such a revival of life and strength as to demonstrate to the full the rich values in such a field.

Three years ago the Rev. George S. Vest accepted a call to Rivanna Parish with its three churches in the villages of Columbia, Bremo Bluff and Palmyra. It was then classed among the weakest parishes of the Diocese. Under his leadership St. John's Church, Columbia, was thoroughly repaired and beautified with a number of memorial gifts. The rectory at this place was also practically rebuilt. Under the impetus of the Nation-Wide Campaign the parish relinquished the aid which had always been received from the Diocesan Missionary Society and became independent, besides contributing one thousand dollars as their campaign quota. Hardly had this been accomplished when on Christmas Eve a year ago the almost new rectory was completely destroyed by fire. Nothing daunted, the congregation proceeded at once to rebuild, with liberal aid from friends throughout the Diocese, and a new and excellent house has now been completed.

At Bremo Bluff a new church will soon be built to take the place of the present church, which was originally erected for the use of the servants of the community, and the present building will be made into a much needed parish house. Mr. Vest expects soon to open work at a fourth point in the parish. During the past few months sixteen persons have been confirmed and others are awaiting confirmation.

The Rev. A. N. B. Boyd, of Gordonsville, has resigned the charge of the field consisting of St. Paul's, Gordonsville; St. Mary's, Albano, and St. Margaret's, Orange, to take effect February 1.

NEWARK

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

House of the Holy Comforter.

The work of preparing the large house and large grounds, given to the Diocese by Mrs. John B. Van Wagenen as a home for completely disabled women at West Orange, bearing the name of the House of the Holy Comforter, has gone on during the autumn, and it is hoped to have it opened and in use about Epiphany. The number of applications as free patients is larger than the house would accommodate, but as there is no endowment, it has been hoped that a part of the persons received would be able to pay a portion of their support. One could hardly find a better location or a better foundation upon which to establish such a much needed home. Special offerings and subscriptions must be obtained to carry it forward.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

An Appeal for the Colored Work.

The Archdeacon for Colored Work issues an urgent appeal for funds for maintaining and extending his fourteen mission schools. Ten thousand dollars is needed. The Archdeacon notes that the colored people manifest a remarkable interest in self-help, giving not only more for parochial purposes, but also for missions. During the last Council year they gave about ten dollars per capita. This year, however, the low price of cotton is falling heavily on the negro farmer and threatens to be a set-back to the colored work in the rural districts. The appeal is heartily endorsed by Bishop Guerry. Contributions should be sent to Archdeacon Baskervill, 54 Bogard Street, Charleston, S. C., or to Bishop Guerry, 195 Broad Street, Charleston.

Dedication of Honor Roll Tablet.

On Sunday, December 19, in Christ Church, Greenville, the rector, the Rev. Frank A. Juhan, dedicated a beautiful tablet, given by the ladies of Christ Church Guild as a thank offering and memorial for the men connected with Christ Church who served in the Confederate Army during the War Between the States, 1861-65. Appropriate prayers were said and special music rendered by the choir, the address being made by the rector. The tablet bears an appropriate inscription and one hundred and eleven names.

Personal Notes

Until further notice all communications for the Registrar of the Diocese of Central New York should be sent to Calvary Church, Howard Avenue, Utica, N. Y.

Mr. Ellis N. Tucker, now on the staff of the Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, has been appointed instructor in the Department of Mathematics in St. John's Univeristy at Shanghai. Mr. Tucker is a graduate of the University of Virginia. He is the son of the Bishop of Southern Virginia and the brother of the Bishop of Kyoto. Another brother, Dr. A. W. Tucker, is one of the staff of St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai. Mr. Tucker expects to sail for China in August, 1921.

On Sunday, December 12, the Bishop of Pittsburgh instituted into the rectorship of the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, the Rev. Frederick C. Budlong, late of Chicago. Bishop Whitehead also preached the sermon on that occasion.

Miss Josephine L. Hutchison, of All Saints' Church, Appleton, Wis., will join the staff of St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, under appointment of the Department of Missions, at the request of Bishop Graves. Miss Hutchison is a graduate of Lawrence College, Appleton. In 1917 she took her B. A. Degree at the University of Illinois, and in 1918 received her Master's Degree at the University of New York.

The Rev. E. L. Baskervill, Archdeacon for the Work Among the Negroes, Diocese of South Carolina, expects to visit Boston and vicinity in the interest of the work among colored people in South Carolina, between January 7 and 21, 1921; and Philadelphia, between January 23 and February 3. In Boston, speaking appointments may be made through Miss Jennie McIntosh, Chairman Colored Committee, 2859 Washington Street, Roxbury, Mass., and in Philadelphia, through Mrs. Walter W. Pharo, Chairman Colored Committee, Haverford, Pa.

The important post at St. Timothy's Dispensary, Cape Mount, Liberia, vacant because of the recent marriage of Miss Conway and Mr. Ramsaur, will be filled through the appointment by the Department of Missions at the request of Bishop Overs, of Miss Lois M. Ford, of St. John's Parish, York, Pa. Miss Ford was trained at St. Timothy's Hospital, Roxborough, Philadelphia, and at the Pennsylvania School for Social Service.

The Rev. Stephen F. Reade, of St. Andrew's Church, Fort Pierce, Fla., has been appointed by Bishop Mann, one of the examining chaplains of the Missionary District of Southern Florida to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Rev. A. L. Hazlett, Ph. D., formerly rector of Trinity Church, Miami, Fla.

Miss Helen J. Disbrow, of Christ Church, Hackensack, N. J., has been appointed to the staff of St. Agnes' School, Kyoto, Japan. Miss Disbrow, who is a graduate of the Froebel Kindergarten Normal School, of Bridgeport, is now teaching in kindergarten work in this country, and will serve in the kindergarten department of St. Agnes' School.

The Rev. W. E. Vann, who has been in charge of the church in Bastrop, Mer Rouge and Oak Ridge, La., has accepted a call to Christ Memorial Church, La., and will begin his duties about the beginning of the new year. Through the N.-W. C. it is possible for Christ Church to have a rector after several years of only one Sunday a month for regular services.

Mrs. Gwendolin Pocock, of Grace Church, Syracuse, N. Y., has been appointed a member of the nursing staff of St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, Porto Rico.

Ordinations.

On Saturday, Ember Day, December 18, at the Church of the Advent, Jeannette, Pa., the Bishop of the Diocese of Pittsburgh advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Albion Charles Ockenden. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. W. F. Shero, of Christ Church, Greensburg; the Rev. William Porkess, of Wilkinsburgh, presented the candidate; the Rev. W. N. Clapp read the Litany, and the Rev. Messrs. Bigham, Schulz and Kanaga united with the other ministers in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Mr. Ockenden continues as priest in charge of the Church of the Advent, Jeannette.

On the Fourth Sunday in Advent, December 19, the Bishop of Pittsburgh preached and advanced to the priesthood in St. Mark's Church, Pittsburgh, the Rev. James Albert Midgley. The Rev. L. N. Tucker, of St. Stephen's Church, McKeesport, presented the candidate; the Litany was read by the Rev. C. J. De Coux, and the Rev. Dr. McCandless and the Rev. A. J. R. Goldsmith read Morning Prayer and united with the other ministers in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Mr. Midgley remains as priest in charge of St. Mark's.

On Sunday, December 12, in St. Andrew's Cathedral, Honolulu, the Rev. Christopher Stanley Long was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Henry Bond Restarick, D. D. The sermon was preached by the Rev. L. H. Tracy, rector of St. Elizabeth's Church, Honolulu. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Canon William Ault, of St. Andrew's Cathedral. The Epistle was read by the Rev. W. Lucas, of the Diocese of California, and the Gospel by the Rev. Canon Ault. The Rev. D. R. Ottman acted as the Bishop's chaplain.

The Rev. C. S. Long has been serving at St. Clement's Parish Church, Honolulu, during his diaconate, and he will now become the rector of that church.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

AN UNNOTICED ANNIVERSARY.

Wednesday of the current week marked an anniversary that is little known in this country, though it was the beginning of a life of great usefulness and activity.

On December 29, 1809, William Ewart Gladstone was born, and his life covered so long a period with such unusual activity to the very last that Gladstone was known to his friends as "the Grand Old Man" and to his political opponents as "Deathless Bill."

He was a deeply religious man, so much so that one of his biographers has said of him, "From those early days, when a fond mother wrote of him as having been truly converted to God down to the verge of ninety years, he lived in the habitual contemplation of the unseen world, and regulated his public and private action by reference to a code higher than that of mere prudence or worldly wisdom."

This side of his life could not be better demonstrated than by quoting a prayer which he composed after the death of his son, and which shows his perfect faith in the continuity of existence:

"O God, the God of spirits of all flesh in Whose embrace all creatures live, in whatsoever world or condition they be; We beseech Thee for these whose names and dwelling-place and every need Thou knowest. Lord, vouchsafe them light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation, in Paradise, in the companionship of saints, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love.

Grant that their life (so troubled here) may unfold itself in Thy sight and find a sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity. If they hath ever been hurt or maimed by any unhappy word or deed of ours, we pray Thee of Thy Great pity to heal and restore them, that they may serve Thee without hindrance.

Tell them, O gracious Lord, if it may be, how much we love them and miss them and long to see them again; and, if there be ways in which they may come, vouchsafe them to us as a guide and guard, and grant us a sense of their nearness, in such degree as Thy laws permit.

If in aught we can minister to their peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this be; and mercifully keep us from every act which may deprive us of the sight of them as soon as our trial-time is over, or mar the fulness of our joy when the end of the days hath come.

Pardon, O gracious Lord and Father, whatsoever is amiss in this our prayer, and let Thy will be done; for our will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

There are no castles in the world so impregnable as the words of Christ.—Miller.

THE DAILY ROUND THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

As we stand looking into the face of the New Year, and are all trying to remember to make the date on our letters '21 instead of '20, some of us no doubt feel a little sense of weariness, perhaps even of disgust, over the thought of taking up again our usual daily tasks after the excitement of the holiday season.

There is a sort of "let down" feeling that comes after the Christmas activities, even though the gaieties of that glad season have done nothing more for us than to increase our regular work either in the office, the store or the household.

It is to those who have this feeling at the beginning of the year that we wish to offer a helpful thought for the coming round of little things.

That thought, like most of the great bulwarks of life, comes to us from that inexhaustible supply of inspiration that is contained in the great record of God's dealings with us, His children, which we call the "Holy Bible."

We find this strengthening suggestion in one of those incidents in the Old Testament which is connected like a serial story with an event in the New Testament.

Away back in the First Book of Samuel we are told that the prophet was going to select a man to reign over Israel. He was told to go to the house of Jesse at Bethlehem, and there he would be shown one of his sons, who should be anointed to become the next and second king over God's chosen people.

He took with him an heifer to make a sacrifice to God, and he called together the people of the village for one of those religious celebrations in which the Hebrews took such delight, and they all came—all except one, who had to attend to some of those tiresome, trivial little duties about which we are writing.

Then Samuel announced that one of the sons of Jesse was to be selected to be the next king, and those great, strapping young men, seven in all, began to pass before him. They were a family of whom a father might well be proud, large of limb and fair of face.

But one after another passed before the prophet without his receiving the intuition that the right one stood before him.

At last the old prophet exclaimed in perplexity, "Are these all thy sons?" To whom Jesse replied, "There remaineth yet the youngest, and behold, he keepeth the sheep." Samuel said, "Send and fetch him."

The "youngest" was David. He was only a lad, just the age to love the excitement and novelty of the unusual excitement in the little village, but he had not gone to participate in it. He was keeping the sheep, simply sticking to that tiresome job which seemed so trivial and monotonous, so unimportant, and yet it had to be done, and while he was doing it he was chosen to be king of Israel. According to the holy narrative, "the spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward."

Now the scene changes. It is still in the fields around Bethlehem, to be sure, but there are many shepherds instead of one, and a thousand years or so have come and gone since David kept his sheep upon the occasion of Samuel's visit.

Again there is excitement in the little town, for an order has gone out from the ruler of the then known world, that all persons should return to the home of their respective households "to be taxed."

There are those in the little town who had not been there for many years; probably the streets were crowded, for the inn was full to overflowing. There were strange costumes to be seen and adventures to be rehearsed, and altogether it was far more interesting in the village than out there in the fields with the sheep—at least, it seemed so.

But there were some shepherds who resisted these temptations and were just doing what they always did in the same stupid, uninteresting way, and it was to these "shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night, and lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shown round about them, and the angel said unto them, 'Fear not, for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.' "

It was not by accident that David was chosen to be king while he was keeping the sheep, or that it was to those shepherds who "kept their flocks by night that the first 'good tidings of great joy" came.

This is one of God's ways of exalting those daily duties which seem so wearisome, as they stand looking at us, and waiting for us to attend to them in the long and tiresome round of the year 1921.

Your sheep may be the columns of figures before you in bank or real estate offices, or they may be the untidy corners of your household, but whatever they are, and wherever they may be, remember that God has touched them and has given special, significant honor to the faithful performance of the daily round that perhaps seems so trivial.

"Only living, doing brings
The hopes and joys of little things."

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR

JANUARY.

1. Saturday. Circumcision. New Year's Day.
2. Second Sunday after Christmas.
6. Thursday. Epiphany.
9. First Sunday after Epiphany.
16. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
23. Septuagesima Sunday.
25. Tuesday. Conversion of St. Paul.
30. Sexagesima Sunday.
31. Monday.

Collect for the Circumcision of Christ, January 1.

Almighty God ,Who madest Thy blessed Son to be circumcised, and obedient to the law for man; Grant us the true circumcision of the Spirit; that our hearts, and all our members, being mortified from all worldly and carnal lusts, we may in all things obey Thy blessed will; through the same Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Collect for Second Sunday After Christmas.

(Same as for the Circumcision.)

Collect for the Epiphany.

O God, Who by the leading of a star didst manifest Thy only begotten Son to the Gentiles, Mercifully grant that we, who know Thee now by faith, may after this life have the fruition of Thy glorious Godhead, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Commit Thy Way Unto the Lord."

Ps. 37:5.

O Lord! I would not take one step alone
Through life; Thy hand must lead me on;
Sometimes the night is dark, and I would stray
Before the breaking of the day—
A wand'rer lost

I need a light upon my path to shine,
Thy light, O Lord may it be mine;
Then may the brightest sun on me go down,
No darkness can upon me frown—
My feet are safe!

Oft as my journey lay o'er fen and moor,
O'er flood, and crag—ways insecure—
Through lonely vale, and gloomy with dismay,
Thy presence did my fears allay—
Keep near me still!

I know not what my future path may be,
As it has been ordained by Thee;
But rough or smooth, wherever it may lead,
O'er dreary waste or verdant mead,
Be Thou my Guide!

As Thou thus far hast led me on my way,
Lead kindly on, O Lord, I pray;
In weakness be my strength; keep firm my feet
Till I the golden city greet—
Then safe at home!

—Rev. J. T. Umsted, D. D.

The Gift and the Spirit.

A Christmas treat was to be given to some poor children at a mission hall in Edinburgh some years ago, and hundreds of little ones were assembled at the doors in advance of the hour of admittance. Among them was a little girl, thinly clad, and, alas! barefoot, on the cold, hard stones. She danced from foot to foot, but strove in vain to keep the biting, stinging chill out of her limbs. A boy who stood by watched her pityingly for a few minutes, and then snatched off his cap and dropped it on the stones. "There, lassie," he cried, "ye maun stand on that!" It was the Christ spirit welling up in that poor boy's heart that prompted the loving deed and word. In all the city of Edinburgh there was no more royal gift made that Christmas Day—measuring the gift by the goodwill out of which it sprang—than that benefaction of the street boy to his little sister in want.

How the incident shames our sometime lack of faith in our own resources for blessing others! We fail to give as we think because we are so poor in substance, whereas the real poverty is poverty of spirit. That is a very narrow conception of giving which limits it to the bestowal of some material benefit. There are gifts of the heart that are richer far than any gifts of the hand. There is a spirit of giving that is more precious than any mere outward offering. Who is too poor to bestow the largess of the heart? Who could not at least drop a cap in the street on Christmas Day for a barefoot child to stand on? It is the withholding of the spirit of love, attributed to the poverty of resource, that clouds the otherwise universal brightness of Christmas Day. So many closed hearts because of empty purses—as if giving were a mere matter of money! Such a sad failure to perceive that giving does not consist in the gift, but in the spirit of which gifts are but the symbols! What a long, sweet day of love's sunshine Christmas would be if every heart in this world would give out of its native abundance goodwill, cheerfulness, gentleness, courtesy, sympathy, little deeds of loving service, smiles of kindness and words of comfort!

An Opportunity for Nancy.

Christmas in the hospital! Nancy, white and incredulous, stared at Dr. Griffin. She had endured the pain and the weary convalescence; but it had never once entered her thought that she could not be at home for Christmas. She would have to be very careful, perhaps, but she would be there, laughing with the others over the long row of bulgy stockings in the morning, looking on, even if she could not join in, the party at night.

"Why, I've got to go home!" she cried. "I've got to—don't you understand? I've never been away from home Christmas in all my life. I can't stand it not to go."

The doctor looked keenly down at her.

"Did you ever stop to think, Miss Nancy McRae, how many people there are who never had a real Christmas?"

Nancy frowned. She did not want to think of things like that.

"And did you ever think that to change such conditions your Christ Child needs a great many more hearts and hands than He can get—that it is because so many people are so busy having good times of their own that other people don't have any? Also, do you realize that everything that comes to us is an opportunity if we let it be? Now I'm going to leave you to think it out. Mind that you keep your temperature down, young lady!" And then Nancy was alone with her great bowls of flowers in her little bare room.

It was so long before the nurse came in that Nancy had time to think of a great many things, and presently she was thinking so eagerly that when at last the nurse came there was a scarlet spot on each cheek.

"Dr. Griffin's fault," Nancy told her. "I've got to see him when he makes his last rounds."

So on his last rounds the doctor came in.

"What's this, young woman?" he asked sternly. "You've got a temperature."

"Your fault," Nancy retorted saucily. "You'll have to take the consequences. O, Dr. Griffin, could we have candles in the rooms and wards where people aren't too sick Christmas Eve? And have people sing carols very softly in the corridors? I know people who could do it. And a baby Christmas tree in each ward? And stockings for the people that are—stocking-minded? I'd get the family to do them for my Christmas present this year. O, Dr. Griffin, could I? I'd like to be 'heart and mind' for once in my life, even if I can't do much with my hands this year."

The doctor's stern face was full of light now.

"It's a sleeping powder for you tonight, young woman," he said, "but—bully for you, Nancy McRae!"

Pleasant People.

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down the street, flinging out pleasure on every side through the air, to every one far and near who can listen. Some men fill the air with their presence and sweetness, as orchards in October days fill the air with perfume of ripe fruit. Some women cling to their own houses like the honeysuckle over the door, yet, like it, sweeten all the region with the subtle fragrance of their goodness. They are trees of righteousness which are ever dropping precious fruits around them. There are lives which shine like starbeams, or charm the heart like songs sung upon a holy day.

How great a bounty and a blessing it is to hold the royal gifts of the soul so that they shall be music to some and fragrance to others, and life to all' It would be no unworthy thing to live for—to make the power which we have within us the breath of other men's joy; to scatter sunshine where only clouds and shadows reign; to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary toilers must stand with a brightness which they cannot create for themselves, and which they long to enjoy and appreciate.—Selected.

God grant that I may live upon this earth
And face the tasks which every morning brings,
And never lose the glory and the worth
Of humble service and the simple things.

—Edgar Guest.

Old Age.

Eva C. Talcott.

Woman:

"Oh, tell me, Sage,
What is this thing which mortals call old age?"
Must I, too, come unto the dreaded land
Where blind, and deaf, and helpless, I shall stand?"

Sage:

"Not blind, but only not so quick to see
The earthly things which all around you be.
And deaf? Oh no, t'is only that your ear
Will needed be for sounds your soul shall hear.
And as for helplessness, why that, you know,
Is just the giving others chance to grow!"

Woman:

"But tell me, must I, too, so sadly moan
Beneath a life which has a burden grown?"

Sage:

"The good walk ever on an uphill way
And would you, willing, in the valley stay?
True at the end the climbing may be hard,
But oh, believe me, great, too, its reward.
Youth has its flowers, but it is very true
The fruits of age are more than lovely, too."

Woman:

"And so, oh Sage, you bid me not to fear
The standing of the dreaded presence near?"

Sage:

"I bid you wait in confidence, and know
When God shall call you will be glad to go!"

For the Southern Churchman.

Dot's Prayer.

E. G. Nelson.

Although she had been christened Dorothy Marian, she was such a sweet little girl and had such a round little face, a wee little dot of a mouth and two very round blue eyes, that they called her Dot.

Papa thought she was a perfect dot, and of course mamma thought so too. Indeed, no dot was more carefully observed. When she appeared and gave orders every one made a full pause and the order was instantly obeyed.

Yet for all that she was such a sweet little girl that one could not readily do otherwise. It was really a pleasure to wait upon her. The Dot had one affliction. She could not hold her eyes open at night. No matter how hard she tried, when the sandman came she shut her eyes and "des fordot" everything. Sometimes mamma could scarcely get her in her little bed before she was sound asleep.

When Dot was nearly three years old mamma thought it was time to teach her a prayer.

"Now listen real closely, Dot," said mamma, "and I will repeat the prayer that I said when I was a little girl."

Dot and mamma were sitting before the big open fire in the living-room watching the flames turn into all kinds of queer objects and funny looking people. The hours spent with her mother watching for these strange objects and listening to the wonderful things her mother did when she was a little girl, were the happiest of her day.

Mamma was seated in a big arm chair and Dot on a stool at her feet, with her elbows resting on her knees, while two little hands made a soft bowl for the round, thoughtful face above them. She was listening attentively.

Mamma repeated the simple little childish prayer slowly—

Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake;
I pray the Lord my soul to take;
And this I ask for Jesus' sake.
Amen.

As mamma finished, Dot turned back to the fire with a puzzled look on her face. Mamma waited; she knew there was a question mark in front of her Dot.

"Amen," came slowly from the dot, as though she were talking to herself. Mamma smiled and waited. "Amen," and she seemed to be turning the word over in her mind, and then:

"What does amen mean?" she asked.

"It means that you have finished," replied her mother, thinking that the best explanation for such a little girl.

Dot said her prayer very nicely for

Sacramental Wine

Absolutely Pure Grape Wine

Made expressly for use at the Communion Table

Established 1857

Phone, Write or Call Tel. Cortlandt 3001

H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.

Address Either
138 Fulton Street, New York City
or Cellars, Egg Harbor, New Jersey

Berry Clothes

Are synonomous with economy. Built to give the wearer style and long service—yet they cost you no more!

Write for our new catalogue of Men's and Boy's wearables.

O. N. Berry Co.
ESTABLISHED 1879

BLANKS

Randolph Street Drug Store

We carry a full line of SAMOSET CHOCOLATES. Your order will receive our prompt attention for Drugs, etc.

Phone Madison 7339 Richmond, Va.

The Richmond Mica Co.

Oldest Ground Mica Factory in the World

Manufacturers of

GROUND MICA OF UNSURPASSED PURITY AND LUSTRE

BY EXCLUSIVE PROCESS

Factory, 321-323 S. Ninth St.
Office, Cor. Eighth and Main Sts.
RICHMOND, VA.

The Evangelical Education Society
Of the Protestant Episcopal Church

Office: The Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia

AIDS STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY AND DISTRIBUTES EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

President: WILLIAM S. HARVEY, ESQ.
Active Vice-President: The Rt. Rev. THOMAS J. GARLAND, D. D.

General Counsel HAROLD GOODWIN, Esq. Treasurer ALFRED LEE, Esq. General Secretary Rev. S. LORD GILBERSON, M. A.

FORM OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to "THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANTEPISCOPAL CHURCH," incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the first Monday in November, one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-nine, ———— dollars, or ———— real estate, to be used for the general purpose of the Society.

INKOGRAPH

Our pen is just what you want for your writing, because you can carry it flat or upside down, shake it, jounce it—it can't leak. Write with it with white gloves on, it's better than a fountain pen; writes smooth as a lead pencil.

Carry it in your pocket or hand-bag—it will not leak. If for any reason you become dissatisfied with it we will refund your money. It carries a five-year guarantee.

Get your order to us early, as the supply is limited. Parcel post Paid. Price, $1.25. Money order or check accepted.

DE LYTE SPECIALTY COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

J. L. Williams & Sons

BANKERS and BROKERS

Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

"The Store that Pleases"

FOR FURNITURE

Jones Bros. & Co.

Incorporated

1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

R. L. Christian & Company

514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.

Leading Fancy Grocer

AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE

Special attention given to out-of-town orders.

Catalogue mailed on application.

the first two nights, but when the third night came it was cold and the newness had worn off of the prayer. So Dot thought it would be much nicer to jump right in bed without the prayer. But mamma thought differently.

"Say your prayer, dear," she said.

"I for-dot," sleepily answered Dot.

"Now I lay me down to sleep," began mamma.

"Now I lay me down to sleep," was the sleepy echo.

"I pray the Lord my soul to keep,"

"Amen," came faintly from under the cover.

"If I should die before I wake,"

"Amen," this time a little stronger.

"I pray the Lord my soul to take." Mamma kept on, hoping to arouse a little interest.

"Amen," fairly shouted Dot. "Mamma, I said amen three times," and with that she turned over and was fast asleep. A smile broke over mamma's face as she stooped and kissed the sweet little fat cheek.

"She is only a baby," she apologized, as she tucked the covers snugly around her and offered up the unspoken prayer to God.

Enlisted.

On! March on to ends that we know not!
Long we've tramped the dust of the road,
Slept at night by the wayside, leaning
(Step! Keep step!) on the daytime's load.

Near at hand the green of the meadows;
Fresh and cool the whispering grass.
Rest in the shade the willow-tree offer
(Step! Keep step!) that wave as we pass.

Weak hearts waver—look back and linger;
Cowards hasten with downcast eye.
(Step! Keep step!) Thou Lord of the highway,
Grant that we march steadily by!

—Aldis Dunbar.

Crannell's Pocket Lessons for 1921

Contains all of the International Sunday School Lessons for 1921, with References, Daily Bible Readings, and Analyses. Vest pocket size. About two hundred pages clearly printed on good opaque paper. Size, 2¾ x 5¾ inches. Substantially bound in cloth. Just the thing for the busy teacher or scholar.

Price, 40 cents

THE JUDSON PRESS
1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Bauers Pharmacy

Just what your doctor orders we have and can fill on a moment's notice.

We carry a full line of NORRIS Candies.

Phone Madison 444, Richmond, Va.

When Dyeing is a Pleasure

Dyeing clothes at home is like fishing without bait. You get the effect, but it doesn't produce results. Many times ill-mixed dyes are ruinous.

With Moizelle's dyeing is a pleasure, as well as a business. Our dyers are men of long experience, experts who know how to mix dyes properly and how to produce the color you want. Whether it be a filmy Georgette waist or a heavy winter coat, they can permanently change its color to the one you like the best.

Call Randolph 1197. We'll be glad to tell you how much pleasure we take in dyeing your clothes. And our prices are even lower than you anticipate.

MOIZELLE'S

307 North Seventh Street

Expert Cleaners and Dyers

OF IMPORTANCE TO HOUSEWIVES

You've been longing for better flavoring extracts. You've tried many kinds and found something lacking. But now you can get the very perfection of flavorings in

VIRGINIA DARE EXTRACTS

Vanilla 150 Per Cent.
20 Other Flavors Double Strength

They represent the very purity of nature. Double strength—use half. The result will be a revelation.

21 Different Flavors

Ask Your Grocer

Garrett & Company, Inc.,

10 Bush Terminal Brooklyn, N. Y.

For the Young Folks

New Year's Gifts.

The Winter King was laughing,
And his laugh rang bold and gay,
"What shall we bring the children
To make glad their New Year's Day?"

"I'll give," said the Storm Cloud, tossing,
A rainbow up in the sky,
"I'll give them lovely snowdrifts
For snowballs by and by."

"And I," said Jack Frost, sparkling,
"Will bind the rivers tight,
And give them all some skating;
'Twill fill them with delight."

"I," said the North Wind, blowing,
"Will help freeze up the snow,
So they can all go sledding;
That's what they like, I know."

"And so we all will help them—
The Storm, the Snow, the Frost—
And give them such a New Year's Day
Its joy cannot be lost."

—Selected.

Tom's Christmas.

Tom was a handsome tiger cat and much loved member of the Pushington family. He felt keenly the press of holiday preparations which were going on in all parts of the house. You see he always received his full share of petting, but the day before Christmas was—well, you can guess how he felt.

Out on the front porch the fragrant Christmas tree had just been set up. The glistening balls, the candles and a host of shiny things lay on the floor ready to be hung on the tree. The porch door was open a tiny crack, and though busy, we noticed Tom clawing at the door till he opened it about a foot and began rolling one of the brightest balls around on the hardwood floor. Before we knew it Tom had rolled the ball through the door, and down it went, bump, bump, and then burst like an electric bulb in a thousand pieces! Poor Tom was so frightened that he scampered off into the newly fallen snow, and we saw nothing of him for an hour or two.

Tom came out of hiding in the evening. With wondering eyes he watched us play games and even listened quietly to the stories that grandma told us.

Christmas morning dawned bright, crisp, snowy, and, in the house, somewhat noisy with very proper glee. Presents were plenty and much time was spent in opening parcels and looking at each others' gifts. Every one found two or three presents. There were no presents for Tom though, not even a loving pat and stroke! Why didn't we think of the loving little play-fellow? Indeed Tom was sad in the midst of all this festive buzz. There wasn't even a string dangling for Tom to snatch at or chase.

While near the tree, looking up in wonder, Tom noticed a little cotton Santa all shiny and smiling down at him from a low branch of the tree. Suddenly he reached up once—then a second time, and caught the cotton Santa by the toe—then set both claws determinedly into Santa's feet and pulled as hard as he could. Without warning, the tree came tumbling over —click-click-click went some of the little bulbs—not as loud as it was startling. We sprang to catch the tree before it struck some one. A moment more and Mr. Tom-cat would have been hurt, and maybe some one else. The boys caught the tree half way to the floor, but it had hit the top of a chair, knocking a heap of lovely trinkets to bits.

What do you suppose Tom did? He disappeared as if by magic. Poor Tom, where was he? We called and called, but no Tom. Was he, this time, aware of the extent of his mischief? We all saw him jump at the innocent Santa, never for a moment thinking he was so strong. It was all so sudden that no one could believe that our Tom was the cause.

In time Tom showed up and we all looked and commented this time. Here he came laboring across the center of the room, dragging the cotton Santa Claus. Of all the funny sights! We felt almost like spanking this unusual tom-cat. Think of him pulling our Christmas tree over! Now here he was, with supreme indifference, playing with Santa himself. He never even looked up at us till Gracey burst out, as if inspired: "I know what he means! Tom never received any present." Then she told what he had done with the ball the day before and how he caught at ends of everything, but we were too busy to play. We all looked sheepishly at each other and then realized our precious pet had been shamefully neglected.

Early next day the children took Tom to a store and bought a lovely collar with a tiny bell on it. For a week they gave him cream or very rich milk to drink, and did all they could to "make up."

My, but Tom was happy, and purred his gratitude! Every Chirstmas Tom is to have his present, and never again will he have to chase the ends of decorations. He will have his very own little ball, and will keep it moving, too.—Our Dumb Animals.

How Jack Recovered His Whistle.

Somehow his whistled tune could not be kept going.

Jack tried it several times, but was forced to give it up and trudge along in silence. For the first time since he had so proudly signed the Junior Red Cross membership roll at school, he was doubting whether he could serve as he knew the other pupils would serve in the few remaining days until Christmas.

Jack's school had decided to play Santa Claus to all the boys and girls in town who otherwise might find Christmas a time for tears instead of laughter. Garrets, attics and closets were to be searched for discarded toys, and these were to be restored to their original freshness and given to those children who might not be on the calling list of the good St. Nicholas. Dolls were to have new dresses, toy horses were to shine anew in the brightest of paint and varnish.

As for Jack, his home boasted neither garret nor cellar nor cherished nook wherein boyish treasures might be stored. He and his mother lived in a single room over the little store where his mother sold pencils, tablets and lolly-pops to the school children. And Jack had no old toys to give away. Small wonder that he could not get his whistle in good working order!

Next morning, when he swept out the store for his mother, he found among the sweepings a half-dozen small pine boxes and some large spools. Jack pounced upon them with a cry of delight. He carried his prize to the shop of his old friend, the carpenter, and there he spent every precious moment he could snatch between errands and after school.

Finally, the day came on which the toys that were to bring Christmas joy to all the children of the village were to be taken to school by the Junior Red Cross children. When Jack's name was called his cheeks flushed as he marched proudly up the aisle, his arms piled high with the gayest, shiniest little wagons in all that great stack of playthings so dear to the hearts of children. The teacher then asked the boys and girls to tell the story of his or her contribution to the community Christmas planned by the Juniors, and Jack's story of the toy wagons he had made in the shop of his old friend, the carpenter, was applauded most of all.

That evening he whistled every step of the way home, and skipped along as though his feet were as light as his heart.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Wonders of the Night.

Martha Fitts, Ten Years Old.

At evening when I look about,
I see the little stars come out;
Each with a candle in its hand,
That sheds its light upon the land.

And right across the sky there'll go
The moon, whose light is clear and low;
She's followed by a band of white,
That calls the fairies of the night.

And suddenly they give a shout,
As in the moon they dance about;
Sweet and cheerful, dear and good,
Little fairies of the wood.

For the Southern Churchman.

High-Tempered Mrs. Squirrel.

Emily M. Woolfork.

Children, when your temper gets beyond your control, think of this simple tale.

If you see a little squirrel sitting with his tale tilted at a coquettish angle, you think what a fluffy pretty tail he has and how proud he seems of it, but really he is not, for he never curls his tail without thinking of a legend which has been in the squirrel family for years.

There was once a Mrs. Squirrel who had a beautiful home in the hollow of an old oak. She was a model housekeeper, and divided her time between the care of her home and her darling babies. Though she had this little home and four as promising babies as her happy heart could wish, one thing troubled her. This was a very dishonest neighbor. (We won't mention names, as it was so very long ago.) This neighbor was so lazy she would not work, and had the shocking habit of actually stealing her friend's provisions. Just think of it! After the industrious Mrs. Squirrel had gathered her winter nuts with her own busy little paws this old thief of a neighbor would creep over when Mrs. Squirrel was away. But one day Mrs. Squirrel came home earlier than usual, and what did she find? There was the neighbor just cramming all the nuts her greedy paws could grab in a sack she had brought with her. Mrs. Squirrel jerked the bag from her and scratched her startled face, calling her a nut-thief.

Mrs. Sparrow, who lived in an apple tree nearby, hearing such a din going on in the usually quiet house, came flying over, and found Mrs. Squirrel holding on to the dishonest neighbor with all her strength. Mrs. Sparrow called in the bluejays, who were the policemen, as was easy to see by their blue uniforms.

I have forgotten to tell you that long ago the squirrels had the same kind of tail that the cats have now; and when they were angry their tails would grow big just as the cats' tails do now.

All the little animals went to their wood fairy and asked her to punish the thief the blue-jays had arrested. The fairy was very peaceful and any discord in her kingdom, the wood, always distressed her kind heart. So when she sentenced the thief to a dark prison underground with the mole for its warden, she also said that as Mrs. Squirrel had lost her temper and had made so much disturbance on finding her neighbor stealing her carefully stored nuts, she deserved to have something to remind her to guard her quick temper in the future.

She was a wise fairy and knew that as Mrs. Squirrel was a lady, anything unusual in her appearance would worry her most. She therefore declared that Mrs. Squirrel's pretty smooth tail should not be smooth from that time on, but should always look as it did when she was so angry with her lazy neighbor.

So little friends, when your tongue is ready to say some unkind thing, just go out in the front yard and watch the fluffy-tailed descendants of the high-tempered Mrs. Squirrel.

For the Southern Churchman.

Helen's Dream Comes True.

One night, when Helen Edmonds was very little, she was talking to her mother, telling how she would love to have a pony. Often at night she would dream that she had one.

One night she dreamed that her uncle told her if she would stay with him for a while she could have a pony to ride every day. The next morning she told her dream to her mother. Soon after that a letter came to Miss Helen Edmonds. Helen tore it open and found it to be from her uncle, asking her if she would spend a month with him.

In less than a week Helen's mother put her on the train to go to her uncle's home.

Helen thought she had never seen so beautiful a place in all her life. Her uncle had many horses and ponies. He told Helen she could ride the one she liked best. She saw a rather slim, black pony with a white star in its forehead. She loved that one best, so she rode it most. The pony's name was "Star."

When the month was over she hated to leave Star and all her other pets.

Before going home her uncle took her on a little trip with him.

When she arrived home she saw Star standing near the yard fence.

Helen's father told her that her uncle had given Star and a pony cart to her to be her very own.

A Lesson in Manners.

With doubt and hesitation we asked Tip dog to tea.
We wondered how his manners would seem in company.
We feared that he would tear the cloth, or break a plate—or maybe both.

We tied a napkin on him and stood him in his place.
We thought, "How mortifying if he should bark at grace!"
We said, "He'll surely snap at food and do the way no diner should."

We had to beg his pardon: his manners did not fail.
"Please" with his ears he said to us, and "Thank you" with his tail.
We never had a guest to tea who showed more perfect courtesy!

—Harrison Long.

Here in Bethlehem is the true Caesar come, the Monarch of all the Roman Caesars, and there is no room for Him, no recognition of Him. There was even a shadow of Calvary gathered around Calvary that night. That little village of the least of tribes said truly it had no room for the Immense and the Incomprehensible. There was an unconscious truth even in its inhospitality. He was to be born outside the walls of Bethlehem, as He died outside the walls of Jerusalem. Alas! the spirit of Bethlehem is but the spirit of a world which has forgotten God! How often has it been our own spirit also. Bethlehem is what the Creator does to His creatures, Calvary what His creatures do to Him!—F. W. Faber.

-FREE SAMPLES-

Send us your name and address on a postal card and we will mail you samples of personal stationery on the best bond paper.

The Marcus Press
1212 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Leake Printing Co.

ENGRAVING, PRINTING, EMBOSSING.
Special attention to out-of-town orders.
Samples sent upon request.
815 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

BEVERLEY HEATING

Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

Reliance "Pertect Protection" Continuous Income Means

$50.00
Per week for 52 weeks while confined by sickness.

$50.00
Per week for 104 weeks, while disabled by accident.

$100.00
Per month for life if totally and permanently disabled, by either accident or disease. No further premiums to pay in event of disability. No deductions from face of policy to offset indemnity received under this clause.

$50 00
Per month to your beneficiary for life—commencing immediately after your death, and

$10,000.00
To your estate, or whomever you may designate, payable immediately upon death of above-mentioned beneficiary.

$5,000.00
To your beneficiary in addition to all of above benefits in event your death results from accident.

Can You Afford to Deny Yourself Such Protection?

Reliance Life Insurance Company of Pittsburg
H. S. RAWLINGS, General Agent
511-12 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Expert Repairing Player Piano Specialist
E. STERLING BURCH
PIANO TUNING
Out-of-town orders solicited and executed promptly as well as in the city
Phone Ran. 4993
921 N. 27th Street, Richmond, Va.

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special
at $7.25
Send us your size
Woodall & Quarles
7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

THE PARISH CASH BOOK

Resolution of the General Convention of 1919:

"Resolved, That in order to put the accounting system of the Church upon a uniform and sound basis, the Church Finance Commission be authorized to publish the Uniform Cash Book as included in its report with such alterations as may seem advisable, and that it be recommended to the Dioceses to urge its use in all their parishes."

This book has 203 pages and is substantially bound in cloth. It is intended to last for six years and will therefore cost only fifty cents a year.

Its use should be started with the fiscal year January 1, 1921.

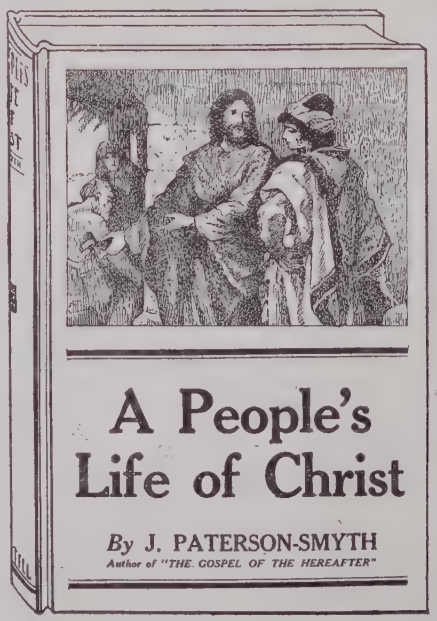
Its general use will bring about the much desired uniformity in the accounting system of the Church.

Knowledge of bookkeeping is not necessary to keep the cash book. All that is needed is to read the instructions, look at the sample pages, and add correctly.

Remit $3 by check or money order and it will be sent carriage paid. Address.

The Board of Church Finance
289 Fourth Avenue, - - - New York City

HERBERT L. CAIN CHURCH ARCHITECT
12 North Ninth Street, -:- Richmond, Va.
The Needs of the Sunday School, the Law of the Architect
Address Dept. 4



JUST READY

PATERSON-SMYTH'S GREAT LIFE OF CHRIST

Author of the Popular Work, "The Gospel of the Hereafter"

The world has seen many "Lives" of our Lord since Farrar wrote his famous "Life of Christ."

Every new age requires a new interpretation written in the light of latest research. Here is the new popular version for this day and generation, an everybody's life of Christ, which the ordinary man may read for the sheer pleasure of reading it, and which enables him to put himself in the place of one who has seen and known the Lord in the flesh.

A Handsome Gift Volume
ONLY $3.50 NET

Bishop Charles Fiske writes: "Have just read it . . . Tells the old, old story in a modern way, every chapter a vivid picture; the brief history of the Great Life told with the skill and interest of present-day biography. Ought to be as popular in our day as Farrar's was in his. The story is so told as to meet present-day needs: the hunger, so keenly felt since the war, for some definite knowledge of the unseen world; the social implications of the Gospel; a clear and definite answer to the question, 'What is God like?' "

ORDER AT ONCE! Only a limited quantity available for Southern Churchman readers this holiday season!

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Enclosed please find.....for which please send me by return mail .....copies of A PEOPLE'S LIFE OF CHRIST, by J. Paterson-Smyth.

Name.....

Address.....

PEACE ON EARTH

Christ the Conqueror

The Prince of Peace

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Isaiah 9:6.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. St Luke 2:14.

To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace. St. Luke 1:79.

And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. St. Luke 19:41, 42.

If ye love me, keep my commandments. St. John 14:15.

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. St. John 13:34.

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. St. Mark 16:15.

And he came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. Ephesians 2:17.

For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Romans 14:17.

And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ. Rev. 12:9, 10.

Seeking Peace

We are celebrating again the birth of the Prince of Peace. "Peace on earth" the angels sang when He was born. He came "to guide our feet into the way of peace."

There was so-called peace on earth when He was born, but it was a peace of fear under the cruel hand of imperial Rome. To this day there has been no real peace and there have been many wars. The world is now in the misery of the aftermath of the most terrible war of all history.

We can imagine the Prince of Peace weeping over the world to-day, as once He wept over Jerusalem, and saying, "If thou hadst known . . . the things which belong unto thy peace."

Whose business has it been to tell the world the things which belong unto its peace? The business of His Church, to which He gave command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.

Read again the noble Prayer for Missions:

> O God, who hast made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the whole earth, and didst send thy blessed Son to preach peace to them that are far off and to them that are nigh; Grant that all men everywhere may seek after thee and find thee. Bring the nations into thy fold, and add the heathen to thine inheritance. And we pray thee shortly to accomplish the number of thine elect, and to hasten thy kingdom; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Is it possible to escape the conviction that the ideal of peace is bound up in the mission the Prince of Peace gave to His Church?

Men cannot create peace by force or law or agreement. Peace is the Gift of God, the reward of obedience to the commands of God.

There will be peace when all men recognize the Prince of Peace as their King, when His Church, in His name and power, shall have conquered ignorance and sin and evil.

When we are urged to play our full part in prosecuting His mission, shall we hold back or shall we respond loyally and joyfully?

Presiding Bishop and Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church
Publicity Department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va., nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

WANTED—THE NEW RETREAT FOR the Sick offers an excellent course in nursing to young women between the ages of 18 and 30 years. Residential privileges and $12 monthly allowance. Apply to Superintendent of Nurses, Retreat for the Sick, 2621 Grove Avenue, Richmond, Va.

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES, $1.50, $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. BARNABAS offers to laymen seeking the Religious Life opportunity of trying out their vocation and of caring for the sick poor. Address Brother Superior, Gibsonia, Pa.

FOUND

The Specialty Shop at Eighth and Grace, where popular prices prevail on infants' and childs' wear, women's lingerie and lots of novelties suitable for the holidays; a beautifully dressed doll to be given away; bring your little girl in and ask our plan. Marye Bernstein.

POSITIONS WANTED

WANTED—BY LADY, POSITION TO teach in home, or as a companion. References. Write C., care Southern Churchman.

POSITION AS PRACTICAL NURSE, SOME experience. References given and required. Address, stating salary and duties, Miss L., Rapidan, Va.

HELP WANTED

WANTED—A WORKING HOUSEKEEPer. Church Home, 750 Jackson Ave., Memphis, Tenn.

JUST RECEIVED

A new supply of

"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR,"

By Bowie.

Price $1.25 Postpaid. Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va.

100 IN ONE

100 Remedy

Will not burn

AMPLE WRITTEN PROOF TO SATISFY the most incredulous that sore tonsils and throat, chronic appendicitis, habitual nose bleeding, croup and ulcerated stomach are relieved quicker, more pleasantly and permanently than any remedy known to us in 64 years. 20th Century Royal Liniment, 200 E. Marshall St., Richmond, Va. Mailed for 85c. Special directions upon request.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Breese: At the home of his parents, Brevard, N. C., on Sunday afternoon, December 19, 1920, entered into life eternal PERONNEAU WASHINGTON BREESE, infant son of William Edmond and Rebekah Woodbridge Breese, aged three and a half years.

HELEN GRINNAN WARE.

Entered in life December 11, 1862. Entered into eternal life November 24, 1920.

This gentle and beloved one was the daughter of Robert A. Grinnan and his wife, Robertine, nee Temple. On October 24, 1900, she was married at "Brampton," in Madison County, Va., to Mr. Jaquelin S. Ware, of "Durham," Clarke County, Va. She survived her husband one year, lacking four days.

She was a devout communicant in the Episcopal Church, and a singularly consistent Christian. It was evident to those who knew her intimately that her life was the outward and visible sign of "an inward and spiritual grace." If asked to state in a word the keytone of her life, I would unhesitatingly reply—loyalty. Loyal she was to her God, to her Church, to truth, and to her conscience. She was loyal to her relatives, and those of her husband. From the day of her marriage her husband's relatives became hers, and she made herself beloved by them all.

"For all the saints, who from their labors rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest.
Alleluia."

J. W. W.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Published
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.
LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D.,.. Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE,.....Associate Editor
REV. JAS. D. GIBSON.....Managing Editor
Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 10 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

LOCATED

We beg to announce the removal of the Little Waist Shop from 208 North Fifth Street to Murphy's Hotel, with headquarters with Miss Marye Bernstein. For the Christmas holidays we are offering values in waists. THE LITTLE WAIST SHOP, Murphy's Hotel.

Law Enforcement Conference Prohibition Workers

Will be held by the Virginia Anti-Saloon League in Lynchburg January 20-21, 1921. Men of national reputation will address the conference. Among the speakers will be Dr. George W. McDaniel; Dr. Graham H. Lambeth; Earnest H. Cherrington, Secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism; Honorable Wayne B. Wheeler, LL. D.; Bishop James Cannon, Jr.; Honorable John F. Kremer, National Prohibition Commissioner; Superintendent Wm. H. Anderson, of New York; Dr. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, President of the International Congress on Alcohol, and many other notable public men will be present to discuss law enforcement and the best methods and means to employ to secure the best results. Every evangelical church and Sunday School should send their pastor or one of their members as a delegate to the Conference.

WOMEN INVESTORS

Mrs. Currier, of our organization, will be pleased to talk over with you the character of the management and the history of the following seasoned New England industries:

	Div.	Organized
LOWELL BLEACHERY	10%	1833	☐
MERRIMAC CHEMICAL	10%	1853	☐
SULLIVAN MACHINERY	8%	1850	☐
NAUMKEAG STEAM COTTON	20%	1839	☐

Mark X opposite your choice and mail

EARNEST E. SMITH & CO.

Specialists in New England Securities

52 Devonshire Street, Boston

Members New York and Boston Stock Exchanges

WHEN WINTER WINDS CHAP AND ROUGHEN YOUR FACE AND HANDS

WHEN Winter winds play havoc with your complexion, stinging, reddening and roughening your skin and chapping the face and hands, Dr. Blair's Cream of Cucumber will immediately soothe that disagreeable stinging sensation, take out the harsh red, remove the "shine" and render the skin beautifully clear, soft, smooth and healthy.

Dr. Blair's Cream of Cucumber is guaranteed to contain essence of cucumber, it is soothing and refreshing, its presence can not be detected, and it is considered the most refined and exquisite of all complexion preparations. Does not rub, dust or blow off like powder, and one application will last all day.

Dr. Blair's Cream of Cucumber will not grow hair, but does prevent black heads, and will, in time, remove all wrinkles. You use it in place of face powder for red, coarse, shiny skins and rough complexions. 50c and $1.00 in white and flesh color, at all drug stores, or sent postpaid upon receipt of price. Dr. Blair Laboratories, Dept. 21, Lynchburg, Va.—(Adv.)

VISITORS TO RICHMOND WELCOME AT

Young Men's Christian Association

Grace and Seventh Streets

REST—INFORMATION—READING

92—Rooms for Men—92

Furnished, Lighted, Heated

Shower Baths Swimming Pool

Men's Meeting Sunday, 3:30 P. M.

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE

CARPETS DRAPERIES

Cross-bearing, patient endurance, diligent service—this is our present calling while we ever pray our absent Lord "that it may please Thee shortly to accomplish the number of Thine elect and to hasten Thy kingdom." Meanwhile we are "to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present age," if by any means we may be "counted worthy to obtain that age and the resurrection from the dead."—A. J. Gordon.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson

Security Storage Company, Inc.

Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage

Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 843

We Have

Prepared a Blue Leaflet entitled—"The Descent of Property Under the Laws of Virginia and Three Things to Remember."

In the last year or two the laws of the State have been vitally changed on this subject.

And this leaflet should be of interest to every property owner.

The law is condensed into short form, so that the average man can understand.

Glad to send to any one interested. Call for the Blue Leaflet.

Virginia Trust Company

The Safe Executor

Richmond, Va.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.

Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

We can fill your prescriptions in a hurry if you will give us a trial.

Burton's Drug Store

Phone Boulevard 1939
3000 W. Cary St., Richmond, Va.

CANDIES

If you want the best, buy SAMOSET CHOCOLATES from the store that gives you quality and satisfactory service.
J. M. BLANKS
Boulevard Pharmacy
Phone Boulevard 410 Richmond, Va.

CHELF DRUG CO.

We handle the famous Nunnally's Chocolates; also your prescriptions given careful attention when placed in our care.
CHELF DRUG CO.
Phone Randolph 3481
1201 West Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Brandis Pharmacy

Telephone us for your Candy needs. We carry at all times the NORRIS and MORSE Candies. Phone Boulevard 9353.
Richmond, Va.

A. D. S.

Buy candy when you are sure to gtt the best. EOGUE, put out by the A. D. S We can fill your order for this candy immediately.
CHILDREY DRUG CO.
Phone Randolph 2122
23 N. 18th Street, Richmond, Va.

Ladies, Attention!

Following the example of several of the larger business houses, I am willing to help bring down prices on high-grade suits, and will offer reductions on all orders placed for Suits, Coats or Separate Skirts. Workmanship always the best. Your friends can tell you.

I also make a specialty of remodeling.

M. BUDMAN
LADIES' TAILOR
Madison 3408-J 416 W. Grace

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in
FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.
Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street
Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd
Richmond, Va.

Unwise Handling of Money

There are still some people who either thoughtlessly or deliberately keep their money in secret places of their own, trying to protect it themselves instead of keeping it where money belongs, namely, in a strong bank.

The National State and City Bank—for over half a century a progressive Bank of the South—invites your accounts, small or large.

National State and City Bank
1111 E. Main Street, - - Richmond, Va.

The Second Deposit

you make to your savings account comes more easily than the first, and the third more easily than the second—and so on. It's worth trying here and now at

The Union Bank of Richmond
1104 East Main Street

If You Have Children to Educate

You will be reatlyg interested in our "COLLEGE PLAN," which tells you how you may give your child a college education for two dollars a week.
Ask for one or write for one.

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK
Richmond, Va.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company
Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent
E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

JUST READY!

The Valiant Heart

M. TENISON

mo 280 pages. Cloth, net $2.00

thrillingly interesting romance of the ...s of Christ. The author has told a good ...pping story of physical and spiritual ad... enture. The hero is a seeker after God, like many another of the "pious heathen." How he lives out the ideals of truth and right that rule his life, and what are the consequences for him, form the plot of the tale. The days of the old Druids live again in these pages. When, following the fortunes of the hero, we turn to Palestine, that land and its people, more especially the Roman rulers, are made to take on the vivid colors of life. The chapter that touch upon the Lord's ministry are deeply reverent. The Master generally remains in the background, and this gives the book a most alluring touch of mysticism. The story is most exquisitely written and will fascinate the reader.

A romance of equal merit with "Quo Vadis" and "Ben Hur."

EDWIN S. GORHAM, Publisher,
11 West 45th Street, New York

"You've Left Out Something"

One day many years ago Archer G. Jones — founder of the Duplex Envelope Company — glanced at a telegram about to go out. The message ended "Answer Collect".

"You've left out something," Mr. Jones said. "When you telegraph be brief, of course, but don't forget that whatever else you economize on, we can always afford to say 'please'."

Just taking pains to use that particular word is a trifle. But it indicates what Mr. Jones's aim has been — to develop in the whole organization the mental attitude that makes it come natural to say and do the courteous thing.

Today the Duplex people all feel a personal pride in the cordial relations that have grown up between the Company and the many thousand of progressive churches whose envelopes it supplies year after year.

UNLESS IT'S AVAILABLE IT'S AN IMITATION

The Duplex Envelope Co.
Originators of Duplex Envelope System
Richmond, Va.

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

R. Geissler, Inc.
56 West Eighth Street, New York
Memorials
FOR THE CHURCH
Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

O. Luetke's Art Works
Church Furnishings
IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.
Est. 1886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

"Ye lacked opportunity." So said Paul when, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, he wrote his gracious letter to the Philippians. God counts up what we would do if we had the opportunity, as well as what we do. "It was in thine heart," he said to the disappointed David, who might not build the Temple. He knows all the beautiful temples within that never take shape without. He is satisfied with the heart. How much good would the widow with two mites have done had she possessed a fortune? He knows.—The Christian.

There is a pain which is the proof of convalescence, the sign that death is not yet. There is a pain which tells that the wound has not mortified, that there is life left in the mutilated member. There is a pain which is symptomatic of purity, which cannot be felt by the impure. No conscience can feel the wound of sin but the tender conscience; no spirit can perceive its own unrest but the regenerated spirit. Ought not the sight of such pain be dear to thy Father's heart? Must not thy Father strive to produce such pain? What pleasure to Him can be the vision of thy perfect satisfaction with the earth? What is that but the vision that thou wert not made for Him?—George Matheson.

Every heart that loves with truth is equal to endure.—Tennyson.

The Bishop's House

74 VANDEVENTER PLACE
St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. Francis H. Richey,
Maplewood, N. J.

My dear Mr. Richey:

Many thanks for yours postmarked March 9th. The enclosed papers show that you have thought out a good plan for disseminating and distributing and also combining interest and effort in work of benevolence and beneficence. I shall be glad to commend it to the clergy.

Faithfully and gratefully yours,
DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Bishop of Missouri.

St. Paul regarded no price too high to pay that he might give the gospel to men, as a fellow-worker with God.

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address: THE PATHFINDER, 4006 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

Ladies Let Cuticura Keep Your Skin Fresh and Young

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING

Mail Orders a Specialty
Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL
311 North Second Street
Phone Randolph 1286-W

Burton's Drug Store

Have us to fill your orders for the famous SAMOSET and NORRIS Candies.

Phone Boulevard 1939
Richmond, -:- Virginia

Start the New Year With the New Hymnal

The music has been selected on the basis of intrinsic worth, and of permanent, rather than of momentary popularity. Great tunes that have voiced the faith and hope and praise of many generations in many lands cannot be laid aside for the products of ephemeral fancy.

The choice of new material was made from the many remarkable collections published during twenty years past, and from many original unpublished hymns. The result of the work of the Joint Commission, with continuous reference back to the churches for criticism and suggestion, is the NEW HYMNAL, authorized and approved by the General Convention, and adopted by the churches.

The New Hymnal

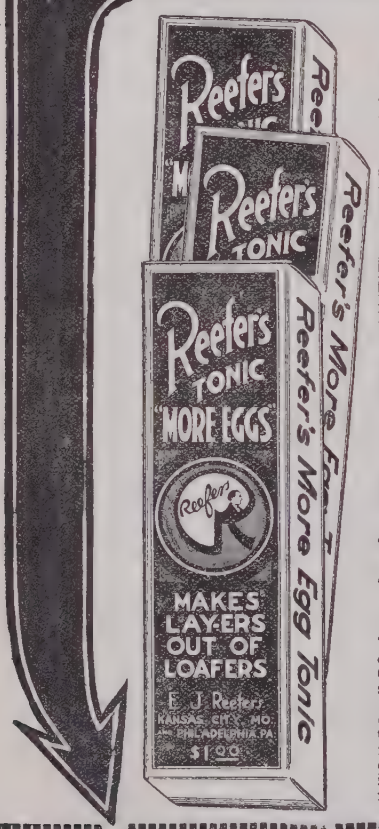
With Both Words and Music

Single copies.....$1.20 per copy
In lots of 100 or more..... 1.05 extended payment
In lots of 100 or more..... 1.00 cash.

The $1.05 price in lots of 100 or more is payable 5 per cent. with order, 5 per cent. upon delivery, and 10 per cent. monthly thereafter.

CARRIAGE CHARGES EXTRA

The Church Pension Fund



14 Wall Street, New York, N. Y.

50 Eggs a Day!

PRICES of eggs are still going up. Already in the larger cities eggs are selling as high as $1.00 a dozen. Poultry raisers with eggs to sell are going to make big money. You can be one of these—you can insure yourself a big egg yield by giving your hens a few cents' worth of "MORE EGGS" tonic.

800,000 chicken raisers have tried, tested and approved this wonderful egg stimulator. Thousands proclaim it the greatest egg producer on the market today. Don't delay in starting its use. Egg prices are soaring. This is the time of all times to get more eggs. Every day you wait means money lost. Start with a few cents worth of "MORE EGGS" Tonic now!

Got 117 Eggs Instead of 3

That's the experience of one poultry raiser who wrote me. And Mrs. Myrtle Ice of Boston, Ky., writes: "I was only getting 12 eggs a day and now get 50". Here are a few letters out of thousands:

160 Hens—1500 Eggs

I have fed 2 boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and I think they have broken the egg record. I have 160 white Leghorns and in exactly 21 days I got 125 dozen eggs. – MRS. H. M. PATTON, Waverly, Mo.

8988 Eggs From 125 Hens

Since using the "More Eggs" I have got more eggs than at any time I have been in the poultry business, about 30 years. Since March 16th to Nov. 16th I have marketed 740 dozen and only have 125 hens. I highly recommend "More Eggs" Tonic to all poultry raisers.—MRS. W. S. DEAHL, Exline, Iowa.

"More Eggs Paid the Pastor

I can't express in words how much I have been benefitted by "More Eggs". I've paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and that is not all—I paid my pastor his dues. I sold 42 1-2 dozen eggs last week, set 4 doz., ate some and had 1 1-2 doz. left.—MRS. LENA McBROON, Woodbury, Tenn.

Banker Endorses "More Eggs"

Some time ago I got from you "More Eggs" and it means MORE EGGS. I am now fully convinced of its utility. I have 14 pullets and 14 hens one year old and the first 10 days in December they laid 11 dozen eggs. Yours very truly, H. F. FORLAND, Pres., The Citizens' Bank of Ashland, Oregon.

27 Eggs Instead of 1

I began feeding "MORE EGGS" Tonic to my hens in November. At that time I was getting one egg every other day. Then on December 5th I brought in 27, which is pretty good for this time of the year. I think "MORE EGGS" Tonic is fine.—MRS. E. H. PALMER, Dundee, Michigan.

Doubles Egg Production

I have been using "MORE EGGS" Tonic 3 or 4 weeks now. My egg production has been doubled.—J. C. KOENINGEE, Paradise, Texas.

FREE These 3 $1 Packages

Results Guaranteed

The Million Dollar Merchants Bank of Kansas City, Mo., backs my absolute guarantee that "MORE EGGS" will produce satisfactory results, that you will be satisfied in every way or your money back at any time within 30 days. You do not run the slightest risk.

To start you using my wonderful "MORE EGGS" Tonic, I am slashing the price! Seize this opportunity to get three $1.00 packages free. I want you to begin using using it right now when it will do you the most good—when your hens have stopped laying—when prices are sky high—when getting eggs from your hens means dollars in your pocket. Fill the coupon out now. I make this wonderful offer to get you to try "More Eggs". Read our guarantee! What could be fairer?

How to Get These Three FREE Packages

Fill in and mail the coupon below. When I receive it I will send you five $1 packages of "MORE EGGS". You pay the postman for only two of them, the other three packages are FREE. You can keep the extra packages, or better still, sell them—and you more than get your money back.

3 Packages Free

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 6531 Reefer Bldg. Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Reefer:—I accept your offer. Send me five $1.00 packages of Reefer's "MORE EGGS", for which I agree to pay the postman $2.00 when he brings me the five packages. You agree to refund me $2.00 at any time within 30 days if all of these packages do not prove satisfactory in every way.

Name.....

Address.....

.....

You may send $2.00 cash with this coupon if you prefer

Send No Money

Just Mail This Coupon Don't send any money; just fill in and mail coupon. Think of the cut in prices! On this special offer, my price is not $1.00 but 40c—5 packages for only $2.00. Don't delay. Prices are going up. The more eggs you get the more money you make. Results guaranteed. Read the letters of what others have done. Your hens can do the same for you. Insure yourself plenty of eggs this winter. Get plenty of tested and tried Reefer's "More Eggs" Tonic. Get this miracle egg making product at these cut prices. Act now. Send coupon today—without delay.

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert,
6531 Reefer Building
Kansas City, Missouri

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA ISIN 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 8, 1921. No. 2

Thy Light

Send out Thy Light and lead me to Thy dwelling,
Though long and dark and dreary be the way,
Thy voice is in my ears, forever telling
How, after night, will come the perfect Day.

I cannot always feel that Thou art near me,
Sometimes Thou seemest very far away;
But still I know that Thou dost always hear me,
Oh, let me feel Thy Presence near, I pray,

I know that Thou art true and just and holy,
Although Thy Love I cannot always see,
And when I pray that I may be Thine wholly,
I seem to hear a Voice that answers me.

"Take up thy cross, do patiently thy duty:
Each day the work that cometh to thy hand,
Thine eyes shall see the Great King in His beauty,
In all the glories of that far off land."

Helen Caldcleugh Staley

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-second year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1920. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Girls, Under the Auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia
Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Music and Art. Intermediate and Primary. Session begins September 22, 1920. For particulars, address

MISS EMMA S. YERBY, Principal

VIRGINIA, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten-acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. TUCKER, D. D., President; REV. C. O. PRUDEN D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B. Sweet Briar, A. M. Columbia, Prin.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

To hide one lie a thousand lies are wanted.

We have to know a good many people to become well acquainted with ourselves.

He who has conferred a kindness should be silent; he who has received one should speak of it.—Seneca.

Christ stands before the judgment throne of every soul, and the final question of our lives, whether we will or no, becomes, "What shall I do with Jesus?"—Newman Smyth.

God's changeless love! The wandering one
Forsakes, forgets, dishonors; yet,
Repenting, going home, is met
With no reproach—"welcome, my son!"

Thou canst give Thy love to all of us, and all Thy love to each of us.

To live by rule is often to miss the nobler mastery, the mental and moral developing of principle.

Small kindnesses, small courtesies, small considerations habitually practiced in our social intercourse, give a greater charm to the character than the display of great talents and accomplishments.—Kelty.

Try to make some one happier. Add to the happiness, subtract from the pains, multiply the joy and divide the sorrows of people as much as you can.

The parables of our Lord teach us the value of meditation. Too much of our knowledge of Christ comes through the medium of others instead of through the Spirit of God Himself. "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against Thee." The hiding of truth in the heart means meditation.—Selected.

This is my Father's world
From the shining courts above
The One Beloved, the only Son
Came, pledge of deathless love.

This is my Father's world.
Now close to heaven bound;
For dear to God is the earth Christ trod,
No place but is holy ground.
—Babcock.

The reason why we do not feel the power of evil is partly because we are not resisting it; we are sailing a good deal with the stream; and partly because it is like the pressure of the atmosphere; it presses equally in every direction; it is inside of us as well as outside, and the pressures seem to materialize one another.—James Denney.

We make much of our Lord's coming to the common people, the shepherds representing the working class, but the joy was for "all the people." Christmas means that no one has a right to be joyless and depressed. Just let this Baby grow up, and we shall see that He has a message for every one. If He was cradled in a manger among the poor, He made His grave with the rich.—Selected.

The Bible rings with one long demand for obedience. We must not question nor reply nor excuse ourselves. We must not think that obedience in one direction will compensate for disobedience in some other particular. God gives one command at a time; if we obey this, He will flood our souls with blessings, and lead us forward into new paths and pastures. But if we refuse, we shall remain stagnant and water-logged, make no progress in Christian experience, and lack both power and joy.—F. B. Meyer.

We cannot give Jesus a lower place than the angel said, and expect "fear" to go. For fear is sin in a modest dress, and does not vanish when we deny it. It needs a conquering Saviour. The announcement of the Saviour's birth set all heaven in song. "Immediately" means that heaven itself cannot keep quiet on Christmas Day. The whole fact is too great and wonderful. So in every soul that finds the Saviour there is a heaven-born desire to shout the praise of the newly found Lord. Sing it out! Christmas Day is our warrant for great joy.

Who can estimate the importance of being right on the fundamental truths of the Bible?

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920. Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLES TOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes. Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 8, 1921. No. 2

EPIPHANY.

It is good to know that the message of Epiphany has begun to get home to the heart of the Church. There was a time, not long ago, when the majority of men and women in the churches gave no more than a perfunctory recognition to what Epiphany is meant to teach. They liked the colorful story of the coming of the Wise Men, and thought it was very proper and natural that they should have come to Bethlehem. But it did not occur to these same men and women that the Magi were simply the forerunners of all the great multitude of people from the non-Christian lands who need to turn to Christ, and for whom we must help to light the way.

The message of Epiphany is pre-eminently the message for missions. It is the festival of the showing of Christ to the Gentiles. The more self-satisfied among the Jews would not have cared whether the Messiah should be shown to the Gentiles or not. In fact, their preference would rather have been against it. The Messiah should be born for them. They were the only people who counted. Let the rest of the peoples of the earth get along with their own religion—or lack of it—as best they might. Their spiritual condition was their own concern, and the Jew in his peculiar privilege did not need to be bothered with it.

That—with a change of name—was exactly what a great many people who called themselves Christians used to feel. The influence of Christ had been given to our nation, and that was all we needed to be concerned about. Our Anglo-Saxon stock had received the Messianic promise. What responsibility did we have for "the inferior peoples"? They had their own religions, it seemed, which satisfied them well enough. So let us be respectably Christian, and cheerfully recognize that the heathen populations of the world probably have as much as they deserve or want—and feel indignant if anybody should suggest that we ought to share with them what is ours.

That is the way people in Christian churches used to think. It is a good sign of progress to know that not many think that way any more. We are learning fast the glory of our missionary responsibility. We are beginning to understand that there is for us no true gospel of Christmas, and no reception into our hearts of the presence of God in Christ, unless the Christ Whom we worship is the one who is the glory of His people, because through them He is being made "a light to lighten the Gentiles" everywhere.

"THERE CAME WISE MEN FROM THE EAST."

All our intuition agrees that these three travelers are well described. The name of the Magi may have had at first a special and almost technical sense. It meant those who were learned in the Chaldaean lore of the skies. But its suggestions broaden into a wider wisdom. We think of the Magi as supremely the wise men of their day. There were others in their time who were reputed to be wise. There were the shrewd and great, the influential and the worldly-wise; but these men were wise in a mightier sense. While others followed common things, they followed the gleam of something that was eternal. While others could see no farther than the toys of their small pursuits, these men only, with divine discrimination, lifted their eyes to the star of the hope that was immortal. And whatever prizes Augustus Caesar or Herod and others of their kind may have gained in the perishable values of their vanished day, these men only gained in their generation the perception of the one thing which was of undying worth. So were they the greatly wise, and we, in the impartial judgment of the maturing centuries, know it.

The Wise Men kept alive their faculties of thought and imagination. They were men who deliberately and constantly sought for something that was larger and better than they already knew. Their method was an ancient one and strange to us. As astrologers they scanned the heavens to draw their lessons from the march of the constellations there. Methods change, but their spirit of great expectancy can abide. The need is that we in our own way should be as desirous to keep our thoughts and imagination sensitive as were they. Above the skies of the little things under which we are so often prone to move, there is the mightier sky of the thoughts of God too often unconsidered. There is no nobler exercise for any soul than to seek the answer to this question: What larger purpose of God waits to be revealed for my life, and for all the life of this, my generation? He who keeps himself attuned to read the answer which God will give to open mind and sensitive conscience is of all men most likely to be wise.

Then, in the second place, the Wise Men pondered. They did not permit themselves to be swept along in the haste of that excited heedlessness which men so often mistake for energy. As in the observatories of today there are certain secrets of the stars which are only discovered when the sensitive photographic plate is exposed through the telescope for long hours, so there are certain secrets of God which can never register themselves upon the human soul until that soul is still before them in the patience of its quiet meditation. One great danger of these times of ours is their fretful haste. We have no calmness for reflection. We catch our hasty impressions, but we do not stop to think. Thus we may be clever, but it is only when we learn more largely the practice of meditation that we shall be learning greatly to understand.

Then, last of all, the Magi were independent. The rest of the people, there in Chaldaea, took no cognizance of the star which the Magi said they saw, and had no interest in the prophecy of the Redeemer. Doubtless they shrugged their shoulders in cynical indifference as the Wise Men passed upon their distant quest. But the Wise Men were neither troubled nor deterred. Because their thoughts were so mightily fixed upon the assurance of God, they could be independent of the opinions of men.

Such, then, must be the souls who would be wise. They must be sensitive; they must be quiet; they must be free. O you, out of whose choices must come the issues of life for this, our generation, you who shall determine whether for its crowding problems there shall be found the glory of a new revelation of the Divine, consider this! Will it be by the dull, or by the shallow, or by the passionate, that the light we need shall be discovered; or must it be by those today who, like the Magi long ago, gaze into the depths of the thoughts of God, and through Him are desirous to be wise?

The Beginning of a Great Work

The Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

When the Presiding Bishop and Executive Council, by unanimous action, requested the Church over the country to recognize the closing period of the Nation-Wide Campaign by conducting a Preaching Mission, it was clearly realized that the shortness of time for preparation and the limited number of General Missioners would necessarily mean that the mission would have but partial results. It might be well to remind the General Church at this time, in view of certain complaints that have come to us concerning the seeming immaturity of the plans for the mission, of certain facts:

First, the call for fresh accent upon the preaching ministry was imperatively demanded by the exigencies of the present hour. No man who is cognizant of the grave and threatening conditions that confront this nation today can be indifferent to the obligations that rest upon him as a preacher of righteousness. The post-war period, here and over the world, has been marked by a distinct decline of interest in the great fundamental things that have to do with our religious life. So grave is the situation that the President-elect's outstanding appeal is for a "return to normalcy." Statesmen and those charged with the conduct of public affairs are startled by the seemingly irresistible tides of lawlessness that are sweeping over the land. Crime waves, juvenile delinquency, moral dereliction in high places and low, unchecked vice, these and countless other ills are seriously affecting the body corporate and rendering life unsatisfactory and insecure. It would be impossible to overstate the gravity of the situation, and while we need not be unduly or chronically pessimistic, it certainly would be the part of unwisdom at this time to disclose a blind optimism in the face of these conditions. It was because of all this that the Executive Council felt that the ministry of preaching must be revived in all its power. A secular paper says that what is needed today is the "gospel for an age of sin." At such a critical time, surely the Church cannot be overnice in considering, through weeks and months, what plans or mechanisms must be devised for the correction of ills that are soul and body destroying. This country was not prepared on the 6th day of April, 1917, to throw its weight of men into the field of action in Europe. But in the race of an irresistible call, it speeded up its machinery, met the emergency call of the oppressed countries of Europe, and even with troops whose period of preparation was probably the shortest in history, it stepped into the breach, and at the greatest crisis of the war, saved Christian civilization.

Second, the committee in charge of this important Preaching Mission received many criticisms and observations concerning the imperfection of its plans and the sporadic character of its large and extensive undertaking. The committee appreciated all these criticisms and observations, but it cannot feel that, in view of the foregoing and the failure of diocesan committees, as well as of those to whom appeal was made to act as General Missioners, to answer letters, thereby greatly hindering the progress and development of the plans, it needed to make any apology to the General Church for its seeming dereliction. Repeated emergency appeals sent out from the Church Missions House, setting forth the urgency of the need and the criticalness of the situation, went unanswered for weeks, and sometimes months. Even in the face of this, however, some sixty or more bishops and priests of this Church left their pressing and important tasks and went, upon assignment, without demur, to the places appointed them. The results that thus far have accrued, so far as the committee is concerned, would seem to indicate the need of a wider recognition on the part of the whole Church of a new sense of its solidarity, and the further imperative need of also recognizing the leadership which, by its action in General Convention, this Church has definitely and clearly defined. There were those who felt that this was another "movement" super-imposed upon those who were already overburdened with multitudinous tasks and responsibilities. It was in no sense designed to be a movement, but rather a wholly spiritual undertaking. It was hardly expected that, in its inception, this Preaching Mission would produce far-reaching results, but it was and is believed that it accented, as needs to be accented at this time, the power and usefulness of the preaching ministry, and even in the face of the shortness of time, the imperfection of plans and the limitation of missioners, where reasonable preparation was made, there has followed a spiritual awakening of no mean proportions. One Bishop writes concerning a mission in his Diocese: "I think it will have abiding results in all that section of the Diocese. Due to the awakening of the larger spirit of the people, they have called a strong and consecrated man as their rector." And one of the strong missioners writes: "I cannot help believing that this Nation-wide Preaching Mission, though of course of unequal efficiency in different places, is going to contribute greatly to the strength of the Church." It is interesting to note that some dioceses, though unwilling to assume the responsibilities of a preaching mission at this time, are making very definite plans for an every-parish preaching mission between now and the close of the approaching Lent. This is being effected largely through an exchange on the part of the rectors themselves.

With reference to the special conferences, which it was hoped would bring together large numbers of the clergy, to consider the vital things of their ministry, the reports in hand would seem to indicate that, either through a misunderstanding of their purpose or from some other cause, the attendance was small and unsatisfactory. Here again it needs to be emphasized at this time that such conferences are indispensable, if the clergy are to act as a unit in pressing and imperative claims of the kingdom. If our clergy are overburdened with multitudinous parochial cares and the harassing details of administering large parish enterprises, it is high time they were relieved of these burdens, even though some of the enterprises now in hand may fail, in order that the essential things that have to do with the spiritual well-being of the Church may receive their due and proper consideration. It is becoming increasingly evident that many of the instrumentalities we have created, however useful they may have seemed, instead of proving avenues of access to the Church, have come to be doors of exit from it. Institutionalism will doubtless continue to occupy a large place, but the demand today is for the revival of those great spiritual truths that underlie and secure the whole fabric of the Church.

The Executive Council will feel that what it sought to accomplish in the Nation-Wide Preaching Mission has met with reasonable success, if the clergy over the country resume, with all their power and influence, the office of their prophetic ministry. We are faced with a condition and not a theory, and the whole future life of this nation will be largely affected and determined by the attitude we assume at this time towards those essential things of our ministry that are defined by the terms "priest" and "prophet."

LIFE.

Life, like a house, has its foundations; and character, like a house, must be strong enough to stand against the storm. Every day is the Day of Judgment. We stand four-square against every wind that blows, only as our lives are founded upon the Rock. We may go for a long time under sunny skies, and then, either from our own undisciplined nature or the challenge of circumstances, the time of testing comes. If we are wanting in principle, loyalty, faith, we go down all too easily, and the more easily as we are taken off our guard. Many of us are like posts of an old fence, or the timbers of an old house. We seem to be doing something to keep the old fence up or the house secure, but we are really being held up ourselves, and when some weight is cast upon us we not only fall, but carry others down with us.

Society also has its times of testing, periods of war, times of social stress and discontent. Then we find out whether or not it is built upon the Rock. What does the Rock mean? Loyalty, discipline, faith, unswerving truth to the highest and best love for Jesus, the methods of the Kingdom, the truths of the Gospel. These are the only secure foundations for any of us. When do we begin to build upon the Rock? When we hear and do the sayings of Jesus. Those two words are so married as never to be divorced—to hear and to do. It is thus we build our foundations.—Daily Bible.

You are unable to explain the wonderful union of God and man in the nature of Christ, but are you more perfectly able to explain the wonderful union of matter and spirit in your own? Are you able to explain how it is that matter seems to be affected by the laws of spirit, so that the hands beckon, the feet walk, and the lips have language in obedience to the determinations of the intellect and will? or how is it that the spirit seems to be affected by the laws of matter, so that an afflicted body will sometimes make a clouded soul? In both cases you must believe, not on the ground of your ability to explain the thing in question, but on the ground of its support by appropriate evidence.—Stanford.

A Shortage in the Ministry: The Causes and the Remedy

By the Rev. D. A. Sanford.

Two things are plain: (a) An apparent shortage in the ministry, for large numbers of parishes and missions are vacant. Hence the appeals that are made by Bishops and others for young men to prepare for the ministry. (b) A super-abundance of ministers, seen in the fact, that large numbers of ministers do not get adequate support, and that many have turned to secular callings for support for themselves and their families The causes for these conditions should be well known, and a remedy applied.

In spite of all appeals that may be made, the Church in her organized capacity, by not giving sufficient employment to what ministers we have, is saying in practice that we already have too many clergy.

The Living Church Annual for 1916 had these words: "The supply of married clergy who must necessarily receive support sufficient to sustain their families is already greater than the demand. . . . There are many instances of married men in the ministry who are in grave distress because no adequate opening for pastoral work comes to them, to which a living wage for a family is attached."

The number of vacant parishes and missions is exceedingly large. At the same time the number of clergy who are willing to perform their functions and are not doing so is large. Unreasonable demands upon the clergy add to the difficulties. What is the result? The young men from whom we ought to recruit the ministry see these facts and fail to enlist. So long as these abnormal conditions exist, the appeals from Bishops and others will fall on dull ears of many young men and their parents.

But see the testimony, from another point of view: In the "General Survey" it is said: "The salaries of many of our clergy are so low as to cause hardships and humiliation, and are a reproach to the whole Church. Such a condition minimizes the work a minister can accomplish in his parish, hopelessly hampers his success, or puts him in the humiliating situation of receiving what amounts to charity." Statistics are given showing the extremely small salaries that many clergy have received."

But let it not be thought that the trouble lies merely in insufficient salaries. It is far deeper than that. Inadequate salaries are only symptoms of a disease that produces that result. To increase the salaries without curing the disease might be harmful rather than helpful. At the General Convention of the Church in Detroit in October, 1919, one of our Bishops said, "The cardinal sin of the Church is her parochialism," and Bishop Anderson said, "I hope this campaign will stamp out that parochialism and diocesanism, which are the curse of the Church today." And further, "I have been a Bishop for twenty years with very attractive surroundings, and yet I confess that I am not efficient, and I could not be under the present system."

If then, a Bishop of the Church with very attractive surroundings cannot be efficient under our present parish system. what is to be expected of those other clergy in very difficult places and with inadequate salaries? And under such conditions, how shall young men be attracted to the ministry?

About sixty years ago, in timbered portions of our country, there were farmers who lived in log houses and who took their families to Church in lumber wagons drawn by oxen. In those same localities farmers now live in good houses and take their families to church in automobiles. George Washington, like others in his day, rode in a stagecoach. Not so a President of the United States in these days. Conditions have changed.

Just so with our parish system. A century ago it may have done good work. Today it is out of date, worn out, not capable of doing the best work for these modern times.

Shall we then abandon our present parish system? Not necessarily. But it can be, and ought to be, greatly modified. No one will claim that our parish system is divine. It can be modified and changed. But the proper support of the clergy is a divine obligation. It comes before other uses of our money for Church purposes. Christ ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

Under the Old Testament the clergy (the high priest, the priests and the Levites) were provided for. The tithes and much else were for their use, and were not to be used for other purposes. Just so, as St. Paul seems to say, our Master Christ has ordained. It may be said that the tithe of grain, etc., is out of date, like the wooden plow then in use: but the divine obligation rests upon all Christian people now for the support of the ministry of the Church.

Here is where our parish system has been in error. The appeal has been for the support of the parish, each parish independently for itself; whereas the first appeal should be for the support of those who preach the gospel. Nowhere in the New Testament do we see any appeal for the erection of church buildings. Later, of course, that was done. The first duty, the divine obligation, was to preach the gospel so far as it was possible then to all the world; and not merely to form parishes and to support the work in those parishes.

What is the trouble today? That divine obligation has not been clearly and distinctly set forth and has not been sufficiently enforced, that the support of the clergy, including missionary clergy, comes first; church buildings and other parish needs come afterwards.

The error is that large sums of money have been expended for church buildings and other things for the parish, often heavy debts have been contracted, while a proper support of the clergy has been neglected; and especially the support of missionary clergy, both in our own and other lands.

Here lies the error. Here is the fault. It is parochial selfishness. Correct the error. Give all the clergy, especially the missionary clergy, plenty to do, and with reasonable support for all who will do faithful work. Open wide the mission fields. Then young men will listen to the call for work in the ministry of the Church.

THE NEW YEAR.

Yesterday now is a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf which God holds tight,
With glad days and sad days and bad days, which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fulness of sunshine or sorrowful night.

Let them go since we cannot relieve them—
Cannot undo and cannot atone;
God in His mercy receive, forgive them;
Only the new days are our own—
Today is ours, and today alone.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain;
And spite of old sorrow and old sinning,
And puzzles forecasted and possible pain,
Take heart with the day and begin again.

—Sarah Chauncey Woolsey.

The Gospel in the Old Testament

Dr. W. H. Morse, Hartford, Conn.

For more than a quarter of a century I have been actively interested in the religious work among the Italian emigrants in this country, and particularly in the Bible mission work—the equipment of those who return to their native land with the Bible to take with them for their relatives and friends, who eagerly welcome it as from "that Ahmereecah." It should be unnecessary to say that those who come into possession of that which they call the "American Bible" are heartily interested in it, in some instances to an extent that almost savors of Bibliolatry. Those who can read do not leave it unread, and those who are unable to read are, for the most part, interested in hearing it read. It may be that they are zealous Catholics, or that they are only nominal Catholics, still as a rule this interest obtains. When, upon landing on our shores, they are welcomed with the Book, it is of interest to the newcomers; and when the emigrant returns to Italy, those to whom he carries the Book receive it with quite as much interest.

The question advances as to the reason for this interest. Why are others than they, you and I, interested in it? Why are the Italians interested in it? Try and answer the question. Give them, instead, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or "The Scarlet Letter" in their language, and there is no such interest. Is it because of what R. Heber Newton would call the "religious instinct"? We can readily understand that when an Italian or any one else has become religiously interested he must become concerned with the printed Word; but what about those who gain a regard for it without having any religious prejudice?

And what about the analysis of that interest? If, for the sake of argument, we admit that "religious instinct" is what may be called innate, does the sentiment apply to the entire Scriptures? Do they find as much pleasure in Genesis as in the New Testament? Do they read the Chronicles or the Prophets? Do they favor any one portion of Scripture more than another, and if so, does that favor act prejudicially as against other portions?

I have not been as thorough about it as the matter might deserve, but I think I find that the preference of these people is for the Gospel of St. Mark. Without asking for anything like a formal statement of preference, it will be found that when they have a choice of which one of the gospels, bound separately, they had rather have, quite invariably St. Mark is taken. Again, there is another predilection. A leading choice is the New Testament bound up with the Psalms. So it is to be understood that the book preferred in the New Testament is St. Mark, and in the Old Testament is the Psalms. They delight in both, St. Mark and the Psalms. Is it because they think that they find the gospel as given by St. Mark in the Psalms, and in St. Mark the flavor of the Psalms? E. Salmi and San Marco, separately, and together, lead in favor. Try and explain the reason.

But this is not all. Interested in the gospel according to St. Mark, by it they are disposed to gauge the Old Testament. By the second gospel they have a delight in finding out the gospel in the Old Testament. It is refreshing to hear them declare that this is so. Take, for example, the Book of Numbers. We do not always look to find the gospel in it, but they are only too willing to do so, although I sometimes imagine their deductions far-fetched. I am not sure how the story of the spies, Miriam's leprosy, the rebellion of Korah and the Balaam episode have a tincture of the second gospel, or how these incidents will help to an appreciation of the Saviour: but they are confident that it is so, and the prophecies of Balaam are, in their opinion, worthy to be classed with the Psalms. Somehow they like the God of the Book of Numbers, because to their mind He seems to be more like the Saviour of St. Mark.

I find it of interest, knowing this prejudice on their part, to read the Gospel of St. Mark, and follow out its marginal references to Old Testament portions. Then, on beyond this, the interest grows when, as we read the gospels, we look up the Old Testament references, rather than to read the Old Testament in search for things of the gospel. These who have come to know and prize God's Word can, it is to be admitted, give us some good points.

The World and the Gospel Today

By Viscount Bryce, London, Eng.

This period of history is one of great urgency and gravity. The white races are penetrating the whole world. The whole world is brought together as never before. There is hardly a spot that was not touched and smitten by the war in one way or another. It affected regions that had hardly a place in history before—all Siberia from the Urals to the Pacific Ocean, Central Asia and much of East Africa. If you except some tropical forest regions of Africa and South America, nearly all the backward races have in some way suffered by the war. It is owing to the quarrels of the so-called Christian peoples that so much misery has been brought to the world.

Not only is the white man penetrating everywhere, but wherever he goes he is a destroying force. Not only are ancient faiths crumbling, but the moral foundations of custom on which the backward races lived in former times have been removed. They have now nothing to live upon until and unless they are given the gospel of Christ.

I cannot think of any time in the history of the world when we have had phenomena of this sort. That is the reason why we ought to bend our minds to developing our work in every mission field. It is also the reason why we should try to see that our influence in every country where Britain can exert her influence, is well exerted in the cause of justice and humanity, and to see also that our people abroad set a better example by their own lives than in times past.

We have to ask for gifts to support missions. It is a duty to give them; every Christian must seek to spread Truth and Light. But a gift is an external thing; it may or may not be an expression of a man's real sense of duty, of his real devotion to his Lord. It is an offering, as in the Old Testament dispensation were the sacrifices on the altar. But mercy is better than sacrifice, because mercy is part of the quality of the human being himself; it means the individual's moral purpose, his realization in his own life of Christian duty and Christian love. In and by it he shows forth his faith by his life better than any offering of money can do.

Now we have come to the end of the war, and what do we see? Those who have the best means of knowing tell us that two normal epidemics are visible all over England. One is an epidemic of crime, and especially of robbery with violence. There has been an increase in theft and all forms of dishonesty, thefts on railways, thefts in the postal service. The other epidemic is even worse. It is a prevalence of sensual vice such as has not been observed for many years. If there is a department of moral conduct in which Christianity has rendered an especial service to the world, it has been in raising the level for human morals, and in its treatment of sensual vice. When one reads of what sensuality was in the ancient world, when one recalls its treatment by the Greek and Roman poets, and what St. Paul says of it in his own time, one feels how enormous has been the change to the modern world, and how entirely that change is due to the influence of Christianity. Even when things were worst in the modern world, they never sank so low as they had done in pre-Christian days. Whenever we see a falling back toward the thought and practice of that pre-Christian world, it is a danger signal which warns us of the need for guarding the higher conception of sexual relations which Christianity gave.

All these thoughts bring us back to the main thought—what can we do to make our country a Christian country? The more we feel what has been called "the bankruptcy of civilization," the more we feel that the only thing that can save the world is to return to the precepts of the gospel, and try to bring our practice nearer to our profession.

There is no light from any quarter promising moral dignity and purity and goodwill among men except that which comes from the gospel. That is the Light which lighteth every man, and that is the Light which we must do our best to spread not only abroad, but among ourselves. The precepts of the gospel are the one remedy for all the troubles we see around us at home and abroad. No nation has ever yet really tried to put those precepts into practice.

There seems to be a great call going out to us now to Christianize other peoples. To do this effectively, we must begin by Christianizing ourselves. If the gospel is the only Light, then it is according to the gospel that we must try to rule our own lives and induce others to do so. The best way to move others is to set an example by following these precepts ourselves. However zealous we may be for the diffusion of the knowledge of the gospel abroad, and however earnest our efforts, after all the most vitally essential thing is that we should try to infuse a Christian spirit into the society in which we live. Let us by all means continue our efforts to spread the Light abroad, but let it also illuminate the individual life at home.—From the Layman's Bulletin, London.

THE LOST DAYS.

As each in turn, the old years rise and gird them up to go,
The days, which were their servitors, press round them sad and slow,
The happy days, the hard days, the bitter and the dear,
And they front us with reproachful eyes as they wend forth with the year.

The lost days which except for us so blessed might have been,
Blighted by our adversity, or shadowed by our sin;
The vexing days, the moody days, the days of stress and pain,
The shrill, perverse unhappy days, we face them all again.

"Come back, dear days," we cry; "we will atone for all the wrong;
Your emptiness shall be made full, your discords turned to song,"
Only the echo answers; all vain the grieving sore,
The past is past, the dead is dead, the chance returns no more.

But, as the sweetest hopes are born of sharpest suffering,
And midnight is the womb of day, and winter of the spring,
So winning blessing from despair, lost opportunity
May serve to make the fruitful soil of harvests yet to be.

For each day, heavy made by us, some day may gather wings,
Be every failure that we mourn the germ of happier things,
And all the sadness of the past the seed of hope new-born,
Till out of the defeated night bursts the triumphant morn.

The old years, stern, inexorable, may go their ways in vain;
The days we marred and mourn shall smile if from their perished pain
Distills a perfume, shines a gleam, to make the future way
The brighter and the easier because of yesterday.

—Susan Coolidge.

A compliment is most appreciated when it comes with the flavor of real sincerity evident upon it. What could be more gratifying in this respect than the appreciation implied in the eager exclamation of a little lad who, after studying the lesson on the "excellent" woman in Proverbs 31, ran home to his mother, and breathlessly cried, "Mother, we have been studying about you in the Sunday school today." "The mother who could evoke such a tribute from her own child is a mother indeed."

THE NEW YEAR.

Happy New Year, the conventional greeting, but none the less sincere. But after all, what is new about it? It is the same old world on January 1 as on December 31. We go about our same old business. We walk among the same old places. We visit with the same old friends. The NEW year means nothing but a convenience, to mark the passing of time.

No. That is not quite true. This change of date comes close to the winter solstice. It means that the days are beginning to grow longer and the sun warmer, and that foretells the return of earth's vigor—the return of seedtime and of the harvest. But after all, that is true only for the northern hemisphere, in which, by some chance, our older civilization has been developed. Below the equator the change is just the opposite. The NEW year means nothing but a circumstance of Nature's process in our particular part of the world.

Again no. That is, if we purpose that it shall be a New year for ourselves. There is a significance in the fact that Christmas and New Year fall in the same season. The coming of the Christ means a New Life for us. "If any one is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old state of things has passed away; a new state of things has come into existence." (2 Cor. 5:17.) So again St. Paul writes to the Ephesians (4:21-24): "If you have heard His voice, and in Him have been taught; and this is true Christian teaching— to put away, in regard to your former mode of life, your original evil nature, which is doomed to perish as befits its misleading impulses, and to get yourself renewed in the temper of your mind and clothe yourselves with that new and better self which has been created to resemble God in the righteousness and holiness which comes from the truth."

This is what the NEW year means—the making over of ourselves through the indwelling Spirit of Christ. This is what will make it a Happy New Year. "Do not follow the customs of the present age, but be transformed by the entire renewal of your minds, so that you may learn by experience what God's will is—that will which is good and beautiful and perfect." (Rom. 12:2.) May you all have great happiness in this recreation of yourselves.—Trinity Messenger, Oakland, Cal.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions. No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

ADMIRAL MAHAN.

Mr. Editor: The mail today brought me your issue of January 1, with the interesting experience of a lad at the Mahan School in Yangchow, and also a copy of the Life of Mahan, by C. C. Taylor, late British Vice-Consul at New York. The coincidence has led me to offer something about Admiral Mahan that may be of interest to some of your readers.

As an author and expert in naval strategy, and in what pertained to his profession, Mahan was the most distinguished naval officer of his generation, and Mr. Taylor deals with his career with fullness and skill. Other interesting points are likewise brought out.

A few years later than 1800 Mahan's grandfather, an Irishman, located at Norfolk, Va., and there his two sons, Denis and Milo, passed their early boyhood, regarding themselves always as Virginians.

Milo became one of the most distinguished clergymen and historians of the Episcopal Church, and, perhaps, was esteemed the most learned member of our Church in this country. He resided long in Baltimore as rector of St. Paul's Church. Denis became the Professor of Engineering at West Point, and was the recipient of distinguished attention in Europe.

The admiral was endowed with equal capacity. It is not often that in two successive generations such talents occur.

Colonel Denis Mahan cherished his Southern associations, and early sent his son, Alfred Thayer, to a boarding school at Hagerstown, Md. In one of his books the admiral says: "I remember that when 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' came out in my twelfth year, the master of the school I attended gave me a copy. My father took it out of my hands, and I came to regard it as much as I would a bottle labeled 'Poison.' He never read it."

Mr. Taylor says: "When the war ended Mahan found that he had saved five hundred dollars of his pay, and hearing that many naval officers in the South were in need, he sent the money to a friend to be used for their benefit, a supremely generous impulse, the nobility of which no words can enhance, for it was his all."

In a letter to a friend, when he was nineteen, Mahan says: "Do you ever read the Bible? What a beautiful passage this is that I met the other day in a book:

"'Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the well; then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God Who gave it.'

"I am not religious, but does it need religion to appreciate the beauty and sublimity of such poetry as that?"

The truth is that Mahan, who had been well trained by a beloved mother, had religious sentiment well developed even in his younger days, but had not then given the subject mature consideration. That came later in life.

Mr. Taylor says: "When at sea, lonely and far away from family and friends, at the hour when service was being held in his parish church at home, he would break away, if possible, from his duties as captain of his ship and read the daily service in his cabin.

"Among other activities in the direction of religious work, Mahan was consulted about the revision of the Prayer Book, and wrote several articles on the subject that appeared in one of the Church papers."

Among other publications mentioned, "he wrote a trenchant criticism of Winston Churchill's, 'The Inside of the Cup.' 'That one letter,' said a writer of the day, 'showed that Admiral Mahan's reputation for scholarship, close reasoning, for forceful writing and churchmanship of a high order, rests on a solid foundation.' Later, another paper brought from Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee, this: 'I thank God for a layman who can state the faith as you have declared it.'"

Comment by me would be superfluous.

S. A. ASHE.

Raleigh, N. C., January 1, 1921.

OPIUM TRAFFIC WITH CHINA.

Mr. Editor: I write to you to reach the people of our Church for assistance in saving China from the perils of the opium traffic. Having recently seen the growing trade that enters China from our Western nations, and having talked with leaders of the Christian faith, I feel that the matter has a very close bearing on Chinese welfare. It is strange that after China herself with one blow did away with the growing of the poppy and the trade in opium, it was left for the United States and Great Britain to revive this iniquitous traffic.

The matter is of present moment because a bill (known as the Jones-Miller bill) has been introduced in both the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington to prohibit traffic in the raw material of morphia, heroin and cocaine, except what the United States Health Service declares necessary for its legitimate use.

It has been impossible to interfere with this growing traffic because we have no laws in the United States to prevent the same. The present bill makes it unlawful for any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to export or cause to be exported from the United States or any territory under its control opium, cocaine, etc.

The bill seems to be carefully drawn up, and includes all transit in bond of these drugs. The Secretary of State will, according to the terms of the bill, request all foreign governments to communicate through the diplomatic channels copies of the laws in their respective countries which prohibit the importation of the aforesaid drugs, and the Secretaries of State, Treasury and Commerce will be instructed to make and publish all such rules and regulations for carrying these provisions into effect.

It will be of invaluable aid if those who wish the welfare of China will act immediately, stating their personal conviction by letter, telegram or telephone to their United States Senators and members of Congress, asking them to support the bill. Any other method of rousing public interest in the passage of the bill will be a step forward in the saving of our brothers in China from a great peril.

A. B. PARSON,
Assistant Foreign Secretary.

Church Missions House, New York, Dec. 28, 1920.

In the pure soul, although it sing or pray,
The Christ is born anew from day to day;
The life that knoweth Him shall bide apart
And keep eternal Christmas in the heart.
—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.
LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D.,.. Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE,.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COCKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1921 $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents. 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 10 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions

News concerning the church at large always welcome

Church Intelligence

Consecration of the Rev. Robert H. Mize as Bishop of Salina.

The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the ordination and consecration of the Rev. Robert Herbert Mize, Bishop-elect of the Missionary District of Salina, as follows:

Time: Wednesday, January 19, 1921.

Place: Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Kan.

Consecrators: The Presiding Bishop, the Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, the Bishop of Western Nebraska.

Preacher: The Bishop of Wyoming.

Presenters: The Bishop of Kansas, the Bishop of Nebraska.

Attending Presbyters: The Rev. Francis S. White, the Rev. H. S. Sizer.

Master of Ceremonies: The Rev. R. K. Pooley.

Deputy Registrar: The Rev. J. P. deB. Kaye.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 27, 1920

Budget for 1921.

Following is a summary of the appropriations so far made by the Presiding Bishop and Council for the general work and operating expenses during the year 1921:

Department of Missions and Church Extension.....	$2,981,309
Religious Education.....	114,999
Christian Social Service..	34,450
Finance	57,144
Publicity	210,123
Nation-Wide Campaign...	98,600
General Administration....	88,311
General Church Agencies...	142,155
Interest on Borrowed Money	60,000
Deficit 1919.....	512,306
	$4,099,397

Deficits prior to 1919 amounting to $266,357, and the expenses of the Nation-Wide Campaign up to May 1, 1920, amounting to $344,065.97, are included in the 1920 budget. Present indications are that a material part of these obligations will have to be carried over into 1921 and added to this budget.

Some misunderstanding seems to exist as to the reason for the appropriation by the Council of $72,000 to cover interest on loans in 1920. The situation is as follows:

On January 1, 1920, when the Council took control of the affairs of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, the society was borrowing from banks the sum of $749,500 and was using cash from the Reserve Deposit Fund, set aside for this specific purpose, in the amount of $330,000, or a total of $1,079,500. The Council has borrowed during 1921 on current account because of delayed payment of pledges, and continuing expenses of the Nation-Wide Campaign to May 1, 1920, the further sum of $288,500, making its present total borrowings, including $330,000 of its own money, $1,368,000. Should the estimate of income and expenses for 1920 recently made by the treasurer be realized, it would be possible to pay out of 1920 receipts about $350,000 of these loans.

The Tide Has Turned in Our Sunday Schools!

The war worked an immeasurable hardship to our Sunday schools. It called away leaders, diverted attention, and lessened financial support. The previous steady increase of pupils ceased. The figures went backward, at first slowly, and then alarmingly. In round numbers one hundred thousand pupils were lost.

But the tide has turned. The recovery has begun. A year ago the Nation-Wide Campaign program called for vigorous recruiting. In many places it went on. The adult service pledges helped. Schools began to build up.

The gains are not great as yet. Exclusive of the Foreign Missions, we have added sixteen thousand pupils. But though the gains are little, they are widely distributed, which is of distinct value. There are only twenty-one dioceses which have not shown an increase, according to the returns in the Living Church Annual, as against sixty-six reporting gains. Every province, except that of New York and New Jersey, has an increased footing.

The Province of Washington furnishes the most notable gain, over ten thousand pupils, with every one of its thirteen dioceses in the plus column.

Lantern Slides.

Lantern slide lectures for use in Epiphany and Lent should be ordered now. There will be new lectures on the Southern Mountaineers, Panama and Liberia; and the "Church's Battle Line" has been revived, about half of the slides being new.

The Rev. Robert Keating Smith is writing a lecture on the Czechs, illustrating with unusual pictures, showing these most interesting people in their home environment.

A special lecture has been prepared on the Marines in Cuba.

The Lantern Slide Department is prepared to recommend and furnish the best lanterns on the market. Write for particulars. Address M. L. Condick, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Recruiting Men for the Ministry.

The Committee on Recruiting Young Men for the Ministry, appointed under the Presiding Bishop and Council of the Church, met in conference on Wednesday and Thursday, December 29 and 30, at the home of Canon DeVries, of the Washington Cathedral. The members of this committee are Dean Fosbroke, General Theological Seminary, New York; Dean George Bartlett, Philadelphia Divinity School; Dean Ladd, Berkley Divinity School; the Rev. C. H. Young, rector of the Howe School, Indiana; the Rev. Frederick Kramer, Minnesota; Canon Devries, of the Washington Cathedral, and the Rev. H. P. Nichols, of New York, and chairman of the committee. Dean Berryman Green, of the Virginia Theological Seminary, and Professor J. H. Dillard, of Charlottesville, Va., though not members of the committee, were present at its sessions. The principal considerations of the committee were a study of the causes for the falling off of the number of candidates for the Church's ministry and plans for recruiting young men into this service of the Church.

Day of Supplication for Holy Eastern Orthodox Church.

Sunday, January 2, was observed in many of the churches as a day of supplication for the Holy Eastern Orthodox Church, in compliance with the notice sent out by the Presiding Bishop of the Church.

A service of special interest was held in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral at 11 o'clock, when the preacher was the Archimandrite, Germanos I. Polyzoides, of the Holy Synod of the Church of Greece. His sermon, delivered in English, and a prayer in his native tongue, were both impressive, as was his appearance in the robes of his Church. The hymns and prayers were especially appropriate to the dominant thought of the service, and the offertory anthem was a hymn of the Russian Church, with music by Tschaikowsky. At the people's evensong at 4 o'clock on the same day, the preacher was the Rev. W. C. Emhardt, Ph. D., field director of Church work among the foreign born.

Mr. E. T. Yen, formerly Assistant Professor of Sociology at Shanghai University, delivered an address at Trinity Diocesan Church on Sunday, January 2, at 8 o'clock, his subject being, "A Christmas Message From China to the New World." Mr. Yen is now connected with the Chinese ministry of education.

M. M. W.

NEW YORK

Special Convention for Election of Successor to Bishop Burch, January 26.

A convention of the New York Diocese has been called by the Standing Committee for January 26 to elect a successor to Bishop Burch. Pending election and consecration, Bishop Lloyd has been released by his vestry, St. Bartholomew's, of New Rochelle, to take confirmations arranged by the late Bishop, which are many, and to keep office hours at the Synod House. The Standing Committee felt called upon to apologize in a way for the quick action, but pointed out that Bishop Burch would not wish respect to his memory to delay work of the Church.

Indications are that in selecting a successor New York will not go beyond its own boundaries. It has never done so, and nobody can be found at this time who seriously believes it will do so now. Party lines are nowhere to be seen. There will be three candidates, hardly more, and they will be the three who stood along fairly equal numbers at the time Bishop Burch was chosen. At the time the Rev. Dr. Stires had the largest number of votes, the Rev. Dr. Manning next, and the Rev. Dr. Slattery third. Some doubts are expressed that the Rev. Dr. Stires will consent to the use of his name, feeling that St. Thomas' parish work demands that he complete it.

No partisan advantage is being sought in any quarter, and only personal qualifications are considered, so far as can be heard. On every side the talk is that Bishop Potter in his day mapped out great things, saw large, and exercised in city and nation a pre-eminent influence. Following him, Bishop Greer carried the work forward on much the same lines as his predecessor. The need of New York now is execution. Conditions are ready for achievement. Bishop Burch was ideally fitted to lead in work, and had just begun to do so. Now the need is for a strong leader, one given to work himself, but more than that, to inspire others to work. Everywhere is heard today a call for applied Christianity. That is likely to be the sentiment behind the election on the 26th. Leastwise, that is what one hears said in all quarters.

Who Are the Givers? An Interesting Inlook.

There happened in New York last week something that could hardly have happened in any other city in the world, certainly not at this time. It was a dinner, given at a hotel and presided over by Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, a member of the Society of Friends, where each of the guests who filled a great room paid $1,000 or over per plate. And they ate a meal which cost 22 cents. And after they had given so much per plate, and had accepted the meal, they subscribed more than $1,000,000. Of course, the appeal was for starving children in Central Europe.

But remarkable as the record just given is, it is not the most remarkable part of the story. Certainly it is not the most interesting to those who give time and thought to missions, and to service for others. An expert who knows New York well resolved to examine the names of the several hundred guests and select from them one hundred names of persons whose church relation he did not know. Then he thought to inquire whether they were members of some church or synagogue. That is, he wanted to ascertain whether the 30 per cent. of New York's population who do at least something at the religious business give also these large sums to a charity that has little religion about it, or whether the 70 per cent. of New York that is not in churches or synagogues give them.

The proportion, he argued, would be instructive as to the value of Christianity and Judaism to the world at large, as compared to the value to the same stricken world that neglects its religion, at least so far as any one can see. The expert knows New York. Taking the names, and allocating them one by one to known membership in church or synagogue, he was unable to find one hundred names in the entire list that he did not personally know to belong to some religious organization. In short, the 70 per cent. simply was not in evidence. More than eighty in one hundred of the persons are known to belong in some religious organization, and doubtless many of the remaining twenty belong there also. Finally there is no peculiarly religious appeal about children starving to death. The appeal is as strong, supposedly, to the 70 per cent. as to the 30 per cent.

Joint Service With Eastern Orthodox Catholics.

On the afternoon of the first Sunday in the New Year, following a recommendation made by Bishops of the Church when meeting at St. Louis, a service was held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, at which brief addresses were made by Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, the Most Rev. Alexander Nemolovsky, Russian Archbishop; the Rt. Rev. Bishop Stephen, who spoke in Hungarian, and the Rt. Rev. Bishop Aftimus, who spoke in Syrian. A letter was read from the Greek Archbishop. The choir from the Russian Cathedral assisted St. John's choir, and the former sang the anthem in Russian, without organ accompaniment. There were present many Eastern Orthodox Catholics. It was the first such service ever held, and is intended further to consummate unity work done by Church leaders on the Commission to Confer with Easterns and Old Catholics.

Results of the N.-W. C. in One Parish.

St. Mary's Parish, Lawrence Street, provides a wonderful proof of the value of the Nation-Wide Campaign. Just a year ago the Rev. Charles B. Ackley came as rector, beginning the very day the campaign began. It was determined to find out what the campaign could do for a small parish of not well-to-do people. One outcome is that in 1920 St. Mary's gave more than $1,000 in the red side of the envelopes, as compared with an old apportionment of $299. The Sunday school gave over $400 for missions, and thereby won the Diocesan banner for the largest proportionate increase—an increase of 800 per cent.

On the black side of the envelope the parish, with greatly increased expenses, paid off a debt of $1,700. This year it has a larger budget than ever, and makes gifts to missions six times as large as under the old apportionment. A year ago the Girls' Friendly numbered twenty. Now it numbers sixty, with a candidates' class of fifty. A candidates' class of little girls started a year ago with twenty-four is now two hundred, with a waiting list. It has $70 in its treasury, all its own gifts. There is a children's choir, so the combined choirs now exceed eighty persons, all volunteers. Most of this growth in all of these lines the rector attributes to the campaign. There are more than thirty regular teachers in the Church school, a fine missionary spirit, and money to buy the best lessons. Recognizing changed living conditions, the parish has increased the salaries of rector, organist and sexton, the only salaried workers.

On the Sunday evenings in January there will be given by the rector illustrated lectures on the history of Christianity, the Early Church, the Church of England and the Church in America. Mr. Ackley has an exceptional collection of colored slides, with historical scenes and cathedrals taken from his own photographs in England and America. St. Mary's is hard to find, even if it does dominate a neighborhood. It is one block north and one east from the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Street subway station of the Broadway line. C.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Consecration of St. Michael and All Angels, Savannah.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Savannah, was consecrated on Sunday morning, December 26, by the Bishop of the Diocese. The instrument of donation was read by the senior warden, Mr. R. L. Cooper, and the sentence of consecration was read by the rector, the Rev. J. D. Miller, appointed by the Bishop. The Bishop preached from the text, Rev. 21:3, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God." Special music made the service very beautiful.

Christmas in Savannah: Savannah has a community observance of Christmas that centers around the Tree of Light which is placed in the large open park in the center of the city. Carols are sung around the tree, and for two years a mystery play of the Nativity has been added to the program. On Christmas Eve groups of singers sing in the hospitals, hotels, homes for aged peoples, orphanages, and in the business districts. The Festival Association, which manages the entire festival, thus keeps alive the traditions of Christmas.

At the children's festival of the Sunday school of Christ Church, Savannah, a very appropriate pageant, written by the principal, Mrs. T. P. Waring, was presented in the chancel of the church Sunday afternoon after Christmas. The pupils sat around a Christmas tree, while they told the story of Christmas to the Stranger from the "Ever-Study Land," to whom it was entirely new. The presents brought by the pupils were given to the children of the House of Prayer, a parochial mission of Christ Church, which had its celebration the following Friday.

St. Paul's Church, Albany, had a Christmas pageant for its Sunday school. Near the altar was a manger, over which was suspended an illuminated star. The rector, the Rev. John Moore Walker, read the story of the Wise Men, who were impersonated by three of the pupils. Others represented the shepherds and Simeon. Gifts for the poor were laid in the manger and distributed later. After the exercises the school was given a Christmas tree in the parish house.

E. D. J.

SOUTHERN FLORIDA

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Place of Annual Convocation Changed.

Recent decision was made to hold the annual meeting of the Convocation of Southern Florida in Orlando, with the Cathedral Parish, the dates appointed being January 11, 12 and 13.

At the meeting of convocation last January in Daytona, an invitation from Trinity Parish, Miami, for the 1921 meeting of convocation was accepted, but the sudden bereavement of that parish through the death of the rector, the Rev. A. L. Hazlett, in July, followed by an interval of several months before the new rector, Rev. Mr. Phillips, took charge in November, made a change of plans necessary. Therefore, the dean and chapter of the Cathedral Parish met the difficulty by extending a cordial invitation to meet in Orlando.

Convocation has been more frequently entertained at Orlando than at any other point since Southern Florida was set apart, and its more central location gives always a large attendance, with for each delegate a heartiest welcome.

This meeting of convocation will be happily marked by the confident expectation that ere the close of another year the $100,000 diocesan endowment will have been completed, for the halfway part of this sum is already given, with also a good start promised on the second half, and the Church folk of this missionary district are gladly looking forward to favorable action from General Convention in 1922 to a request for the admission of the Diocese of South Florida.

N.-W. C. Conferences: During part of the last week in November and of the first week in December a series of conferences regarding the Nation-Wide Campaign were held by the Rev. Louis G. Wood, field secretary, whose coming to Southern Florida on this mission was deeply appreciated by all parishes and missions sharing his earnest, helpful ministrations. The three chief conferences were held at Lakeland, attended by representatives throughout the west section of this district; at New Smyrna, with delegates from the central and eastern points, and at Miami, for south and southeast points.

The Every-Member Canvass was held through Southern Florida on December 12, the full returns not yet reported.

C. R.

NORTH CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Jos. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Milton A. Barber, rector of Christ Church, Raleigh, was the recipient of a nice gift Christmas morning, when shortly before the beginning of the mid-day service he was waited upon by a committee of Christ Church Chapter, St. Andrew's Brotherhood, and presented with a Ford sedan car. The gift was made on behalf of the Brotherhood, the Bible class and a large number of contributors in the congregation.

Mr. Barber, almost overwhelmed by this unexpected token of appreciation from the members of his flock, expressed his gratitude to the committee and afterwards to the large Christmas congregation made further grateful acknowledgement. The gift, he believed, would prove a very helpful agency in the wide boundaries of his parish work.

The Rev. A. S. Lawrence, of Concord, has accepted a call to Chapel Hill, and will take up his work at the University about the first of the year.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Impressive Service in Grace Church, Grand Rapids.

A joint service of the American Episcopal Church and the Holy Eastern Orthodox Church in America was held Sunday afternoon, January 2, in Grace Church Grand Rapids. In addition to the choir of Grace Church, the choirs of St. John's and St. George's Churches rendered especially appropriate music. Psalm 65, used in the Russian Office of Thanksgiving at the New Year, and special lessons and prayers were read, and an address of welcome was made by the Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D. Other addresses were made by Father John Tertichny, pastor of St. John's Russian Church, and Father Philippous Aboussalery, pastor of St. George's Syrian Church. and messages authorizing the service, from Archbishop Alexander, head of the Holy Orthodox Church in America, and from the House of Bishops of the American Episcopal Church, were read. The offering was for the Near East and Russian Relief Funds. The service, which was beautiful and impressive throughout, ended with the singing of "America, the Beautiful."

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop.

An Eastern Orthodox Service.

The Wyoming Churchman gives an account of a unique service held in the Church of the Holy Communion, Rock Springs, on the Sunday next before Advent. At the invitation of the rector, the Rev. Morten Joslin, and under the sanction of the Bishop, the "protopresbuteros" of the Eastern Orthodox Church having jurisdiction in Idaho, Montana and Wyoming, gathered the Greek congregation to the "Theias Leitourgias," the Holy Eucharist of the Greek Church, "with the preaching of the gospel." At the same time and place, the congregation of the Church of the Holy Communion gathered to show their interest and to extend a welcome to the great Eastern Church. Greek and Anglican kneeled before the same altar, and for three hours the Church remained crowded with a congregation which felt the presence of a common Lord, although one-half of it could not understand the tongue of the other.

"At the close of the celebration Father Liacopoulos urged the Greeks in Rock Springs to contend earnestly for the ancient faith, and to see to it that their children were well instructed in the teaching of the Orthodox Church. To this end he urged them to send their children to the Sunday school of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He also urged them to call upon 'Father' Joslin whenever they needed spiritual ministrations, and no Greek priest was available. Through an interpreter he thanked the Americans present, on behalf of the Orthodox Church, for their kindness in giving them the use of their church and Holy Table; that he was happy in the thought that after years of effort at union by the Eastern Church, the possibility of a united Christendom was visible on the horizon of human events.

"The rector of the parish, speaking through an interpreter, greeted the Greeks as brothers in Christ, assured them of his delight at the possible healing of the disruption of centuries, and assured them of his readiness to serve them as a minister of our Great Redeemer in any way they might need."

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. John's Church, Roanoke: Impressive services marked the exercises Sunday night, December 26, at St. John's, when Rt. Rev. R. C. Jett administered the rite of confirmation to a class of thirty-five. Of special interest was the fact that the majority of the class were adults.

In the last eight months Bishop Jett has confirmed seventy persons in this parish. At the close of the service in the name of the congregation, and as an expression of their gratitude and affection, the rector, the Rev. Karl Morgan Block, presented the Bishop with a Christmas gift—a purse of three hundred dollars in gold. The Bishop acknowledged the gift with profound emotion.

The services Sunday evening were considered the most impressive ever held at St. John's. In spite of the inclement weather and the icy streets, a large congregation greeted the Bishop.

Evening Prayer was read by the rector, and the sermon, the subject of which was "Prayer," was preached by Bishop Jett.

Before going to the pulpit Bishop Jett felicitated the congregation on the ministrations of their new rector, declaring that the joy of the Christmas season had been greatly increased in St. John's parish—a joy which he himself shared—by the coming to the Diocese of Mr. Block.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan

Meeting of Anglican and Eastern Association.

Five bishops took part in conferences at the annual meeting of the Anglican and Eastern Association, which commenced Sunday, January 2, in Grace Church, Mount Airy, Philadelphia. The bishops, who took part in a demonstration of unity between the Anglican and the Eastern Orthodox, or Russian Church, at the service, were Bishop Edward Melville Parker, of New Hampshire, president of the Association; Bishop James Henry Darlington, of Harrisburg; Bishop William W. Webb, of Milwaukee; Bishop Rhinelander and Bishop Garland.

Prayers were offered for the Eastern Christians, and as a mark of unity a Greek priest of the Orthodox Church assisted the Bishop of New Hampshire in the celebration of the Holy Eucharist. Bishop Parker preached the sermon.

The same bishops conducted a service Sunday afternoon in St. Mark's Church. The Rev. Father Duropaulos, rector of the new Greek church soon to be opened in New York, represented the Eastern Orthodox Church.

Church Institutions Benefit by Will of Mr. Fell.

Bequests amounting to over $125,000 were made to Church organizations and hospitals by Mr. Henry Fell, whose will was probated December 31.

Mr. Fell, who lived at the Union League, died in Atlantic City on December 22. His estate is valued at over $209,000.

He bequeathed $30,000 to the Children's Hospital, $5,000 each to the Hahnemann and Jefferson Hospitals; $3,000 to St. Mark's Church, for a chalice to be studded with his jewels; $1,000 to St. Clement's Church; $50,000 to the Nashotah (Wis.) house; $10,000 to the Society of St. Margaret, Boston; $20,000 to the Society of St. John the Evangelist, Crowley, Eng., and $1,000 to St. Cuthbert's Society, London.

After private bequests to nephews, nieces and friends of the testator are paid, the residue is to be divided among Hahnemann Hospital, St. Mark's Church and the Order of the Holy Cross, N. Y.

Special Services at the Garrick Theatre.

The Rev. Robert Norwood, rector of the Memorial Church of St. Paul, Overbrook, delivered an address at the Sunday afternoon service at the Garrick Theatre.

John Herman Randall, associate pastor of the Community Church of New York City, also spoke on "The Supreme Opportunity of Today."

Community singing, accompanied by the organ, will be a feature of these Sunday afternoon meetings. John Haynes Holmes, of New York, and Dr.

Morris Jastrow, Jr., of the University of Pennsylvania, will speak on Sunday, January 9. The meetings are held under the auspices of the Unity Center of Practical Christianity, with headquarters at 1504 Walnut Street.

New Year Confirmation Service: Bishop Rhinelander confirmed a class of fifteen men at midnight New Year's Eve at the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia. "Men, start the New Year right," is the slogan adopted for the class by the Rev. George H. Toop, rector of the church.

Watch Service: Mrs. George Long, formerly of the Inasmuch Mission, Philadelphia, conducted the watch night service in the First Baptist Church, at Bridgeport, Pa. Sunday morning Mrs. Long conducted the men's meeting in the Fourth Presbyterian Church, West Philadelphia.

Beginning Wednesday, January 5, Mrs. Long will conduct meetings each Wednesday night in the Lighthouse, West Lehigh Avenue, Philadelphia.

The Rev. Dr. L. N. Caley, who resigned the rectorship of the Church of St. Jude and the Nativity to become rector of St. Martin's Church, Oak Lane, began his new duties Sunday, January 2.

Mr. Thomas Meryweather was ordained to the diaconate Sunday, January 2, at St. Andrew's Mission, Yardley, by Bishop Rhinelander.

R. R. W.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Ordination of the Rev. W. C. Torrence. On December 20, in St. Timothy's Church, Herndon, Va., the Rev. William Clayton Torrence was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, D. D. The Bishop was the preacher, and in his sermon dealt with the unusual demands upon the Christian ministry in the present day and showed some of the splendid opportunities for larger work in our towns and villages. His charge to the candidate was singularly sweet and affectionate, dealing with their relations, both personal and official, for a long period.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. B. J. Rudderow, rector of Truro Parish. The Litany was said by the Rev. Noble C. Powell, of St. Paul's Memorial Church, University of Virginia, after which the Rev. Paul D. Bowden, of St. James' Church, Warrenton, said the Ante-Communion. The Rev. T. D. Harari read the Epistle, and the Bishop was the celebrant.

At the evening service the Rev. Mr. Torrence presented to the Bishop for confirmation a class of seven, which was a splendid tribute to Mr. Torrence's untiring labors.

Life Conferences: The Diocesan Board of Religious Education is planning, under the charge of a committee consisting of the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., and the Rev. E. L. Woodward, M. D., to hold a series of Life Conferences at various centres, to present to the boys of the Diocese the claims of the Christian ministry. Conferences of this nature have already been arranged for at the following points: Episcopal High School on Wednesday, January 12; Woodberry Forest School and Christ Church Parish House, Charlottesville, on Thursday, January 13; St. Paul's Parish House, Richmond, on Friday, January 14. The clergy of the Richmond Convocation are requested to select a group of representative boys from their various congregations to attend the meeting in Richmond, and in like manner the parishes of the Albemarle Convocation will send their representative boys to the Charlottesville meeting. It is felt that the best results will be obtained not by extending a general invitation to all boys to attend, but rather by the method of the pastors personally choosing those boys who, in point of character and ability, give the richest promise of future usefulness. Boys between the ages of twelve and eighteen will be eligible for selection.

Consecration of Epiphany Church, Urbanna: On St. Stephen's Day Bishop Brown consecrated Epiphany Church, Urbanna, in Christ Church Parish, Middlesex County, the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, rector. The Bishop preached the consecration sermon, and a large congregation was present.

The church building itself has had an interesting history. It was erected before the Revolution as the courthouse of Middlesex County, and after the County Court was removed from Urbanna to Saluda this building was used for irregular services by different denominations. When, a few years ago, the growth of Christ Church Parish demanded the establishment of services for the Church people of Urbanna, this building was purchased, and with slight alterations was remodeled into a very attractive church building.

Personal Notes

After January 12 the address of the Rev. C. E. Beach will be 6017 Michigan Avenue, St. Louis, Mo. For the past four months Mr. Beach has been chaplain of Brittain Hall, a home for boys, as well as being rector of St. Paul's Church: the work in the parish has grown to such an extent that his entire time is needed in the parish, hence he has been obliged to resign his work at the hall and will give his entire time to upbuilding of the parish.

Owing to the multiplicity of parochial and diocesan duties, the Very Rev. D. W. Thornberry has felt obliged to relinquish the editorship of the Wyoming Churchman. The Rev. Morten Joslin, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Rock Springs, Wyo., is now the editor and general manager of the Wyoming Churchman, and all communications should be sent to him.

The Very Rev. G. D. Christian, dean of Alaska, and Mrs. Christian have returned to their home in Richmond, Va., after eleven years' service under Bishop Rowe, at Nome and Juneau, and will visit Dean Christian's mother at No. 627 North Thirty-third Street, and Mrs. Christian's sister, Mrs. Robert Barksdale, No. 11 Laburnum Court..

The Rev. Howard R. Brinker has been appointed rural dean of the Douglas Deanery, having under his jurisdiction the counties of Natrona, Converse and Niobrara, Wyo.

The Rev. John E. Shea has resigned the churches at Claremont and at Sandy Point, in the Diocese of Southern Virginia, after a rectorate of only two months, and, though still resident in Claremont, expects to take work in another Diocese in the near future.

The Rev. Bertram L. Smith has left the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, Chicago, to become assistant at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Tex.

The Rev. Lewis G. Morris, D. D., became rector of Christ Church, Rochester, N. Y., on January 1, and should be addressed at 114 Rutgers Street.

The Rev. Francis R. Nitchie has resigned as rector of St. Matthew's Parish, Seat Pleasant, Md., and accepted a call to become assistant of St. Luke's Parish, Evanston, Ill. He entered upon his new duties on January 1.

The Rev. William Bell Dent, for nearly four years rector of All Faith Parish, St. Mary's County, Md., has accepted a call to be assistant in Rock Creek Parish, District of Columbia. His residence is in Washington, D. C.

Miss Emma B. Gunz, formerly of St. Mark's Hospital, Salt Lake City, Utah, has been employed for missionary service at St. Stephen's Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska. Miss Gunz has already entered upon her duties.

The Rev. A. B. Perry, formerly of the Diocese of Texas, has accepted work in the Diocese of Louisiana at Innis, Morganzo, New Road and Lakeland. He is in residence at Innis.

The Rev. James T. McCaa, deacon, has accepted the position of assistant minister of St. Matthew's Church, Honma, La., the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, rector.

At the request of Bishop Huntington, Mr. Leonard Tomkinson, an English Churchman, has been appointed missionary for work as a teacher in St. John's School, Kiukiang, China.

The Rev. Richard Cox, rector of St. Paul's Church, Manhattan, Kan., is now in charge of the mission in Herington.

The Rev. Carl Nau, formerly rector of St. Andrew's Church, Emporia, Kan., entered upon his duties the first of the year as rector of St. Paul's Church, Kansas City, Kan., in succession to Bishop-elect Robert H. Mize.

The Rev. J. Knox Bodel, until recently the civilian chaplain for the Episcopal Church in Hawaii, has been appointed a chaplain in the regular army and has been attached to the Thirty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Schofield Barracks, H. T. Chaplain Bodel served as chaplain with the Second Hawaiian Infantry and the First Hawaiian Infantry during the world war. Immediately after his discharge from the army he was appointed civilian chaplain for the Church in Hawaii and served as such until being appointed a chaplain in the regular army.

Bishop Davenport, of Easton, has recently been presented with a new Dodge sedan car by Mr. Dudley Rose, of Sudlersville, Md.

The Rev. Byron E. H. Floyd, of Newport News, Va., has assumed charge of Christ Church (colored), Halifax, Va. He is also to look after the colored work in Chatham and South Boston.

The Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart will deliver a course of lectures on Christian Fundamentals at the University of North Carolina, beginning on January 9. He will address the student body on five successive days.

The Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., B. D., formerly rector of St. Paul's, Marfa, Tex., and the Episcopal missionary of the "Big Bend" of West Texas along the Mexican border, has been recently appointed minister in charge of old, historic St. John's Parish at Salisbury, Conn., at the gateway of the Berkshires. During December Mr. McClellan has been at St. Stephen's Church, New York City, and has been giving a series of Advent addresses. He gave a Christmas address in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue, New York City, on Holy Innocents' Day. He delivered the historical sermon in Salisbury to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrims.

Ordinations.

On Sunday, November 21, at Trinity Church, Abbeville, S. C., Mr. Alfred James Derbyshire was ordained to the diaconate. The Rev. Thomas P. Noe, the Superintendent of the Church Orphanage at York, S. C., presented the candidate to the Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, D. D. Bishop Guerry preached the ordination sermon, developing the theme of recruiting candidates for the ministry from the home altars. The local Methodist Episcopal Church, with its pastor, the Rev. C. E. Peele, adjourned their morning service to attend the ordination service in a body. Forty Boy Scouts also attended in a body. Mr. Derbyshire is the local Scout Master of two troops of Scouts which he has organized since reaching Abbeville in June, and he also coaches the local high school football eleven.

In the Bethlehem Chapel of the National Cathedral on the Feast of St. Thomas the Apostle, Canon DeVries presented Mr. Thomas Williamson for the order of deacon and Canon Snyder presented the Rev. Philip Ayers Dale to be ordained priest. The preacher was the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

In St. Thomas' Chapel, New York, on December 23, the Bishop of Bethlehem ordained to the diaconate Mr. Charles Frederick Odell and advanced to the priesthood the Rev. William Macdonald, the Rev. Henry Lewis (for the Bishop of New Hampshire), and the Rev. George McKinley (of the Diocese of Bethlehem). The Rev. Dr. George R. Van De Water preached. Mr. Odell is of the City Mission Society; Mr. Macdonald, of the Cathedral Choir School; Mr. Lewis, assistant at Holy Trinity Church, Harlem. Mr. McKinley is about to be transferred to the Diocese of New York as assistant at St. Thomas' Chapel, New York.

Deaths.

The Rev. Joseph T. Ewing, who resigned the rectorship of All Saints' Parish, Brooklyn, Mich., in the fall of 1919, owing to ill health, died on November 14 in Detroit, Mich., where he has lived since giving up parochial work. The funeral service in St. Paul's Cathedral, on November 16, was conducted by Bishop Williams and Bishop Fox, members of the Detroit clericus acting as pall-bearers. The burial service was held in Brooklyn on the following day, the Bishop of the Diocese officiating.

The Rev. Charles W. MacNish, a retired priest of the Diocese of Central New York, died at his home in Ovid, N. Y., on December 16. He was fourth on the list of the clergy and his entire ministry was spent in the missionary fields of the Diocese. Burial was made at Ovid, N. Y., on December 20, a number of the clergy attending.

The Last Adventure.

All forms of life are endless; each frail vase
  Is emptied o'er and o'er—but filled again;
And never tangled is the wondrous maze
Of nature's melodies through endless days—
  And yet forever new and sweet to men.

Gleams hint that life upon some future waits;
  The worm cannot forecast the butterfly—
And yet the transformation but creates
A step in the same nature which now mates.
  Our own—and may life's mystery untie.

Mayhap the butterfly this message brings:
  "The law uncomprehended I obey;
Although the lowliest of earth-bred things,
Even I have been reborn with urgent wings,
  And heavenward fly—who crept but yesterday."

In life's fair mansion I am but a guest;
  And life will bring fulfilment of the gleam.
I trust this last adventure is the best,
The crowning of this earthly life's behest,
  The consummation of the poet's dream.

—James Terry White, the Christian Union Quarterly.

A Substitute for Worry.

It is easy to worry. It is easy to worry when there seems to be something to worry over, and it is just about as easy when there is nothing to worry over. It is so easy that most of us "get the habit" while we are young and keep it up until we reach the haven of rest. And if there is any possible way of doing it, some of us will proceed to worry the very first day we are in our longed-for heaven. It is true that worry carves many deep lines upon our foreheads, makes us spend many hours of greatest uneasiness, drains our vitality, destroys our cheerfulness, puts an extinguisher upon our joys, makes us less fit for life and an enemy to social good cheer, and, so far as it can, it robs heaven of the sun and earth of its song. And yet we cling to it as one of our most cherished possessions.

Why do we do it? Probably the principal reason is that we look upon worry as a safeguard against trouble. If we don't worry over things, we are sure something dreadful will happen to us. It is worry that protects us from evil, and it is worry that acts as an angel of the Lord encamping round about us. If we didn't worry we couldn't expect to live in peace, and things would surely go wrong. Of course all this sounds very foolish, and it is even more foolish than it sounds, but it is, nevertheless, true.

One of the most striking characteristics of our soldiers during the war was the cheerful spirit which they exhibited. They had difficulties enough, and hardships without number, but they steadfastly refused to worry about them. Even in the darkest hours they sang, "Pack your troubles in your old kit bag," and faced the future hopefully. One of the doctors who had charge of a hospital train says that scarcely ever did he hear a groan or a complaint from the men who were suffering the most excruciating agony. When compared with what these brave men endured, how trivial do our little troubles seem!

Why not try a substitute for worry? Why not trust? Trust does not remove the possibilities of trouble, but, reading and believing that God cares for us, if decides to let God do the worrying. But some one says that is irreverent, as God never worries. Well, then, if God never worries, why should we? He is looking after things, and we certainly are not, and if He never worries it does seem foolish for us to do so. Long ago a man of God wrote, "I will trust and not be afraid." We say, "I will trust," but we seem strangely loath to say, "I will not be afraid." To learn this lesson well is to enter a new life, a life of marvelous peace and rest. And the gateway is open always. —The Christian Guardian.

The Call for the Heroic.

The carrying out of the program of Christianity today calls for heroic souls. This has always been true, but the world has never heard so loud and persistent a demand for real heroism on the part of the followers of Jesus Christ as is being made today. The reason: Because the burning, blazing word written across the sky is "Sacrifice."

Jesus laid down what seemed to be very hard conditions of discipleship; and it seems strange that when He wanted the kingdom advanced it should go forward under strict and severe regulations. He had much to say about crosses, swords, self-denials, sacrifices, sufferings, burdens, hardships, persecutions, tribulations; and He said nothing that encouraged ease, self-satisfaction or self-indulgence. The soft life was not a part of His program. His outstanding word was "Sacrifice." He appealed to the heroic—never to the easy.

And the appeal was not an empty, perfunctory thing. It throbbed with life. It was based upon His own high and unfaltering example. He had laid aside lofty place—He was on an equality with God—and had become the Servant of man. He was a conspicuous and imperishable example of devotion to duty, and He made it clear that those who would enter into the kingdom would have to yield to the same noble consecration.

So it is that Christianity stands for strength, virility, ruggedness, uplifting influence, right character, conquest through struggle. It scorns the "soft-raiment" type of manhood and womanhood. It believes in the achieving soul, the soul through which God is able to will and to do of His good pleasure, because it has become conformable to the heroic ideals and example of His Son.—The Christian Advocate.

An English Bishop, being somewhat troubled by a neglected Diocese, thought to inspire his clergy to take services during the week, by periodically visiting and taking one himself. On one of these occasions, having been moved to much eloquence in his sermon, he felt a not unnatural desire to know if he had made any impression on the congregation. So he questioned the clerk in the vestry.

"Well, I hope they've been pleased," said the clerk, "and I am sure we take it wery kind o' yer worship to preach to us; but a worser one would have done for the likes of us, if so be"—he added—"one would be found."—Tid-Bits.

"It is no tragedy when a man falls with his face forward."

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

MENUS AND SO FORTH.

What do people have to eat in our State and city institutions, in many of which there is little else to do but eat and sleep? Have you ever thought upon this question?

We now have a large number of new citizens, who are supposed to have a speecial knowledge, derived from long years of household training on the subject of diet and management of beds, linen and so forth. The proper supervision of these things offers an opportunity for the use of this special knowledge.

Unless one stops to reflect, it is difficult to appreciate that the housekeeping department of our State governments is so large.

When it is remembered that all the inmates of our insane asylums, penitentiaries, schools for the deaf and blind, reform or industrial schools, and homes for aged and infirm are literally children of the State, it will be seen that there are thousands of persons for whom the public is keeping house.

Every detail of the life of these persons is prescribed for them by public officials. The hour for going to bed and for rising, the menu for each meal, is a part of the duty of some one who is employed by the citizens of the State. How is this duty being performed? Are their beds being kept as clean and free from pests as you would like to have the beds in your home kept? Are the retiring and rising hours the most conducive to the health and happiness of those who must abide by them?

And most important of all, what do these people get to eat?

Are not these questions worthy of the best attention of our feminine citizens, in whose domestic province they seem especially to lie?

One may say that it is impossible even for a new and consciencious lady citizen fully imbued with the rights and responsibilities of newly acquired rights and privileges to make a round of all of our State institutions and give them critical inspection.

True enough, but these places are never all located in one town or city. Is not some one of them near enough to you to permit of an occasional visit? If the superintendent is the right kind of man and public official he will appreciate your interest, and take pleasure in showing you through the buildings, and if he is not this sort of man you ought to know it, and so ought the public generally.

It is an old adage that "the price of freedom is eternal vigilance." This is equally true of cleanliness. It cannot be maintained about an institution without continual watchfulness. The official who knows his buildings are likely to have frequent visitors will take extra pains to keep them looking neat and clean and so add to the comfort and health of the inmates.

When it comes to the diet it must ever be borne in mind that the management is limited, and usually very closely limited, in its expenditures. But often a little thought and planning will enable the introduction of some variety at little or no additional expense. One of the best ways to secure an improvement along this line is the keeping of a record of the daily menus for six months or a year back. This plan is not so burdensome as it sounds, and should be required in every State institution, both for the sake of the inmates and of the officials, if they are of the right kind, because sometimes unjust criticisms are made of the fare.

The condition and management of this household department of our State governments is a proper matter for the attention of civic leagues, community clubs, and such like organizations. They can pass resolutions requesting information from boards of managers or the proper State authorities.

We suggest to our readers that they make one of their New Year's resolutions to be 100 per cent. citizens, taking an active and intelligent interest in those wards of the State for whose comfort and happiness each one of us has an individual responsibility.

Nothing is so helpful to a faithful and efficient public official as the interest and co-operation of the citizens he is trying to serve, and nothing is more dreaded by the indolent and inefficient officer than a public enquiry into his shortcomings.

WANTED! REAL RELIGION.

There is a very interesting and cleverly written article in the December number of the Atlantic Monthly, which we recommend to our readers in general, and our clerical readers in particular.

The title is "A Parish Minister's Declaration of Independence." After setting forth in a very witty, but none the less truthful manner, the many calls which the modern clergyman has to preach upon, every subject of philanthropy and ethical activity, he goes on to say that he is a teacher as well as a minister, and that he sent out information men to find out why men did not come to church, and we quote a part of what he found out about the spiritual needs of the average man:

"The average man was not quite certain what he wanted when he went to church, but he knew it was something which should have in it the element of contrast. He wanted a suggestion of the everlasting otherness of life which real religion always intimates. He believed that all the fine, unselfish, organized altruisms which abound in every city, and claim the support of Church people, were aspects of twentieth-century Christianity. He did not understand a Christianity which was so far removed from this world that it called these activities secular. He believed that modern religion is as wide as every honest effort to help the world. But he was getting mired in detail. He was losing the power to say 'God' in connection with them all.

He seemed to remember something to the same effect in Saint Augustine's Confessions. 'What do I love, when I love my God?' asks Augustine. 'I questioned the earth, and it said, "I am not He." I questioned the sea and the depths, and they replied, "We are not thy God; seek above us." I questioned the blowing winds, and the whole air with its inhabitants replied, "Anaximenes is wrong; I am not God." I questioned the heavens, sun, moon, stars: "Neither are we," say they, "the God whom you seek."'

All these were aspects of God, but religion, as the average man saw it, was just the power to say 'God,' where the rest of the world said Nature, Justice, Duty, Peace, Social Service, Foreign Missions. And it seemed to him as he reflected upon it that the Church was missing its chance to help him say that thing. He listened in the shell of modern being, and he heard the roar of the sea of life, with its manifold activities. What he missed in the method and temper of the modern Church was the constant suggestion of a 'central peace subsisting at the heart of endless agitation.'"

The Bible: Try It.

There are many who busy themselves with the intricate problems of the Bible who have no mastery in the experimental knowledge of Christ. They spend their time in studying the guide post, but they have no vital acquaintance with the road. They have a magnificent knowledge of the map of the country, but they are not familiar with the bracing air, and its refreshing springs, and its covets from the tempest, and its pleasant arbors by the way, and its lilies of peace, and its rich and plentiful fruits which are good for all the changes of seasons of our life. They know the Book in the letter, they are strangers to the Spirit. They know it as literature; they do not know it as revelation. They come to it as students, they do not come to it as sinners; they bring to it their curiosity, they do not bring their needs. They treat it as a manual of absorbing mental interest, they do not regard it as a vade mecum in the eternal concerns of the soul. They do everything with the Bible except prove it. They remain in the lecture room and discuss its doctrines, they do not go into the infirmary and apply its teachings to broken lives, and more particularly to their own.

So that my purpose at this time is a very simple one, and may all be expressed in a simple phrase: try it! Test its teachings experimentally, honestly, earnestly, persistently, by submitting your life to their control and direction. These teachings claim to be profitable, workable, efficient, vitally helpful, profoundly advantageous in practical service. Try them!—J. H. Jowett.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR

JANUARY.

1. Saturday. Circumcision. New Year's Day.
2. Second Sunday after Christmas.
6. Thursday. Epiphany.
9. First Sunday after Epiphany.
16. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
23. Septuagesima Sunday.
25. Tuesday. Conversion of St. Paul.
30. Sexagesima Sunday.
31. Monday.

Collect for First Sunday After Epiphany.

O Lord, we beseech Thee mercifully to receive the prayers of Thy people who call upon Thee; and grant that they may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfill the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Tell me, what is this innumerable throng
Singing in the heavens a loud angelic song?
These are they who come with swift and shining feet
From round about the throne of God the Lord of Light to greet.

Tell me, how may I join in this holy feast
With all the kneeling world, and I of all the least?
Fear not, O faithful heart, but bring what most is meet:
Bring love alone, true love alone, and lay it at His feet.

—Richard Watson Gilder.

"Doers of the Word."

Today a church stands in Korea, a monument to the loving sacrifice of an humble native Christian and his wife. This man is now the leader of the group of Christians that form this church.

The couple first heard the truth from a colporteur who spent several nights in their humble home, which was used as a sort of hotel by the travelers who were forced to spend a night on the way. This man and his wife walked over forty miles to a Bible class in one of the mission stations, and there they were given the instruction which enabled them to receive the light they longed for, and the inspiration to consecrate so largely of their time, talents and means to the erection of a church building and the organization of a group for further study of God's Word.

As they journeyed home from the Bible class they were much in prayer and deep in thought, for they had no means with which to open the work that their hearts were burning to see started.

After having walked an entire day in almost absolute silence the wife turned to her husband and said, "Our work of running the little rest place for travelers does not require much physical strength, and I have a plan whereby we can arrange for the cost of a church building." The husband, who had been trying to work out a plan for this very purpose, eagerly inquired, "Pray tell me what is in your mind." And then this woman, who had allowed the Light to come into her life and the Spirit to direct her ways, unfolded her scheme for them to eat breakfast later than usual and supper earlier, thus living on two meals a day. She figured that by saving the cost of the mid-day meal, in two years it would amount to enough to pay for the church where they might meet with their friends and neighbors and pass on to them the great news which they had received and which had so entirely transformed their lives.

Nor were they satisfied with this sacrifice. No guest was allowed to leave their home, often crowded and noisy though it was, without hearing the gospel simply presented.

To this day, every evening as darkness falls, the wife "steals away awhile" up the hill back of their house for quiet prayer.

Once the church property was paid for, their little savings was available for other uses, and not long ago this couple hired for a month an evangelist to work in their neighborhood, assuming his entire support during that time. —Presbyterian of the South.

The Incarnation.

No one can ever estimate what it has meant to human history that year by year there has been kept alive our faith in the teaching of "Immanuel, God with us," which is the meaning of "The Incarnation." It brings the highest freedom to the individual and to society, advances civilization, softens man's dealing with man, contains assurance for the future, and weaves a golden halo over every experience.

"The tabernacle of God is with men" —a human Body in which the eternal Word deigns to dwell forever, in which our Saviour is now clothed at the right hand of God, so that He could declare: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." That tabernacle includes all faithful. "Lo, I am with you always." There is more to the Christian life than man can see. It is the hidden fellowship with the Master through which men "take knowledge" of their experiences; it is the ennobling touch of every human endeavor; it is the sustaining power in every temptation; it is the illumined pathway out of every perplexity; and it is the guiding star as night closes in. Ours is the privilege to share in that extension, and to live with Christ in the Spirit.—The Rt. Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D.

For the Southern Churchman.

"Afterward."

Heb. 12:11.

H. T. S.

With lightning flash
The thunder-crash—
And then a flush:
Fair rainbow's blush
On tempest's cheek
Bends o'er the meek.
Radiant sorrow—
Blessed morrow!
From storm to calm,
From pang to palm;
After the rod,
The smile of God
Veiled weary years
In mist of tears:—
Now resplendent,
Joy transcendent!

"I'll Try Again."

With the last word of her angry outburst Beatrice caught her breath sharply. What had she done? It was nearly a month since she had promised her mother that she would try to control the violent outbreaks of temper which she herself realized were going to be a handicap to her if they were not mastered during her girlhood, and this was the fourth such scene.

Her brother Donald, who, without intending it, had angered her today, hurriedly left the room as he saw the tears well into Beatrice's brown eyes.

"Oh, mother," she said brokenly, "I've done it again! When Don began teasing me about my Latin, I was sure I was going to hold onto my temper and my tongue. But before I knew it, I was saying everything ugly and hateful that I could think of. I don't believe it's any use for me to try!"

"How long is it since you gave me your promise, dear?" her mother asked.

"Almost a month," was the answer.

"Almost a month!" Mrs. Clapp repeated cheerily. "Dear me, what a long time you've taken, dear, for such a simple little task as conquering your hot temper!" Then with a change of tone she asked, "Beatrice, dear, do you remember the beautiful, smooth, round pebbles that you were so fond of collecting at the seashore last summer?"

There was a nod of the head that snuggled so comfortably on mother's shoulder, a murmur of assent.

"In the beginning these pebbles were not smooth and round as you found them last summer," Mrs. Clapp went on gently. "They had rough sides, with sharp edges and jagged corners. They have been made smooth by the washing of the water over their surfaces, and they have been ground against each other until the rough surfaces and the sharp edges and corners have been worn smooth. But dear, the ocean didn't accomplish this in a month, or a year, or even ten years. I've read somewhere that it took as much as a hundred years!"

At this surprising information Beatrice straightened up, a little smile curving her lips. "You don't think it will take me a hundred years to master my temper, do you, mother?" she asked demurely.

"Hardly, dear! But if it takes a hard-working ocean a hundred years to grind off the corners and smooth the surface of the pebbles that we pick up on its shores, isn't it just possible that it will take a certain girl, whom we both know, more than one month to get the better of her hasty temper?"

Beatrice looked thoughtful. "It makes it easier to think of it that way," she said at last. "I will try, mother, just as hard as I can, and when I get discouraged I'll think of the ocean working a hundred years on the pebbles, and I'll try again, just as hard as I can."—Selected.

Can Jesus Meet My Need?

Can Jesus meet my need? Yes, and more than meet it. No matter how intricate my path, how difficult my service, no matter how sad my bereavement, how far away my loved ones, no matter how helpless I am, how hopeless I am, how deep are my soul-yearnings—Jesus can meet all, all, and more than meet. He not only promises me rest (Matt. 11:28-30). Ah, how welcome that would be were it all, and what an all that one word embraces! He not only promises me drink to alleviate my thirst. No, better than that! "He who trusts Me in this matter (who believeth on Me, takes Me at My word), out of him shall flow. . . ." Can it be so? Can the dry and thirsty one not only be refreshed, the parched soil moistened, the arid places cooled, but the land be so saturated that springs well up, streams flow down from it? Even so! And not mere mountain torrents, full while the rains last, then dry again, but "out of his belly shall flow rivers."—J. Hudson Taylor.

The Presence of Christ.

He does not seem to answer all my prayers,
Nor always lift the burden of my cares;
And He has called me often into night,
And in time of battle made me fight:
Yet if I know Him near me, all is well—
The comfort of His presence, who can tell?

What if I miss my comrades on the way?
He will ne'er forsake me all the day;
And though I find the pathway steep and long,
And weary of the journey—He is strong,
So strong that I can rest me in His love,
And see, as in a forecast, heaven above.

Whatever life may bring me, I am sure
The comfort of His presence will endure.
There may be gloomy valleys, wind-swept heights,
Weird noises in the shadows, broken lights,
But I will fear no evil, Christ will be
A Guide, a Friend, a Saviour, aye, to me.
—Marianne Farningham.

How Raymond John Kept Christmas.

The train was stalled; snow was piled in huge drifts around and before it. The car windows were veiled with ice-films. The low, hardy mountain shrubs were bent beneath it; from the dull sky overhead it was still falling steadily.

Things were pretty gloomy in the tourist car "Alaska"; at least, Raymond John Ellis thought they were, and when his sunny spirits drooped things were generally desperate indeed.

"Won't we get there?" Hhe blocked the aisle as Bleakly, the conductor, sauntered through. The man gazed down the empty car. "No, my boy, we won't get there, or anywhere else, accordin' to the outlook! Sorry for you! One kid alone in a tourist car can't expect anything but to be short on a 'Merry Christmas!'"

The conductor passed on, banged the door, kicked at the vestibule partition, and dropped, muttering, off the platform to see how deep the snow was under the wheels.

Raymond John considered a few minutes, and opened his little imitation-leather suitcase. "There isn't very many new things! But then, there isn't very many passengers, either; the porter said so. They left the day coach down the mountain, and in here there's only me and that ranch owner that took a whole section; there's the conductor and porter and cook and brakeman and engineer and fireman, and the railway mail man, and maybe two or three more! Not more 'n ten, anyway." Raymond John stood up and glanced about thoughtfully. "There's trees, plenty of 'em, though they're little and scrubby—maybe the porter—"

Reese came smiling in at that very minute. "Oh, Mr. Reese—"

The big man and the little boy bent their heads over the suitcase in deep and earnest conference for several minutes. Then, smiling broadly, Reese took a hatchet from under a car seat and went out into the snow-drifts, muttering: "Christmas tree for us, right off the mountain; and presents for everybody! It's the real thing, and no mistake!"

Left alone, Raymond John took a little piece of paper from about one of his parcels, and pressing it against the window-pane, made out a laborious list of guests and a memorandum of his available gifts.

Reese and the cook conferred in the pantry; delicacies were short there also, but happily the cook was an optimist and believed.

"Candles for the tree! Of course! Where's them big tallow cylinders that the brakeman lights when he crawls under the wheels to oil 'em? Just shave a few of them down, and if you can't invent something to stick 'em into so's they'll hang decent on that spruce, you're not worthy to travel with that Christmas kid! I'm going to make some candy, and a pink cake, too, if it takes the last egg in the dining car pantry!"

When Raymond John had finished all his preparations, there was nothing but absolute necessities left in the suitcase; even his new handkerchiefs and his windsor tie had gone into the gift fund.

Reese fingered the windsor tie with mischievous touches, until he suddenly discovered his own name tucked in a fold of it; then he grew thoughtful. He presently made a nasty excursion through the deserted coaches, telling of the events taking place in the "Alaska."

"That orphan kid, with nothin' ahead but a home in an orphan asylum, not a cent, and just a charity pass and a suitcase, is playin' Santa Claus in there. Here, just throw into this handkerchief, won't you? and don't be afraid to take a good aim!"

In due time he appeared in the rear of the Christmas tree and suspended the old bandana, with the collection in it, from a sturdy limb. Having nothing else to do, and being endowed with curiosity after the manner of mankind, the ranchman sought his neglected section in the "Alaska."

The cook placed the pink cake and the fudge on a table across the seats, the men dropped in from their various stations, and Raymond John, flushed and eager, stood up beside the tree.

"It's Christmas," he said happily, "and everybody's been so good to me! I think there's presents enough to go around, and now we'll see 'em right away!"

The ranchman gravely accepted a barlow knife, one-bladed; four officials of the road accepted, with polite thanks, new handkerchiefs with red Buster Browns on the border. The engineer was the recipient of a little rhinestone pin, with one stone missing; the cook received a tintype of Raymond John, a fairly good likeness. Then the cook produced the refreshments, and the ranchman suddenly seemed awake.

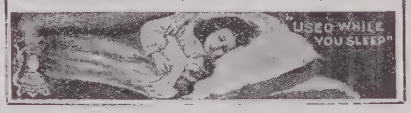
"Where are you going, boy, anyway?"

Raymond John straightened himself: "To Riverside, to a home there. Aunt Hattie didn't want me to; she wrote that she'd take me in, but she's got nine children of her own, and hasn't any money. The home's not far, and I can see them sometimes. I've got nobody else, but only her, and I'm to learn something and go to work as soon as I'm able."

The ranchman arose: "Well, I've got nobody at all; not even an aunt with nine boys and girls, and there's five thousand acres of ground and a bungalow with eight rooms, which we could divide. Do you think you'd like to come? How would you like me for a partner?"

Raymond John's blue eyes rested on the keen gray ones bent to meet him. "Partners have to each put in something, don't they? If you put in all that land and that big house and about everything else, it seems to me—why, I don't seem to be putting in anything at all. 'Twouldn't be a fair partnership, would it?"

The keen gray eyes softened, as they searched the blue, frank gaze of Raymond John. "Somewhere, little boy—I think it was in the Book, long ago—I learned some words like these: 'Though I have all knowledge and could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing.' There isn't any love, to speak of, in that big concern. It strikes me, Raymond John, that you could put into the firm that one most valuable asset—the love. Won't you try?"



The solitary boy went over to the solitary man, and stood beside him. "I'll do it; I love you anyway, and maybe I could help you run the ranch."

The man smiled. "I don't doubt it; and in a little while people will quit asking whatever possessed me to call my ranch 'San Benito.'"

Reese suddenly broke in. "See here, Mr. David, how about this handkerchief?" He brought it forth, and in the midst of the circle counted out to Raymond John "thirty dollars," and read the inscription, "With love, from your Christmas guests."

The child considered gravely. "Is it mine to do as I please with?"

David nodded. "Then could I send it to Aunt Hattie? She's got nine, you know; and we were always so poor with only me, what must she be with nine?" The men still stood silent, thoughtful about the elements of the Christmas celebration. The ranchman, accustomed to speaking his mind, said aloud, "It says somewhere else in that Book, 'Except ye become as a little child, ye cannot inherit.' Lord, is this blizzard driving us in from the world back into the light and shelter just as it does my sheep on San Benito? Raymond John, you don't know it, maybe, but you're the richest of the partners in San Benito ranch."—Youth's World.

Vapo Cresolene
(Established 1879)
Used for more than forty years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.
FOR more than a generation we have been receiving grateful testimony to the virtues of this thoroughly tested and proven treatment. It stops violent coughing, and difficult breathing, assuring restful sleep because the antiseptic vapor carries healing with every breath. Booklet 48 tells why the diseases for which Cresolene is recommended yield to this simple and dependable treatment.
Vapo-Cresolene is sold by druggists
VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt Street, New York

Everything becomes possible to those who love. The commands of the Lord are no longer grievous, for the soul that loves is gifted by that love with fresh energies; it discovers to itself unexpected possibilities, and is supplied with ever-flowing currents of new vigor. We shall be enabled to do so much if only we love. We live by loving, and the more we love the more we live; and, therefore, when life feels dull and the spirits are low, turn and love God, love your neighbor, and you will be healed of your wound. Love Christ, the dear Master; look at His face, listen to His words, and love will waken, and you will do all things through Christ Who strengtheneth you.—H. S. Holland.

For the Young Folks

A Child's Belief.

I believe in God the Father,
Who made us every one;
Who made the earth and heaven,
The moon, and stars, and sun.
All that we have each day
To us by Him is given;
And we call Him when we pray
"Our Father, Who art in heaven."

I believe in Jesus Christ,
The Father's only Son,
Who came to us from heaven,
And loved us every one.
He taught us to be holy,
Till on the cross He died;
And now we call Him Saviour,
And Christ, the Crucified.

I believe God's Holy Spirit
Is with us every day,
And if we do not grieve Him,
He ne'er will go away.
From heaven upon Jesus
He descended like a dove,
And dwelleth ever with us
To fill our hearts with love.

—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

Sonny's Cure.

E. G. Nelson.

"Now, children," said the mother squirrel as she gathered her three little squirrels around her one bright sunny morning in autumn, "winter will soon be here, bringing the cold winter snows that cover the trees, grass and nuts, and we will be unable to get any food. Each one of you," she continued, "must gather enough to last through the cold days until spring comes, bringing the fresh green sprouts and grasses. You must begin in the morning before the children have gathered them, or they have all been eaten up by some one else."

"Snow," said Sonny, "what's that?"

None of them had ever seen a winter, and the tale their mother told to them of the little white flakes that would come down and cover the ground, making it white and beautiful, but quite covering their supply of food, made a nice story in telling, but a very small impression on Sonny's small brain.

The mother then set about to clean her house and set it in order. Two of the squirrels scampered off and began looking about for the best and largest nuts and searching for a good hiding place. But Sonny stood back and laughed at them, throwing nuts and twigs at them quite in the manner of a real boy.

"Indeed," he said, "I am not going to work this fine morning; there is plenty of time. Look how far I can jump," and away he went from one bough to another, and at last joining some others at their games, playing until night came, stopping only to crack a nut or bite a twig.

Day after day through the bright autumn days he played, stopping only when he was hungry, or to rest when he was tired.

One morning, sleeping longer than usual, he awoke to find the ground all covered with snow and the air so cold that it bit his nose when he looked out. The little white flakes were falling like rain. Being quite excited at the sudden change, so new to him, he called to his mother to come and see.

"That is snow," she said in answer to his question. "Winter has truly come," and away she frisked to come back with her breakfast of nuts.

Sonny watched as one in a dream and wondered which of the three would contribute to his breakfast, but as no one offered and he was very hungry, he went to his mother and asked:

"What am I going to eat? I cannot find anything in this white stuff, can I?"

"No, indeed," she answered, cracking another nut and eating it with great relish. "Where did you hide your nuts?"

"Why, I did not gather any."

"Didn't gather any?" she echoed, dropping her nut in astonishment. "What were you doing while your sisters gathered theirs?"

Sonny hung his head to hide his confusement, and then feeling and finding that his mother was still waiting for his answer, he said very low, "I played."

"Then you will have to play while they eat, for they have gathered only enough for themselves."

And when she had finished her breakfast she called to the other two, and away they went to enjoy a frolic in the snow. And what a wonderful thing it was! They tumbled and tossed in the light fluffy drifts, and were having the finest time while Sonny watched them from the house with a dejected look on his face, and he looked so sorrowful that his sisters wanted to go back and give him some of their nuts, but their mother said.

"No, let him alone; it will teach him to be more careful in the future."

"He will starve," cried the largest sister, and immedately began weeping very bitterly.

"He will starve," echoed the other, and she, too, wept.

But their mother was firm, and would not allow them to divide their nuts with him just then.

"It is better that he learn his lesson now than later, when the heavier snows come and cover the ground for weeks at a time."

And she explained to them how, when the sun came out, it would melt the snow and he could get plenty to eat and to store for the winter. The sun did not come out that day, and not very brightly the next, and as his mother had given him only enough to keep him from getting too hungry, he watched the departure of the snow with great interest. The sun did come out very bright at last, and soon the snow began to melt, and soon little streams were formed and he watched them running off down the hillside until there was neither snow or water left. And all day long Sonny worked gathering nuts, and every day he worked as long as the bright, pretty weather lasted until he had quite a lot, much more than one squirrel could possibly eat in one winter. He had known what it was to be hungry, and did not want to risk it again.

This was how Sonny came to be a very thoughtful, industrious squirrel.

Little Brother of All.

The Christ Child unto the stable came,
'Twixt the midnight and the morn;
His mother laid Him softly down,
By the beasts of hoof and horn.
The friendly kine a-near Him stood,
In the frost of the early day,
And, little Brother of all the poor,
He slept in the fragrant hay.

The Christ Child slept in the stable dim
And over Him flamed the star,
That was golden-bright with the light of heaven,
Where God and the angels are.
Then, journeying far, came king and priest,
With a wealth of spices sweet,
And, little Brother of all the rich,
They knelt to kiss His feet.

—Selected.

New Year's Companions.

The New Year was dancing with delight. He had just returned from his quest of the most joyous children in all the land. The young New Year sought them that they might travel together.

"I knew where I should find them," said he. "Father Time told me. I found them in an inland city called Indianapolis, where school girls and school boys made hundreds of toys which with rugs, quilts and mittens were sent to settlement houses and free kindergartens. They also made a gift of $100 to bring cheer to children in war-devastated France."

Delightedly, he continued to recount his adventures.

"I watched children in the Sixth Grade of a school at Bristol, Va., prepare a very beautiful Christmas tree, all gay with tinsel and lights, for the children of the lower grades. The teacher had ruled that nothing was to be bought for the tree, and the result was a most interesting and attractive collection of mended toys, freshly dressed dolls and warm clothing.

"I then skipped over to a town called Fairmont, in West Virginia, and discovered one hundred Christmas stockings which had been made by happy, singing youngsters and filled with candy, nuts and toys for children who, they feared, might miss the joys of that glad season. Next came a long flight to Jamestown, N. Y., but it was a trip well worth while, for I found a group of children who had supplied overcoats, cloaks and mittens to save poor children in the city schools from the pinching fingers of Jack Frost. This same sort of gift, I learned, had been sent by boys and girls to the great Northwest—Washington, Oregon and Idaho—to freezing orphans in Poland.

"In the sea-coast city of Baltimore I saw great piles of oranges, cakes, candy and jams, all going to make Christmas cheer for wounded heroes in army and navy hospitals. These children, also, had contributed $5,000 to care for ten youthful patients for one year in a Hospital School for Crippled Children. At Newport, Tenn., I had spied out a collection of toys which busy youngsters were preparing to distribute among friends in orphanages and hospitals.

"Continuing my flight, I alighted in a children's hospital at Louisville, Ky. There I found the small invalids joyous over bright colored pictures pasted on strips of cardboard. They were gifts of school boys and girls of LaGrange, Ky., who had prepared them to replace scrap-books too heavy for tiny hands to hold.

"In my search for children with whom I could travel, I had discovered the Junior Red Cross."

A Friend for the Princess.

"Listen! Come listen to the strange thing I have heard!" Neil waved his red cap high and shouted till all the children in this part of the beautiful park came running to him.

Neil's father was one of the king's guards, and Neil sometimes brought news of a grand procession from the palace. Then the children would go skipping across the grass to watch it. For you must know that this park was a portion of the king's own grounds where every child in the city had permission to play upon the thick green grass under the old trees.

"Is it a procession, Neil? Should we go over to the other side of the park to watch for the soldiers to come riding down the avenue?"

Neil shook his head. He was so full of pride in the crowd he had drawn about him that it was a whole minute before he would tell them the wonderful news.

"Somebody from the palace is coming to watch our play this morning. Somebody who will choose one boy, or girl, to be the special playmate of the princess.

"Think what an honor that will be!" said Neil impressively. "The child who is chosen will have all sorts of lovely things to play with and to eat. Probably he'll have ice cream and candy and nuts every single day!"

"Ho, ho! You needn't think it will be any boy, Neil Tallant," scoffed Helen. "Of course, it will be a girl that the court messenger chooses. Some girl that knows many games and that can sew and knit, for I'm sure the princess loves dressing dolls as well as any one else.

"How fortunate it is that I brought my doll Rosalie and my sewing bag today. I shall sit under this very tree and sing the old songs my granny taught me, while I make beautiful new clothes for my dolly."

The other children decided to play games as usual, but everybody kept thinking of the court messenger who was to watch them. More than one child wondered how he or she could please the strange grown-up visitor. For it would be a happy thing to become the playmate of sweet Princess Margaret.

"Look, there he is! I know it must be that man in the fine blue and silver coat," whispered one child after another as they caught sight of a tall, handsome man who had taken his place nearby.

After that the children took special pains to play every game they knew, and to be very polite and graceful as they made their bows or circled about in the quaint old folk games that the king admired.

"See that strange little girl sitting alone under the large oak tree," whispered Esther, when they circled about for the last time in the prettiest game of all. "Don't you think she would like to play with us?"

"Oh, I don't know," said Claire. "She isn't any child I ever saw before. Maybe she would, and Helen had better put a little stone on those doll clothes if she wants to leave them spread around so. Mr. Wind would love to send them flying far away."

"I'll tell her as I go by," said Esther. She showed Helen how to make her dainty things safe from mischievous Mr. Wind, then she ran on to the shy looking little stranger under the broad-limbed old oak.

"Don't you want to come and play with us?" she asked with a friendly smile.

"Oh, yes, yes! Those are lovely games, and the children all play together so well. I never played with other children much because I have been sick," said the child in a sweet, low voice.

They clasped hands and ran skipping across the grass to where the children were forming a circle for another game. The strange little girl's eyes were bright with delight and expectation.

But the children did not want her to play with them.

"Don't you see it would spoil everything, Esther?" pouted Maud. "She doesn't know one of our games, and she'd be so awkward! Some other day we would not mind having her join the play, but this time it is important for us to have everything done beautifully."

"I'd almost as soon sit under this bigger tree and watch you," whispered the little stranger, but her lips quivered and Esther knew that she was hurt to be left out.

"We can sit under that tree and play by ourselves." Esther put her warm little arm close around the stranger girl and drew her toward the friendly old tree. "I know lots of games that it needs only two to play. Just think, we haven't told each our names yet: Mine is Esther."

"Father calls me Meg," said the stranger girl shyly. "Can two play any of those games where you sing? I'd love to learn a singing game."

"We can play the very one they are starting now," said Esther.

They sat down facing one another and played the game over and over till the new girl had the words by heart.

"How pleased my father will be when I tell him I know it all." she cried, clapping her thin hands joyously together.

"Are you not getting tired, your Highness? Shall we return now?" asked somebody near them.

Esther stared straight up into the face of the tall, handsome man in the blue and silver coat! He seemed to be speaking to Meg!

"Yes, I am ready now, if you will drive by Esther's house," she said. "I must ask her mother if Esther may be my playmate every single day. I am glad that my father allowed me to choose my own playmate. I couldn't love any of those children as I do Esther. She is so sweet and patient."

"It's Princess Margaret! Esther discovered the princess! They will play together every day!" cried the children, who had all come trooping after the man in the blue and silver coat.

Princess Margaret put her arm around Esther's neck and drew her down to whisper something. "You are to call me Meg," she said, "because we're friends."—Little Folks.

Explained.

One sultry day I chanced to pause
Beneath a welcome shade,
And there espied a lad and lass
Were selling lemonade.

"How much?" I asked in merry mood.
"One cent, sir," said the lass.
"Mine is two cents," the boy exclaimed,
"Say, mister, buy a glass!"

I sipped wee samples from each pail,
And really found it true,
The drink that cost one cent a glass
Surpassed that costing two.

I slipped the little girl a dime,
And quaffed her lemonade,
Then quaffed thrice more, declaring it
The best drink ever made.

"Yet why," I asked, "charge half his price
When yours is twice as fine?"
In quiv'ring tones her answer was:
"A kitty fell in mine!"

—Our Dumb Animals.

The Bag of Marbles.

Once upon a time there was a boy who wanted to buy a bag of new, smooth, colored marbles. So he went with ten cents to the toy shop, and holding out his money, said, "Ten cents worth of marbles, if you please."

But the toy man shook his head sadly and said, "Twenty-five cents, if you please."

But the boy had only ten cents, and he was very much surprised. "Why," he asked, "are ten-cent bags of marbles twenty-five cents?"

In a second the toy man could tell him. "The trains that bring the stone from the quarries are not running," he said. "I must charge more for what marbles I have."

Now the boy wanted those marbles, so what did he do but go to the engineer of the train and ask him why he was not running his engine.

In a second the engineer could tell him. "There is no coal being mined," he said, "and how can I run a freight train without coal for my engine?"

But the boy wanted a new bag of marbles very much, so he went to the coal miner, and asked him why he was not at work.

At once the coal miner could tell him. "The grocer asks so much for his eggs and flour," said the coal miner, "that I am going to give up mining and work at a trade in which I can earn more."

So the boy saw his bag of marbles fade farther and farther away, but still he wanted it ever so much, because marbles and boys have been together for years and years. So what did the boy do but go to the farmer and ask him why his eggs and wheat cost so much.

In a few words the farmer could tell. "I cannot get any one to help me," he said. So the boy knew that work was what was lacking, and making his marbles cost so much.

"Let me work for you," said the boy.

He was a fine, strong boy, and he took off his coat and went to work feed-

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street

Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen

Prompt and Reliable Service

BEVERLEY HEATING

Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

ing the hens, gathering eggs, packing them in crates and taking them to the grocer. He helped with the grain harvesting, too, and soon the grocer's shelves were so full that he needed to sell food, and he charged less for eggs and flour.

The coal miner really wanted to keep to his trade, and now he could, with the grocer's help, for food was cheaper, and he had all he needed. You could hear the ring of his pick all day long, and coal began to move to the freight yards. Then the freight trains began to move, loaded with all the necessary things of life, and things such as marbles for happiness and play.

So the boy was able to buy his bag of marbles at last, and he also had saved some of the wages which he had received from the farmer. He had found out a wonder too; that the way to get a thing one wants is to work for it.—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.

Where Cows Wear Veils.

The cows of Perigueux, France, which serve not only as milk givers, but as draft animals, are highly prized by their peasant owners, and nothing that can add to the comfort of the valuable animals is neglected. To save them from the annoyance of swarms of flies which infest that section of France, they are furnished with quaint hand-crocheted veils which cover the entire head and hang down almost to the ground. The veils themselves are works of art with long, silky fringes of varying hues, or borders of crocheted lace. In schools which are aided by the Junior Red Cross of America, French children are taught to crochet, and so can make these useful veils.

Little Jeanne—A True Story.

Little Jeanne is a really, truly little French girl who had four candles on her last birthday cake. Her father was killed in the war and her mother died soon after, so now little Jeanne lives with her grandpa and grandma and cousin. And you may imagine that little Jeanne is the light of that home.

But this is not to be a story about little Jeanne's life—she lives much the same that you American boys and girls live—but it is to be a story about how she "found" a friend among the soldier boys at Romorantin.

Word reached the city of Romorantin about 11:30 A. M. that November day that the armistice had been signed. Whistles blew, bells rang, parades formed and melted and all the people in that town tried to express in some way their joy that the terrible war was over. The American soldiers joined with the French and paraded arm in arm, singing the "Marseillaise," or just shouting for joy.

The big army band rolled into town in two big army trucks and formed around the market place and played the "Star Spangled Banner" and the "Marseillaise" and many other things, too. The people tried to sing with them, and you can just imagine how excited every one was. A Fourth of July celebration would be pretty tame in comparison. A big, tall American lieutenant picked up a little street fellow and held him high above the heads of the crowd that he might better see that wonderful American band.

And just when that tall soldier put the little fellow down that he might salute when the band played "The Star Spangled Banner," a little girl, who had been in her cousin's arms, but not nearly high enough above the crowd to see that band, and who had been looking wistfully at the big lieutenant, gave a jump and landed in his arms.

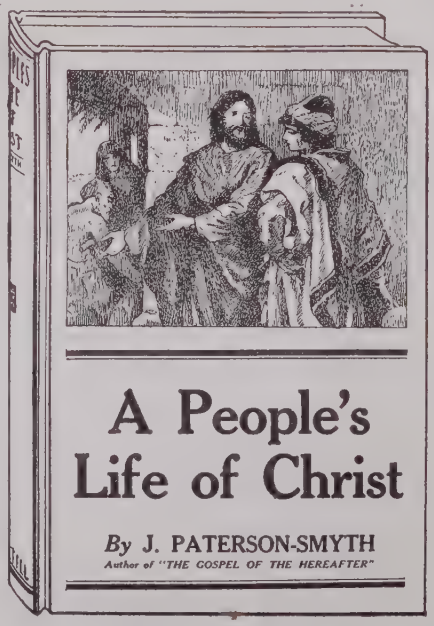
How that big lieutenant did laugh!

The little girl was such an attractive little thing, and she smiled straight into the heart of that lieutenant. It made him a bit homesick for some American smiles from some little people whose pictures he had in his pocket that very minute. But those little people were far across the ocean.

So the lieutenant asked the cousin where they lived, and the next evening he and another lieutenant, who was also thinking pretty hard about some little people back in America, went to see little Jeanne at her home, and they took her some chocolate and some cookies.

It got to be a regular thing for that tall lieutenant to go to see little Jeanne every evening that he could get to town. And he never went empty-handed. When spring came Jeanne's lieutenant was still in camp, and every nice spring evening she stood in the door of her cottage watching down the street, and when she would see a tall American soldier coming she would run to meet him. Early in the spring she found the very first wild flowers for him—violets just like you find here in America.

One day her American soldier asked



JUST READY

PATERSON-SMYTH'S GREAT LIFE OF CHRIST

Author of the Popular Work, "The Gospel of the Hereafter"

¶The world has seen many "Lives" of our Lord since Farrar wrote his famous "Life of Christ."

Every new age requires a new interpretation written in the light of latest research. Here is the new popular version for this day and generation, an everybody's life of Christ, which the ordinary man may read for the sheer pleasure of reading it, and which enables him to put himself in the place of one who has seen and known the Lord in the flesh.

A Handsome Gift Volume
ONLY $3.50 NET

¶Bishop Charles Fiske writes: "Have just read it . . . Tells the old, old story in a modern way, every chapter a vivid picture; the brief history of the Great Life told with the skill and interest of present-day biography. Ought to be as popular in our day as Farrar's was in his. The story is so told as to meet present-day needs: the hunger, so keenly felt since the war, for some definite knowledge of the unseen world; the social implications of the Gospel; a clear and definite answer to the question, 'What is God like?' "

ORDER AT ONCE! Only a limited quantity available for Southern Churchman readers this holiday season!

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Enclosed please find.....for which please send me by return mail .....copies of A PEOPLE'S LIFE OF CHRIST, by J. Paterson-Smyth.

Name.....

Address.....

her and her cousin out to his camp to be the guests of his squadron at dinner. Think of it! This little French girl to be the guest of a squadron of American soldiers at a dinner!

Every one of those soldier boys wanted to hold her, and they passed her around from one to the other. She tried to smile at all of them, but sometimes her lip would tremble a little, but as soon as she would see her lieutenant's smile she would be brave again and smile at all the homesick boys.

And when it came time to go home every one of the boys wanted to give her something—a bit of candy or chocolate out of their all too scanty store, when they were so hungry for it themselves.

Let me tell you one thing in particular that that tall American soldier told me about his little Jeanne. She never, never forgot to say, "Merci, Monsieur," when he gave her a little gift, and always she made a little curtsy.

I wonder if little American boys and girls ever forget to say, "Thank you"? —May H. Mumaw in Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

For the Southern Churchman.

Little Soldiers.

Henrietta Morgan.

We are Jesus' little soldiers,
Though we are so very small;
We are always busy for Him—
We are fighters, one and all!

When we meet the little children
That have eyes so strange and old,
'Tis the friendly smile we're giving—
For their hearts are never cold.

When the days with toil are weary,
And our mother's face is worn,
We are ready there to help her,
For her heart with care is torn.

When our father's step is heavy
At the closing of the day,
Straight to bed because he says it!—
(Though we'd so much rather play!)

When our teacher says we whisper,
Though we know we have been good,
Then we bear the wrong right bravely,
As a little soldier should!

"Amen."

The Heidelberg Catechism gives the true definition of "Amen," without any doubtful note: "Amen signifies: It shall truly and certainly be, for my prayer is more assuredly heard of God than I feel in my heart that I desire these things of Him."

In all the Bible uses of the word "Amen," and in the meanings of that word as found in the Babylonian, the Hebrew, the Arabic, the Greek, and the English, it is evident that the prevailing idea is that of strength and confidence, resulting from unwavering trust in One Who will not fail. Doubt, question, or anxiety has no place in its use. It is thus in connection with a prayer, as in connection with a declaration of truth. Whether it be a blessing that is spoken, a series of petitions that is offered, or an invoking of God's intervention and decision that is made, whatever doubt there may be at any point up to its close, the use of the final "Amen" is a confident cry without hesitation or fear. To say "Amen" is not to say, "Oh, that it might be so!" but rather, "Certainly," "Truly," "Surely." "It will be right because God is God, and His will is to be done."

"Amen" is never a minor portion of a prayer. It is the strongest and best part of it. It is not to be spoken in a minor key, or in a low tone and hesitatingly. That cry at least ought to be a glad and triumphant one, spoken from the heart and aloud with the lips, in confident assurance and in restful truth. "Amen and amen." Whatever is our prayer, we should be able to leave it with God in faith. In this committal, at least, "whatever is not of faith is sin."—H. Clay Trumbull.

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special
at $7.25
Send us your size
Woodall & Quarles
7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley
FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

HERBERT L. CAIN CHURCH ARCHITECT
12 North Ninth Street, -:- Richmond, Va.
The Needs of the Sunday School, the Law of the Architect
Address Dept. 4

Jno. L. Williams & Sons
BANKERS and BROKERS
Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank
Richmond, Virginia

"The Store that Pleases"
FOR FURNITURE
Jones Bros. & Co.
Incorporated
1418-20 E. Main St. Richmond, Va

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer
AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE
Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va., nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate. Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

WANTED—THE NEW RETREAT FOR the Sick offers an excellent course in nursing to young women between the ages of 18 and 30 years. Residential privileges and $12 monthly allowance. Apply to Superintendent of Nurses, Retreat for the Sick, 2621 Grove Avenue, Richmond, Va.

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES, $1.50, $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

I TAKE THIS METHOD OF THANKING my many clients for their past patronage, and assure them I am still selling Spirella Corsets, and can be reached at the Wallerstein, Apartment 202, or by phone, Randolph 3694-W. Miss Myrtle McDonnell.

FOR SALE—BRUNSWICK RECORD, NO. 5006, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere, $1.00; No. 5017, Abide With Me, $1.00; both double-faced ten-inch records. Brunswick Records play on all steel needle machines. Phone your orders in. Rowlett Phonograph Co., 416 West Broad Street. Mad. 215.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

POSITIONS WANTED

WANTED—BY LADY, POSITION TO teach in home, or as a companion. References. Write C., care Southern Churchman.

WE PACK AND SHIP FURNITURE, china and wedding presents; estimates cheerfully given. Jacob Umlauf, 1326 West Broad. Boul. 725.

UPHOLSTERING.

WE ARE MAKING A SPECIALTY OF pure South American curled hair and silk floss mattresses and box springs; our own make. Jacob Umlauf, 1326 W. Broad, Richmond ,Va. Tel., Boul. 725.

JUST RECEIVED

A new supply of

"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR,"

By Bowie.

Price $1.25 Postpaid.
Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Va.

STORAGE AND TRANSFER.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Page: Entered into rest, November 27, 1920, in Baltimore, Md., ELLEN WEST PAGE, wife of the late John White Page, formerly of Clarke County, Va., and daughter of the late Dr. George W. and Eliza Pratt-West, of Frederick County, Md.

"May light perpetual shine upon her."

MEMORIAL.

MRS. AULBIN D. TAPSCOTT.

On December 14 MRS. AULBIN DELANEY TAPSCOTT entered into life eternal at the home of her daughter, Mrs George E. Zachary, St. Andrew's Rectory State College, Pa. The funeral services were held at St. George's Church, in her old and beloved home, Fredericksburg, Va.

For six years she was an invalid, and for the past eighteen months had been confined to her bed. The summons, "It is enough, come up higher," was not unwelcome to this brave, patient sufferer, who had no fear of death, and whose cheer and Christian fortitude had been an inspiration to all around her. She was passionately devoted to her old home church (historic St. George's), of which her husband had been a vestryman for over twenty years.

Mrs. Tapscott was, before her marriage, Alice Lyell, of Farnham, Richmond County, Va. She was the daughter of Mr. Richard Lyell, a man of commanding influence in his generation. Reared in the profuse hospitality of that neighborhood, she developed into a woman of brilliant intellect and of great personal beauty and charm. She was called "the Belle of the Northern Neck."

She was married in 1873 to Aulbin Delaney Tapscott, a Christian gentleman and a St. John among men. They came to Fredericksburg in 1880, and from that time until his death in 1911 they were closely identified with the church and social life of the place. Since then she has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. George E. Zachary, whose husband is now rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, State College, Pa.

Mrs. Tapscott's wonderful personality is an abiding memory. Her beautiful home was the gathering place for all her friends. She was a brilliant conversationalist, with a keen sense of humor, but "in her tongue was the law of kindness" so that there never was a sting in her ready wit. She was faithful in every relation. Her love has mothered many lonely hearts. Her sympathy was given freely to every sorrowing soul. Her generosity was unbounded. Her simple abiding Christian faith was a part of her being. She was wise and tender and true; and her kindness was extended alike to rich and poor, to every class and condition. "We ne'er shall see her like again."

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. George E. Zachary; a sister, Mrs. E. S. Buffington, and an adopted son, who is her nephew, W. Dandridge Pitts.

"The King's daughter is all glorious.
With joy and gladness shall she enter into the King's palace."

EDWARD B. GOODE.

At a meeting of the vestry of St. James' P. E. Church, Boydton, Va., held December 12, 1920, the following resolutions of respect to the memory of the late MR. EDWARD B. GOODE, who for many years was a communicant, and member of the vestry of St. James' Church, were passed:

"Resolved, that the vestry of St. James' P. E. Church, Boydton, Va., desire to place upon record a testimonial of appreciation of and affection for our late friend and brother, Edward B. Goode, who was called from labor to rest on October 15, 1920, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was the son of Hon. W. O. Goode, and his wife, Sarah Massie Goode, both of whom were members of the Episcopal Church, and thus he was born in the Church, and as a faithful son he lived up to his noble lineage. Having been confirmed in his early manhood, he became a member of the vestry in 1868, and continued as such until his death, having filled during that time the offices of both junior and senior wardens. He also represented the Church a number of times as her representative in the Councils of the Diocese. In all the work of the Church he served her faithfully as a loyal son, and did his duty as he saw it.

Therefore be it resolved:

First. That in the death of Edward B. Goode the Church has lost an earnest, faithful and consecrated member, this vestry a beloved friend and co-worker who never failed to measure up to the requirements of whatever position he was called upon to fill, and the community at large has lost an upright and public-spirited citizen, always ready to serve his country when called upon to do so.

Second. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy in their sorrow, and pray that the God and Father of us all may give them the comfort of His Holy Spirit, and lead them in the footsteps of their sainted father and mother.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our late fellow member, and be published in the Southern Churchman and county newspapers."

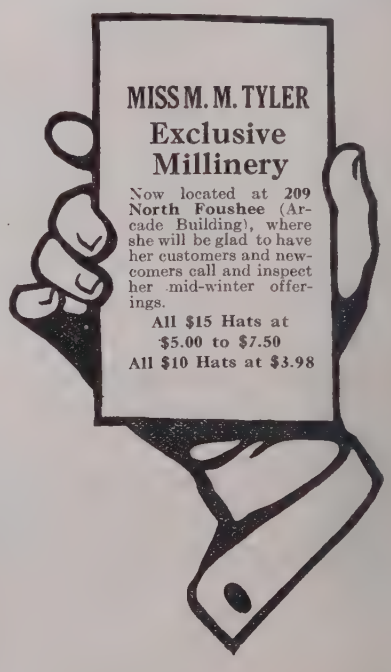
A copy—Teste:

HENRY E. COLEMAN.
Register and Secretary, St. James' P. E. Church, Boydton, Va.

JOHN GILLIAM WOOD.

Son of Edward and Caroline Gilliam, was born at his father's plantation, "Greenfield," in Chowan County, N. C., November 20, 1853.

His father's family came to Chowan Precinct about 1663, and his mother's from Surry County, Va., in 1734.



He died at "Hayes," near Edenton, December 13, 1920, and was buried in old St. Paul's Churchyard, Edenton. He had been a life-long member of this parish and a vestryman many years.

He was a faithful steward of the talent that was placed in his keeping, and executed the trust that goes with possession of worldly wealth by putting it to uses promotive of community interests. He was retiring and modest in disposition and endowed with unusual intellect, and the chief pleasure of his boyhood and maturer years was found among his books in his splendid library at "Hayes."

MODERN DUPLICATING DEVICES

"Modern" Duplicators—Business Getters. $2.25 up. 50 to 75 copies from each pen, pencil or typewritten letter. No glue or gelatine. 40,000 users. YOU need one. 10 days' trial. Booklet free.

J. P. DURKIN, REEVES & CO., Pittsburgh, Pa.

An Incident of South India.

In a village of South India the educated high caste women became interested in Christ, and, fearing that their husbands might not consent to their being baptized, fifty of them decided to be baptized and tell their husbands afterwards. On hearing of this, the men met together to decide what they should do. After consultation, in which they stated that they found their wives just as they were before, except more loving, kind and gentle, they decided to say nothing about it. One of the wives could not rest until her husband joined her in her new-found joy, and by prayer and persuasion led him to Christ. Then the Hindu leaders became greatly stirred. They gathered the Bibles of the women and burned them, beating the women and forcing them to sign a letter to the missionary stating that they were no longer Christians, and asking him to take their names from the church roll. But a little later the women managed to get a letter to the missionary, telling him that the former letter had been signed under compulsion, and no attention was to be paid to it; that they still loved and followed the Saviour.—The Indian Witness.

Anti-Saloon League Law Enforcement Conference

Lynchburg, January 20-21

Beginning with a mass meeting Thursday night, January 20th, at First Baptist Church

All evangelical churches and Sunday Schools are entitled to send one or more delegates. Notify

Rev. David Hepburn

Box 605, Richmond

of the names and addresses of the delegates appointed

We Have

Prepared a Blue Leaflet entitled—"The Descent of Property Under the Laws of Virginia and Three Things to Remember."

In the last year or two the laws of the State have been vitally changed on this subject.

And this leaflet should be of interest to every property owner.

The law is condensed into short form, so that the average man can understand.

Glad to send to any one interested. Call for the Blue Leaflet.

Virginia Trust Company

The Safe Executor

Richmond, Va.

VISITORS TO RICHMOND WELCOME AT

Young Men's Christian Association

Grace and Seventh Streets

REST—INFORMATION—READING

92—Rooms for Men—92

Furnished, Lighted, Heated

Shower Baths Swimming Pool

Men's Meeting Sunday, 3:30 P. M.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.

Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

"Sudden before my inward vision
Millions of faces crowded up to view;
Sad eyes that said, for us is no provision;
Give us your Saviour, too.
Give us, they cry, your cup of consolation;
Never to our outstretching hands 'tis passed;
We long for the desire of every nation,
And, oh, we die so fast!
—The Expositor.

Going by train over the long bridge across the Potomac, I heard two young women—they appeared to be teachers—conversing. One confessed to being very timid when crossing such long and high bridges. "But," said the other, "you must remember you are in the hands of God." "Oh, I know that, of course," her friend said impatiently; "but for pity's sake don't remind me of it till we are safe over." That kind of trust in God is not uncommon, I fear.—Mrs. Annie B. T. Slosson.

One day in a large church the communion service was about to be concluded. As the last members served at the rail were about to retire the minister asked, "Have any been omitted?" A kneeling woman said that it seemed to her that she could see women arise from the countries of the earth—from Japan, Korea, Africa, India and China. They seemed to arise and cry out, Yes, we have been omitted. No one has ever broken the Bread of Life to us.

1921

As the New Year begins, serious thought should be given to your investments. Are you obtaining the greatest income with a due regard to safety?

Let us give you information about tax-free New England stocks and bonds with established records of earnings.

Earnest E. Smith & Co.

Specialists in New England Securities

52 Devonshire St., Boston

Members New York and Boston Stock Exchanges

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING

Mail Orders a Specialty

Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL

311 North Second Street

Phone Randolph 1286-W

ORGANS

for Church and Home

Send for our beautifully illustrated catalog of the famous Estey, Packard and Corley Organs—showing styles and prices of our great stock.

Easy payment terms can be arranged

The Corley Company

213 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

CHURCH PEWS

PULPIT FURNITURE

SUNDAY SCHOOL CHAIRS, BLACKBOARDS, ETC.

Virginia School Supply Company

2010-12 West Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

FOR QUICK SERVICE CALL RANDOLPH 1978-W

We Clean One Small Rug Free as a Trial

Electric Carpet Cleaning Co.

W. F. POAT

16 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Carpets and Rugs Washed and Dried right on the floor!

Hamilton Beach method used exclusively—the nationally advertised way.

Called For and Delivered

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent
E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

JUST READY

The Valiant Heart

By E. M. TENISON

12mo. 280 pages. Cloth net, $2.00

Mr. Gorham presents this work by Miss Tenison, an author hitherto writing under a non de plume. It is felt that a large part of the reading public is ready to welcome another religious romance as it did Ben-Hur and Quo Vadis. This romance is of equal merit with those by Wallace, Sienkiewicz and Florence Kingsley. The hero is Britic, son of the King of West Alba, in what is now Scotland. The style is a majestic, rhythmical prose—well suited to the theme as it marches along in a cadenced movement, appearing almost like a translation from an old legend in epic form.

EDWIN S. GORHAM, Publisher
11 West 45th Street, New York

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

R. Geissler, Inc.
56 West Eighth Street, New York
Memorials
FOR THE CHURCH
Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

O. Luetke's Art Works
Church Furnishings
IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.
Est. 1886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
Highest grade instruments. In use in three thous. and churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is to be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MÖLLER
Hagerstown, Maryland

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stoles
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts
COX SONS & VINING
72 Madison Avenue New York

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO
393 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis

The Temple of God.

Slowly, through all the universe, that temple of God is being built. Wherever, in any world, a soul, by free-willed obedience, catches the fire of God's likeness, it is set into the growing walls, a living stone. When in your hard fight, in your tiresome drudgery, or in your terrible temptation, you catch the purpose of your being, and give yourself to God, and so give Him the chance to give Himself to you, your life, a living stone, is taken up and set into that growing wall. Wherever souls are being tried and ripened, in whatever commonplace and homely ways—there God is hewing out the pillars for His temple. Oh, if the stone can only have some vision of the temple of which it is to be a part forever, what patience must fill it as it feels the blows of the hammer, and knows that success for it is simply to let itself be wrought into what shape the master wills.—Phillips Brooks.

A Child's Prayer.

God make me like the sun,
To rise each morning with a smiling face,
And as the day goes by
Help me to leave warm sunbeams every place,
Till shadows softly fall
And on the wings of night I drift away,
Still radiant to think
That I may wake with smiles the coming day.

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address: THE PATHFINDER, 4006 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

No One Need Buy Cuticura Before He Tries Free Samples
Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. Samples free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS
FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG
S. T. Beveridge & Co.
Office: 1217 East Cary Street
Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd
Richmond, Va.

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Light

By the Reverend
PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN
Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.
With an Introduction by
THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS, and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,
Richmond, Va.

50 Eggs a Day

Yes—fifty a day. How? Read the letter below.

"'More Eggs' Tonic is a Godsend," writes Mrs. Myrtle Ice, of Boston, Ky. She adds, "I was only getting 12 eggs a day and now I get 50." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs", the wonderful egg producer, and you will be amazed and delighted with results.

3 $1.00 Packages FREE

If you wish to try this great profit maker, simply write a post card or letter to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, and ask for his special $2.00 offer, three $1.00 packages Free. Don't send any money. Mr. Reefer will send you five $1.00 packages of "More Eggs." You pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the price of just two packages, the three extra packages being free. The Million Dollar Merchants Bank of Kansas City, Mo., guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your $2.00 will be returned at any time within 30 days—on request. No risk to you. Write today for this special free offer.

Poultry Raisers Everywhere Tell Wonderful Results of "More Eggs"

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor

I can't express in words how much I have been benefited by "More Eggs." I have paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and that is not all—I paid my pastor his dues. I sold 42½ dozen eggs last week, set 4 dozen, ate some, and had 1½ dozen left.
MRS. LENA McBROON. Woodbury, Tenn.

1200 Eggs from 29 Hens

The "More Eggs" Tonic did wonders for me. I had 29 hens when I got the tonic and was getting five or six eggs a day. April 1st I had over 1200 eggs. I never saw the equal.
EDW. MEKKER, Pontiac, Mich.

160 Hens—1500 Eggs

I have fed two boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and I think they have broken the egg record. I have 160 White Leghorns and in exactly 21 days I got 125 dozen eggs.
MRS. H. M. PATTON, Waverly, Mo.

Send No Money!

Don't send any money; just fill in and mail coupon. You will be sent at once, five $1.00 packages of "MORE EGGS." Pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the three extra packages being FREE. Don't wait—take advantage of this free offer TODAY! Reap the BIG profits "MORE EGGS" will make for you. Have plenty of eggs to sell when the price is highest. Send TODAY—NOW!

3 $1.00 Pkgs. Free

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 3581 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Reefer:—I accept your offer. Send me the five $1.00 packages of Reefer's "More Eggs" for which I agree to pay the postman $2.00 when he brings me the five packages, the three extra packages being free. You agree to refund me $2.00 at any time within 30 days, if all five of these packages do not prove satisfactory in every way.

Name .....

Address.....

You may send $2.00 cash with this coupon if you prefer

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

What Do You Expect When You Put Money In The Bank?

Absolute Protection and Safety, Don't You?

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, with capital, surplus and profits of two million dollars, offers absolute protection and safety to its customers.

With more money in this country than ever before you cannot afford to keep your dollars idle.

Put them in this strong National Bank, where they will earn money for you, keep the wheels turning, and help bring prosperity to the people.

American National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

N. B.—You can send your deposits by registered letter, money order or check. The records of this Bank prove that you run no risk in banking by mail.

Have You Made Your Will?

See G. Jeter Jones, Vice-President, about this now. All conferences confidential. Phone or write for appointment.

Merchants National Bank

11th and Main Streets, Richmond, Va.

"SAFEST FOR TRUSTS"

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.

Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage

Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 843

In answering these ads mention your paper. It commends you.

Southern Churchman

VOL. 86 RICHMONDE, VA., JANUARY 15, 1921. No. 3

Live and Help Live

"Live and let live!" was the call of the Old--
The call of the world when the world was cold--
The call of men when they pulled apart--
The call of the race with a chill on the heart.

But "Live and help live!" is the cry of the New--
The cry of the world with the Dream shining through--
The cry of the Brother World rising to birth--
The cry of the Christ for a Comrade-like Earth.

—Edwin Markham.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary

Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to

REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.

For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.

Established 1892.

For terms and information, address

MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-second year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1920. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., RECTOR

ST. MARY'S, An Episcapal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Founded by Bishop Alonzo Potter in 1862.

Special students admitted. Privilege of attending course of special study at the University of Pennsylvania.

For information address the Rev. George G. Bartlett, S. T. D., Dean, 5000 Woodland Avenue.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Love never turns its microscope on our faults.

The trumpet of fame assembles more foes than friends.

Obedience to the known will of God is the highest evidence of sincerity and belief.

Let us use our past mistakes and failures as building material for future success.

The greatest duty every father owes his children is to walk where it will be safe for them to follow.

Less wishing and more doing would improve many a vacant lot.—G. H. Knox.

"Let not him who seeketh cease until he findeth. When he findeth, he shall wonder. Wondering, he shall reach the kingdom, and in the kingdom shall find rest."

A great engine goes dashing along at a high rate of speed, plowing its way against wind, and defying every obstruction. But little snowflakes, steadily falling on the track, grow into a heap that brings the monster to a standstill.—Selected.

Give me clean hands, clean words and clean thoughts; help me to stand for the hard right against the easy wrong; save me from habits that harm; teach me to work as hard and play as fair in Thy sight alone as if all the world saw; forgive me when I am unkind, and help me to forgive those who are unkind to me; keep me ready to help others at some cost to myself; send me chances to do a little good every day, and so to grow more like Christ.—W. D. Hyde.

Kings have waged warfare, armies lost and won,
Tyrants their battle-bolts long since have hurled;
But lo! the Virgin and her little Son
Still rule the world.
—Katrina Trask.

God will never relinquish His right to the existence, love, reverence and service of souls. Indeed, Christ tells us that His children are still in His Father's hand. And the least saints shall not perish. "No man shall pluck them out of my Father's hand."—D. Thomas.

'Tis not enough that Christ was born
Beneath the star that shone,
And earth was set that morn
Within a golden zone.
He must be born within the heart
Before He finds His throne.
And brings the day of love and good,
The day of Christ-like brotherhood.
—Mary T. Lathrop.

Bishop Phillips Brooks had for a long time before his death paid some little attention to the five-year-old daughter of one of his parishioners, and the little one always expressed her delight when in company with her mother she met him in the street. The day of the Bishop's death the mother came into the room where the little one was playing, and holding the bright little face between her hands, said tearfully, "Bishop Brooks has gone to heaven." "Oh, mamma," was the answer, "how happy the angels will be"!

Do you remember that old story of a young man with bent head standing on the border of a vast piece of ground which he had to cultivate, discouraged and murmuring, "I can never do it; it is too large"? "My son," said his father, "you have not all this field to plough. Do you see the little corner marked by a slight ridge? That is all your task of today; only occupy yourself with that."

"Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree." Thank God for some of the uncompromising statements in the Bible. "Instead of" means "instead of" and nothing else. If we have a bad temper it doesn't mean that we shall trim it down into a kind of respectable moroseness. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree.—W. C. Poole.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course or graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLESTOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

VIRGINIA, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. TUCKER, D. D., President; REV. C. O. PRUDEN, D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B. Sweet Briar, A. M. Columbia, Prin.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 15, 1921. No. 3

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

The article on another page by Mr. George Foster Peabody brings before the thought of Christian people another great world need.

Sometimes we grow impatient at the number of appeals. "They come to me so often," says some one, "that I do not pay any attention to them any more." Beware how we say that! For when dreadful needs exist, what can those who know them do but send out appeals for help? Shall suffering and death be denied because we are impatient?

The United States has borne a glorious role in the recent history of China. It was our Secretary of State, John Hay, who introduced into the diplomacy of the Western nations in their dealings with China the high imperative of the Golden Rule. It was the United States which won the lasting gratitude of China by turning back the Boxer indemnity to be used for the education of Chinese students. China counts us as her friend. The famine is a new crisis in which we can prove our friendship again.

This paper will be glad to receive and forward immediately any contributions for the China Famine Relief which its readers may care to send through this office.

CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE THROUGH MISSIONS.

In connection with the China famine there is a significant item in the note we print today concerning the distribution of famine relief through our own missions. The money is not being handed out in mere temporary relief without constructive purpose. Instead of that, where men are able to work, they are given food, or money for food, in return for labor on dykes, canals, irrigation ditches and other permanent improvements which diminish the likelihood of future famines by safeguarding the lands on which the crops ought to be grown.

This is something more than an incident. It is typical of the spirit and method of the whole missionary work of the Church. Uninformed critics—and they are usually the most valuable—sometimes talk as though "missions" meant a mere smatter of preaching to people who will not listen, and the insistence upon some theological doctrines which touch the surface of the "heathens'" attention and have nothing to do with their real life. Nothing could be a more shallow untruth. The glory of modern missions is their constructive statesmanship. Among the backward nations the Christian influence is the most powerful stimulus to progress along every avenue of a fuller life. Christian missionaries are building not only for today, but for tomorrow, and not only for individuals, but for nations. They are helping the peoples to whom they are sent lay the foundations for the stronger, safer, happier civilization which needs for its architects those who are filled with the ideal of the kingdom of God.

JAMES D. GIBSON.

This is not an obituary! It is a tribute to somebody who is most sparklingly alive.

James D. Gibson has been the business manager of the Southern Churchman for nearly four years. He took the managership when the paper, for reasons which we need not elaborate, was almost bankrupt both in cash and credit. Through most of his term in office he was confronted by the extraordinary difficulties of the inflated costs brought about by the war. The price of the paper on which the Southern Churchman is printed has increased nearly 400 per cent. Costs of printing and of mailing, and all other expenses, have mounted simultaneously.

Yet in spite of these handicaps, and while he carried on his duties as the rector of a growing suburban church, James Gibson, by his extraordinary energy and executive efficiency, made the Southern Churchman go. How he did it is a marvel which those who by close association have known his difficulties wonder at even now. Three or four years ago a few friends of the Southern Churchman raised a very small sum of money to pay off some notes. Since that time there has been no subsidy nor gift nor financial resource of any kind beyond the paper's own earnings. In the year 1920 Mr. Gibson had brought its income up to nearly three times the amount of what it was when he assumed the managership, and in spite of unprecedented costs, he cleared expenses.

We believe the Southern Churchman holds a place of honor and importance in the life of the Church in America. It is the oldest of our Church weeklies. With steady loyalty for over three-quarters of a century it has sought to bear its witness to a joyous, evangelical Christianity. We believe the Church would be sorry if such contribution as the Southern Churchman makes to its thought and purpose were to vanish. It might have vanished in the slough of financial impossibilities if "Jim" Gibson had not come to rescue it. To him, therefore, the thanks and honor not only of the Southern Churchman, but of all those in the Church whom the Southern Churchman serves, are due.

He leaves the paper now to give his whole time to St. Stephen's Church, Westhampton. In his place we welcome an unusually able successor, a man experienced in newspaper work, Mr. John H. Cooke, and are confident that through him the era of success which Mr. Gibson inaugurated will be continued.

Oh Heart, keep faith with Him! though scant and poor
Thy cupboard's meagre spread; lavish the more
Thy love, thy gracious faith, thy steadfast cheer—
Tenfold they shall return, more rare, more dear;
Of such as these the multitudes are fed—
The two small fishes and the barley-bread!

—By Laura Simmons.

The Real Work of Missions Today.

The Nation-Wide Campaign, at the points in the Church where it has succeeded most, has made clear the fact that information about the Church's work kindles new enthusiasm for it and rouses a new will to set it forward. The trouble with many of our people long has been that they did not know what great and vital things the Church's missions were doing. They knew in a vague way that such a thing as "missions" existed, and in general they recognized that this was a pious necessity in the Church's life. But they did not know how thrillingly the missionary enterprise was linking itself every day with the progress of great nations and the human destinies of all the earth. The educative influences of the Nation-Wide Campaign have opened people's eyes. There are a great many men and women who realize now that not to be informed about the Church's world task is discreditable ignorance; and that knowledge of it is an increasing source of pride and spiritual power.

If any one doubts this, let him look at these most recent reports from the Church's work. They are brief records of scattered facts; but they are all bound together in their cumulative message of the Church's present-day achievements.

The Rev. S. Harrington Littell, of the District of Hankow, writing from Peking, where he had gone in connection with the famine relief organization, writes that great progress is being made in using money contributed for famine relief to employ large numbers of the sufferers in useful work, such as road building, dykes, wall and canal construction and river dredging. This work is aimed at the prevention of famines from draught in the future. The Department of Missions, at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, is receiving contributions in reply to Bishop Graves' request for authority to give at least $1,000 Mexican to the Anglican missionaries in North China for the relief of Chinese members of our Church.

Bishop Tucker writes that the new buildings of St. Agnes' School, Kyoto, erected through the gifts of the Women's Auxiliary, have enabled the school to re-establish its position of leadership in Kyoto. Bishop Tucker says: "Not only have we had more applicants for entrance than we could accommodate, but we have had unmistakable evidences of renewed confidence on the part of city officials and the people generally. Mr. Hayakawa, the principal, is taking a prominent place in the educational conferences which are held in this section to discuss various questions. A particularly interesting thing is that the connection between religion and education is now occupying great attention, and Mr. Hayakawa is on the committee which has charge of this subject, another member being the head of one of the big Buddhist schools in this city."

The World Sunday School Convention, held in Tokyo in October, has, according to one of our Japan missionaries, "made a deep impression upon the Japanese. For instance, in the last number of the 'Taiyo,' the leading magazine of the country, I find three articles: one entitled 'Christianity in Japan,' another 'The Present Condition of Christianity,' third, 'The Missionary in Japan.' This is simply an indication of the interest which is being aroused in Christian work, even among those who are not Christian, or even religiously minded."

Bishop Tucker, of Kyoto, writing about the importance of beginning at once the erection of new buildings for St. Luke's Hospital, says: "I have just been for a week with Dr. Teusler in Tokyo. To my mind it will be a calamity if the Department of Missions fails to let him go ahead with the new hospital. It seems to me that the Church should make every sacrifice to carry this plan forward. St. Luke's Hospital has aroused tremendous interest among the Japanese. If we can make good our promises to them it will be of invaluable aid to future evangelistic work; if we do not make good our promises our prestige will receive a serious blow. Up to the present our evangelistic work has been confined to a very small section of Japanese society. For the future we must appeal to the nation as a whole. Unless we have back of us really first-class institutions as practical illustrations of Christianity I do not see how we can hope for success."

Dr. F. L. Hawks Pott, president of St. John's University, Shanghai, who is now in New York, expects to return to China early in February. He recently remarked that "the value of an educational institution may be judged from the services rendered to nation and community by its alumni." With this test in mind, Dr. Pott continued: "St. John's is justly proud of her alumni. It has often been remarked that there is no movement for the uplift of China in which St. John's men do not play an important part. St. John's men are filling important positions in the ministry of the Christian Church, in the government, in law, medicine, commerce, industry, education, engineering and banking, and are doing notable service in the reconstruction of China. St. John's stands in need of further development so that it may become a greater force for good in China."

An American Presbyterian visitor to St. John's is on record as saying that if Episcopalians at home only know what Dr. Pott has done and what a great and influential institution he has built up, they would give anything he asks for the development of the University. Just at present the thing that Dr. Pott most desires is $75,000 to complete the building fund for St. Mary's Hall, so that this admirable girls' school can be transferred to the new site purchased four years ago. This would leave the ground and buildings now occupied by St. Mary's Hall for the use of St. John's and would provide additional dormitory and class-room space for the next five years.

W. V. K. Koo, formerly Chinese Ambassador to the United States, and now Ambassador to Great Britain, has added another to his diplomatic triumphs by securing a place for China in the Council of the League of Nations. Dr. Koo is a graduate of St. John's University, Shanghai. He is one of the three former students of St. John's to have recently filled important American and European ambassadorships.

Speaking at a recent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, in New York, Bishop Overs outlined his reconstruction plan for the Liberian Mission. He emphasized specially the need for extensive repairs to the Julia C. Emery Hall of the Girls' School at Bromley, on the St. Paul's River. After the meeting the members gave Bishop Overs $4,000 for this purpose as a special gift.

"The Christian colleges in the Far East," says Hon. Paul S. Reinsch, late minister to China, "are high voltage contact points, and through the student spiritual and intellectual current is converted into enlightenment, service, progress, liberty and hope for individual, home, community and nation. These power centres must be properly developed, for they are of immeasurable importance in promoting the world progress of Christianity."

St. John's University, Shanghai, whose president, Dr. F. L. Hawks Pott, is now in New York, is one of these powerhouses of leadership. "China," says Dr. Pott, is still in a transitional period. She is struggling to establish a democratic form of government. The hopes of democracy in the Far East depend upon the success of her great experiment. We should extend to her a helping hand. We should exert our influence to make the new republic one that is inspired by Christian ideals and principles."

Pray, brethren, above all things, for a large outpouring of the power of the blessed Spirit upon the Church. There are a thousand subsidiary things. But this is our supreme "thing needful." We need unspeakably the developed power of the Paraclete to glorify Christ to our own souls; to fill us in living reality with the word of the cross, the supernatural eternal message of Him who, for us, "was dead, and is alive forevermore," to fill us with that "fulness" which must overflow in life, and word, to lift us to the highest ministerial aim and keep us there; to give us an insight, sympathy and power which not the most exalted culture of the finest natural gifts can ever give; to make us strong with men because prevalent with God; yea, to make us "vessels meet for the Master's use" —our one, our dear ambition.—Bp. H. G. C. Moule.

Sincere people who ask God's guidance, it seems to me, frequently make mistakes. In fact, our past mistakes are part of our education. Unless we are habitually in sympathy with God we are not infallible, even in matters where a judgment is all that is required, and sometimes more is re- is required of us than to say what is right and what is wrong. Other points have to be considered—points which call for a knowledge of life, of places, and professions, of the trustworthiness of other men, and a thousand matters in which we are liable to err. It is of course a great satisfaction to know that we wished to do right, even if we discover we have blundered, and it is also a satisfaction that God can use us for good in any position, even in that we have blundered into, although meanwhile we have lost some present good. —Marcus Dods.

Progress of Near East Relief.

Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, the Treasurer of Near East Relief, reported total receipts of $14,697,379.91 for the year at the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, held at the Yale Club, New York City, Friday evening, January 7th.

Mr. Dodge stated that including government flour, made available through Mr. Herbert Hoover and the American Relief Administration, the total American relief operations in the Near East during the past year amounted to more than $30,000,000, and the total since the beginning of the organization is something more than $55,000,000.

Mr. Charles V. Vickrey, the General Secretary, recently returned from the Near East, reported that more than 1,000,000 persons, chiefly refugee women and children, have during the past year received assistance, without which most of them would have perished. There are at the present time 270 American relief workers on the field, exclusive of approximately the same number of Americans who are engaged in various forms of educational work, and who are voluntarily co-operating in relief activities.

The work begun among the orphans and refugees immediately after the massacres of 1915 has continued practically without interruption, and doubtless must be continued until, under some stable government, these people can be restored in safety to their lands and self-support.

Repeated massacres and deportations have occurred during the past year. Several thousand thus met death in Marash and Hadjin, exclusive of smaller outbreaks in other places. The result is that the winter months bring an ever-increasing number of refugees fleeing for safety to the centers occupied by the relief workers.

The recent successes of the Bolshevists in Russian Armenia have had only a negligible influence upon relief operations, since the major portion of the relief work has always been within the former Ottoman Empire rather than in Russia. Moreover, before the advance of the Bolshevists, a considerable portion of the orphanage work in Russia was, under the leadership of American workers, transferred out of the comparatively small Bolshevik area.

While it is the purpose of the committee to confine its work as largely as possible to those children who have lost both father and mother and for whom no relatives can be found, it continues to be necessary to provide emergency relief for the large number of helpless refugees who have again this winter been dispossessed from their temporary homes by the military operations of the Nationalists and Bolshevists. These people will inevitably perish if left without assistance during the winter months.

During the past year Armenians in America have contributed more than $1,000,000 through the committee for the assistance of their own people. $506,832 has been sent by Armenians in America for traveling expenses of between 2,000 and 3,000 of their relatives whom they have brought to America.

America's Chance to Help China.

By George Foster Peabody.

Without undue assurance it is not unsuitable to say that the United States is still making good her right to be called "The Good Samaritan" of the nations. The response to the present effort under the direction of Mr. Hoover to raise $33.000,000, to keep alive the starving children of Europe, is the most recent demonstration of this fact. The $650,000 given at the Metropolitan Opera House Christmas tree celebration, and the more than $2,000,000 subscribed at the Hotel Commodore demonstration dinner, give strongest emphasis of the still active sympathy of the people of the United States and their desire to express it wisely and practically.

The recent proclamation of the President calling into being a commission to raise millions for the succor of the sufferers from the appalling famine in China calls for more immediate response than would seem possible from an effort to raise vast sums at the same time, as the Hoover European committee is so splendidly carrying on its great work. I venture to suggest that the people of the United States are entitled now to the leadership which their representation in the Congress at Washington justifies. There seems no question that this is the most appalling natural disaster of which the world has knowledge. Forty millions in danger of starvation, and that not a future event, but an immediately impending one, calls for such united action as the war accustomed us to take. I believe the conscience of the people would heartily support instant action by the Congress to assure the saving of every life possible.

What is needed is food. The supply of food is to be found in the United States, and the price of food-stuffs is now lower. Advantage should be taken of this present market to provide the food necessary, and advantage should also be taken of the present control to provide the necessary transportation through the shipping facilities of the United States.

The need is so vast that no individual charity nor the union of individuals can compass it in time to avoid unparalleled sacrifice of human life.

I suggest, therefore, that the Congress now in session should vote at as early a date as possible an appropriation of $10,000,000 to be expended under a commission for the purchase and shipment of food-stuffs to China, for distribution under the direction of a special commission to be appointed by the Red Cross. I suggest that in addition to the appropriation of $10,000,000 to be immediately available, there should be further appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 to be paid by the treasury for the same purpose of providing food, for every one hundred thousand dollars subscribed by the people to the Commission appointed by the President, of which Thomas W. Lamont is Chairman and Norman H. Davis is Treasurer—the said payments of one million dollars as against subscriptions to be continued until a total of one hundred millions shall have been paid out, including the first ten million dollar appropriation, which would mean the raising of nine millions from private subscription.

The amount seems large, but as against the number whose lives are in danger it would mean only $2.50 per capita. The need of the hour is action without delay. This cannot be secured under the circumstances except through congressional appropriation. In view of the very proper right of way which the Hoover European Relief Committee has, effective action throughout the country probably could not be secured so readily in any other way as by this appropriation through Congress of additional funds contingent upon the private subscription, which would demonstrate the public sympathy.

It is recognized, of course, that this appropriation by the Congress would come at a time when the reduction of expenditure is of such vital importance, but it is only the more reason to call for the cutting off of useless expenditure, such as naval construction and the maintenance of too large a military establishment. It is also important that the nation, acting officially, should not fall below the high standards established during the war, when the thought of danger to the country was so effective in its justification of the immediate expenditure of untold sums.

This is a case of humanity's direst need, and at heart the people of the United States are very humane and full of sympathy for those in need. There is no other way at this time in which sympathy for the millions suffering in China can be properly and adequately expressed.

We have raised for half a century and more millions of dollars to extend to the Chinese our knowledge of what we believe to be the better way of living which the Christian religion has brought to us, and we have emphasized the necessity of works with faith. No greater providential call could be imagined than that at this time the people of the Orient could realize that we justify our faith by works.

OLD ARTIMAEUS.

A Mountain Story.

Among the many interesting experiences which have befallen me in the thirty-two years of my work among the mountaineers of the Blue Ridge in Virginia, perhaps the following is one of the most touching:

It had not been long since I had opened up our first mission on the Blue Ridge, in a gap near the top of the mountain. It was a twenty-five mile drive from my home, and at the end there was a three-mile climb which taxed the strength of my horse, which was not used to such a long, steep grade. I generally stayed two or three days so that I could hold some services and visit the people. There was always something interesting and sometimes exciting to tell them when I reached home.

On this particular visitation I was told of a sick woman whom it would be well for me to minister to, and accordingly I set up the mountain side through trees and underbrush to find the place. After some time spent in climbing I found a cabin, which I thought must be the one I was in search of. On knocking at the door I was told to come in, and when I had entered I saw an old woman sitting by the fire. I found that she had been suffering from dropsy for a long while, and that she fully realized her condition. When I told her who I was she was delighted and told me that a year before she had sent word to some minister far away in the Valley to come up and baptize her, but, though she had been looking for him anxiously day by day, he had never come, and the fear had been in her mind and heart all that time that he might not come before she died. She at once asked me to baptize her, and I found that she felt that if she died without being baptized there could be no possible hope for her in the life to come. I suggested that, as her husband was not there, we might arrange to have it on the morrow, when he could be present, but she would not hear to it. It was a life and death matter to her, and she was afraid that if she let me go I would, as she expressed it, "be like the other man," and never come back.

Realizing her earnest desire for baptism, I tried to prepare her as best I could, and asked her something about herself. Her life history was soon told. "I haven't had no chances," she said, which was pathetically true, for according to her account, her father had been "worse'n a bar (bear) to her." There had been no school to go to, and at sixteen she had married a man who had "bin cursing 'round her ever since." No wonder that with no chances here in this world, she should be determined that, if it were possible, her chances for the world to come should not be lost.

I asked her if there was anything that she had been doing which was not right, and she replied that the only thing she had any doubt about was that the young people would come to her about their love affairs, and she would tell them by cards who they had better marry. In that way, she said, she could get a bucket of water brought up the mountain for her. "There wouldn't be no marryen up here if it waren't for me," she said, from which I gathered that she advised the young people as to what they had better do in matters of this kind. I then explained to her as best I could the meaning of baptism; its blessings and requirements, feeling sure that God would not require of this poor soul the preparation which would be fitting and proper in the case of one coming with greater opportunities and advantages.

I then baptized her, and, to my surprise and wonder, found that her name was Artimaeus, evidently a corruption of Bartimaeus. What a strange and wonderful coincidence it seemed, for had she not, like Bartimaeus, been kept waiting for the blessing, and prevented from going in search of it? And had she not, after weeks and months of deferred hope, at last received the blessing? Jesus of Nazareth had for her, too, passed by, in person of His servant and minister. Like Bartimaeus, too, she would not let the opportunity go by without making a supreme effort to secure the blessing.

It was touching to see the joy of the poor old woman, as she realized that at last the desire of her heart had been gratified; that death had been robbed of its terrors; and that although she had had no chances in this world, the hope of a blessed immortality had not been denied to her. "Your coming here has been worth hundreds of dollars to me," she said.

Never before, or since, I believe have I been able to give so much joy to a fellow creature as I was able to bring to this poor old woman, and I cannot but feel that the Master Himself led my feet thither, and that He was present there and rejoiced over the bringing into His kingdom of the lost sheep on the mountain side.—F. W. Neve, in Our Mountain Work.

World Conference on Faith and Order.

Continuation Committee Issues an Appeal.

The preliminary conference held at Geneva, August 12 to 20, 1920, in preparation for the World Conference on Faith and Order, issues the following request, to which we beg your prompt and generous attention:

The meeting separates, recognizing that difficulties in the way of Christian unity still exist, but convinced that the Holy Spirit will guide us to overcome them, and we go home, each resolved to do all that is in his power to carry the new message of hope to all his friends and neighbors. A Continuation Committee has been appointed, charged with the duty of furthering the movement and of preparing for another and even greater conference.

But to reach the whole world requires money. So far, almost all the expense of the World Conference movement and of the meeting at Geneva has been met by the gifts of two generous and far-seeing Americans, father and son. It is not well that a world movement should be supported by only a few individuals, or by one Church or by one nation.

The Continuation Committee has been provided with money enough to begin its work. It remained in session at Geneva for a few days to plan and start its work. But its plans will be only tentative until it is assured of money enough to carry them out fully, and the money in hand will provide only for the first six months. Pamphlets must be printed and letters written in many languages and sent to every quarter of the globe. Large sums will be needed for that and for office expenses, for postage and for traveling expenses. It is estimated that $60,000, or about 17,000 pounds sterling a year, will be needed from the start, and that when the time comes for the first session of the World Conference, that sum will need to be multiplied.

The estimates for the first full year's work are: Salary of assistant secretary and clerks, $6,500; office rent, $800; translations, $1,500; postage and office sundries, $10,000; printing, $10,000; salaries of traveling secretaries, contingencies and traveling expenses of committees (including those of the Continuation Committee who will come from all over the world), $31,200. Total, $60,000.

We therefore ask for immediate and generous gifts, hoping that every Church in every land, however distressed it may be, will wish to have some share in this great undertaking.

Money may be sent to the United States Trust Company, Assistant to the Treasurer, 45 Wall Street, New York City, U. S. A. Please state that the gift you send is for the World Conference Continuation Committee.

CHARLES H. BRENT, Chairman.
ROBERT H. GARDINER, Secretary.

THE EPIPHANY.

The Epiphany record is filled with the spirit of poetry, enriched by imaginary and mystic symbolism.

The strange star in the heavens, the kings of the Orient coming from afar to do homage to the infant Christ, their hope and Herod's fear, the gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh, these are subjects which lend themselves well to imaginative interpretation and express great truths.

Yet we believe that there are no incidents in that life which entered our world as God's revealing Light and the true life for men, but that every happening is an event carrying its own meaning.

In this record of the Epiphany Tide, we find Gentiles from the East come to worship Him who was born King of the Jews. As we look beneath the outward circumstances, we find a foreshadowing of the fact that the truth which was to be given through Jesus Christ was not to be the exclusive possession of one nation alone, but was to be for all men of all times everywhere. We find a forecast of the very nature of the gospel that it could not be an excluding national religion, but a religion for the world.

So this season brings to the surface of our souls that abiding element of our faith that however the needs of the successive generations of men may change, whatever questions may harass and disturb them in the various times and in the scattered places of the world's life, the one Light which can come in to illumine the darkness of their perplexities is the light of Christ. In Him alone is to be found satisfaction for the need of the world of men today, the answer to the perplexing problems which the world presents, the salvation which the world seeks.

This is as true in the individual lives of men as it is in the social life of the world. There are so many souls, and yet no two alike; no two with identical natures, no two with identical desires, or with the same ambitions, or confronted by the same temptations, or bearing the same burdens; but all with varying temperaments and for the most part engaged in various enterprises in different ways of life; and yet for all, there is in the gospel of Jesus Christ the one key which unlocks to all the door which opens to salvation. The universality of the gospel! What a great sounding phrase it is! but how easy in its very grandeur to lose the beauty of its simple truth; a diversity of need as wide as the world itself, but for all needs only one source of satisfaction and salvation, Jesus Christ.—Church News (Missouri).

"He emptied Himself." 1. Creation involves the incarnation. It implies a love which enables God to cast aside whatever was incompatible with a real humanity. 2. His assumption of humanity meant the assumption of servanthood, for man is dependent. 3. His was no phantom life. All that is essential to humanity, He took upon Him. He knew no sin—but sin was no element in man's original constitution. 4. His obedience to death was real, because He laid down His life. He was obedient to the law, and took death as part of the experience of life. 5. He took the death of the cross, because He meant death to have no untasted bitterness; all its shame and hate were parts of that burden He came to bear. Even God's wrath against sin He would know, that He might stand in the sinner's place.—Dr. Samuel McComb.

The sense of the Divine protector is at any moment sufficient to inspire confidence, but not to render effort unnecessary.—Bishop Westcott.

Federal Council of Churches Seeks Justice for Aliens:

The Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will issue on January 17 a report on "The Deportation Cases of 1919-1920," showing that in many instances grave injustice has been suffered by aliens and others accused of anarchy or communism who were summarily arrested and, in many cases, held "incommunicado" for long periods before trial.

The report, which is a booklet of one hundred pages, covers a detailed study of two hundred cases of aliens alleged to be radicals, of whom seventy-eight were ordered deported and ninety-seven were released by cancellation of the original warrant. The study represents the work of many months under the direction of Rev. C. M. Panunzio, a specialist in immigrant labor problems who, with his assistants, has searched the official records, visited many prisoners and personally made the trip to Europe and back as a steerage passenger, interviewing scores of emigrants and immigrants to ascertain their attitude toward the United States.

The outstanding cases are reported in detail, and some of them indicate serious irregularities in the conduct of the agents of the Department of Justice, including in one instance the alleged use of an agent provocateur. It is stated that many so-called "communists" were foreign-speaking Socialists belonging to local organizations that had bodily transferred their allegiance to the communist party without the knowledge of these individuals or their acceptance of the doctrines of communism.

One of the strangest cases reported was that of Joseph Polulech, a young Russian, who was arrested without warrant at a raid on the Peoople's House, on East Fifteenth Street, New York City. No substantial evidence was offered by the authorities to prove that this alien was an objectionable person, and at his hearing before an immigrant inspector at Ellis Island, testimony showed that the only organization to which Joseph Polulech belonged in the United States was the Methodist Episcopal Church on Second Avenue, New York City. It was learned that this young man was ambitious, orderly and well-behaved, and had been an active worker in his church since 1913. His presence in the People's House was due to his desire to study, as he was there attending a night school. Before he could establish connections with friends, who would gladly have vouched for him to the authorities, Polulech was deported on December 21, 1919, after having been held "incommunicado" for six weeks.

The Commission on the Church and Social Service makes six suggestions for legislation to correct the abuses revealed. "The following proposals are offered," so the Commission states, "not dogmatically, but as a tentative basis for a seriously needed modification of the present law. They have been formulated after extensive consideration of the problems involved by persons of wide experience and authoritative opinions":

"1. With reference to what are commonly called political offenses, no act or utterance which at common law would not amount to a solicitation or attempt to commit a crime should be held a sufficient ground for deportation. To deport a person for the possession of ideas, however objectionable, is not only an illiberal, but a wholly futile method of directing intellectual development.

"2. It seems clear that the interests of equal justice would be promoted by eliminating from the immigration law the provision which makes membership in certain organizations a sufficient cause for deportation. The report makes it evident that the status of an individual alien in relation to the government cannot with safety be determined on the basis of membership in an organization. Without reference to the controversy over the legality of this or that organization, 'membership' is too ill-defined a relationship to be made the exclusive test of an individual's attitude.

"3. An alien resident, after he has been in the country for a period long enough to allow of a full determination of his right to domicile in the United States, should, when his deportation is sought for any cause, have the protection of such due process of law and of such constitutional safeguards as apply to a citizen accused of a crime.

"4. There seems to be no unanimity of opinion among authorities on immigration as to whether deportation cases should be handled entirely by the Federal courts. A possible alternative would be an immigration court, quasi-judicial in character, in which the alien would be guaranteed due process of law and the proper constitutional safeguards.

"5. It cannot be doubted that the method of raiding recently employed in apprehending suspected aliens has resulted in great injustice and hardship. These evils would be effectually prevented by a provision that arrests should be made only when a warrant has previously been sworn out and is served by the officer making the arrest, or when the offense is committed in the presence of the officer.

"6. The government agent who himself instigates unlawful acts for the purpose of apprehending the perpetrators, protecting himself by his official connection, must be eliminated from the administration of our Federal laws. Two measures suggest themselves as tending to curb such activities.

"a. A provision that no agent who is found to have provoked unlawful acts shall be granted immunity on the ground of his government connection.

"b. A provision that no person shall be convicted on evidence that shows him to have been incited by a provocative agent to the offense of which he is accused.

"The Commission believes that the evils at which these suggested reforms are directed are of first magnitude and should at once engage the attention of the public and of Congress."

A Way.

"In the turmoil of our surface life there is a multitude of men and women who would give anything to be able to look through it and see God." In that multitude, some of us recognize ourselves. We know the turmoil, the rush and hurry to get things done—we know it and are in it. We are painfully aware, too, that the turmoil is the stirring of a shallow pool—futile scanning of headlines is our reading, and our "thinking" is as close to the surface as our reading. In action we hurry from one surface thing to another. Of the deeps of life, of great "issues," of "world problems," set for solution, we are but dimly aware in rare moments of pause; and in these moments we are "so tired" that our awareness does but irritate us.

Would we "give anything to be able to look through it all and see God"? It is a queer slant in our human nature that with this yearning there goes an apparently constitutional dilatoriness about doing anything to satisfy it. We say we "would do anything"—we do nothing. All our lives, for instance, we have been hearing clerical exhortations to "pray," exhortations which we treat pretty much as we treat the daily paper—we "glance at the headlines." No doubt some of us "say our prayers." The trouble is that they are "ours," and that we merely "say" them. If they are "ours," what can they be but the outgivings of our surface lives? If we merely say them, what are they worth above our other "sayings"?

Would we honestly like to see God—that blazing Sun of Righteousness, that Moral Majesty, that Eternal Truth, that Perfect Knowledge, that All-Conquering Love? Suppose that tonight, after a day of the turmoil of our surface life, we should see Him, knew that we should, would we have spent the day scanning headlines, flitting about from this nothing to that? Would we dare to "say our prayers" to Him? What is there in our lives to make any one imagine for a moment that we want to see God?

For it is we, even we, with our surface lives, who calmly brush aside any real thought about, or practice of, prayer as a thing for which we have no time. Our headline minds do not hesitate to hold silly ideas about prayer, even though at moments we may have fleeting longings for its fruits. We look with pitying disdain upon those who, in the domain of the dollar, attempt to "get rich quick"; but in the realm of the spirit what are most of us but "get-rich-quick" artists?

There is a way to satisfy our desire to "look through it all and see God." It is a well-trodden way—there are blood spots on it, and it is wet with tears, tears wrung from strong men in an agony of effort. It is a narrow way—eyes accustomed to glance at the headlines miss seeing it. It is a hill path and the grade is steep—muscles flabby and atrophied cannot walk in it. Beside it, lurking in the bushes, are devils—the faithless and the superficial lose courage and turn back.

But it is the Way. He who begins to walk in it patiently, sensibly, bravely, soon finds that he is beginning to see God. As he progresses, step after painful step, he becomes aware of strong companionship. There are those walking with him who help him, and, behold, amongst them he sees One who says, "I am the Way." Under His leadership, progress, though never made without honest, purposeful, struggling effort, becomes joyous. Walking steadfastly in this Way, the traveler discovers that, in his progress, and because of his progress he is becoming possessed of powers of helpfulness that make glad reality out of the pitiful little yearnings of other days, he finds what the world needs for its sore sickness is not so much the great statesman, not the great legislator, not the great soldier, but the great prayer. Best of all, he finds that he, even he, is becoming such an one.

To excel in prayer is ours if we will. God gives us rich opportunities. He has even given us a form of words. To learn to pray them, not merely to say them, is a task within the capacity of us all; but it is a task that will tax every power that we have of body and mind and soul. You know them—they begin, "Our Father."—The Spire, St. James' Church, Philadelphia.

IN A DISTRACTING TIME.

We all feel keenly the difficulties and distractions of our time, and ask anxiously of our duty and the duty of the Church. We rejoiced when the war ended, two years ago, and thought that having learned a hard lesson, a readjustment would soon come, and the work go on much as it went on before. We did not appreciate how the war had broken up the old order and brought in entirely new conditions of thought and action. The change has been so great that it is really a new world in the making, and it will not do to say that human nature remains the same and that we are to go on just as we were.

The foundations of our life, whether moral or social, industrial or political, have been shaken so that a good deal of the old work must be done over again. We cannot assume that we may proceed with a sense of security from the point we had reached when the war came. Our Christianity was very imperfect, and we were resting content with a good deal that was really not Christian. We were adapting the principles of the gospel to our ways of thinking and living, rather than adapting ourselves to them. New interpretations and applications of the teaching of Christ are required.

No one can learn how people about us are thinking and living, how business is being conducted, how marriage is regarded, how our social and industrial life is ordered, without feeling that it is a new time and that a new message is needed. No one can give us any other principles for guidance in this distracting time than those which are found in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Our refuge in a time of distraction, our hope as regards the adjustment of the world, the assurance of peace and happiness are in those principles. Nothing can take their place, and the duty of every one of us in his or her private or community life, in the Church and in all the relations into which we are brought, is the application of the principles which are plainly stated in the gospel.

Every one ought to hold himself to strict account as regards his manner of life, his work in the fellowship of Christian people, without which religion cannot live. There is enough to cause depression for all whose faith and courage are not unwavering, but there is a great challenge to all who bear the name of Christ, to face the distractions and difficulties of the time, and to make their lives and influence count more definitely than ever before for Christ and His Church.—Newark Churchman.

"THIS MONEY HAS BEEN PRAYED FOR."

The Psalmist tells us that "a little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked." It is better not in quality alone, but in quantity and actual accomplishment. The world will never perceive this truth, for to the world money is an impersonal thing, and one dollar is as good as another. And this is because they look at the dollar itself, and not at the work it may help to accomplish. Thus to the world a million dollars is worth a million times as much as one dollar. But "one man's money is not as good as another's." Whatever the world may say, the little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked. The two mites of the poor widow are more than all the gold and silver cast by the rich into the treasury.

This is a truth unfortunately lost sight of by the financiers who, a few months ago, engineered a great drive for millions of dollars on behalf of the Christian Church. The churches were persuaded to guarantee expenses, and a great drive was organized for the collection of vast sums from irreligious people, "friendly citizens," they were supposed to be, who attended no church and cared little for religion, but who were to be told how much safer were their business gains because of the Church, and who were expected to contribute from self-interest or gratitude. Some of them did so. Did their money do any good? Not a particle. Instead, millions of dollars of debts were incurred which had to be paid by the guarantying churches.

A single penny paid out by a little girl with a heart full of love for those in darkness has resulted in turning many men from sin to God; while five million dollars has been expended with all the "efficiency" engineering that card catalogues, indexes and social surveyors could supply, without—so far as we may in humility judge—accomplishing anything worth while.

What makes the difference? God. How can we connect ourselves with Him? Through prayer. Not by might, nor by dollars. Not by advertising, but by prayer. A dollar with prayer is worth more than a thousand without. "One shall chase a thousand," we are told. And a dollar that has been taken into partnership with God is worth more than a thousand without such relationship. * * * When all Christians realize this truth, then the work of God will go forward by leaps and bounds; and until this is done the possession of money will be only a hindrance to the advance of the Lord's work.—The Christian.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

WORK OF CHURCH BUILDING FUND COMMISSION.

Mr. Editor: Under its present management the Church Building Fund Commission is rendering invaluable aid in providing the Church with necessary equipment for its work. Through its system of grants and gifts help is given to Church building enterprises in all parts of the world, as well as in the United States.

The year 1920 has been the most active in the Commission's history. Nearly all of its Permanent Fund has been loaned in accordance with the purpose and terms of the trust. The Income Fund is nearly used up. Still the requests for loans and gifts come crowding in. Surely the Church desires that this effective agent should move forward steadily to more extended tasks rather than that it should merely mark time.

Frequently in recent years it has been my privilege to ask the aid of the Commission on behalf of our missionary bishops. Never once has the needed aid been refused.

Is it any wonder that as Secretary of the Department of Missions I hope that our Church will give generously in 1921 to enlarge the work of the Commission? They can do it through parish offerings, individual gifts, the creation of memorial funds and legacies.

The American Church Building Fund Commission is the only general agency of the Church in addition to the Council and its departments having an office in the Church Missions House. The intimate relation between the work of the Council and the Commission is further indicated by the fact that the Assistant Treasurer of the Council, Mr. Charles A. Tompkins, is the Treasurer of the Commission.

It is but right to say that its work is not included in the Nation-Wide Campaign. Help can therefore be given only through specially designated gifts.

JOHN W. WOOD,
Executive Sec'y, Department of Missions.
Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Ave., New York.

A PRACTICAL TEST.

One of the outstanding Christian leaders of recent years was asked for a rule to govern the religious life, particularly with reference to amusements that might be considered permissible. He made this reply:

"It is a very difficult thing to make a rule for another to live by. The rule which governs my life is this: Anything that dims my vision of Christ, or takes away my taste for Bible study, or cramps me in my prayer life, or makes Christian work difficult, is wrong for me, and I must, as a Christian, turn away from it."

This practical counsel of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman appears to be a safe principle, rather than a hard and fast rule. There are undoubtedly some practices which can be indulged in by people of a certain temperament without peril or loss, but which would be blighting to many others. Every man must learn to know himself, but none of us can learn this secret except in the light of the person and spirit of Christ. "In Thy light shall we see light."—Selected.

It is indeed more blessed to give than to receive, but when the former luxury is not within one's honest reach, it is blessed, too, to receive from those one thoroughly loves.—G. S. Merriam.

Blessed is the most expansive word in the New Testament. Its reach is to the end of human need, because its motive is the limitless purpose of Jesus Christ.—Ex.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.
LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D.D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D.D.....Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1921, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents addit nal. Back numbers not over 3 months old 10 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address abel. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Church Intelligence

Death of Bishop Israel.

Just as we go to press this (Tuesday) morning, the shocking news of the death of the Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Erie, is received in the following telegram from Mrs. Turner W. Shacklett, Treasurer of the Diocese of Erie:

"Bishop Israel died at Hamot Hospital 1 o'clock this morning. Funeral Friday afternoon."

Consecration of the Rev. Dr. Finlay as Bishop-Coadjutor of South Carolina.

The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the ordination and consecration of the Rev. Kirkman George Finlay, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor-elect of the Diocese of South Carolina, as follows:

Time: Thursday, January 20, 1921.

Place: Trinity Church, Columbia, S. C.

Consecrators: The Bishop of South Carolina (presiding), the Bishop of North Carolina, the Bishop of Georgia.

Preacher: The Bishop of Atlanta.

Presenters: The Bishop of West Texas, the Bishop of East Carolina.

Attending Presbyters: The. Rev. Walter Mitchell, the Rev. O. T. Porcher.

Master of Ceremonies: The Rev. T. T. Walsh.

Deputy Registrar: The Rev. A. S. Thomas.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 7, 1921.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The annual business meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Washington was held on Tuesday, January 4, at St. John's Church and Parish Hall. The day was begun with a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Rev. Dr. Douglas, acting rector of St. John's Church, being the celebrant. He also addressed the Auxiliary members before the regular business session was started. Election of officers resulted in the re-election of the officers of the past year and the election of Mrs. C. R. Stetson as "box secretary." This office has just lately come into existence and will take care of the new system of sending and getting up the Auxiliary boxes for the several mission stations. Much routine business was accomplished at this meeting. The custodian of the United Offering reported a larger sum on hand at this time in the three-year period than at any other similar time of previous years in the Diocese of Washington. Luncheon was served in the parish hall, after which a business session and adjournment followed.

Carol Service: Christmas carols, American and foreign, ancient and modern, were repeated at the Washington Cathedral on Sunday, January 9, at the 4 o'clock service. The male choir of the Cathedral, under the direction of Mr. Edgar Priest, gave this carol service a week before and the chapel was well filled with those who came eo take part in and enjoy them. By special request the service was repeated, a large congregation being present to hear them the second time.

Organ Recital: The second of the series of recitals, under the auspices of the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, was given at Epiphany Church on Monday evening, January 10, by Mr. Charles Courboin, organist of the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y., and guest recitalist of the Wanamaker Auditoriums, Philadelphia. Mr. Courboin is a Belgian, holding high honors from Brussels Conservatory, and has had experience as organist of Antwerp Cathedral and in concert tours throughout Europe. He has won instant recognition in this country as an artist of great gifts.

The annual convention of the Diocese of Washington will meet in St. Stephen's Church on Wednesday and Thursday, February 2 and 3.

Joint Meeting of Sunday School Institute and Woman's Auxiliary: Notices have been sent out, on behalf of the Board of Religious Education, by W. L. DeVries, executive officer, and C. T. Jewell, secretary, of the annual joint meeting of the Sunday School Institute and Woman's Auxiliary to be held on Tuesday, January 18, 1921, at 8 P. M., at Epiphany Parish Hall. The speaker will be the Rev. Francis L. H. Pott, D. D., President of St. John's University, Shanghai, China, and his topic will be "Religious Education in China."

M. M. W.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

A mystery play was given in Christ Church, Lykens, on Christmas night, by the children of the parish. The play was written by the rector, the Rev. C. E. B. Robinson. The idea of the play was to represent the progress of the shepherds from the plains of Bethlehem to the place where they found the Child in the manger. The various steps were entitled Endurance, Hope, Faith, Love and Thankfulness. The Christmas story was effectively told, and appealed to young and old alike. It made a lasting impression.

L. F. B.

NEW YORK

Special Services With Eastern Orthodox Catholics.

In response to the appeal of Archdeacon Alexander, of the Greek Church, the House of Bishops designated Sunday, January 2, for special prayers for the Eastern Church and the restoration of St. Sophia Cathedral to Christian worship. An exchange of pulpits was authorized and the Presiding Bishop put forth a special Collect.

The commission to confer with the Eastern and Old Catholic Churches sent the information to the Church papers and the bishop. The special Collect was translated into Greek and Russian and was sent by the bishops to their clergy. The prayer was used and there were special services in many places throughout the country. New York offered the largest opportunities. At the Russian Cathedral in the morning Bishop Darlington was the preacher after the Gospel. He was followed by Father Sebastian Dabovitch, who has just returned from Serbia, where he has been Abbott of the Holy Gracinitza Monastary. Then Bishop Stephen spoke. He was formerly a Uniat Bishop, but is now a Suffragan to Archbishop Alexander. Father Terkovitch concluded the addresses, and prayers were said in English by Father Lange. The offering was given for Russian relief. Luncheon was served and pictures were taken in front of the Cathedral at request of Princess Lwoff Parlagghy for the Russian and Greek papers. In the afternoon services were held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Four bishops took part and seven languages were used. The service had been arranged by the Commission and Bishop Darlington presided. Dean Robbins spoke in place of the late Bishop Burch. Prayers were offered in Russian and an appeal was made for special offerings for Russian relief to be sent to the Princess Cantecuzene at the Hotel Buckingham. The concluding prayers for unity, the restoration of St. Sophia Cathedral and for Cardinal Gibbons were offered by Bishop Darlington.

Though the Pope declined the invitation to the World Conference, we are reminded of the lines of Edward Markham:

"He drew a circle and cut me out
Heretic, rebel a thing to flout,
But Love and I had the wit to win.
We drew a larger circle and took him in."

In the evening at the Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas, Brooklyn, Bishop Darlington again spoke at the request of Bishop Aftimios, of the Syrian Church, the service being in Arabic, conducted by Father Basil M. Kerbawy, Father Calimachos, of St. Constantine Greek Church, assisting.

B. T. Rogers.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Death of the Rev. Dr. Rodgers.

The Rev. Dr. William Cunningham Rodgers, rector of old St. David's Church, Radnor, Pa., died at his home Wednesday, January 5, from a stroke of apoplexy, age sixty-four, after an illness of several weeks.

Before coming to St. David's, where he had been rector eighteen months, Dr. Rodgers was President of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., and was connected with the college for ten years.

Dr. Rodgers was editor-in-chief of the Church News of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. In the Diocese he was one of the best known writers on religious subjects.

Dr. Rodgers was born in Lowestoft, Eng. He received B. A. and M. A. degrees from Christ College, Cambridge, Eng. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1884 and to the priesthood in 1885.

Dr. Rodgers came to this country in 1889 to become rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa. He was canon of the Cathedral at Davenport, La., for four years, and in 1895 became rector of Christ Church, Gloversville, N. Y.

Dr. Rodgers served as rector of St. Mark's Church, Hoosick Falls, N. Y., and was headmaster St. John's School, Montreal, in 1900. That year he went to Grace Church, Millbrook, N. Y. He was assistant at St. Agnes' Chapel, connected with Trinity Church, N. Y., 1906-1909. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from St. Stephen's College.

On December 22 of last year Dr. Rodgers celebrated his thirty-fifth year in the ministry. He is survived by his widow, one daughter, Mrs. Edward S. Hale, Devon, and five grandchildren. The funeral took place Saturday morning from St. David's.

Memorial Service for Miss Coles.

Memorial services were held recently in the Church Training and Deaconess' House, Philadelphia, in memory of the late Miss Mary Coles, who for more than thirty years was an active benefactor of the institution. The ceremonies began with the service of the Holy Communion conducted in the chapel of the Home by Bishop Rhinelander, and attended by many friends and co-workers of Miss Cole.

An address was made by Rev. Dr J. De Wolf Perry, of Germantown, who spoke feelingly of the splendid services which Miss Coles had rendered to the Church and to the various charitable and auxiliary associations, and especially of the faithfulness with which she had fulfilled her duties as a director of the Deaconess' Home. The speaker also referred to the rare personal character of the deceased benefactor, and to the many deeds of kindness and self-sacrifice which made her conspicuous among her friends.

The Rev. George S. Gassner has become priest in charge of the Church of St. Jude and the Nativity, succeeding temporarily the Rev. Dr. L. N. Caley, who resigned to become rector of St. Martin's, Oak Lane. Mr. Gassner was connected with the Seamen's Church in Philadelphia for twenty years.

He has been a member of the staff at the Cathedral at Easton, Md., for the last eighteen months.

The Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, expects to sail for Europe April 13 for a vacation of five months.

He will join Mrs. Grammer and their two daughters, who are in France, where the daughters are students at the University of Grenoble.

Mr. George Wharton Pepper has been elected member of the Executive Council of the Church, succeeding the late Arthur E. Newbold. Mr. Pepper also has been elected to take Mr. Newbold's place in the Department of Finance.

Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff and Mrs. Henry Voorhees Stillwell were married on January 4 at the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, Philadelphia, Bishop Rhinelander officiating, assisted by the rector, the Rev. Dr. David M. Steele.

R. R. W.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Mystery Play Given in Augusta: In place of the usual vesper service at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta, on Sunday afternoon, December 26, a carol service was held for the Sunday school, preceded by holy baptism. Following this service a mystery play of the Nativity arranged by the rector, the Rev. H. H. Barber, was given in the parish house, under the auspices of Section B of the Woman's Auxiliary. Six scenes showed the Angel Gabriel announcing the message to the Blessed Virgin; the Magi journeying to Jerusalem; their arrival at the court of Herod; the shepherds watching their flocks; the Nativity—the shepherds adoring the new-born King, and the Magi in adoration presenting their gifts. Each picture was introduced by a short address by the rector, and a carol descriptive of the scene was sung by an invisible quartet. After the play, gifts were presented to the pupils from a Christmas tree.

Rector Presented With Purse: The rector of the Church of the Atonement, Augusta, the Rev. F. W. B. Dorsett, was presented with a surprise purse by his parish on Sunday, December 26, and by a singular coincidence that same evening at Evensong, the gift was duplicated by the colored congregation of St. Mary's Mission, to which the Rev. Mr. Dorsett ministers, though the latter was not aware that his parish was to remember him in a similar way. The parish house of the Church of the Atonement is used at Thanksgiving by the City Union of the King's Daughters and Sons for the annual distribution of the baskets of good things given as a thank offering by the school children of the city, who this year filled baskets worth $1,000 to be given to the poor.

E. D. J.

MARYLAND

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Missionary Mass Meeting at Lyceum Theatre, Baltimore.

The annual missionary mass meeting of the Diocese of Maryland was held on the evening of January 2 in the New Lyceum Theatre, Baltimore. Every year the Church people of Baltimore and vicinity give up their evening Sunday service and assemble as one congregation to welcome torch-bearers of the gospel and to be inspired by their message. It was a message of responsibility and inspiration which they heard this year. The Rev. William C. Emhardt, field director for work among foreign-born Americans, spoke of the menace to this country of segregated foreigners in our cities untouched by the better elements of American Christian life. The Americanization problem included a more thorough Christianizing of Americans. Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, always clear, masterful and convincing, gripped all by his presentation of the influences at work in the Orient. If Japan aims to become a strong military power, it must be remembered that Western Christian nations have been her schoolmaster. The question is not, may Japan be kept from aiming at power, but how shall she use that power? Here lies the possibility of the influence of Christian teaching and Christian practice.

In preaching to the Japanese, we may not avoid answering the question, How is Christianity working out in general practice among peoples of the West?

Following the thoughtful, cogent presentation of Bishop Tucker came an equally forceful address by Bishop Overs, of Liberia, spiced all through with delicious humor. A tribe of cannibals, he said, had asked him for a teacher. General laughter seemed to leave some doubt as to the reason for the request, but the Bishop answered his audience that it was mental, not material, food that was desired. The Bishop told a sad story of negligence by this Church. Our buildings are in a wretched, dilapidated condition. Opportunity is ripe for large returns both in material and spiritual results. The conclusion was evident that the Church has the right man as apostle to Liberia, but it must support him and back him up with liberal hand. Bishop Murray said that the Nation-Wide Campaign promise did not permit his asking for special funds, but did not prevent his receiving them. It is known that neither Bishop Tucker nor Bishop Overs left empty-handed.

Institution Service of Unusual Interest: The Rev. Wyatt Brown, Litt. D., rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, was instituted Sunday, January 2, by the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, Bishop of the Diocese. This was a unique occasion for Bishop Murray, being the fourth service of institution in which the Bishop has participated in St. Michael and All Angels' Church. About eighteen years ago Bishop Murray was instituted as rector himself. He instituted later two of his successors, who are now both of them bishops of the Church, Bishop Fiske, of Central New York, and Bishop Cook, of Delaware. And now the institution of Dr. Brown makes the fourth. In the chancel with Bishop Murray were, beside Dr. Wyatt Brown, his brother, the Rev. Bertram Brown, rector of Calvary Church, Tarboro, N. C., with whom Bishop Murray had been intimately associated twenty years ago, and the Rev. D. P. Allison and the Rev. George J. G. Kromer, who were assistants to Bishop Murray eighteen years ago and have been present at all the successive institutions.

Ordination: The Rev. Henry Purcell Veazie was ordained priest in Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, St. Thomas' Day, by the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., Bishop of Maryland. The sermon was preached by the rector, the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D.; the Rev. Dr. W. A. McClenthen presented the candidate. The Rev. Mr. Veazie is well known in Baltimore because for some years he was boy soloist in Old St. Paul's choir. Mr. Veazie is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary. He pursued studies at Oxford University and served with the English during the war. He is at present on the staff of Trinity Church, New York, and will continue his duties there.

R. F. H.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Speakers.

The speakers for the Lenten noonday services in one of the prominent theatres of Cincinnati will be:

First three days, February 9-10-11—The Ven. Joseph H. Dodshon, Archdeacon of the Diocese.

February 14 to 18 inclusive—The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop of Bethlehem.

February 21 to 25 inclusive—The Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, D. D., of Philadelphia.

February 28 to March 4 inclusive—The Rev. J. Howard Mellish, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.

March 7 to 11 inclusive—The Very Rev. Dean Robert K. Massie, Lexington, Ky.

March 14 to 18 inclusive—The Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Missouri.

March 21 to 25 inclusive—The Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese.

NEWARK

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Quarters for Diocesan Rooms.

Important changes are to be made as regards the Newark Diocesan House. The present diocesan rooms have long been entirely inadequate for the work, and it has been determined to take the large house in the center of the city, now occupied by Bishop Lines, for the Diocesan House, while providing for the Bishop in a small house. The change will provide suitable rooms for the Bishop's offices, the Board of Social Service, the office of the Nation-Wide Campaign, the Board of Religious Education, the Church Mission of Help, the City Mission, and rooms where the monthly meetings of a great many active organizations may be held.

Progress Made in Church Work.

The delayed Journal of the Diocese of Newark has appeared, showing that the Diocese has 176 clergy, and for 1919 had 2,464 baptisms, 1,982 confirmations and 42,657 communicants. The members of the Sunday schools numbered 19,387, the offerings $1,018,205, giving Newark among the dioceses in these statistics the fifth place.

N.-W. C.: While the Diocese has not raised its quota for the Nation-Wide Campaign, it has contributed for the last year more than the $115,000 asked under the pledge, giving a very considerable gain without the Diocese as well as within, over the offerings of preceding years. One of the most satisfactory results of the diocesan part of the campaign was the division of $15,000 in increasing the salaries of the clergy, which were below the average of the Diocese, which was found three years ago to be $1,960.

The Bonnie Brae Farm for Homeless Boys, which has for a few years been caring for fifteen boys to save them from the reformatory or jail, is to be moved to a farm of two hundred acres at Millington, where it is planned to make provision for fifty boys. There is unlimited opportunity to save for good homeless boys.

The House of the Holy Comforter, which has just been established, through the gift of house and land by Mrs. John B. Van Wagenen, at West Orange, as a home for women disabled by age or broken health, was formally opened at Epiphany. Money for its equipment and furnishing has been given in the Diocese, and now the money to supplement what may be earned at the Home by paying guests must be found. The applications for free admission are already beyond the capacity of the house, showing the real need of what has been begun in a modest way.

A bequest of $5,000 for the support of the church at Nordhoff was left by Mrs. William Walter Phelps, who was the daughter of Hon. Joseph E. Sheffield, the founder of the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University.

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Garrett, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Coadjutor.

Interesting Program for Annual Council.

The seventy-second annual Council of the Diocese of Texas will be held in Christ Church, Houston, Tex., January 21-25, inclusive. Preparations are being made to entertain a large number of delegates and visitors. Last year 1,462 attended. It is expected that over 2,000 will be present this year. A most interesting program is outlined, consisting of Conferences on Religious Education, Young People's Work, Social Service, etc. Some of the strongest leaders of the Church are to be in attendance, including Bishop Gailor, Dr. W. E. Gardner, the Rev. W. N. Lathrop, Rev. Paul Micou. A splendid time is anticipated by everybody in the Diocese.

EAST CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

The N.-W. C. Pledge.

The Diocese finished its first year of the Nation-Wide Campaign with $70,000 of its $81,000 pledge paid into the Diocesan Treasurer. Eastern North Carolina has suffered a severe financial depression this fall, on account of the low price of farm products, and this accounts in a large measure for the $11,000 shortage. It is believed, however, that the pledges will ultimately be paid in full. The Diocese enters the second year of the campaign with the conviction that her fine record of the past will be continued.

Two Sunday School Institutes to Be Held.

The Department of Religious Education in the Diocese is planning two Sunday School Institutes to be held during the month of January. The first, a four-day institute beginning January 18, will be held in St. James' Church, Wilmington. The second, beginning January 25, will be held in St. Peter's Church, Washington. Diocesan leaders in Sunday school work will be assisted in the conduct of these institutes by Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, a provincial worker. All of the clergy and a large number of delegates from the various parishes have already announced their intention of being present. The Rev. George W. Lay, chairman of the Department of Religious Education, and the Rev. A. M. Blackford, its secretary, have been the moving spirits in this plan for the betterment of the Church schools of the Diocese.

Commemoration of Consecration of Bishop Darst.

On the Feast of the Epiphany a service in commemoration of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., as Bishop of East Carolina, marked the sixth anniversary of that event. An event happy in its inception, its importance to the Diocese receives fresh demonstration every year. The service was held in St. James' Church, Wilmington, all of the clergy of the city and their congregations taking part in it. During his six years in this Diocese Bishop Darst has proved to be a wise administrator and inspiring leader, and the Diocese has prospered under him.

Bishop Darst has been asked by the Presiding Bishop and Council to spend the month of February in the Dioceses of Rhode Island and Western Massachusetts in the interest of the Nation-Wide Campaign. In spite of his many diocesan duties, the Bishop has consented to undertake this important work.

Clergyman Weds: Only the presence of the bride prevented a recent wedding in East Carolina from being entirely clerical. On Christmas Eve the Rev. Joseph N. Bynum, rector of St. James' Church, Belhaven, was married to Miss Grace Elizabeth Potter in St. John's Church, Wilmington. Bishop Darst performed the ceremony, the Rev. Frank D. Dean acted as best man, and Archdeacon W. R. Noe gave the bride away.

T. P., JR.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Christmas Activities of Richmond City Missions.

The Christmas activities of the City Missions of Richmond this year were more extensive than ever before, and a remembrance or treat of fruit, cakes or tobacco was given to no less than 1,801 people.

The bringing about of such wholesale Santa Claus operations was accomplished through the enlistment of the interest and co-operation of a great many of our Church societies in the Richmond city churches.

Nineteen organizations in sixteen of the churches of the city contributed either personally or financially to the gratifying result.

The general policy of the City Missions for carrying out its Christmas plans is to get some society, women's auxiliary or guild, or men's Bible class or club, to adopt an institution and provide a treat for the inmates, and, if possible, have some of its members go with the City Missionary and help in the distribution of the presents and candy.

This arrangement has several advantages; it arouses the interest of our Church people in the city and State institutions; it makes the persons thus cheered take a more lively interest in the services held for them by the City Missionary; and it brings to the attention of people in all our churches the wide field in which the City Missions is the ministering agency.

This year fourteen institutions located in four counties, and with representatives in them from practically every county in the State, were visited.

This shows that this branch of missionary activity is by no means local, but is truly a diocesan matter.

Lenten Services in Richmond.

The daily half-hour services, which have grown to be so conspicuous a feature in the Lenten season of the Church in Richmond, will be continued this year as usual. The services will begin on the Thursday after Ash-Wednesday, and will continue through the week which precedes Holy Week.

On Thursday and Friday after Ash-Wednesday the preacher will be Bishop Brown.

In the first full week of the services, with the exception of the first day, Monday, which is as yet unfilled, the preacher will be the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, Bishop of Kentucky. Bishop Woodcock comes this year for the first time to Richmond, but he is widely known by the Church at large as one of the ablest preachers in the House of Bishops and a man, particularly sought after as a speaker at Lenten services.

In the second week, from February 21-25, inclusive, the preacher will be a minister from another Christian body. He is the Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago. Mr. Gilkey was a college mate of Dr. Bowie's at Harvard, and a graduate of Union Seminary, in New York, studied for two years in universities abroad, and was associated with some of the eminent men in the Scottish Church during the term which he spent in the University at Edinburgh. Coming back to America, he became the minister of the Hyde Park Church in Chicago. This church is an unusual one in its denomination, being situated near the University of Chicago, and having a large number of the faculty, both of the university and its theological school, in its membership. It is a church of remarkable liberal spirit. Mr. Gilkey, as its minister, has been identified with many kinds of wide service.

The preacher for the third week, beginning February 28 and lasting through March 4, will be the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D. D., rector of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia. Dr. Tomkins is one of the influential men in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and a preacher of special note in the Church through his success in conducting parochial missions. He is already known in Richmond from his visit here as preacher in the Lenten services last year.

From March 7-11, inclusive, the preacher will be the Rev. John Kelman, D. D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City. Dr. Kelman is a Scotchman, and one of the most outstanding leaders of that Church, which has always been distinguished for great preachers. He was formerly minister of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh—perhaps the most commanding of the Scottish churches—and came recently to New York to succeed Dr. Jowett at the Fifth Avenue Church. His name is known internationally as a writer and a preacher.

The final week of services, from March 14-18, inclusive, the preacher will be Rev. Edward M. Jefferys, of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia. Dr. Jefferys was formerly in our Church's medical mission in China. Returning to this country, he became City Missionary in Philadelphia and rector of St. Peter's Church.

Impressive Ordination Service at University of Virginia.

On the first Sunday after the Feast of the Epiphany in St. Paul's Memorial Church, University of Virginia, the Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, advanced the Rev. Noble Cilley Powell to the priesthood.

The sermon from the text, "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?" St. Luke 20:4, was preached by the Rev. Professor Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., of the Virginia Theological Seminary, formerly rector of St. Paul's Church.

The ordinand was presented to the Bishop by the Very Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The Litany was said by the Rev. Ben R. Roller, of the Diocese of West Virginia. The Rev. William Clayton Torrence read the Ante Communion, the Rev. Paul D. Bowden the Epistle, and the Rev. J. F. W. Feild the Gospel.

All the above joined in the laying on of hands. The Bishop, as the celebrant, was assisted by the Very Rev. Berryman Green, D. D.

Among others in the procession were the Rev. Messrs. H. H. Williams, of the Diocese of Virginia, and George J. Cleaveland, of the Diocese of West Virginia.

Mr. Theodore Nott Barth was present in the procession, representing the student body of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The music was effectively rendered by a large volunteer choir, and the congregation filled the church to its utmost capacity.

The Rev. Robert A. Goodwin has resigned the rectorship of Christ Church, Winchester, and will go to China, to take charge, about April 1, of the Kuling School, Kuling, China.

The Richmond Clericus: On January 3, being the first meeting of the clericus for 1921, and the usual time for the election of officers, the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, was elected president, and the Rev. J. H. Gibboney, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, secretary-treasurer, for the ensuing year.

LOUISIANA

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Consecration of Dr. LaMothe of Unusual Interest to Diocese.

Peculiar interest was connected with the recent consent by the Standing Committee of this Diocese to the election and consecration of the Rev. John D. Lamothe to be Bishop in the Missionary District of Honolulu. The motion giving consent was made by the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, who succeeded Dr. Lamothe as rector of St. Paul's Church, New Orleans. The documents were signed by every member of the Standing Committee, including James D. Hayward, who was a vestryman of St. Paul's during Dr. Lamothe's rectorship, and also the Rev. Dr. Coupland, who had been a classmate of Dr. Lamothe at the Virginia Seminary. Another coincidence was that Dr. Coupland in 1911 left the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, to accept the rectorship of Trinity Church, New Orleans, and in 1917 Dr. Lamothe resigned as rector of St. Paul's to become rector of the Church of the Ascension. Dr. Lamothe has a host of friends in New Orleans and throughout the Diocese who trust and believe that his work in his new field in Honolulu will be abundantly blessed.

Death of Dr. Duncan: The Rev. H. C. Duncan, D. D., for fifty years Secretary of the Diocese of Louisiana, died in Alexandria, La., on December 20. Dr. Duncan was for many years Recorder of the General Convention, having first been elected when that office was created in 1910.

N.-W. C. Results: The end of the first year of the Nation-Wide Campaign in this Diocese showed that Louisiana had overpaid its pledge by several thousand dollars. One of the results of the Nation-Wide Campaign has been the placing of a City Missionary in New Orleans. The salaries of many of the clergy in the Diocese have also been increased.

The Diocesan Council will meet at Christ Church Cathedral Wednesday, January 26. It was determined last year to meet this year in Shreveport, but the fire which nearly destroyed St. Mark's Church compelled the rector, the Rev. James M. Owens, to request the Bishop to make the change.

Testing the Power of the Bible.

Ten rods from me the waters of the Mississippi River are rolling to the Gulf of Mexico. Now I cannot prove that any individual drop or cup or pailful of this water will ever reach the Gulf; nor can any one, standing at the Gulf, prove that any particular portion of the current there, passed down the Mississippi, through Lake Pepin and on to the ocean. Yet we know the Mississippi River reaches the Gulf of Mexico, and we act on that knowledge. So we know that Christian truth, and the Christian Scriptures, and the Christian people, have existed for nineteen centuries, and we can be sure that we hold the faith of the early Christians, and that we have the very Scriptures which they had.

Besides, we can test the power of the Bible day by day, and prove that the same gospel will produce the same results that it produced so long ago. We can test it by its fruits, and by the way it works.—H. L. Hastings.

The Church Missionary Society, after giving general aid for 100 years in the work of evangelizing the Indians and Eskimos of Northwest Canada, has terminated its relation to that part of the work of the Church of England in Canada. In taking this action the Church Missionary Society has presented to the Church in Canada an endowment fund of $125,000 for the future support of the Indian and Eskimo missions. The fund has been established because of the difficulty of raising money for this special purpose in Canada, and because, in contrast with what obtains in other missions, at the end of a hundred years there is no self-supporting church and no native ministry.

Self-denial does not mean going without choice food or abstaining from amusements: self-denial means making my will coincident with God's will—denial of self.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

THE RESULT OF "STAYING OUT."

One of the most bailful consequences of the decision of the United States to stay out of the League of Nations is the result it has had upon our scientists.

When poison gas began to be used by the Germans in the great war, it was condemned bitterly and unanimously in England and America.

If the nations could only get together in some form of international agreement for the preservation of peace, no doubt such an attitude to this iniquitous form of warfare would be maintained and probably intensified. So long as the only means of preserving peace is to be increased armaments with the expectation of future war, it is natural that poisonous gasses should be looked upon simply as a kind of ammunition, and the result is that leading chemists both in this country and in England are devoting their time and attention to discovering new means of exterminating life by this method.

One religious paper lifts its voice against this weapon of making warfare more terrible than it ever was before, and "The Herald of Gospel Liberty" deplores the indifference of Christian people to this form of barbarity in the following words:

"And the distressing point of the whole matter is that not one voice has been raised in protest, so far as we have heard, nor have we seen one single article from any editorial pen against this humiliating and degrading course so coolly laid down by our army officials for our nation. To this silence there has been, to our knowledge, only one exception, and we regret exceedingly that we cannot give the name of one of the most noted chemists of the United States who has indignantly refused the government his services for such a purpose, finely declaring that he understands it to be the business of skilled chemists to inquire into the ways of prolonging life rather than to seek out horrible methods for its destruction.

"This whole 'gas' enterprise is only another leaf out of the book of militarism which is being written into the history of our nation just at the present time by those who make profit and gain out of war—but it is a page that ought to arouse every Christian conscience to a quick and defiant resentment in behalf of the honor and nobleness of America, against which it ought not for a moment to be possible to bring even the suggestion of such inhuman practices, no matter what the rest of the nations of the world may do."

We sympathize with these sentiments entirely, but so long as war is held up as the only means of national defense, we believe that the nations of the world will continue to make their military preparations as effective, and therefore as diabolical, as possible. The only way to ameliorate war is to abolish it. and this can be done by international agreement. Surely such a purpose is big enough and Christian enough to deserve the concerted attention of our Church people.

ENCOURAGING.

A magazine published in New York entitled "Better Times," which styles itself a "little paper with a big purpose," presents some facts, which are certainly encouraging to those of us who pray and hope for His kingdom to come and His will to be done on earth as it is in heaven..

This magazine is the official organ of the charitable and public welfare organization of New York City, and the encouraging feature is the fact that such societies now number two thousand, and that they collect and spend for the benefit of the needy, in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, the aggregate sum of no less than fifty million dollars every year.

Another encouraging feature of this work is the fact that this huge amount is not given by a few rich people, who feel the responsibility of their wealth, but is contributed by almost three hundred and fifty thousand individuals and corporations.

The publication referred to has a double purpose, first to make known the various societies doing relief work in the city of New York, and secondly, to avoid duplication in the effort put forth to ameliorate suffering.

While few other cities in the country have so numerous a group of such associations, nevertheless in every town and city there is more than one such organization, and it would be well for other places to follow the example of New York and have an official organ, which would publicly set forth their objects and purposes.

Such publication might appear only quarterly or semi-annually in our smaller cities, and where the expense would be too great to justify it, one of the daily newspapers would no doubt be glad to open a department in their columns for this kind of information.

Aside from the usefulness of such public co-operation to each body of workers, the publicity given to activities of this nature would be likely to bring larger contributions from more diversified sources and so greatly to contribute to the relief of suffering.

We are convinced that there is enough wealth in this country, and that its possessors are sufficiently liberal to prevent any of our own people from going hungry or shivering for lack of clothes if the wealthy and generous ones know of the proper channels through which to reach the needy ones.

APPLIED CHRISTIANITY.

Nothing could show a better Christian spirit than the way in which New York churches have recently received "the invasions" of the unemployed.

When the rector of St. Mark's, on the Bowery, not only did not resent the entrance of the Church by men who had no homes nor food, but actually welcomed them in person and provided food as well as lodging, he took a long step toward banishing from the minds of the masses an idea that the Church of today is only an institution for rich and respectable people, where good clothes are quite as much a requisite for mission as a penitent heart.

We do not see how it will be possible for even a wealthy New York church to continue to feed and house from 500 to 1,000 men. Nevertheless, in doing so, even for a short time, St. Mark's has showed the right spirit, in a way that is certain to do much to break down that prejudice against the Church which has sometimes existed in the minds of working people, especially when they are out of employment and in dire need for the necessities of life.

If all our churches throughout the country will follow the example of those in New York, they will build up a substantial and effective wall against Bolshevism. and social unrest and disturbance, which will be worth far more than many regiments of soldiers with fixed bayonets.

SOURCE OF EVIL.

In a statement recently given to the press, Dr. John W. Davis, Director of the Bureau of Attendance of the Board of Education, has pointed out the intimate sequence of the bad home, truancy and criminal tendencies.

Here is a field for the Church to exert a beneficent influence. If there is one institution more than another which Christ our Saviour glorified and sanctified, it is the home; and in doing all in its power to develop happy home life, the Church is certainly fulfilling the desires of its great Founder.

Cannot our Sunday schools exert an influence on the school attendance of their members by trying to keep records and offer special rewards or badges to the children who show a perfect attendance mark at their day school as well as at Sunday school?

An active interest by Sunday school teachers in the home life of their pupils is another way in which the Church can co-operate in this important matter.

The great need for such co-operation, both for the saving of souls as well as for the development of minds, is strikingly shown from the following incident quoted by Dr. Davis:

"Workers in the Bureau of Attendance find that practically all truancy is traceable to bad home conditions. A case was cited of a boy whose name came up for truancy. This boy has three brothers, one of whom is in Sing Sing, another in a reformatory, and a third in Parental School, having been committed for truancy. The father and mother of these children are both addicted to drink, and the children have not been properly looked after."

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR

JANUARY.

1. Saturday. Circumcision. New Year's Day.
2. Second Sunday after Christmas.
6. Thursday. Epiphany.
9. First Sunday after Epiphany.
16. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
23. Septuagesima Sunday.
25. Tuesday. Conversion of St. Paul.
30. Sexagesima Sunday.
31. Monday.

Collect for Second Sunday After the Epiphany.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who dost govern all things in heaven and earth; Mercifully hear the supplications of Thy people, and grant us Thy peace all the days of our life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Shepherd Song.

When God sought a King for His people of old,
He went to the fields to find him;
A Shepherd was he, with his crook and his lute,
And a following flock behind him.

When God looked to tell of His goodwill to men,
And the Shepherd-King's Son Whom He gave them;
To shepherds, made meek a-caring for sheep,
He told of a Christ sent to save them.

When Christ thought to tell of His love to the world,
He said to the throng before Him,
"The Good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep—"
And away to the cross they bore Him.

When God sought a King for His people, for aye,
He went to the grave to find Him;
And a Shepherd came back, Death dead in His grasp,
And a following flock behind Him.

O love of the sheep, O life from the dead,
O strength of the faint and the fearing;
A Shepherd is King, and His kingdom will come,
And the day of His coming is nearing.
—Joseph Addison Richards.

"Keep Your Seat."

Let me tell you the story of Fabius, who came to see me not long ago, taking the first opportunity since his discharge and return from overseas. I had known him in his childhood, and had often mourned over the growing selfishness which he displayed, even as a little lad. He was not a bad boy, but his mother had a great horror of "being put upon," and was very careful to ward off any possibility of it. She believed thoroughly in training children "to take their own part," as she called it, and to stand up for their rights. In a crowded street car, for instance, when older people were standing, she would say to her little son, who, perhaps, had momentarily shown the right impulse, "You keep your seat; you've paid for it." And, owing largely to her successful training, this became his ruling principle, to keep his seat, and make sure it was a good one.

He grew into a fairly useful member of society, in a way, because, though he lived and worked for himself, he realized that it paid to be attentive and competent in your business, and in perfectly normal times he might possibly not have been found seriously wanting. When the war came, of course he had no thought of enlisting. When other men went he just kept his seat or moved into one of theirs. At this time I saw very little of him—for reasons, no doubt. Then one day he appeared in uniform, and afterwards I made a note of what he told me. His story had been something like this:

"I don't know just how it was. I was walking down to business, but the road seemed pretty rough—queer things strewn along, as if folks had loaded up in a hurry and kept dropping them; now and again I put my foot in a hole. I began to think I'd lost the way or something. . . . Then a soldier came limping along. He looked pretty seedy; his uniform was stained; he had a bandage round his head . . . it was Jerry, who used to work in the corner grocery. He had two little boys with him, carrying the smallest, while the bigger one was trotting by him, holding on to his coat. 'Well, of all the queer outfits,' I began. 'Hullo!' he said. 'You'd better come along, too. Oh, yes; I've got to find a safe place for these little kids. The village was burned, and they shot the father. We've got to make things safe for little kids like these, you know. Come on,' and I saw that the little one had a wound from a bayonet thrust. . . . But I didn't go.

"Another time I was having a good, old smoke by the fire. It was dusk, and just beyond the door, as plain as anything. It was a bare-looking place—no fire, nothing comfortable, and a chap sitting on a bench with his head in his hands, looking—well, very down in the mouth. It was Tom, who used to work next to me, and whom I'd laughed at for enlisting. 'Why don't you come and help to get us out?' he said, when he saw me. 'I'm doing solitary confinement just now for cheeking my superiors, as they call themselves. No; pretty poor fun, but they've got to remember that we're all British, no matter what part of the Empire we come from, and we must keep up our end, no matter what comes. Why don't you join up? You chaps at home must all join and come to get us out.'

"Well, another time—a good deal later—I went to see old Shorty up at the military hospital. Poor chap! He'd been badly smashed up, and could only hobble about the ward a bit. He didn't seem much pleased to see me, and we hadn't a very comfortable talk. 'It was worth it, though,' he said. 'After all, if you never do another stroke of work again—still, you've done something; you've helped to take the hill. You've done a bit, even if it's the last bit of work you'll ever do. . . . Why don't you go and take the place of a fellow like me, who can't go back. Sick visiting's well enough for people who can't do anything more. But what's a chap like you doing here?' I suppose this was why he hadn't cared to see me, and, though I was a bit annoyed at the time, I thought about it after. . . .

"Even that wasn't all. The very next day I had to go round by a way I don't often take. I passed by a fine, big house, with lovely gardens. I knew the place. I'd had work there once or twice. There were three sons—fine, jolly fellows—and there was always lots going on—tennis parties and all sorts of things. They all went to the war. Two were killed, one was a prisoner. It all looked dark and lonely, and I heard was going to be made into a hospital. As I passed I heard some one say, 'You can't say we—the city—sent fellows like them. Their own fine spirit led them, not us. And it makes one's blood boil to see sturdy chaps staying round here when men like these have gone so freely. The duty's the same for all. Chaps like these didn't go out so that others could stay at home in Easy Street.' . . . I thought every one was looking at me. . . .

"Then the last straw was old Mrs. Motherwell. I knew how she had talked about slackers, and I'd been pretty angry with her at different times, but now I just felt sorry and uncomfortable. I moved to let her pass, but she stopped and looked at me with her sorrowful, big eyes. 'What are you doing?' she said. 'You know what they're all saying about reinforcements. You know they must have men. My boys had no special call to go any more than you have. Why don't you go and take my George's place?' I could stand it no longer. Something seemed to fall from my eyes, and I determined I wouldn't wait for the Military Service Bill. So here I am. . . ."

Shortly after this he went across and fought through the later stages of the war. He knew what it was in ordinary things to be efficient and hard-working, and he worked at being a soldier in the same thorough manner, but I believe in a new spirit, carrying on the standard of good workmanship into the service of the cause. Now he has come back with a young wife, whom he brought out from England, and the other day they came to see me, bringing their baby son. "He doesn't know anything yet about keeping his seat or giving it up," said the proud father. "While I was on leave once over there I heard a padre preaching about the right of children to be well brought up. You always hear a lot about rights, and about children's rights to this or that. But this was a kind of right I had never thought of myself. You always used to say I was a very spoilt child, and if I hadn't been shamed at last into going to the war I'd never have got out of my seat. I'd have been spoiled for life. . . . I know it will be a bit hard not to slip back into the old ways. The old habits come back so when you get into cities. You seem to put off your good ways with your khaki. But, please God, I mean to try. You learn out there the things that count. The selfish man is the worst kind almost, the most disliked, the least thought of, and when you think it out you see that's fair enough, and you learn to despise—I won't say selfish men—but yourself for being one. The war has taught that to lots of us, and, though it isn't going to be easy, still lots of us mean to make the effort not to forget it all. . . . We do want our little lad here to grow up right, not to be selfish or spoiled. We want to teach him to think of other people and learn the lesson of the army, so he can grow up into the right kind of man, the kind of man the Empire needs and the country needs, more than it needs politicians, far more than it needs rich men or successful men—more even than it needs good workmen, though it needs them badly enough too. More than anything else, it needs the right men, and every right man is going to count. That's our ambition for our little chap."

And this from the boy who had been brought up to keep his seat.—J. Dene, in Canadian Churchman.

For of Such Is the Kingdom of Heaven.

The wind blows cold from Ararat; with cruel searching breath
It sweeps across a barren land, where Famine stalks, and Death;
A land where little children drone
Their dreadful, dreary monotone:
"O-na-ne! Oh, my soul! Have mercy on our woe!"
(What wrong could little children do that they should suffer so?)

O little folk of Erivan, who moan in misery,
Such little heads as yours it was Christ blest at Galilee.
'Twas such as you His loving arm
Caressed and sheltered from alarm.—
"O-na-ne! O-na-ne!—" (O Christ, in heaven above,
In mercy take them swiftly home to warmth and peace and love.)

The wind blows cold from Ararat. It cannot hurt the dead.
But what of those who naked lie, the roadside for a bed;
With hunger-frightened eyes that stare;
Whose feeble wail is everywhere:
"O-na-ne! Oh, my soul"?—(Will no one hear their cry?
Be merciful to us, O God, who pass unheeding by.)

—V. S. Owens, in S. S. Times.

Churchmanship.

What is a "good Churchman?" There are many ideas prevalent. There is that large class who have been born in the Church, brought up in her "ways," who have never been attracted by any other phase of Christian thought, who have steered clear of all entanglements with other communions, who have "gone to" the Church, "paid to" the Church all their lives. These people have a strong attachment to the Anglican Church, they appreciate her services in a dutiful way, they honor her traditions, they admire her dignity, and they "could not think of belonging to any other." They are often generous with their money. Nevertheless they are "Wooden Anglicans," as an honored friend of mine used to call them. Jesus is an honored Name to them, but He is not a Living Personality who as Lord and Master commands their whole lives. These "good Churchmen" act in the affairs of every-day life just like any cultured heathen might act. The great principles of Christ are not seen in their every-day lives; Christ has not the devotion of their hearts and lives. Many of them are "blasphemers"; others are "sharp" business men; others are "foul mouthed," "filthy" in their conversation. There is little sign of the Christ in their daily lives and conversations, yet they would be indignant if any one were to say that they were not "good Churchmen."

There is another class of "good Churchmen" who attach the word "good" to the observance of certain customs and practices. They always insist on "fasting" communion (an excellent custom in itself); they insist on the Eastward Position and the six points of ritual—the six points have now grown to more like sixty points—the mixed chalice, the wafer bread, vestments, lights, etc. The one who observes these points of "Catholic practice" is a "good Churchman"; the man who does not is a mere Protestant—no Churchman. These judge the "goodness" of Churchmanship by the observances of these various practices. But Christ Jesus does not influence their lives any more than He does the lives of the other class I have referred to. They are worldly minded, proud, self-righteous; just as loose in their business and personal habits—they do not live as Jesus did, in harmony with the Father's will. These people are not necessarily "good Churchmen" at all.

Let us get back to the foundation. What is the Church? "The Body of Christ." The Body of Christ must show Christ's Life through its members. The member of His Body, the Church, who is living the Life, and showing in his every-day life the very Spirit of Jesus Christ, he is the good Churchman—the living epistle of Christ, known and read of all men. The "good Churchman" is the man who is living the Christ Life every day, in the home, in the social circle, in business, in politics. He lives the life because his heart loves Jesus, and he shows his love by his works. This living Christian will hold the faith of Christ in its entirety: he will follow regular customs and practices of the Church; but he will put the spirit before the letter, and he will not judge his brother in these externals, because Christ fills his heart, and he knows that life may be expressed in different ways. The man who loves Christ will be ever ready to express his love and devotion; and will be quick to detect love's expression that differs from his own. Love will be ready, too, to suppress its own inclinations, and to conform to the customs, and practices of others. Rigidity is not the ideal of healthy life.

Let Churchmen then "hold the faith," as the Church has preserved it for us; but let them live the faith which the Church has preserved. A faith which is merely theoretical, which does not inspire to works, is indeed dead.—The Bishop of Montreal.

"Be Ye Also Ready."

"What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world? . . . Be ye also ready."

"What are the signs of Thy coming,
And when shall the end-time be?"
Anxious, they questioned the Master,
Curious, even as we.

Are these the signs of His coming,
That loom over sea and land,
That darken the earth and the heavens?
Is the day so near at hand?

We know not; He hath not told us
This secret of the Lord;
But all we need He hath left us
To read in His sacred Word.

And pulsing through the silence
Like the far, faint throb of a drum,
"Watch, be ye also ready,
For ye know not when I come."

Sweet as a silver trumpet
Through tumult and clamor clear;
"Watch, be ye also ready,
For the time is drawing near."

—The Methodist Protestant.

Influence of Good Books On Children.

When you find a child who loves good books, the evil weeds of envy, hatred, jealousy and malice are not so likely to grow in his mind and choke out the blossoms of love, tenderness, unselfishness and gratitude. The love of good books is one foundation for good character.

Happy are the children of this day and age in that they have so many books, and such beautiful and interesting books. The children of a hundred years ago had very few books, and they did not have lots of beautiful pictures in them as the books of today have. If a child today cannot buy or own books, he can always borrow them from a library. No child needs to go without books. And if he makes books his friends, he will never be dull or lonely.

The child who loves to read holds in his hand the keys of fairyland. He may learn all the wonderful things that wise men have spent years in discovering, in the pages of a book. He may travel in thought to the far-away parts of the earth while sitting in his chair at home. He may make the acquaintance of all the story-book heroes and heroines that have been created from the beginning of time, and count them among his friends, if he learns to love reading.

The poetess, Emily Dickinson, expressed the blessing of books in the following lovely little poem:

There is no frigate like a book
To bear us miles away,
Nor any courser like a page
Of prancing poetry.

This traverse may the poorest take
Without oppress of toll;
How frugal is the chariot
That bears the human soul.

The Coming Year.

God keep you through the coming year
With light dispelling doubt or fear;
The times which are as yet unknown,
Your Father calls them each His own.

God give you strength throughout the days
To tread securely devious ways;
Strength which some fainter soul will see,
By its reflex will uplifted be.

Give through it all unfaltering trust,
In power divine both true and just;
That ordered steps may form a whole
Clean pathway to the heavenly goal.

May you have love, the greater gain—
Light, strength and trust walk in its train,
To silver over shadows drear,
God give you love this coming year.

—Anon.

Right Kind of Education.

Education must always say in some way or other, "My kingdom is not of this world"; or it ceases to be education and becomes the teaching of a number of tricks with no reason given to the pupil why he should learn them. It may, for instance, teach him to earn a living; but many pupils, often the best, cannot be persuaded that earning a living makes living itself worth while; they will turn from it to any irrelevance, good or bad; while those who can be persuaded are by that very persuasion made stupid, which certainly is not the aim of education. There is in every one a hunger of the soul, or the self, which can be satisfied only by some kind of mystical belief, and by a life in terms of it; this hunger must be expressed somehow, and all education must be seen as a means of satisfying it.—London Times.

The best furnishings of a house are happy faces; the best seasoning of daily bread is a smile; the best music to soothe weariness is laughter.

For the Young Folks

A Tired Little Worm.

A tired little worm went to sleep one day
In a soft little cradle of silken gray,
And he said as he snugly curled up in his nest,
"Oh, crawling was pleasant, but rest is the best."
He slept through the winter, long and cold,
All tightly up in his blankets rolled,
And at last awoke on a warm spring day,
To find that winter had gone away.
He woke to find he had golden wings,
And no longer need crawl over sticks and things.
"Oh! the earth was nice," said the glad butterfly,
"But heaven is best when we learn to fly."

The Red-Headed Boy.

"There's that awful red-headed boy in a fight!" The sharp voice belonged to the sharp-faced teacher of the fifth grade, who happened to be on duty at the noon recess. She hurried to the struggling boys, and with the assistance of another teacher managed to pull them apart.

"Young man," she addressed the owner of the red hair, "this is not the first fight you've had on these grounds, but I certainly hope it will be the last." She marched the panting boys to the principal's office.

In the meantime a red head had appeared at an upstairs window; one glance from a pair of intelligent brown eyes took in the situation, and the head disappeared.

"Yes, I saw him, with my own eyes, rush at the other boy, grab him by the collar and fling him down!" The sharp voice was pitched so as to enter the principal's ear and penetrate to his rather kind heart, arousing it to execute a righteous judgment on the red-headed culprit.

"Be seated, boys. What grade are you in?" The red-headed boy looked up.

"Indeed, I'm sorry to say he is still in mine!" The sharp voice had emphasized "still."

"Did you attack this boy first?"

"With my hands, yes, sir."

"Why do you say 'with your hands?' "

"Because he attacked me first. with his tongue."

The principal looked at the other boy, who grinned and flushed.

There was a tap on the door. "Come in!" called the principal; and a tall young woman with red hair and brown eyes entered. She looked sympathetically into the eyes of both boys, causing them both to blush with shame.

The red-headed boy blushed because he remembered the fight he had the previous year; and how this red-headed teacher from another grade had walked all the way home with him; and how she had told him that God had made both their heads red: how He had numbered each of those red hairs; how that it did not just happen to be red, but that God had permitted it to be that color; and that it was wrong to fight about it, because it was like reproaching his heavenly Father for making it red.

"Have a seat, Miss McClain; I'm glad you have come. Now," to the black drooping head, "how did you attack him first with your tongue?"

Both boys' faces got redder. After an embarrassing silence, the red head was thrown back, and a pair of honest blue eyes looked at the principal.

"He don't want to tell you, because Miss McClain is here. Please, Miss McClain, go out! Then you can come back when we holler, 'Come.' "

The blue eyes looked beseechingly into the brown eyes. The principal raised his eyebrows; the thin lips of the sharp-faced teacher curled contemptuously; Miss McClain laughed merrily.

"Excuse me, professor; but perhaps you don't understand. Why, it's something about red heads. You see, Pat is so sensitive on the subject that he can't realize that I'm not at all so. Don't mind me, Ernest, just speak the truth"; but the boy only looked more ashamed of himself.

Miss McClain smiled knowingly at the principal. "He called him a red-headed, freckled-faced Irishman, I expect. Was that it, Pat?"

"Ask him." Pat Dillon nodded his red head toward Ernest's black one.

Ernest raised his black eyes, full of tears of shame, to his teacher's intellectual face; and the look in her eyes brought him to his feet.

"Professor," he stammered. "I—that's exactly what I said, only—that wasn't all. I said that his mother nearly whipped him last night because she saw a light through the transom and thought he was still reading after she had told him to put out his light and go to bed, but she found it was only the light from his head. I—I didn't know how low down it was, until—until Miss McClain came in."

Miss McClain's eyes regarded him. She was proud of her pupil.

Pat was on his feet before Ernest had finished.

"It was my fault! I promised Miss McClain last year that I would stop and spell 'God made it red' before I fought about it; and I forgot today; but it is the first red-headed fight I've had since I promised her," and they all believed it.

The principal rose and shook hands with the boys.

"Now shake hands with each other—that's right. Pat, my boy, I believe this is to be your last fight on account of your hair. Now, I want you to study your hardest, so I can promote you to Miss McClain's room. I think there you would soon learn to appreciate red hair."

Pat Dillon was promoted at Christmas, and from the day he entered Miss McClain's room—and looked into her eyes—he became a different boy. He was from the beginning her messenger, because, when she looked up to select some one, a pair of eager blue eyes begged to be of service.

The principal watched with interest the developing of the red-headed boy by the tactful, intelligent, red-headed teacher.

"Miss McClain has the best-behaved grade in school. I've taught it twice," declared one senior to another whom she met in the hall, on her way to fill Miss McClain's vacant seat.

"I'm certainly glad to hear it, for I'm awfully nervous about teaching boys and girls of from ten to thirteen; they are simply at an abominable age! I'm not surprised that she has these violent headaches come on suddenly."

"Don't you worry. If you want any information, just ask that red-headed boy; he's a treasure."

The nervous senior found the report to be true, and everything had gone on smoothly until the arithmetic class was called, and eight pupils were at the board, when suddenly the fire alarm rang.

"The fire drill!" exclaimed the senior, excitedly.

"Fire, fire, fire!" shouted a voice in the street below.

The senior sprang from her seat and rushed from the platform. Pat raced down the aisle, caught her in his arms and carried her back to Miss McClain's desk.

Interest in Pat's maneuvers had saved the grade from panic.

Holding the struggling, half-hysterical senior, Pat gave the necessary number of sharp, commanding taps. The grade responded mechanically; but when the little girl who led the line looked into the smoky hall and saw white-faced teachers struggling desperately to control themselves, and the crooked lines of crying girls and excited boys, she hesitated.

"Ernest, lead the line!" commanded Pat, "and every one hold on to the one in front!"

From the foot of the stairs the principal saw Miss McClain's grade holding their lawful place next the wall. A line too compact to be broken, they came on past him, and in their rear came a red-headed boy, dragging an unconscious senior.

In the morning paper was the principal's account of how Pat Dillon, in the absence of his teacher, had preserved the honor of the sixth grade. Miss McClain read it, and was proud of her red-headed boy.—Christian Instructor.

"Pluck wins! It always wins! Though days be slow,
And nights be dark 'twixt days that come and go;
Still pluck will win; its average is sure;
He gains the prize who would the most endure,
Who faces issues; he who never shirks;
Who waits and watches, and who always works."

Sparkle.

When the Jervey family moved up into the mountain country for a year, so that Mrs. Jervey could have the cool, bracing air, Maurice and Dot were very lonely. They missed their playmates and found the wide hills very different from the cosy village streets that they had been used to.

"Would a pony help?" their father asked one day.

Maurice brightened up at once. "I should think it would," he said. "A pony's as good as another boy."

Dot was not so sure that a pony was as good as another girl, but she looked very much interested.

A few days later the pony came, hitched to a little cart. "I've hired him for the summer," Mr. Jervey said. "Now go ahead and enjoy him."

The children stroked the pony's shaggy brown coat and asked his name.

But their father had forgotten it. "It seems to me I heard somebody call him Sparkle," he said doubtfully. "The family that owned him have a pony farm, but they didn't want to part with this fellow," he added.

Dot looked up quickly. "Was there a little girl in the family?" she asked.

Her father thought there was. "About your size," he added.

"We'll keep on calling him Sparkle," said Maurice. "Come on, Dot, let's take a drive."

Dot climbed into the red cart, but she could not stop thinking about the little girl in the family that Sparkle had belonged to. What was her name, she wondered, and how could she bear to give up her pony?

For the first few days they drove only round the yard and the stable lot; their father thought it best for them to become acquainted with the pony before they drove him in the public road.

Sparkle was gentle and affectionate, but for some reason he did not seem happy. He held his head down, and his eyes looked mournful.

"He'll be happy as soon as we can drive him down the road and let him shake his heels," said Maurice.

They decided to celebrate their first long drive by having a picnic on a big rock beside the road about half a mile from home. As they drove off in the red cart Sparkle's harness glittered, and Dot, who was to drive first, held her head high with pride.

Sparkle went much faster than he had gone in the yard. "I knew he wanted more room," said Maurice. "Go it, Sparkle!"

The pony shook himself and struck into a fast trot, and then into a gallop that grew faster as they went. His mane shook, and the pebbles flew from under his little feet.

"Be careful, Dot," warned Maurice. "We don't want to have a spill."

All at once Sparkle gave his head a toss and swerved to the left, where a road turned out of the highway. Dot pulled hard on the right rein, but Sparkle only went faster and faster and dashed round the curve. Maurice grasped the reins, but it was no use. The more he pulled in one direction, the harder Sparkle pulled in the other.

"Why—he's running away!" gasped Dot.

Maurice was still yanking at the reins. "Almost!" he panted as he pulled.

On and on they went. The picnic apples were rolling round in the bottom of the cart. Maurice and Dot were red in the face, but they held on pluckily and did the best they could.

At the end of a mile Sparkle gave his head another toss and swerved again, this time to the right; through a wide-open gate he ran and down a level lane. A minute later he pulled up short in front of a white farmhouse. Maurice and Dot drew a long breath and climbed out of the cart.

Inside the house some one ran downstairs two steps at a time; then the front door was flung open. A girl about Dot's age came running out. She did not look to right or left, but rushed to the pony's head and threw both arms round his neck. "O, Sparkle!" she cried.

Maurice and Dot stood silently by; they realized what had happened. The pony had brought them back to the place where he belonged.

Presently the little girl left Sparkle and came toward the two strangers.

"You must think me very impolite," she said bashfully; "but I couldn't think about anything but Sparkle at first. He is my pet of all the ponies."

When the turnout reached home at sunset it held three passengers instead of two. "This is Patty Doane, mother," Dot explained.

Patty looked bashful again. "Sparkle would not come back without me," she said. "May I stay till he stops being homesick?"

Dot's face shone at the warm welcome that Patty received. "A girl is even better than a pony," she declared.

Before the summer was over Sparkle was hardly able to tell which of the two places was his real home. He would travel in one direction as well as in the other. And Maurice and Dot forgot they had ever been lonesome.—Ida M. Kier in Youth's Companion.

Little Black Chick.

Little Black Chick was in disgrace. Little Black Chick generally was in disgrace.

"Whenever there's mischief going on," scolded old Mrs. Turkey, "that chicken's at the bottom of it! Gobble, gobble, gobble."

"He's a nuisance!" sputtered the Gander.

"Yes," echoed the Geese, "he's a nuisance!" (The Geese always agreed to whatever the Gander said.)

"I hae to find fault," quacked good-natured Mrs. Paddle Duck, "but he shouts:

'Cluck, cluck, cluck,'
I'm glad I'm not a duck.'

and really, you know, that's quite rude." She began oiling and preening her feathers.

Even Mother Biddy shook her head sadly and cackled, "I can't understand it. All my other chicks are well-behaved children. I truly can't understand it—cackle, cackle, cluck, cluck cluck, cluck."

Thus the poultry yard gobbled and quacked and cackled about Little Black Chick and his bad ways until the poultry yard honestly thought he was bad.

Today Little Black Chick was very much in disgrace. Usually, when this happened, he just cocked his head and winked his eye, and splashed feet-first into the water pail. But today Little Black Chick was unhappy. Mother Biddy hadn't scratched him a single worm; and, when she gave her chickens their nap, she let Little Black Chick come only a teeny, tiny way under her wing. Little Black Chick's heart felt as if he had been swallowing gravel-stones. He cheeped hard and tried to get closer to Mother Biddy, but his brothers and sisters pushed him back.

"Cheep, cheep!" cried Little Black Chick. "I'll go and find a roosting-place like the big hens." He slipped out from under the tip of Mother Biddy's wing and off he ran to the farthest corner of the poultry yard.

Nobody saw Little Black Chick go. The other hens were taking sun baths, rolling and fluttering and wallowing in the dust; the ducks were splashing in a big tub of water; and old Mrs. Turkey was explaining to the Gander and the Geese why her family never liked red. "Such an ugly, common color, so exciting, too," she gobbled.

Little Black Chick ran along the wire fence of the poultry yard. Finally he came to the weest, cutest little door. It was a hole Towser, the dog, had started to dig under the fence.

"Oho!" thought Little Black Chick. "I'm going out there in the large poultry yard. Nobody can scold me then." He slipped under the fence into the big outside world.

On and on scampered Little Black Chick through all the green things, finding a bug here and a bug there, chasing the butterflies, and hunting for ant's eggs under the leaves like Mother Biddy. On and on he scampered.

He spied a lady-bug out for her afternoon's stroll. "Here's a feast!" he chuckled.

Little Black Chick opened his beak to snap her up—when he saw a huge yellow SOMETHING with a long bushy tail, come slinking down the hill from the woods, softly, softly moving towards the poultry yard.

"What is it?" puzzled Little Black Chick. "It isn't Towser."

Then suddenly his wee chicken-heart gave a chicken-heart jump—and he remembered! He remembered that Mother Biddy had told them all when she had talked about the dangers of small chickens:

"Weasels and rats,
Hawks and cats,
But worse my cocks,
Is the yellow old fox,"

she had said.

That is what the huge, yellow SOMETHING was—a fox! Little Black Chick fluttered his wings with fright.

Nearer and nearer came the fox, stealing shyly towards the poultry yard.

Little Black Chick could see the hens still dusting themselves in the sun and old Mrs. Turkey talking to the Gander and the Geese. The Ducks were splashing so loudly that nobody could hear the fox. Something must be done! Something must be done quickly!

What could Little Black Chick do?

"I must tell Mother Biddy!" he thought. "I must get to the little door first."

Quick as a flash he scurried through the grass as fast as two small chicken legs would go. On he dodged and scrambled, slipping and falling, scratching his eyes against the rough twigs and branches, but hurrying faster and faster to save the poultry yard and his brothers and sisters.

Once he stopped to take breath and he could hear the fox closer than ever. Once he was caught in a mullen plant.

"Perhaps the fox will see me," thought poor Little Black Chick with a shiver.

But he ran bravely on, and, in one last scramble and scurry, dashed through the hole and straight to Mother Biddy, crying, as well as he could, like the old hens, "Er-rn-n-n-n-n," which means, "Look out, look out!" in chicken talk.

Then the whole poultry yard began calling, "Er-rn-n-n-n-n," the ducks began to quack, the turkeys to gobble, as they all ran towards the chicken house. Towser, up on the porch beside Farmer Brewster, began to bark; and Farmer Brewster put down his newspaper just in time to see a yellow streak of fox fur dash up the hill towards the woods.

The hens and ducks and geese and turkeys saw it too, peering from the chicken house door.

"Who gave the alarm?" asked the Gander.

"Little Black Chick!" cried the others.

"Ahem!" said the Gander, clearing his throat. No, he isn't a bad chick." his throat. "Little Black Chick isn't a bad chick. No, he isn't a bad chick."

"No, indeed. Little Black Chick isn't a bad chick," spoke up the Geese promptly.

"The dear child!" quacked Mrs. Paddle Duck, wiping her eyes.

"Gobble, gobble," said old Mrs. Turkey, it's wonderful about that chicken.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

I believe even a red handkerchief wouldn't scare him."

But Mother Biddy clucked tenderly. "He's a good, brave little chick," she said.

And Mother Biddy was quite right. Little Black Chick was!—Susan Holton, in Presbyterian Banner.

Finding People Out.

Madge ran into Ellen's room, her face all lit up with the happiest of smiles. "I've been having the best time, Ellen!" she exclaimed, as she speedily divested herself of outdoor garments.

Ellen surveyed her chum with interest, as she inquired, "What have you been doing, Madge?"

"Finding people out," was Madge's reply, a mischievous gleam in the eyes she turned on her listener.

"Finding people out?" Ellen repeated. "I've never been led to believe that would afford a good time. In fact, quite the reverse. I've always associated it with the disagreeables of life."

"Mine wasn't." Madge was brief, but emphatic.

Ellen walked over to her chum, and, taking her by the shoulders, gave her a friendly shake, as she demanded an explanation.

"Well," began Madge, gayly, "I started out for a walk, all by my lonesome, this afternoon. And, coming back, after I struck the village, I caught up with Mrs. Nelson. I hardly knew her, but some way we got talking about the Woman's Club here in town, and she told me she was just finishing a paper on Julia Ward Howe. Then I began to ask some questions, and she went on and told me a lot about her paper—the way she had written it and the incidents she had woven into it. She was just as interesting as she could be. And when our ways parted at the corner I was sorry. I wanted to find her out some more."

"I see what you mean, Madge," smiled Ellen. "But go on; tell me more about your discoveries. Whom did you find out next?"

"I came on over North Avenue, and when I reached 'Wilton's' I concluded I wanted some candy, so I went in, and there was Mrs. Wilton all alone. You know so many times there's quite a crowd in there. She was as visity as could be, to my surprise. And, to my further surprise, she began talking about the community house that some of us are so enthusiastically working for, and there she was just as eager for it as we are. And she had some splendid plans that I'm sure will help a whole lot in raising money for the house. Oh, we talked a long while, and I was sorry again when customers began coming in and requiring attention, for I wanted to stay and find her out some more, too."

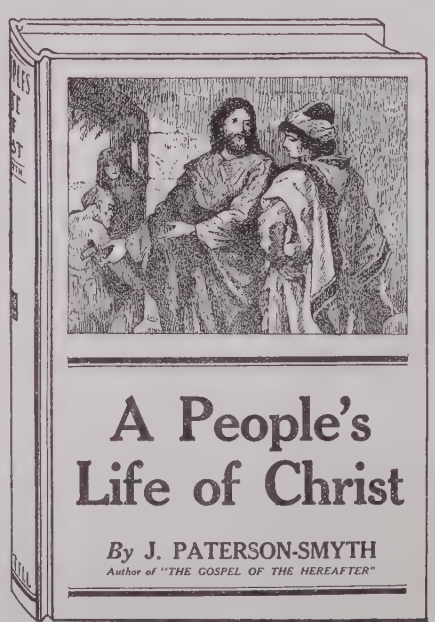
"Any one else?" Ellen's tones were full of eagerness.

"Not in connection with this afternoon. But I could tell you very many more experiences in finding people out. Pleasant experiences, I mean, too. Why, Ellen, you've had lots of good times finding people out yourself, only you didn't happen to think of it in just that way. How about the time you left your new mink muff in the ten-cent store, and went back, after you discovered your loss, and found that little clerk just beaming with gladness because she could return the muff to you? And another time when you got all confused in your lines when you were in a play before a big audience and a girl who was in the part with you just kept giving you your cue until you found yourself again. And she was a girl you'd always thought rather slightingly of before, but that night you found her out. Didn't you, Ellen? Oh, I tell you we make too much of the other finding people out—the unpleasant kind; and we make too little of this kind—the worth-while sort of finding people out. Don't you agree?"

"Yes, I do, Madge." Ellen was in dead earnest. "And I'm going to be on the alert to find people out, for I believe it means an enlargement and enrichment of life along the line—for others and for ourselves."—Girls' Companion.

BIG SERVICE FOR 10c.

Washington, D. C. (Special).—In order to let people all over the country see for themselves how valuable the Pathfinder can be to them, the editor of that old-established national weekly offers to send his paper on trial 8 weeks for only 10 cents. The ten cents does not begin to pay the cost, but the editor says he is glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder has been going for 28 years. One family in every 70 in the entire United States now takes it. Thousands more would take it if they realized what they are missing. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Only a dime sent to the Pathfinder, 93 Langdon Station, Washington, D. C., will keep your whole family informed, entertained, helped and inspired.



JUST READY

PATERSON-SMYTH'S GREAT LIFE OF CHRIST

Author of the Popular Work, "The Gospel of the Hereafter"

¶The world has seen many "Lives" of our Lord since Farrar wrote his famous "Life of Christ."

Every new age requires a new interpretation written in the light of latest research. Here is the new popular version for this day and generation, an everybody's life of Christ, which the ordinary man may read for the sheer pleasure of reading it, and which enables him to put himself in the place of one who has seen and known the Lord in the flesh.

A Handsome Gift Volume
ONLY $3.50 NET

¶Bishop Charles Fiske writes: "Have just read it . . . Tells the old, old story in a modern way, every chapter a vivid picture; the brief history of the Great Life told with the skill and interest of present-day biography. Ought to be as popular in our day as Farrar's was in his. The story is so told as to meet present-day needs: the hunger, so keenly felt since the war, for some definite knowledge of the unseen world; the social implications of the Gospel; a clear and definite answer to the question, 'What is God like?' "

ORDER AT ONCE! Only a limited quantity available for Southern Churchman readers this holiday season!

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Enclosed please find.....for which please send me by return mail .....copies of A PEOPLE'S LIFE OF CHRIST, by J. Paterson-Smyth.

Name.....

Address.....

Let him who gives be silent, but let him who receives speak.—M. Cervantes.

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special
at $7.25
Send us your size
Woodall & Quarles
7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley
FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

Seek Good Turn Opportunities.

"We don't always have to seek the opportunity of doing a good turn," writes Lieutenant Belvin W. Maynard, the "Flying Parson," in his article, "The Thrill of High Adventure," which appears in the February Boys' Life. "Sometimes the opportunity comes and lands right in our back yard. We only have to be ready to act the part of a real scout when the opportunity comes. It is easy to see how much I have appreciated these kindnesses which meant victory to me; and let us remember that our good turns will be appreciated and may mean victory to some one else.

"We must be ready not only to do a good turn when the opportunity comes to us or when it comes into our pathway, but we should seek the opportunity. There is where the real happiness comes. Let us not wait for the opportunity to land on us, but let us land on the opportunity.

"There are so many ways to do a good turn that we should not be satisfied with one a day. Some of them might not involve much self-sacrifice, but still not to do them, however small, would be unworthy. Did you ever see a fellow's hat blow off and go rolling down the street, passing by many who would not stoop to pick it up for him? Did you ever watch a woman standing in the aisle of a street car holding a baby in her arms when there were many men seated? Did you ever watch a woman with small children and luggage try to board a train unaided? Did you ever walk along a lonely road and have car after car pass you without picking you up? Did you ever pass an elderly woman on the sidewalk, whose very image was a picture of want and misery, carrying more luggage than a man ought to carry?"

After all of our effort, the one great requisite of success is the active and signal blessing of God. If that be withheld, nothing we can do will matter at all. Eloquent words become mere sounding brass. Gifts and offerings remain inert and lifeless. Marshalled forces can only mark time or engage in a losing fight. Whatever of success we may achieve is due to the blessing and favor of God.

If the heart goes with the gift, it may be small and homely in the eyes of men, and yet it will be great in the sight of God.

To Be of Service

is the purpose for which we are all in this world.
We take pleasure in serving our customers and expect 1921 to give us the opportunity of serving many more.

The Union Bank of Richmond
1104 East Main Street

HERBERT L. CAIN CHURCH ARCHITECT
12 North Ninth Street, -:- Richmond, Va.
The Needs of the Sunday School, the Law of the Architect
Address Dept. 4

Jno. L. Williams & Sons
BANKERS and BROKERS
Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank
Richmond, Virginia

"The Store that Pleases"
FOR FURNITURE
Jones Bros. & Co.
Incorporated
1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer
AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE
Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va., nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate. Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES, $1.50. $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

CATHEDRAL STUDIO, ENGLISH Church embroideries and materials. Stoles with crosses, $7; plain, $5.50; handsome gift stoles, $12 up; burse and veil, $15, $20. Surplices and exquisite altar linens. L. V. Mackrille, 2604 Thirty-sixth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Tel. Chev. 1915.

MISS M. M. TYLER, EXCLUSIVE MILLinery. Now located at 209 North Foushee (Arcade Building), where she will be glad to have her customers call and inspect her mid-winter offerings. All $15 Hats at $5.00 to 7.00. All $10.00 Hats at $3.98.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. BARNAbas offers to laymen seeking the Religious Life opportunity of trying out their vocation and of caring for the sick poor. Address Brother Superior, Gibsonia, Pa.

POSITIONS WANTED

AN EXPERIENCED TEACHER DESIRES a position in family. 24 Adams Street, Petersburg, Va.

WANTED—BY REFINED LADY, POSITION as companion. Best references and moderate salary. Address, Box 16, Eastville, Va., Northampton County.

Sacramental Wine

Absolutely Pure Grape Wine

Made expressly for use at the Communion Table

Established 1857

Phone, Write or Call Tel. Cortlandt 3001

H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.

Address Either

138 Fulton Street, New York City or Cellars, Egg Harbor, New Jersey

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Cochran: At The Plains, Va., December 30, 1920, entered into life eternal, in the seventy-fourth year of her age, CHARLOTTE CARR, daughter of Dr. Wililam Carr, of "Bentiver," Albemarle County, and widow of Dr. John Henry Cochran, of The Plains.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

JUST RECEIVED

A new supply of

"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR,"

By Bowie.

Price $1.25 Postpaid.

Southern Churchman,

Richmond, Va.

STORAGE AND TRANSFER.

If we will only have patience with God's leading, He will always show us the way as fast as we are really ready to go on. The trouble with most of us is that we want to see the path through to the end before we take the first step. We want to know before we start how we are to come out. But this is not God's way for us. A man who is traveling in a dark night on a country road does not have the whole way lighted at once by the lantern he carries. It shows him only one step; but as he takes that, the lantern is borne forward, and another step is lighted, and then another and another, until in the end the whole way has been illumined, and he is safe at his destination. God's Word, as a guiding light, is a lamp unto our feet, not a sun flooding a hemisphere. In the darkest night it will always show us the next step; then, when we have taken that, it will show us another; and thus on, till it brings us out into the full, clear sunlight of the coming day. We need to learn well the lesson of patience, if we would have God guide us. Many of us cannot wait for Him, but insist in running on faster than He leads, and then we wonder why there is no light on the path, and we complain, and are discouraged because we stumble so often. If we stay back with the lantern it will be all right with us in our journeying.—H C. Trumbull.

The Christian life must be in its own degree something like the Master's own life, luminous with His hope, and surrounded by a bracing atmosphere which uplifts all who even touch its outer fringe.

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

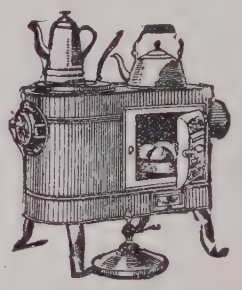
312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING



Mail Orders a Specialty

Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL

311 North Second Street

Phone Randolph 1286-W

COSBY'S AIR-TIGHT BAKER AND HEATER

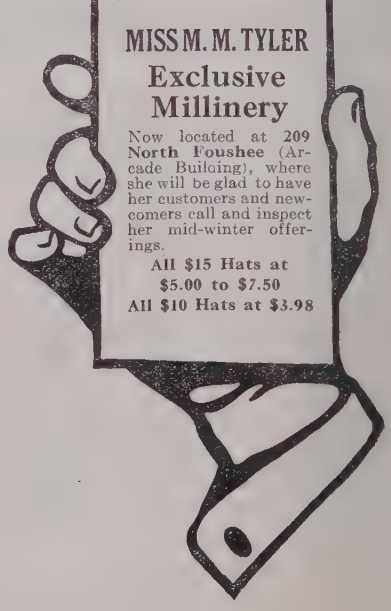
2-In-1 STOVE

Chas. H. Cosby

Plumber and Tinner

2414 Beverly Street

BEVERLEY HEATING



Is the Best for HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL OR FACTORY

Whether New or Old

None too large None too small

R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.

9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

Personal Notes

The Rev. William O. Cone, formerly dean of St. John's Cathedral, Quincy, Ill., has accepted a call extended him to become rector of St. Stephen's Church, Goldsboro, N. C. While in the Diocese of Quincy Mr. Cone was president of the Standing Committee and an examining chaplain.

The Rev. Harvey P. Walter, missionary in Porto Rico, who served during the recent campaign as Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Bethlehem, has accepted election permanently to this office. Mr. Walter has been persuaded to make this decision through the counsel of many persons who believe that his services in the home church will be even more valuable to the missionary field than his residence and service there.

The Rev. Harold Linwood Bowen, rector of St. Paul's Church, Peoria, Ill., has accepted the call to St. Peter's Church, Chicago, and will assume his new duties on February 2.

The Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr., of Lumberton, N. C., has accepted a call to Grace Church, Plymouth, St. David's Parish, Creswell, and St. Andrew's, Columbia, Diocese of East Carolina. Mr. Partrick will reside in Plymouth. He will continue to serve as editor of the Mission Herald, the diocesan paper, and its office of publication will be changed from Lumberton to Plymouth.

The Rev. George W. Lay, D. D., for several years rector of St. Paul's Church, Beaufort, N. C., has accepted a call to take charge of the Mary Pinckney Seaman's Home, Charleston, S. C.

After a vacancy of nearly a year, Christ Church, Susquehanna, Pa., has received as missionary in charge the Rev. Joseph S. Hincks, late of Ashland, Pa., who thus received the compliment of reappointment to the parish

Leake Printing Co.
ENGRAVING, PRINTING, EMBOSSING.
Special attention to out-of-town orders
Samples sent upon request.
615 East Main Street, Richmond, Va

VISITORS TO RICHMOND
WELCOME AT
Young Men's Christian Association
Grace and Seventh Streets

REST—INFORMATION—READING
92—Rooms for Men—92
Furnished, Lighted, Heated
Shower Baths Swimming Pool
Men's Meeting Sunday, 3:30 P. M.

Anti-Saloon League Law Enforcement Conference
Lynchburg, January 20-21
Beginning with a mass meeting Thursday night, January 20th, at First Baptist Church
All evangelical churches and Sunday Schools are entitled to send one or more delegates. Notify
Rev. David Hepburn
Box 605, Richmond
of the names and addresses of the delegates appointed

You Will
be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company
The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

Not Merely
a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.
Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company
Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000
Main and 7th Streets

where he first entered upon his ministry.

The Rev. William H. Colclough, of St. David's, Bangor, Pa., has accepted the call to the neighboring parish of St. Stephen's, Catasauqua. Mr. Colclough's work of two years in his first charge has been so successful as to bring it to the notice of the entire Diocese.

Mrs. Zeigler having become resident executive of Branch No. 2, Y. W. C. A., the address of the Rev. Oscar Woodward Zeigler, Secretary of the Prayer Book League, is changed to the Y. W. C. A. Building, 511 South Clinton Street, Baltimore, Md.

The Rev. John G. Larsen has been appointed Secretary of the District of Spokane, vice Rev. H. H. Mitchell, removed from the District. All matters intended for the Secretary of the District should be addressed to 2303 West First Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

The Rev. George Long, since 1914 rector of St. Paul's Church, Warsaw, Ill., has accepted the call extended on December 11, to become dean of the Cathedral of St. John, Quincy, Ill., succeeding the Rev. W. O. Cone, resigned. Mr. Long has already entered upon his duties as dean.

The Rev. C. E. Coles, Ph. D., has entered upon his duties as rector of Trinity Parish, Pierre, and priest in charge of St. Peter's Chapel, Fort Pierre, S. D.

The Rev. J. Goodrich Litch is priest in charge of St. Gabriel's Church, Titusville, Fla., and should be addressed accordingly.

The Rev. Herbert C. Dana is chaplain at the Metropolitan Hospital, Blackwell's Island, New York City.

Ordinations.

In St. Ambrose Church, Raleigh, N. C., on Sunday, December 19, the Suffragan Bishop of North Carolina advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Ar-

1921

EVERYBODY SAYS BUY BONDS!

TRITE BUT TRUE WHAT BONDS?

Let us suggest three public utility bonds yielding 6¾% to 8%

EARNEST E. SMITH & CO.

Specialists in New England Securities

52 Devonshire Street, Boston

Members New York and Boston Stock Exchanges

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President — E. B. Addison, Vice-President

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer

J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

Music for the Holy Communion In the New Hymnal

The Joint Commission of the General Convention has prepared music for the service of the Holy Eucharist and has added this music to the New Hymnal.

The present edition of the New Hymnal contains this music. Parishes on record with the Church Pension Fund as purchasers of previous editions of the New Musical Hymnal may obtain pamphlet copies of the communion music upon application.

The Eucharistic music has been selected with the same musical judgment that characterized the Joint Commission's preparation of the hymns in

THE NEW HYMNAL

With Both Words and Music

Single copies ..... $1.20 per copy
In lots of 100 or more ..... 1.05 extended payment
In lots of 100 or more ..... 1.00 cash

The $1.05 price in lots of 100 or more is payable 5% with order, 5% upon delivery, and 10% monthly thereafter.

Carriage Charges Extra

The Church Pension Fund

14 Wall Street, - - - - New York, N. Y.

thur Myron Cochran, rector of St. Ambrose Church. The Rev. Julian C. Perry preached. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Walter J. Smith, who with the following clergy assisted in the laying on of hands: The Rev. Messrs. R. Bunn, J. E. G. Small, James E. King, Joseph Hudson and E. H. Goold.

In St. Paul's Church, Graniteville, S. C., on December 18, the Rev. Mortimer W. Glover, who, since his ordination to the diaconate, has had charge of the church's mill work at Graniteville, was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Guerry.

In the Chapel of St. Mary the Virgin, Nashotah House (Wisconsin), on December 23, Mr. Baxter Norris was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Fond du Las. The Rev. E. A. Larrabee, D. D., dean of Nashotah House, presented the candidate and read the Litany. The Bishop as celebrant was assisted by the Rev. Messrs. A. E. MacLaughlin and George W. Parker.

Deaths.

The Rev. Charles Augustus Poole, D. D., professor of ethics at Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn., died at Faribault on December 31, after a lingering illness, which had incapacitated him for active work since last May. The burial was held from the Cathedral in Faribault on January 3, the Bishop of the Diocese and several of the clergy participating.

A Prayer.

O gracious Lord, look down in mercy upon this Church at this time. Provide it with faithful laborers, such as shall have a true compassion for the souls committed to their care, and a knowledge and zeal answerable to the account they are to give. Grant that we may all preach "the truth as it is in Jesus," and that knowledge and that learning which is after godliness. Give a blessing to our labors, that we may see the fruits of them in the repentance and conversion of ourselves and of all sinners that hear us. Make us truly sensible, that when we labor for our flock, we labor for ourselves, and for Thy glory. And pardon us, O gracious God, whereinsoever we have been wanting in any part of our duty. Awaken, and touch all our hearts most powerfully from above, that we may not forget our ordination vows. And for Jesus Christ's sake, grant that we may not be answerable for the sins, and the dreadful mischiefs that may follow, if not hindered by Thy grace. Amen.

The conversion of souls is Thine, O Lord, and not ours; prosper Thou Thine own work. It is not in us to save souls. Let us not sacrifice to our own net, but use the means and ascribe all the glory to God; we of ourselves have nothing whereof to glory.—Bishop Thomas Wilson.

I believe that wherever guidance is honestly and simply sought, it is certainly given. As to our discernment of it, I believe it depends upon the measure in which we are walking in the light.—A. L. Newton.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausealess colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calomel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Druggists sell Calotabs only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

R. Geissler, Inc.
56 West Eighth Street, New York
Memorials
FOR THE CHURCH
Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

Cuticura Soap
—Is Ideal for—
The Complexion
Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V Malden, Mass.

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.
Office: 1217 East Cary Street
Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd
Richmond, Va.

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend
PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN
Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.
With an Introduction by
THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,
Richmond, Va.

50 Eggs a Day

Yes—fifty a day. How? Read the letter below.

"'More Eggs' Tonic is a Godsend," writes Mrs. Myrtle Ice, of Boston, Ky. She adds, "I was only getting 12 eggs a day and now I get 50." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs", the wonderful egg producer, and you will be amazed and delighted with results.

3 $1.00 Packages FREE

If you wish to try this great profit maker, simply write a post card or letter to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, and ask for his special $2.00 offer, three $1.00 packages Free. Don't send any money. Mr. Reefer will send you five $1.00 packages of "More Eggs." You pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the price of just two packages, the three extra packages being free. The Million Dollar Merchants Bank of Kansas City, Mo., guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your $2.00 will be returned at any time within 30 days—on request. No risk to you. Write today for this special free offer.

Poultry Raisers Everywhere Tell Wonderful Results of "More Eggs"

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor

I can't express in words how much I have been benefited by "More Eggs." I have paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and that is not all—I paid my pastor his dues. I sold 42½ dozen eggs last week, set 4 dozen, ate some, and had 1½ dozen left.
MRS. LENA McBROON. Woodbury, Tenn.

1200 Eggs from 29 Hens

The "More Eggs" Tonic did wonders for me. I had 29 hens when I got the tonic and was getting five or six eggs a day. April 1st I had over 1200 eggs. I never saw the equal.
EDW. MEKKER, Pontiac, Mich.

160 Hens—1500 Eggs

I have fed two boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and I think they have broken the egg record. I have 160 White Leghorns and in exactly 21 days I got 125 dozen eggs.
MRS. H. M. PATTON, Waverly, Mo.

Send No Money!

Don't send any money; just fill in and mail coupon. You will be sent at once, five $1.00 packages of "MORE EGGS." Pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the three extra packages being FREE. Don't wait—take advantage of this free offer TODAY! Reap the BIG profits "MORE EGGS" will make for you. Have plenty of eggs to sell when the price is highest. Send TODAY—NOW!

3 $1.00 Pkgs. Free

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 9531 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Reefer:—I accept your offer. Send me the five $1.00 packages of Reefer's "More Eggs" for which I agree to pay the postman $2.00 when he brings me the five packages, the three extra packages being free. You agree to refund me $2.00 at any time within 30 days, if all five of these packages do not prove satisfactory in every way.

Name.....

Address.....

You may send $2.00 cash with this coupon if you prefer

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

The Evangelical Education Society
Of the Protestant Episcopal Church

Office: The Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia

AIDS STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY AND DISTRIBUTES EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

President: WILLIAM S. HARVEY, ESQ.

Active Vice-President: The Rt. Rev. THOMAS J. GARLAND, D. D.

General Counsel	Treasurer	General Secretary
HAROLD GOODWIN, Esq.	ALFRED LEE, Esq.	Rev. S. LORD GILBERSON, M. A.

FORM OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to "THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANTEPISCOPAL CHURCH," incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the first Monday in November, one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-nine, ———— dollars, or ———— real estate, to be used for the general purpose of the Society.

What Do You Expect When You Put Money In The Bank?

Absolute Protection and Safety, Don't You?

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, with capital, surplus and profits of two million dollars, offers absolute protection and safety to its customers.

With more money in this country than ever before you cannot afford to keep your dollars idle.

Put them in this strong National Bank, where they will earn money for you, keep the wheels turning, and help bring prosperity to the people.

American National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

N. B.—You can send your deposits by registered letter, money order or check. The records of this Bank prove that you run no risk in banking by mail.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.

Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage

Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 843

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 15, 1921. No. 3

The Goal and the Way

The future lies
With those whose eyes
Are wide to the necessities,
And wider still
With fervent will
To all the possibilities.

Times big with fate
Our wills await
If we be ripe to occupy;
If we be bold
To seize and hold
This new-born soul of liberty.

And every man
Not only can,
But must the great occasion seize.
Never again
Will he attain
Such wondrous opportunities.

Be strong! Be true!
Claim your soul's due!
Let no man rob you of the prize!
The goal is near,
The way is clear,
Who falters now shames God and dies.

—John Oxenham.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-second year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1920. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Girls, Under the Auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia
Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Music and Art. Intermediate and Primary. Session begins September 22, 1920. For particulars, address

MISS EMMA S. YERBY, Principal

That ever adorable marvel of Providence is that in the spiritual creation God does not accomplish His will by His power, but through the wills of us His children.—Thom.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Though the beginning is more than half, yet the end is more than all."

God can use a weak man, but cannot find a place for a lazy one.

The highest earthly wisdom worships at the feet of the heavenly Babe.

Compassion is the dominant feeling of the man Christ Jesus.—Joseph Parker.

No star appeared to the high priests and Herod. Only the pure in heart can see God.

After all, it is better to have our paradise at the end of life than at the beginning of it.

The Son died, not because the Father was unwilling, but unable to save them otherwise.—W. S. Dewstoe.

No matter what your pride may claim, you are serving some kind of a master.

"Men might be better if we better deemed
Of them. The worst way to improve the world
Is to condemn it. Men may overget—Delusion—not despair."

We dote upon this world as if it were never to have an end, and neglect the next as if it were never to have a beginning.—Fenelon.

Little is much if God is in it,
Man's busiest day not worth God's minute.
Much is little everywhere
If God the labor does not share.
So work with God, and nothing's lost;
Who waits on Him does best and most.

As the Lord's mercies are new every morning, so those to whom they come have a perpetual freshness of life. Their youth is renewed.—Anna Warner.

Salt loses its savor by lack of contact. Our religion expresses itself best when it seeks contact both with God and our fellowmen.—W. W. Bustard.

Eternity is crying out to you louder and louder as you near its brink. Rise, be going. Count your resources! learn what you are not fit for, and give up wishing for it; learn what you can do, and do it with the energy of a man.

Ruskin says, "We are not sent into this world to do anything into which we cannot put our hearts." God's true service is never achieved through a dull, contented routine, which knows nothing of enthusiasm and feels no inspiration. That service demands that the whole nature shall be brought into unity of action—heart, mind, will and all consenting to the same end. There is a vast deal that calls itself service which is not the outflow of the heart; much that calls itself sacrifice that lacks fire. Let us not rest in less than the best gift to God, even though for the time we be spiritually too poor to give more than the "pair of turtle doves or the two young pigeons."—S. S. Times.

Said a heathen to a missionary: "There must be something in your religion which makes you come all the way out here to tell us of it. I am sure I would not go so far to tell you of mine."

Christian faith is a grand cathedral with dimly pictured windows. Standing without, you see no glory nor can possibly imagine any; standing within, every ray of light reveals a harmony of unspeakable splendors.—Hawthorne.

The philosopher being asked in his old age why he did not give over his practice and take his ease, answered, "When a man is to run a race of forty furlongs, would you have him sit down at the nine-and-thirtieth, and so lose the prize? We do not keep a good fire all day, and let it go out in the evening when it is colder; but then rather lay on more fuel, that we may go warm to bed."

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLES TOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes. Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

VIRGINIA, Chatham, Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. TUCKER, D. D., President; REV. C. O. PRUDEN, D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B. Sweet Briar, A. M. Columbia, Prin.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 15, 1921. No. 3

SHALL CHRISTIANS BE SILENT?

Civilization is faced with a question today which may determine whether it is to survive or perish. In Europe and the East there are nations which are already slipping upon the brink of disintegration. The havoc of war has wasted their lands, killed tens of thousands of their toilers, enfeebled those that remain, wrecked their economic system, and handed whole provinces over to hunger, pestilence and a dreadful, disillusioned hopelessness. We in America find it hard to appreciate these things, but they are so. If the world should be called upon to pass through another war like the last one, the progress which mankind has made through the slow centuries might be extinguished in an anarchy of which the chaos in Russia gives some foreshadowing.

With these facts before us, America confronts at the same time the prospect of an enormous program for "national defence" which will fasten upon the backs of taxpayers an unprecedented burden, and commit this country to the old policy of competing armaments which is as well calculated as any wile of the devil well could be to provoke future wars. A single modern battleship of the latest type costs more than Mr. Hoover is asking for the entire work of preserving the lives of three and a half million starving children in Europe this winter. The contrast between the pouring out of money for destruction and the unsatisfied need of it for life is nothing short of ghastly.

As General Pershing has recently said, "The world does not seem to learn from experience. It would appear that the lessons of the past six years should be enough to convince everybody of the danger of nations striding up and down the earth armed to the teeth. But no one nation can reduce armaments unless all do.

"Ours is not an aggressive nation. We want no territory, and have no designs on other people. If other nations have the same attitude, it seems unreasonable not to believe that all would be willing to prove it by consenting to limit armaments. Unless some such move be made, we may well ask ourselves whether civilization does not reach a point where it begins to destroy itself, and whether we are thus doomed to go headlong down through destructive war to darkness and barbarism."

There is a good chance that the United States may call a conference of some of the great nations to discuss the limitation of armaments. If we were in the League of Nations, we might have been about this already. It is time that we did something, and did it with conviction. A great secular paper, the New York World, has taken up the cause of disarmament, and is pressing it with power. Every Christian man and woman should help to make plain to the authorities at Washington that we are looking for results.

A LAYMEN'S APPEAL FOR PRAYER.

A group of laymen, representing many Christian bodies and widely-separated parts of the country, have drawn up and circulated "A New Year Appeal by Laymen for Prayer." Its spiritual earnestness and its positive emphasis upon the spiritual resources from which the Church must draw in this day when she is "confronting civilization's crisis" make the letter one of marked significance. Among its signers are Roger W. Babson, the eminent statistician; John Willis Baer, of California; Edward H. Bonsall, the national president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Dr. Howard A. Kelley, of Baltimore; S. D. Gordon, of New York; James M. Speers, of New Jersey, and William T. Ellis, of Philadelphia.

Thus the letter runs:

These are troubled times. Every thoughtful person faces the New Year with deep concern. The world outlook is deemed gravest by those who best know international conditions. Our own favored America fronts many-sided problems that will tax our every resource. We are surely in the midst of days of destiny.

In the realm of individual life the times are testing our soul-stuff. Business men are carrying burdens that fairly break hearts. Many working men and their families are already experiencing the bitter pinch of real want. The weight of the world's woe is pressing heavily upon us all. Human spirits everywhere are hungry for comfort and guidance

What shall we do about it all? For do something we must: the hour is too critical for drifting.

The laymen who sign and issue this paper so do because of a deep conviction that only by spiritual forces may our civilization be saved from the unprecedented perils that beset it. The only way out is the way up.

Holding no ecclesiastical positions, and representing, quite unofficially, various branches of the Christian Church, we take this unusual step of appealing directly, through the public press, to men and women of all faiths, who believe in an Omnipotent God and in the power of prayer, to join us in a common and concerted and continuous exercise of intercession, to the end that humanity everywhere, torn as it is by dissension, and suffering many kinds of ill effects of the world war, may turn to the patient Father in heaven for new motives and guidance and succor.

Our world will never get right with itself until it gets right with God. Only spiritual remedies can cure the present ills of mankind.

Therefore we call upon all who believe that the living God hears and answers prayer to offer daily petitions in behalf of our troubled world—with all its international strife and jealousies and self-seeking; with its industrial unrest, its social unrest and its political unrest—that the Lord Almighty may suffuse the hearts of all people everywhere with a consuming desire to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness. Then all other things needful may be added unto us, as promised by our Lord Jesus Christ.

We crave for ourselves and for our time a revival of the sense of the reality of God, and of our dependence upon Him, and of a spirit of loyalty to Him.

Because of the extraordinary part he must take in the affairs of our nation and of the world at this most difficult time, we also ask that daily prayer be made for the President-elect of the United States, that he may be illumined and sustained for his trying tasks by the very power of the Highest. * * *

So we entreat all spiritually-minded persons, in whatever ways and at whatever times individual judgment may suggest, to engage, privately or publicly, in daily prayer that the very gravity of present world conditions may drive us all to the eternal God, Who is our refuge, and Who is the only Light in our darkness. In Him we shall find peace and good will, and power for the task of remaking the world.

"All things, whatever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."

"THE LIVING WATERS."

We wish that everybody who is thinking about prayer, and wondering about its possibilities, could read the little book by Archdeacon F. W. Neve, recently published, called "The Church of the Living Waters." It is the beautiful, authentic story of how one stream of prayer after another, rising often in obscure places, flowed together into rivers of blessing which refreshed and redeemed thirsty lands.

And, as Archdeacon Neve has written, "If with child-like faith and an humble reaching forth to open up the stores of the divine energy for the good of the world, by the faithful members of the Church throughout the land, the Living Waters were liberated in full volume, the words of the old Hebrew prophet would be fulfilled, and the 'knowledge of the Lord would cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.' "

BISHOP ISRAEL.

The news of the sudden death of Bishop Rogers Israel, of the Diocese of Erie, is a shock and a blow to the whole Church.

Men of the energy, breadth and consecration of the late Bishop can ill be spared by the Church today.

In another month he would have completed a decade in the service of his Diocese as its Bishop, where he was greatly beloved for his devotion to the Master's cause and his simple, unaffected manners.

After the death of his wife a few years ago he was so grief-stricken that he seemed on the verge of a nervous breakdown, and was ordered to take a complete rest and change.

He took the change, but not the rest, for he immediately volunteered as a Red Cross chaplain for service in France, where he remained on active duty for over a year, returning with his health apparently entirely restored.

The news of his death, coming as it does so soon after that of the loss of Bishop Burch, makes a double gap in the ranks of our bishops who represented broad churchmanship of the type which stood for progress in the Church. and worthy successors to these two beloved men will be hard to find.

The Brotherhood, and Recruiting For the Ministry

It is generally conceded that there is a great dearth of candidates for the ministry as compared with the needs of the Church. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has always responded loyally to the various calls of the Church for any special service on the part of the laity. And the situation which the Church faces as regards her ministry is one in which the laity are, or should be, even more interested than the bishops and clergy, for it affects them first and it depends in large measure upon them for its solution.

As a contribution to the general effort to arouse interest in this subject, the Brotherhood now purposes, through its various diocesan and local assemblies, to organize sixty or more meetings for men and older boys to be held on the afternoon of Washington's Birthday of this year—or, if necessary, in the evening of that day; and the directors of chapters, as well as other Churchmen, in localities where there are no assemblies, are invited to join in the plan. It is purposed to present at these meetings through able speakers a definite and ringing call to the ministry.

An endeavor will be made to have large numbers of young men attend these meetings. It is planned to distribute among them cards to be signed by those having special interest in the matter, the names and addresses and ages of interested young men thus signing the cards to be sent to the Department of Religious Education and to the Committee on Recruiting Men for the Ministry, in order that further interest may be developed. The Brotherhood desires to place itself in this plan readily at the disposal of the bishops of the various dioceses and to cooperate cordially with the clergy and laity both of the Brotherhood and otherwise.

The details of the meetings will be left largely to the committee in charge at each centre; but they should include a direct presentation of the call to the ministry by a special preacher; intercessory prayer on behalf of the needs of the ministry, that suitable candidates may present themselves; and also a conference (whose chairman shall be a clergyman) where full discussion may take place.

Washington's Birthday falls in the week immediately following the Lenten Ember Days, and, therefore, in addition to the patriotic note which will properly be sounded, there should be especially, where possible, this clarion call to the young men of the Church.

It is the wish of the Brotherhood that as an organization it may be as useful as possible in this plan; but it is also hoped that the general interest developed will greatly overflow the membership of the Brotherhood and take possession of the men of the Church generally.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been one of the best agencies within the Church for supplying recruits for the ministry, and this corporate effort is put forth with the prayer that the blessing of God may rest upon it, and that through it the Church may be helped in these days of its need to replenish the ranks of its priesthood.

PLAYING THE GAME.

There are certain things no self-respecting man can do, because they are not compatible with his ideals of clean sportsmanship.

Sportsmanship is by no means a matter of the athletic field merely.

The presence of that quality makes, and its absence mars, the performance of men and women in every sphere of human activity.

A wife does not play the game if she does not help her husband to bring true a dream whose accomplishment is for the lasting good of others. She is not playing the game if she does aught to dishearten or demoralize him in the midst of a great task.

A man is not playing the game if he fails to keep faith with a woman's trust and hope and prayer. He is the foe of society if he is the foe to her spiritual sensibilities, which are finer and more finely attuned than his own.

"For their sakes I sanctify myself." Those words are among the biggest in the book that utters them.

The reason a man cannot go on the rampage to suit his own sweet will is that there are always others to be thought about. There are others whom his weaknesses will weaken, because they lean upon his strength.

There are millions not merely in the valley of decision, but in the valley of dependence. He may be a hero, though he knows it not, and when he topples and falls he brings calamity and grief to some unknown to him.

Therefore a man girds himself to report for duty when he does not feel able. A driving power within him refuses to let him quit. He knows that he is badly needed, and he must obey the call.

Never was morale more necessary or teamwork so important. Individualism and the solo performance, however brilliant, cannot carry the social burden that must rest on the shoulders of an army headed the same way under one flag. In the crisis we cannot afford to have broken ranks and insubordination, or even sullenness of spirit.

Wherever there is a group or even a pair of human beings there must be the general deference, the mutual sacrifice. Where there is love there will be delight in service. He who has lived for his own selfish self has never tasted the supreme pleasure that giving and doing for somebody else are sure to bring.

We are not playing the game while we do as we please. We are not playing the game while we repudiate our orders. The large man submits to discipline most easily and speedily. It is the small, mean fellow who is always boasting of his independence and his importance.—E. J. Haughton.

Christ's people pass from place to place, o'er ways of toil and sorrow, and reach at last their resting-place, where they await the morrow. God, when their journey's o'er, receives them evermore; the seed-corn in the furrow thrown is with the hope of harvest sown.—Translated from Karl Gerok.

The ideal giver, according to the Word of God, pays tithes and gives freewill offerings.

THE STORY OF AN HEROIC FAILURE AND OTHER BOOK REVIEWS.

Gallipoli Diary. By General Sir Ian Hamilton, G. C. B. II Volumes. George H. Doran Company. Price $10.

Most publishers and book sellers say at this present moment that war books are a drug on the market. The reading public has turned away with a not unnatural reaction from all the details of battles and trench-warfare to which it gave such tense and breathless attention during the years of the war itself. But there are some books so extraordinary in their quality that they rise above all ordinary conditions, and such a book is this diary of General Ian Hamilton, commander-in-chief of the expedition to Gallipoli.

In the first place, it is an extraordinary thing that in the midst of the pressure of his military responsibilities a commander could have found the time to set down his impressions from day to day with such illuminating fullness as marks this diary. And few would have the ability to express what they wrote with the vividness and the spontaneous literary power which belonged to General Hamilton. Here, therefore, is a record of great events, worthily told by one who saw all their meaning from the centre of their living stage.

Furthermore, the peculiar character of the Gallipoli campaign gives it an abiding interest which few other phases of the great war possess in equal degree. As time has passed, the terrible import of the fates which hung there in the balance is of course less immediate than it was before the outcome of the war was assured. But the essential tragedy of the story remains. The great drama of the conflicting motives of human souls, the interplay of hope and of disaster, the culminating moments of mighty possibilities snatched tragically into failure, these make the story of the assault at Gallipoli a human record of imperishable power.

As one reads Sir Ian Hamilton's story, he is impressed by the feeling that a Nemesis followed him from the beginning. More than once the attempt to capture the peninsula and open the way to Constantinople stood upon the very threshold of success More than once the gates opened and men who had struggled through incredible blood and hardship saw the golden vista of victory ahead. But each time the one final element of strength needed to seize the prize was lacking. Reinforcements came, but come too late. Ammunition came, but came too late. Always the power of the allied thrust was just an atom short of what was needed to break the barrier of the Turkish resistance and press through to a triumph that not only would have affected the whole course of the war, which, because of the failure at Gallipoli, was to prove so long and weary; but might have changed the whole subsequent history of Russia and the nearer East.

General Hamilton's diary is full of the most illuminating comments on great personalities with whom he came in contact. Fascinating particularly is the picture which grows from the strokes of his various journal entries of Lord Kitchener—a picture drawn with love, yet shadowed also with disappointment. It seemed to General Hamilton that in this matter Kitchener fell short of his own greatness, and never pressed the significance of the Dardanelles' campaign to a degree that fitted Kitchener's real consciousness of its vital possibilities. Most interesting, too, is the flash of insight by which he reveals the motive that made France fail to see what the Gallipoli campaign might mean. "Here," he wrote, "we have literally in our grasp a clear-cut gift offered us by the gods. The impossible part, the landing, is done. All that remains is so many fresh men and so many thousand shells. The result is not problematical, but mathematical. Napoleon is the only man who has waged a world war, in the world as we know it today. Napoleon said—I think it was on his famous raft—'Who holds Constantinople is master of the world.' And there it lies at the mercy of the Briton—could he only convince Joffre that the shortest cut to freeing his country from the German lies through the Dardanelles.

"A couple of miles won by us here gives England wheat and Russia rifles; give us the whip hand in the Balkans plus security in a couple of continents. A couple of miles lost by us here leaves the German with a strengthened grip upon all the real world objectives for which he went to war: it leaves us with a ruined prestige in Asia. But what is all that to Joffre, to whom, as a good Frenchman, the Balkans; the bracing up of the Russian Army; all the Odessa corn; Asia and Africa thrown in, do not count against one department of la Patrie.

"Once more our game is to defend in the West until the attack in the East has borne economic fruit in the shape of ships and corn: political fruit in the sentiment of the Balkans: military fruit in the fillip given to the whole force of the Entente by actual tactical contact between the British soldiers and the rank and file of the Ruskies. The collapse of the Central Powers, eclipsed in full view of all Asia and Africa by the smoke from the funnels of the British fleet at anchor in the Golden Horn, is what we are after here. Even if French and Joffre do drive the German main hordes back to the Rhine, the scope of their scoop would be far less than ours, for we, by getting to Constantinople, can starve those main armies stiff."

The journal reviews the whole history of the Dardanelles campaign from the bombardment by the fleet, through the first launching at the tip of the peninsula, the landing at Anzac Cove, the later landing at Suvla Bay, and the desperate and so nearly successful fighting which followed that last attempt before the ultimate failure. To a reader who approaches the record as it stands, without claiming any technical military knowledge, it would appear that Sir Ian Hamilton was right in his generalship, in his grasp of the whole situation, and in his employment of such resources as were given into his hands. But whether or not this be true, his journal is the story by a high-hearted and patriotic man, writing with unusual literary charm one of the great chapters in the history of human valor and endurance.

A Jewish View of Jesus. By H. G. Enelow. The Macmillan Company. Price $1.50.

The title of this book will of itself challenge attention. The Master Whom all Christians acknowledge was Himself a Jew. Back of Him were all the traditions of life and worship of the Jewish race. To Christians it is a sad thing that since the first days so small a portion of the Jews have acknowledged Him as Messiah. It is interesting, therefore, to know what the Jews do think of Him.

The book under review is a sincere and worthy attempt by a Jew to express what the Jews feel. It is based upon the frank recognition that Jesus has become "the most popular, the most studied, the most influential figure in the religious history of mankind." It traces in successive chapters the Jewish interest, heritage, environment, characteristics and teachings of Jesus, His contemporaries, the Messianic idea and the relation of the Jews to Jesus' death. The two final chapters deal with "Jesus and Jewish History" and "The Modern Jewish Attitude to Jesus." The author seeks to express why the Jews still do not accept Jesus as Messiah, and why—from his point of view of the non-fulfillment of the great Messianic prophecies—they cannot do so. "Yet, these things apart," he says, "who can compute all that Jesus has meant to humanity? The love He has inspired, the solace He has given, the good He has engendered, the hope and joy He has kindled—all that is unequalled in human history. Among the great and the good that the human race has produced, none can even approach Jesus in universality of appeal and sway. He has become the most fascinating figure in history. In Him is combined what is best and most mysterious and most enchanting in Israel—the eternal people whose child He was."

The Enchanted Garden. By Alexander R. Gordon. George H. Doran Company. Price $1.50.

As the author of this book truly says in his preface, "There is no book in the Bible more fascinating than Genesis. It charms us in our childhood, and it holds its spell to the end. For it is not only full of the enchanted poetry of the East; it is a shining mirror of life in every age and under every sky. As we follow these ancient tales, we seem to be reading the story of our own souls."

The subject of "The Enchanted Garden," therefore, has a perennial fascination. Dr. Gordon, in his retelling of the stories of Genesis, has treated them with much richness of application and linked them with our modern life. The one unfavorable criticism which might be passed upon the book is that its language does not always seem simple enough to be ideally adapted to the mind of a child.

"With the Soldiers in Palestine and Syria." By the Rev. J. P. Wilson. The Macmillan Company. Four Shillings.

The notes of a British Army chaplain who served for a year and a half with the troops in Egypt, Palestine and Syria. He went through those richly memorable regions with the eyes of a man who follows the "Lord Himself, Whose Presence seems to fill the land and leads you on from place to place, that you may stand where He stood, and look upon the scenes which He looked upon." The book is interesting with its descriptions of the present day aspect of multitudes of places familiar to us from the Bible story, especially when against the background of the land's antiquity one follows the pageant of a modern war. The writer has not great literary gift, and his descriptions lack the distinction of those, for example, in such a book as Sir Ian Hamilton's journal, reviewed in this same column. But he had a keen perception for the objects and scenes through which he passed, and what he writes will give to the reader the material out of wich to form his own mental pictures of the Holy Land.

"Faith, Works and Grace." By the Bishop of Bloemfontein. The Macmillan Company. Three Shillings.

This small book, like the one reviewed preceding it, is one of the publications of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It is made up of addresses on the seven words from the cross, with a foreword on meditation; and is sincere and helpful. B.

Pamphlets.

The Argument From Design. By the Rev. Vernon F. Storr, Canon of Winchester. Longmans, Green & Co. 80 cents. One of the Liverpool Diocesan Board of Divinity publications, which are usually excellent and up-to-date. This is restatement of the Argument From Design in the light of modern science, and is well done.

How the Light Came. A Missionary Play. By Rev. F. D. Graves. 30 cents.

Plays and Recitations for the Juniors. Part Two. 25 cents.

Little Witnesses for God. Missionary Stories. 10 cents. Published by the Church Missions Publishing Co, 211 State Street, Hartford, Conn.

Christian Healing. An Order of Service for Prayer and Spiritual Healing. Compiled by a committee of clergymen and authorized for use in the Diocese of Minnesota. 15 cents.

Is Any Sick Among You? A Manual of Counsel, Instruction and Preparation for Receiving the Ministry of Healing, etc. By Rev. P. Gavan Duffy, Priest-Superior S. D. C. American Church Publishing Co. 50 cents.

A List of Books Recommended for Sunday-school and Parish Libraries. By the Cambridge Library Association, Cambridge, Mass.

Missionary Progress

Dr. Claude M. Lee, the physician in charge of St. Andrew's Hospital, Wusih, China, has an encouraging report to make about present conditions and future outlook:

"We have got the hospital organization in better condition than ever before, and have a nursing school, with regular classes, going. We are training nurses for our own use only, yet they are getting a course of instruction which will enable them to take the China Nurses' Association examinations. The laboratory is in good shape, and we do considerable work for the Chinese doctors in town, who practice foreign medicine. Our in-patients this year will not show much of an increase, because we have not the room to take in more; but we are doing twice as much surgery this year than in any previous year, and are finding it much easier to get patients to consent to urgent abdominal operations. There is a healthy growth of the work, which is most encouraging. This, with the rapid growth of the city in population and industrial importance, seems t ous to justify a considerable expansion of the work."

St. Andrew's is the only foreign hospital in a city of fully 300,000 people. Even with that condition, Wusih is widely recognized as one of the most progressive cities in Central China. Dr. Lee has as his assistant Dr. Walter H. J. Pott, the son of Dr. Pott, of St. John's University. Both physicians are eager for the Church at home to provide the funds that will make a decided enlargement of the hospital work possible.

Bishop Graves and the staff of medical missionaries in Shanghai are gradually developing important plans for the amalgamation of St. Luke's Hospital for men and St. Elizabeth's Hospital for women. It is their hope that in the near future it may be possible to build one large hospital serving both men and women. Probably not less than $1,000,000 will be needed eventually to carry out the plan in full. An initial gift of $10,000 has just been made by an American layman.

This was a note dated "Christmas Eve, 1920." It read:

"I enclose check for a Thank Offering. May it be used for the women's side of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang."

The check was for $1,000. The donor was a woman. No doubt she represents a whole host of friends of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, China, who would gladly have made such a gift had it been practicable.

The evangelistic work in the District of Kyoto in 1920 was more encouraging than ever. Bishop Tucker says early in 1920 "our lay people started a forward movement. They are keeping it up vigorously. Recently we had a second mass meeting in Kyoto, at which there were about one hundred and forty delegates present from the various churches in the eastern part of the Diocese. A great deal of enthusiasm was shown and plans were considered for carrying the work on without interruption. I can already see its effect in larger congregations and increased interest on teh part of Church people. We have had over 100 per cent. more confirmations this year than we had last. This is remarkable when one considers how much there has been in the political and international situation to create obstacles for Christian work."

Nearly fifty years ago our pioneer missionaries in the city of Osaka, Japan, bought a piece of property in a section of the city that has in late years developed very largely along business lines. The location became entirely unsuitable for St. Barnabas' Hospital, long associated with the name of Dr. Henry Laning, our first, and for many years our only, medical missionary in Japan. The propjerty has recently been sold at a greatly advanced price. The amount received for it is larger than the amount originally paid for the site, the amount spent for all buildings the American Church has ever erected in the city of Osaka, and the amount spent in maintaining all of our missionaries who have ever worked in Osaka combined. A new site has been purchased for a hospital, and buildings will be erected in the near future for a comparatively small but thoroughly equipped and well administered institution. Dr. J. W. McSparren, who went out to Japan about three years ago to take charge of the medical work in Osaka, is returning to this country for the purpose of studying the latest developments in hospital construction.

The United States authorities in the Panama Canal Zone have shown their confidence in our Church and the administration of its work in the zone by offering us the use of a splendidly located piece of property in the heart of the city of Ancon, provided the Church erects upon it buildings worth at least $100,000. Ancon immediately adjoins the native city of Panama. It is a great centre of residence for Americans connected with the government and the canal administration. At the present time our services are held in a small frame chapel wholly inadequate to minister to the large population. The National Council has authorized Bishop Morris to accept the government's offer. It has done this in the confidence that the people of the Church will put into Bishop Morris' hands the amount needed to meet the government's conditions. General William C. Gorgas, former surgeon-general of the United States Army, and the man who had a large share in making the building of the canal possible through his practical abolition of yellow fever, was a devoted Churchman. During his residence in the zone, he was senior warden and lay reader of our little St. Luke's Church.

At the January meeting of the Department of Missions, preliminary consideration was given to the plans for the observance of the Centennial of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society in the autumn of this year. These plans include the publication of a Centennial History, the production of a historical moving picture film, the preparation of a pageant and a centennial celebration in every parish and mission, probably on Sunday, October 30, or on some other date before the end of 1921. For such parish meetings it is proposed to provide a form of service and data for a historical address. In order that the commemoration may be accompanied by some permanent achievement, it is proposed to try to enroll at least one hundred new missionaries for work at home and abroad before the end of 1922. It is likely also that an endeavor will be made to secure the funds necessary to complete a number of important building enterprises in the home and foreign fields with the understanding that each building as completed will contain a tablet, citing the fact that it was erected as a part of the celebration of the Centennial of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society. The department approved of the tentative plans as proposed and adopted a recommendation requesting the Council to make adequate appropriation to cover the necessary expenses.

WHERE ARE THE MEN FOR THE MINISTRY?

From the Commission on Recruiting, Training and Admitting Men to the Ministry there went out on January 11 to all the Bishops of the Church a letter which demands the attention of lovers of the Church and all who care for her leadership. The Commission has as its chairman Dean Fosbroke, of the General Seminary, New York, and one of its moving spirits is the widely known and honored rector of Holy Trinity Church, New York, Rev. Harry P. Nichols, D. D. The letter shows the immediate need for an awakening on the Church's part in the matter of furnishing more candidates for the ministry. Here it is:

We desire to report to you that the Commission on the Ministry has been giving special attention to the obtaining of a supply of suitable men for the ministry. Long tables of statistics, the fruit of much survey and study for this Commission by one of its members, have uncovered, among other things, the following significant facts:

1. The ratio of deacons ordained to communicants shows our productivity.

In 1826 this ratio was 1:234.
In 1856 this ratio was 1:470.
In 1886 this ratio was 1:1066.
In 1916 this ratio was 1:2035.

Put in simple language, this means that a hundred years ago every 234 communicants, on an average, produced one man for the ministry in every three years of the Church's life. In 1916 (before the effects of the war were felt), it took nine times as many communicants to furnish the one man.

2. Ordinations to the diaconate.

A study of ordinations by periods of fifteen years—periods long enough to cancel insignificant fluctuations and to reveal the general trend—shows these facts. Each such period from 1812 to 1901 shows without exception marked gain over its predecessor: the average gain for each period being no less than 74 per cent. The period, 1902-1916, shows for the first time a decrease: the number of ordinations recorded being less, by 6 6-10 per cent., than in the previous fifteen years. This, again, was before the effects of the war became marked.

3. We have inquired as to the enrollment of students in all the (Protestant) seminaries of the country—comparing the number listed for 1920-21 with that listed for the last normal year before the war, viz., 1915-16. The returns are still somewhat incomplete and may require quite slight modification hereafter: but the general results are likely to stand. The enrollment in all seminaries, excluding our own, shows a decrease of 3 per cent. Our seminaries report a decrease of over 32 per cent. The only other bodies which show a situation comparable with ours are the Presbyterians, with an apparent decrease of over 19 per cent., and the Congregationalists, who are in a worse case than ourselves, with a decrease of over 36 per cent.

The situations here revealed are bound to lead to a serious set-back in the Church's fulfillment of her mission to this nation and to humanity as a whole. Since April of A. D. 1920 this Commission, and especially its Recruiting Committee, has been at work upon a study of conditions, causes and cures. It is already clear that for long years a decreasing number of men have been offering themselves for the ministry, and that at present this condition exists among all the evangelical Christian bodies, especially the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists and ourselves. The causes are many. The best cures are not yet certain.

But may we earnestly ask you, at your next Diocesan Convention or earlier, to bring before your clergy and representative laity the grave lack of an adequate supply of candidates, and the duty of the clergy in particular to recruit men for the service of God and their fellowmen in the sacred ministry. And would you invite every minister in your Diocese to call together in conference early this Lent his congregation, and lay before them the facts as to the number of men they have provided for Holy Orders, and for the maintenance of the worship and work of the Church? Would you not advise your clergy at these conferences to ask their people the reasons why their sons do not offer themselves, and to consider and develop plans to enlist suitable young men from their own membership to dedicate themselves to this high service of God and man? Would you not also urge upon your clergy the wisdom and helpfulness, as has been found in several of our parishes, of getting into personal touch privately with parents this Lent, and securing their co-operation in interesting their own sons in the work of the ministry? And at the same time personal interviews with suitable young men, together with prayer, where opportunity opens, in order to lead them on to Holy Orders, would be highly desirable.

Likewise we would venture to ask that you, and every Bishop in the Church, call upon every minister in your Diocese to summon his people to pray every day this Lenten season that young men apt and meet in their congregation and from all over the land may offer themselves for the ministry. We would recommend the following prayer to be used, if you approve it, in private and family devotions, and in the Lenten services of the Church. By united prayer and by united endeavor we can secure God's own help for His Church in her need.

"Heavenly Father, Lord of the harvest, have respect, we beseech Thee, to our prayers, and send forth laborers into Thine harvest. Fit and prepare them by Thy grace for the work of their ministry, and grant that both by their life and doctrine they may show forth Thy glory, and set forward the salvation of all men, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

The Commission desires to say that it is actively engaged in the study of the whole question, and later on hopes to mature further and extensive plans for the effective recruiting of men for the ministry. The Commission would welcome suggestions and help from every quarter.

(Signed)
HARRY P. NICHOLS,
HUGHELL E. W. FOSBROKE,
GEORGE G. BARTLETT,
WILLIAM L. DeVRIES,
FREDERICK F. KRAMER,
WILLIAM P. LADD,
CHARLES H. YOUNG,

(On behalf of the Commission on Recruiting, Training and Admitting Men to the Ministry.)

TRUST HIM THROUGH THE DARKNESS AND SILENCE.

The fact of the existence of evil is the mystery of mysteries. Here is the thought which baffles thought; here is, above all other spheres of exercise, "the patience of God's saints." It is impossible to argue against this contradiction. It is impossible to explain, even to the satisfaction of the explained, why evil must exist, why evil must live and work, why evil must be mighty and victorious, if God be power and if God be love. Impossible, I say, to explain these things. Not impossible—blessed be His holy name—to trust Him through the darkness and the silence, to say with the patriarch, "He is able to raise up even from the dead"; to say with Him once again, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Enough, if we are assured that what we see not, He sees, and that which we know but in part, He knows perfectly and from end to end. The man who takes God Himself into his heart by faith knows Him as his God, and finds in Him, as revealed in Christ, present comfort and present strength, can wait for Him, though He tarry. "Times of refreshing," "times of restitution," are promised in His Word. This complicated, this perplexed, this chaotic world—He is able to raise it up even from the dead. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."—C. J. Vaughan.

UNTO OTHERS.

How many there are who really desire to help, but who seldom carry their good impulses into action! The moment when one could aid a worthy charity, the chance to intercede in behalf of one seeking employment, the opportunity to say a word that will carry a cause over the top and to success, the crisis in another's life when a voicing of brotherly sympathy that one does have would restrain him from sin or encourage him to rise above calamity—all these chances for personal service gone because we are not—to use a Westerner's expression—"quick enough on the trigger."

Then again, we do not always keep our promises. If you told that young man looking for work that you would help him, then dread the day of his return with your part unfulfilled. If you promised a check for that charity or worthy cause, be sure to send it when promised. If you have enccuraged a sin-laden brother or a despondent down-and out, remember that God and he expect you to follow your good wishes with such practical assistance as you can give.

We have what we call impulses. They are, and just in proportion as we possess the Holy Spirit in our hearts are we able to trust to our impulses. We generally know; the Holy Spirit tells us. He gives us judgment, discernment. We know we should do it, whatever it is; but sometimes we procrastinate, the pre-occupation of other things comes in, and suddenly we are aware that "we have left undone those things which we ought to have done."

The world is full of mere encouragers—those who preach but will not help. In a degree they are hypocrites. What the world needs are more Good Samaritans—more self-deniers.

Also let us go the second mile. A bank president cut a noon hour in two and, going personally with a man, got his sick wife in the hospital. He knew a letter would be uncertain as to the result. A former President of the United States passed an evening with a young man whom he chanced to overhear scoff at religion. He knew why his Lord had caused him to overhear, and he obeyed the impulse. A man of wealth who signs many checks for charities visits those institutions or individuals personally, sometimes again and again.

Yes, where real treasure is, there is the heart also.—St. Andrew's Cross.

Logicians may reason about abstractions, but the great mass of mankind never feel an interest in them. They must have images. God, the uncreated, the incomprehensible, the invisible, attracted few worshippers; a philosopher might adore so noble a conception, but the crowd turned away in disgust from words which presented no image to their minds. It was before Deity, embodied in a human form, walking among men, partaking of their infirmities, leaning on their bosoms, weeping over their graves, slumbering in the manger, bleeding on the cross, that the prejudices of the synagogue, and the doubts of the academy, and the pride of the portico, and the forces of the lictors, and the swords of thirty legions were humbled in the dust.—Macaulay.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

SIMPLER TITLES.

Mr. Editor: At the last meeting of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, the following resolution was passed, and for fear that it might otherwise be lost in some pigeon hole, I am taking this means of calling it to the attention of your readers.

"Inasmuch as there exists a widespread and growing feeling in the Church that the present titles of its newly created official bodies, viz., 'Presiding Bishop and Council,' 'Diocesan Bishop and Council,' etc., are unnecessarily cumbersome, awkward and inelegant; and inasmuch as such titles are liable shortly to be fixed by usage upon the Church for all time.

Therefore, be it resolved: That the Synod of the Second Province respectfully requests the next General Convention to reconsider the title. 'Presiding Bishop and Council,' especially in view of the probable extension of this form of organization to the provinces, dioceses and parishes, so that there may be a simple, accurate, consistent and easily understood nomenclature throughout the Church.

The province further suggests for the several divisions of the Church the following series of titles as meeting all these requirements, viz.—National Council, Provincial Council, Diocesan Council and Parochial Council.

Be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the secretaries of the various provinces and dioceses with the request for their approval thereof."

The motive prompting this resolution is evident. While names are not of the first importance, they are nevertheless not unimportant, as witness the enormous amount of time and energy spent in discussing the official title of our Church. Surely we all desire to avoid a repetition of that. Our titles should, if possible, describe plainly and briefly the things they denote. This can scarcely be said to be the case with the present lengthy and awkward title of our governing body and still less of its correlatives in the province, diocese and parish. For tautological awkwardness what could be worse than "Diocesan Bishop and Council"? Moreover, when we speak, as we must, of a "member of" or "department of" the "Presiding Bishop and Council," we must do so with a smile or an apology. And inasmuch as these titles are likely to be fixed upon the Church for all time by mere inaction on our part, we should bestir ourselves immediately and determine upon a series of titles which shall state simply what they mean and be readily understood by the man on the street.

The series proposed in the above resolution seems to meet all these requirements so admirably that I, for one, earnestly hope the several dioceses and provinces will take the action requested by the Synod of New York and New Jersey, so that the change may be made without undue waste of time at the next General Convention.

Very truly yours,

G. ASHTON OLDHAM.

New York City.

THE ASSOCIATION FOR THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE: AN APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

Mr. Editor: Kindly allow me a little space to remind Christian people of the compelling need of something more than sighs over the sure destruction of family life in our great country by the increasingly rapid spread of divorce. The Association for the Sanctity of Marriage is the only society known to the writer that is organized for the special purpose of bringing home to the conscience of Christians of every name the forgotten teaching of Christ concerning marriage, and the enormity of the evil with which America, above all other lands, is face to face today.

When the enemy is so busy preaching free love, and, as a business man has expressed it to me, when "marriage is becoming more and more a temporary arrangement, to be changed more easily than a business contract," surely it is time for real Christians to bestir themselves and act. Novels, serious books, magazines of a certain type, plays, and even some sermons are doing this devil's work of the sower.

Do our people know that in 1916 these United States had 112,036 divorces, affecting directly at least half a million of our population, while our neighbors and kin in Canada had only sixty-seven in the same period? And the increase, our official report tells us, is 30 per cent. every five years. Or to put this in another way, allowing for the fact that the population of the United States is fourteen times that of Canada, we have one hundred and twenty divorces for every one across the border. Do our people know that in the city of Seattle 2,430 divorces were granted in the first eleven months of 1920, or almost one to every two marriages in the same period (4,013)?

The Association for the Sanctity of Marriage has just sent its first paper of twenty-four pages on "The Mind of Christ Concerning Marriage" to about 1,500 bishops, priests and laymen. It would like to distribute many thousands, and follow this up with other papers on "The Cruelty of Divorce Legislation versus the so-called Cruelty of No Remarriage," "The History of Marriage in the Church," and others. This costs money. It does not pay financially, and no publisher could afford to do it. The discouraging thing is that only sixty persons out of these 1,500 have thought it worth while to contribute anything to the cause, although an appeal and an addressed envelope accompanied the paper.

Shall this Association, the only one of its kind, with some of our ablest bishops, priests and laymen on its committees, be allowed to languish for the lack of support that demands, not thousands, but only a few hundreds of dollars yearly for printing and postage—its only expenses? Checks should be made payable to the Rev. Edwin A. White, Treasurer, and sent to the undersigned.

WALKER GWYNNE, General Secretary.

Summit, N. J., January 10, 1921.

BUSINESS METHODS.

Mr. Editor: These are days of centralization, pep, drives, experiments and multiplied machinery in Church and State. Our leaders seem to be determined to try out "business methods" of the quick-fire, up-to-date variety.

One hesitates to formulate any objections out of respect for the leaders, and also lest he be accused of "destructive criticism."

However, voices of protest are being raised against the radical departures from the old ways, and one such voice comes from the Atlantic Monthly of January, 1921, in an article entitled, "A Parish Minister's Declaration of Independence." Another somewhat more timid voice comes from the American Church Monthly in an article entitled, "Ecclesiastical Efficiency."

Both articles are well worth reading, more especially by those who believe that a minister is ordained first of all to preach the gospel, and only incidentally to serve tables.

JOHN TAYLOR ROSE.

Cazenovia, N. Y.

We quoted on "Christianity and the Community" Page of the Southern Churchman, January 8, from the first named of these articles, but regret that we gave it as of the December instead of January Atlantic.—Ed. S. C.)

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Published at
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.
LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D.D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D.D.,..Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE,.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor
Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918 $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 10 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Church Intelligence

Bishop McKim to Be in Charge of New Missionary District of Tohoku.

The Presiding Bishop has appointed the Rt. Rev. John McKim, D. D., Bishop of Tokyo, to be his substitute in Episcopal charge of the new Missionary District of Tohoku, Japan, until the vacancy is filled.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

January 10, 1921.

The Nation-Wide Campaign: Amount Received December 1-January 12.

In a statement issued early in December, the Treasurer of the Presiding Bishop and Council reported that on the first of December there was due on account of Nation-Wide Campaign pledges for 1920 the sum of $1,124,128.

The Treasurer now announces that from December 1 up to the close of business on January 12 there was received on account of 1920 pledges about $925,000.

Out of these receipts there has been paid on loans $305,000, or more than the amount borrowed during 1920 on current operating account, and a substantial working balance has been established to care for current disbursements.

Although the 1920 cash account has been closed, the unpaid 1920 pledges are still due. All receipts after the closing of the 1920 cash account will be included in the 1921 cash, but the 1920 record of pledges will be kept open.

A detailed statement of the cash receipts and expenditures of 1920 will be made as soon as possible by the Treasurer.

Bishop Overs Returns to Liberia.

After spending several months in this country telling of conditions in Liberia and the Church's work there, the Rt. Rev. William H. Overs, Ph. D., Bishop of Liberia, sailed for Africa on Saturday, January 15, going by way of England.

On Friday, January 14, there was a special farewell service conducted in the Church Missions House Chapel by Bishop Gailor, with a celebration of the Holy Communion.

Miss Lois M. Ford, of St. John's Parish, York, Pa., has been appointed as a missionary to Liberia, and will sail on the same ship with Bishop Overs.

Visit the Church Missions House Chapel.

The Presiding Bishop and Council are anxious that Church people should get into the habit of looking to 281 Fourth Avenue quite as much as a place of prayer and praise as a place where the business of the Presiding Bishop and Council is carried on.

They would be very glad if Church people generally would regard the chapel of the Church Missions House as a place to which they could go to worship whenever the opportunity presents itself. Throughout the coming Lent, the following services will be held:

Celebration of the Holy Communion every day at 9 o'clock. Noon-day prayers as usual every day, with addresses by Bishop Gailor and the Executive Secretaries as follows:

Ash-Wednesday, February 9—Bishop Gailor.
Friday, February 11—Bishop Gailor.
Friday, February 18—Dr. Wood.
Wednesday, February 23—Dr. Wood.
Friday, February 25—Dean Lathrop.
Wednesday, March 2—Mr. Franklin.
Friday, March 4—Mr. Franklin.
Wednesday, March 9—Dean Lathrop.
Friday, March 11—Dr. Milton.
Wednesday, March 16—Dr. Milton.
Friday, March 18—Mr. Gibson.
Wednesday, March 23—Mr. Gibson.

A Worth-While Job.

A pessimist and an optimist were discussing life from their different viewpoints. "I really believe," said the former, "that I could make a better world myself."

"Sure!" returned the optimist; "that's what we are here for. Now let us get to work and do it."—Boston Transcript.

Are you ever afraid to tell the Lord about your small things, as if they were not worth His attending to? Your great things are not any more worth His attending to. Cast all your care on Him.—Andrew A. Bonar.

Memorial Gymnasium, St. Stephen's College.

Opening of New Gymnasium, St. Steven's College.

The first Sunday after the Epiphany was a red letter day at St. Stephen's College, for on that day the Acting Presiding Bishop, Dr. Gailor, visited Annandale and blessed the new gymnasium lately erected by the college at a cost of $70,000.

The Eucharist was sung by President Bell in Bard Chapel at half past 10. The entire faculty and student body were present and neighbors and visiting friends filled the chapel to capacity. At the close of the service, which was sung with marked beauty by the entire college without the aid of a choir, a procession moved through the campus to the new building. There the college sang Kipling's Recessional, the building was blessed, and prayers were said for the seven St. Stephen's men who gave their lives in the late war, to whom the gymnasium is erected as a memorial: William Mollis Sistaire, Lester Wallace Kearn, Arthur Paul Kelley, Walter Raymond Whitmore, Henry Seymour, Leroy Abraham Wyant and Leo William Vincent. Addresses were then made by the Rev. Lawrence T. Cole, Ph. D., some time President of St. Stephen's, and by Mr. Haley Fiske, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and chairman of the Finance Committee of the college. Following the ceremony dinner was served in Preston Commons.

The new building is 160 feet by 120 feet over all, and two stories in height for the most part, and three in some places. On the first floor are billiard rooms, bowling alleys, lounging rooms, locker rooms, showers and the heating plant. On the second floor is the gymnasium proper, 50 feet by 80 feet in size, the college store, offices for the college physician and the athletic director, and two large storage rooms. On the third floor is a class room, 30 feet by 20 feet, and a gallery overlooking the gymnasium and equipped with a motion picture machine. The gymnasium is fully furnished with apparatus, and is also equipped with a portable stage sufficiently large for theatrical entertainments. The building is located to the west of and adjoining Zabriskie Field.

Bishop Gailor was particularly happy in his sermon, which was preached on the text, "Bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness profiteth unto all things," from 1 Timothy. He showed the impossibility of education merely physical or mental, or both really bringing a man to true maturity without the addition of vital religion. The sermon was illuminated with humor and replete with pungent epigram, as well as inspired with unaffected piety. He took occasion to commend the small college and the Church college and to pledge assistance, by the Presiding Bishop and Council, to the best of its ability, to the cause of the Church institutions of higher learning.

Work of the American Seamen's Friend Society.

More than 300,000 sailors were in attendance at the various homes of the American Seamen's Friend Society in many parts of the world, according to the society's ninety-second annual report made public at their offices, 76 Wall Street, New York.

At the Sailors' Home and Institute on the North River water-front, which is the New York headquarters of the society, the aggregate attendance was 160,000. Some of the other centers at which the work for sailors in port is being carried on are Gloucester, Mass., Norfolk, Newport News, New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Rio de Janeiro and Genoa, Italy.

The great need for this work among sailors is shown in the figures of the society with regard to some of the particular uses which the sailors made of the various institutes. Some 90,000 lodgers were accommodated and a quarter of a million dollars in money was handled for the seamen. Records were kept of 6,747 letters which were written, this record having been figured by the number of postage stamps purchased. The workers at the institutes tell of the fact that the sailor will not keep postage stamps in his "jeans" and that he only buys a postage stamp after his letter has been written.

The largest attendance at any one branch, aside from the New York center, was in Galveston, Tex., where 53,000 passed through the doors.

The work of the American Seamen's Friend Society was organized in 1828. The officers are the Rev. John B. Calvert, D. D., President; the Rev. George Sidney Webster, D. D., Secretary, and Clarence C. Pinneo, Treasurer. The Board of Trustees includes men well known in philanthropic, marine and religious circles.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Union Meeting of Men's Clubs.

Nearly a hundred men of Trinity and Emmanuel Churches, Staunton, assembled in Trinity Parish House on last Wednesday evening in a joint gathering of the Men's Clubs of those churches. The occasion was a supper served by the ladies of Trinity and Emmanuel and an address by the Bishop on the needs of the Church today, particularly in regard to enlisting the interest and co-operation of men.

After adjournment of the formal meeting some time was spent socially. This was the first joint meeting of the Trinity and Emmanuel Men's Clubs, but in conformity with the expressed wishes of the Bishop, it was planned to hold future union meetings.

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Garrett, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Coadjutor.

An Up-to-Date and Prosperous Parish.

At the annual congregational meeting of Trinity Church, Fort Worth, held on the Feast of the Epiphany, the rector, the Rev. L. W. Heaton, reported the presentation of one hundred and two candidates for confirmation during the past year; the administration of the sacrament of baptism to sixty-five, the majority of whom were adults; and an average weekly attendance of ninety communicants at celebrations of the Holy Eucharist. The business manager of the parish, who is employed by the vestry at a salary of $2,400 a year to attend the business affairs of the parish under the direction of the rector, reported that the financial support of the work of the parish had trebled during the year; and that the real property assets of the parish had doubled, although the mortgage indebtedness of the parish had been reduced 50 per cent. Automobiles were purchased during the year for both the rector and business manager. The parish gave five times as much for extra parochial objects during the year than in any previous year in its history. Bishop Moore, in a letter of congratulation to the congregation, gave it as his opinion that this is the largest year's work ever done by any single parish in the history of the Diocese.

Excavation has been completed for the community center now in the course of construction by Trinity Church, and the engineers in charge are waiting for such weather as will permit the pouring of concrete footings and foundation walls. The building will cost, when completed, in the neighborhood of $100,000. It is the second unit of what it is expected will be the most complete parish plant in the Southwest. The first unit, a brick rectory, was completed recently at a cost of $20,000. The site is the crest of the highest hill at the center of the most thickly populated residence section of the city, and consists of an entire block. The parish has also recently acquired building sites in the two most rapidly growing suburbs of Fort Worth for mission chapels.

The Rt. Rev. William T. Capers, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of West Texas, will conduct a preaching mission at Trinity Church, beginning on the First Sunday in Lent, February 13, and closing at Evening Prayer on the Second Sunday in Lent.

The Rev. Harry Rudy Ziegler, a graduate of Ursinus College, and formerly a student at the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, who has been a minister in the Baptist denomination for eight years, has become a candidate for Holy Orders from Trinity Church, and is acting as fiscal agent for Trinity Community Center while studying under the direction of Bishop Moore.

A strong chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, after serving a probationary period under the direction of Secretary Edward Shields, has organized under the leadership of the Junior warden of the parish, Mr. Harold Bevan. It numbers among its members the General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and the Boy Scout executive, who recently became communicants of Trinity Parish. Executive Spies is also Superintendent of the Church school.

The annual Council of the Diocese will be held at Paris, beginning on Sunday, January 23, the Rev. H. G. Hennessy, rector.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop McCormick Again Elected on Board of Corrections and Charities.

The Bishop of Western Michigan has been reappointed by Governor Groesbeck as a member of the Michigan State Board of Corrections and Charities. Bishop McCormick's original appointment came from Governor Osborn, and at the expiration of his first term he was re-appointed for eight years by Governor Ferris, and the present renewal on the part of the recently inaugurated Governor is for another full term of eight years.

For the last ten years the Bishop has served as chairman of the Board, and during his administration the activities of the Board have been extended in many directions and its efficiency has been greatly developed.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Virginia the First Diocese to Complete Its Quota.

The Treasurer of the Diocese reports that total receipts on the Nation-Wide Campaign in 1920 in the Diocese of Virginia amounted to $276,525.11. The Diocese was asked to give $270,000 in 1920, and pledges amounted to $296,000. The Diocesan quota for the work of the General Church was $89,125, and over $90,000 was paid in regular monthly remittances of $7,500 each.

According to advices from New York, the Diocese of Virginia is the first Diocese in the Church to complete its quota for 1920.

Endowment Fund for St. Mary's Whitechapel Church.

The trustees of the funds of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia have just received from Dr. L. Gibbons Smart, of Lutherville, Md., a check for $1,000 to begin an endowment fund for St. Mary's Whitechapel Church, Lancaster County. St. Mary's Whitechapel Church is one of the oldest church buildings in the Diocese, having been erected before 1714. It's church-yard is filled with old tombs, many of them being those of the Ball family, the direct ancestors of Mary Ball, the mother of George Washington. Another, more recent, is that of Miss Louisa T. Smart, a missionary in the Virginia mountains, and later in Alaska, who died at her post of duty, and was later buried in the church-yard among her own people.

It is hoped to increase this endowment fund until a sum of at least $5,000 is secured.

Interesting Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Richmond Convocation was held in Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, on Tuesday, January 11, with an attendance of more than 150 of the 1,000 members of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Convocation. The Rev. J. J. Gravatt, D. D., the rector of the church, celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, rector of Grace Church, Richmond.

Under the leadership of Mrs. John B. Mordecai, the Convocational Secretary, the morning was devoted to conferences led by Miss Louisa T. Davis, the President of the Diocesan Branch. After luncheon, addresses were made by Miss Irene T. Mann, for twenty-five years past one of our missionaries in Japan; Dr. Joseph W. McSparren, of St. Barnabas' Hospital, jurisdiction of Kyoto, and the Rev. R. V. Lancaster, Director of Religious Work in the State Penitentiary.

The next annual meeting will be held in All Saints' Church.

Life Work Conference in Richmond.

An interesting life work for boys was held in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, on Friday evening, January 14. Rectors of the various Episcopal churches were requested to be present, each with as many boys in his congregation as he could interest. Most of them responded and about thirty-five boys were present. Dr. Bowie, rector of St. Paul's, made an inspiring address, and was followed by Mr. Neff, a senior from the Theological Seminary of Virginia, and who was quite an athlete in his college days, who spoke with enthusiasm, and it was felt that the occasion was one which would bring results by its effect on the minds of those present.

New Correspondent for Church Periodical Club.

Mrs. Mary G. Wallace has resigned as correspondent of the Church Periodical Club, and Bishop Brown has appointed Miss Lizzie L. Green, 204 North Meadow Street, Richmond, to take her place.

An Open Letter From the Virginia Committee of the Near East Relief.

The Virginia Committee for Near East Relief feels that in view of the existing confusion of its work with that of the recently organized European Relief Council, a clear statement of the difference between the two is desirable. Briefly:

1. The American Committee for Near East Relief is the only organization incorporated by Congress to administer relief in Armenia and Syria. The European Relief Council operates in Germany, Hungary, Austria, Poland, Lithuania, Rumania, Czecho-Slovakia, and a number of the other small countries in Central Europe.

2. The American Committee for Near East Relief is the only source of relief for the refugee population of the Holy Land. No other organizations are working in these areas; there is no responsible government or other agency to take charge of the situation. The European Relief Council has the co-operation of eight large national organizations, including the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Jewish Relief and the Knights of Columbus.

3. More than 110,000 children were cared for by the Near East Relief last year. Lack of funds prevented the giving of food to three or four times this number. These children are orphans, homeless as well as hungry.

4. The Near East Relief budget asks for $15 a month for feeding, clothing, housing and educating a child. Five dollars a month will give the child enough food to keep it alive, but no clothes or shelter. The Near East Relief budget based on the $15 per capita estimate includes overhead expenses which other relief agencies do not have to figure on. For example, there are no railroads or boat lines left on which to transport food in the Near East; ox carts and Ford trucks must be bought and used for this purpose.

5. In addition to its work of child feeding, the Near East Relief last year maintained 538 relief workers, 63 hospitals, 128 clinics and 229 orphanages. It is asking funds with which to continue this work until some responsible government can be established.

6. An important phase of Near East Relief work has developed from the forcible detention by the Turks of Christian people. Eleven rescue homes for these girls have been established by the Near East Relief, but it is estimated that from 100,000 to 200,000 Armenian girls and women are still immured in harems, whence they can be rescued only by American aid extended through the Near East Relief.

Oliver J. Sands,
State Chairman, Near East Relief.
320 American National Bank, Richmond, Va.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Five Hundred Fifty-five Students Enrolled at St. Paul's, Two Hundred Eighty-nine Turned Away.

Two hundred and eighty-nine students have asked in vain for admission to St. Paul's, Lawrenceville, but there was no help for them. Every room is filled; every bed taken, and even the class-rooms are over-crowded.

Having been thoroughly awakened by the educational influences of the war, applications came from communities seldom reached by the school, and the students seem to be more determined than ever, though being told before coming to St. Paul's that they could not possibly gain admittance, still a very large number came. To the entire two hundred eighty-nine we had to say "No."

Pathetic as this is, the present status of the five hundred fifty-five at St. Paul's is more deserving of the serious thought of the Church.

In order that the school might be able to curtail its previous obligations, the management was determined that no deficit should be incurred within this fiscal year, and, consequently, proceeded to eliminate further courses of instruction, viz., printing, blacksmithing and wheelwrighting, and the budget for the year adopted by its Board of Trustees and approved by the American Church Institute for Negroes was as low as they thought it could be made consistent with its standing; but in spite of this, the school is facing the worst financial strain it has experienced in its whole existence.

This state of affairs is due almost entirely to the incompletion of the Nation-Wide Campaign. If the school could receive a third of its expectations from this source, she would suffer no financial anxiety.

As a result of the Nation-Wide Campaign, St. Paul's received last year $13,000; namely, $10,000 from the institute and $3,000 from the Dioceses of Southern and Southwestern Virginia, as increased revenue, as a direct result of the movement; but owing to increase in cost of operation and deficits occurred in this and past years, this amount is very inadequate.

The income of this year has been quite insufficient to meet the needs even of this inadequate budget, and from month to month the deficit has increased.

St. Paul's finds itself in a three-cornered struggle: (a) Obligation and honor to its students and teachers; (b) cut off from the support of its friends by the general scheme of the Nation-Wide Movement; (c) the temporary failure at least to realize fully from the Nation-Wide Campaign. There is now but one way open to St. Paul's. She has conformed to every method known to her to economize, even to the point of threatening seriously the standard which has required so many years to attain. The Church cannot afford to allow her to break faith with its teachers and students. She must pay her teachers for this year's work and carry out its obligations to its students.

To do otherwise would be a calamity to the Church and a wound upon the character of St. Paul's too serious to be considered. Unless the school receives material help soon, it cannot hope to ward off the impending embarrassment. To those persons who may not be fully acquainted with the worth of St. Paul's to the Church, the race and American citizenship, we respectfully refer to the Presiding Bishop and Council of the Church, the Department of Education, Washington, Foundation Organizations and Societies of Research, as well as the Department of Education of the State.

J. S. Russell, Principal.
Lawrenceville, Va.

Old St. Paul's, Norfolk, Adopts Free Pew System.

Old St. Paul's, Norfolk, has been changed from a rented pew church to a free pew church. The question was discussed by the rector and vestry in the early fall, and they finally decided to submit it to the congregation. A congregational meeting was called at which the proposition was explained, and the opportunity was given to each renter of a pew or part of a pew to surrender the pew and add the amount which had been paid as pew rent to the contributions through the envelope system. It was made an entirely voluntary matter with each renter, who was given the choice of continuing to rent or of making his pew free by contributing the amount hitherto paid as rent through envelopes. The proposition was received with enthusiasm, and so general has been the surrender of pews at the beginning of the year—at which time the change was to go into effect—that Old St. Paul's may now be classed as a free pew church.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Lenten Preachers at Garrick Theatre.

The preachers for the daily noon-day Lenten services held under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at the Garick Theatre, Philadelphia, are as follows:

Ash-Wednesday, February 9—The Bishop of the Diocese.

Thursday, February 10—The Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop-Suffragan of Pennsylvania.

Friday-Saturday, February 11-12—The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Bethlehem, Pa.

Monday-Saturday, February 14-19—The Very Rev. Allan Pearson Shatford, St. James the Apostle, Montreal, Can.

Monday-Saturday, February 21-26—The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, President St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y.

Monday-Friday, February 28-March 4—The Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., St. Peter's, St. Louis, Mo.

Saturday, March 5—The Rev. H. K. B. Ogle, Christ Church.

Monday-Friday, March 7-11—The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Central New York.

Saturday, March 12—The Rev. John R. Hart, Jr., University of Pennsylvania Christian Association.

Monday-Friday, March 14-18—The Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Kentucky.

Saturday, March 19—The Rev. Allen Evans, Jr., St. James'.

Monday-Thursday, March 21-24—The Rt. Rev. Frank Du Moulin, D. D., LL. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Ohio.

Good Friday, March 25—The Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop-Suffragan of Pennsylvania.

Saturday, March 26—The Rev. Albert E. Clay, chaplain of the Brotherhood Redemption, Philadelphia.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Grenfell's Visit.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, who established the international service for seamen and fishermen in Labrador and Newfoundland, has recently been a visitor in Washington, and was heard in three addresses on Sunday, January 16, at some of the churches. One of these addresses was made at Epiphany Church at the evening service. Dr. Grenfell is visiting some of the large cities of our country for the purpose of raising an endowment of $1,500,000 to perpetuate the work for seamen and fishermen which he has started. About one-third of the amount has already been raised in Canada and England, and the committee assisting him in this work feel confident that the remainder will be secured in the United States. Mr. Henry B. F. Macfarland is chairman of the Washington committee.

Dr. Grenfell's addresses were of great interest and full of appeal. He spoke at Foundry Methodist Church in the morning and the Church of the Covenant (Presbyterian) in the afternoon. There were large numbers of people to hear him at every service.

Conference on Christian Healing.

On Friday evening, January 21, a conference on Christian Healing will be held by the Rev. H. B. Wilson, of New Jersey, director of the Society of the Nazarene, in Epiphany Parish Hall.

The Christian Healing Mission begun by Mr. Hickson in Washington has been continued under the auspices of the Diocese by bi-monthly services at Epiphany. Such a service was held also at St. Stephen's Church on Tuesday, January 18th, the rector, Rev. George F. Dudley, being in charge.

Organ Recitals Largely Attended.

Lovers of music in Washington are having unusual privileges this year in the way of listening to organ recitals of very high order.

The series of recitals instituted by the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists is receiving splendid financial support from the people, and the large body of Epiphany Church has been crowded to its doors by those eager to take advantage of such an opportunity.

Likewise, at the Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral on every third Sunday afternoon, large numbers are found listening to recitals given by Mr. Edgar Priest, Cathedral organist. Mr. Priest's recitals, both from the point of selection and rendition, are kept at a very high standard, and the people of Washington who have been fortunate enough to hear the visiting organists here this year appreciate more than ever the advantages offered by having in their midst an organist of such high attainments. The program on Sunday, January 16, was of unusual interest.

Progressive Work at Epiphany Chapel.

Epiphany Chapel, under the able leadership of the Rev. A. J .Torrey, vicar, has made remarkable strides in its growth in the last two years, and enters upon this new year of 1921 with renewed vigor and every reason for hope for still better things. Financially, the chapel has paid more toward its support than ever before in the year just ended. The Sunday school has increased from an enrollment of thirty-five to two hundred and five, new children still being added every Sunday. The community work has become a vital thing in that section of the city, and every activity is largely attended. The work in connection with this growth has so increased that the Nation-Wide Campaign Committee of the Diocese has voted to pay two-thirds of the salary of an assistant to the Rev. Mr. Torrey, just as soon as the right man is found. The assistant will not be a clergyman, but some one who will take charge of the executive side of the community work and thus enable the vicar to get out among his people more. Beginning with Sunday, January 23, the Sunday evening services will be of a slightly different nature, consisting of more hymns and congregational singing, shortened form of evening prayer, and an address by some especially invited outside speaker.

The people of the chapel are looking forward to the arrival of their new rector, Dr. Freeman, with great pleasure, and they, with their vicar and the whole Diocese, rejoice that Dr. Freeman will find such a growing and progressive work as may be found at Epiphany Chapel.

M. M. W.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Savannah Parish Shows Great Activity.

Christ Church, Savannah, the Rev. John Durham Wing, D. D., rector, held its annual parish meeting Monday evening, January 10. Reports from the vestry, the Church school, and eleven organizations in the parish, showed remarkable activity throughout the parish, and that the finances are in a most satisfactory condition. Preceding the business meeting, members of the parish who attended were entertained with supper by the Parish Aid Society at the new Colonial lunch-room, which is being conducted by the society.

Through the generosity of two brothers, one a member of the parish, Christ Church has been able to purchase a permanent home for the House of Prayer Mission, which has suffered many difficulties from holding services in rented property. Located as it is in an absolutely unchurched section of the city, it presents, in the words of the rector of the parish, "a fallow field," and the call for workers is very strong. Sunday school is held every Sunday afternoon, with an enrollment of over one hundred, and the rector of Christ Church holds service every Wednesday evening.

The Men's Club of Grace Church, Waycross, the Rev. C. Baird Mitchell, priest in charge, invited the wives and children of the members as their guests at its January meeting, and interspersed with the business were musical selections. The rector delivered an address on the life and character of Robert Louis Stevenson. As the meetings are held in the Railroad Y. M. C. A., the president of the club took this occasion to speak of the necessity of having a parish house. About eighty people attended the meeting, and at the close of the program refreshments were served.

E. D. J.

NEW YORK

Death of the Rev. Dr. John Chamberlain.

The rector of St. Ann's Church for deaf mutes is dead. He was the Rev. Dr. John Chamberlain, and he began work with the Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet way back in 1872. A New Hampshire man by birth, he spent early years of his ministry in the West, and later went throughout New England and the entire East ministering to afflicted people. He led the whole propaganda in behalf of better training for mutes, and witnessed many important advances. St. Ann's is a part of St. Matthew's Parish, and is located on the upper West Side of Manhattan.

Dr. Gates to Remain in New York.

The Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates, vicar of Intercession Chapel of Trinity Parish, delighted the upper West Side by announcing that he had declined a call to be dean of St. John's Cathedral at Denver. In his declination Dr. Gates stated that the appeal to him to help in stronger ways to establish the Church in the great Rocky Mountain region was very strong, but that he felt it to be his duty to remain in New York. Intercession Chapel was an independent parish when Dr. Gates came to New England to be its rector, worshipping in a frame edifice that had a debt of $50,000 upon it. The members were few. Today it is a chapel of Trinity, with an edifice that cost $600,000, and 3,000 in its congregation, coming from 2,300 families. The Sunday school numbers 1,200.

Opening of First Town Hall.

Bishop Lloyd took the late Bishop Burch's place as speaker at the opening in New York of its first Town Hall, built at a cost of $1,350,000, and having an auditorium seating 1,700. It is located in the Times Square section, and is in charge of a League for Political Education. It is supported by public memberships in its courses of lectures, held on week-day mornings, and attended in large numbers by women and by elderly men of leisure. Around it is rising a group of men and women bent upon improved civic conditions in New York, and also seeking to inform the public concerning political affairs. In the management Church influence is strong, not always Episcopal, but always religious.

What used to be the Church Temperance Society's work on the west water front of Manhattan, and in charge of the late Robert Graham, is now in charge of the Church Women's Temperance League, and has for secretary Miss Kate Graham, who for years worked with her famous father. At the annual meeting of this League just held it was stated that the average attendance of men who load and unload ships had been 440 per day through the year. Among the directors are Mrs. John F. Steen, Mrs. George A. Crocker, Mrs. John Chamberlain, Miss Emily F. Southmayd, Mrs. Alfred Duane Pell and Mrs. C. Adolphe Low.

C.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

GENERAL LEE.

Again has come and gone that anniversary which is so dear to the South, and as the years pass will become more and more reverenced by the whole nation—January 19, the birthday of Robert E. Lee.

The incidents from the life of this great man that have been so frequently quoted invariably show his magnanimity, his generosity, or some other of his noble traits. Indeed, few of the lives of our great men are so replete with such anecdotes.

There was, however, another side to the character of this commanding personality, a side which loved the lighter things of life, and it is recorded by one of his biographers that he once "rode double down Pennsylvania Avenue, passed the White House, and a Secretary of the Treasury gaping with astonishment."

Another recollection of him which appeals to us especially in these days, when prohibition is so much the subject of discussion and comment, is the account of a social treat which he once offered to his younger officers. They were invited to gather around a demijohn of very promising appearance.

After raising their hopes of its contents to the highest pitch, "he finally drew from it bumpers of his favorite stimulant—buttermilk."

One of the reasons that this noble Southerner is so universally beloved is because of the grandeur of that disposition which no amount of honor or glory could change from its simple sweetness.

The most helpful way to celebrate the birthday of a hero is to think upon and study his life, so that we may derive therefrom inspiration for the following of his example; that is the way in which we can fulfil the words from the Great Book, "The memories of the righteous are blessed."

HELP THE CHURCH'S PRESTIGE.

One of our Church ladies commented recently upon the fact that in all charitable and relief work our people always held prominent positions of leadership as individuals, although the Church as a Church got no credit for it.

This is undoubtedly true, and in some respects it is unfortunate, and might be remedied, at least to some extent, without in any way detracting from the helpfulness of such altruistic Episcopalians or lessening the efficiency of the welfare work of associated charities or other such bodies.

No one will deny that such organizations do better work by being interdenominational and without official church affiliations, nor will any one say that in taking active part in all these great uplifting movements and associations these persons are not doing splendid Christian work.

It occurs to us, however, that they could make their efforts even more effective, and at the same time gain prestige for the Church as well.

Why cannot our Church societies in their corporate personalities tender their services to the local charitable or welfare organization, stating, after due deliberation upon the subject, just how many workers they can offer and for what days or hours?

Of course many auxiliaries and guilds are limited by their by-laws or charters, either local or national, to activities along certain lines, and if all the societies of your church are so restricted, then form a new one to do work of the character desired, which is being done now by so many of our individuals.

St. James' Auxiliary to the Associated Charities, or St. Paul's Chapter for assisting the Travelers' Aid Society, or Grace Church Committee of Co-operation in Welfare Work, would be names that might be adopted.

A tremendously important thing to remember either in forming such a society or in turning the activities of those already in existence to this line of work is that it must be co-operative. Let the Church bodies do the work under the direction of the relief organization and as a part of it, only retaining their Church affiliation.

We believe that some such plan as this would have two great advantages. It would interest a lot of people in active Church work, who now feel that "missions" are too far off and indefinite, and who would like to do some work of service in which they could feel that they had an active part. And it would bring to the assistance of family relief bodies a great number of persons who have some spare time and could and would give it in such a way as to relieve such organizations from the tremendous amount of extra work which has been piled upon them by the present acute unemployment situation throughout the country.

GETTING TOGETHER.

An inter-racial conference of representative white and negro women met recently in Memphis, Tenn. The Episcopal Church was represented by Mrs. T. W. Bickett, of Raleigh, N. C., wife of former Governor Bickett, and Mrs. Theodore Bratton, wife of the Bishop of Mississippi, both of whom are on the committee signing the report of the findings.

Women were there from every Southern State, and the following paragraphs are taken from the report of the findings:

Child Welfare.

We are pursuaded that the conservation of the life and health of negro children is of the utmost importance to the community. We therefore urge:

(a) That day nurseries and kindergartens be established in local communities for the protection, care and training of children of negro mothers who go out to work.

(b) That free baby clinics be established, and that government leaflets on child welfare be distributed to expectant mothers, thus teaching the proper care of themselves and their children.

(c) That adequate playgrounds and recreational facilities be established for negro children and young people.

Sanitation and Housing.

Since good housing and proper sanitation are necessary for both physical and moral life, we recommend:

That a survey of housing and sanitary conditions be made in the negro sections in each local community, followed by an appeal to the proper authorities for improvements when needed.

(a) Since sacredness of personality is the basis for all civilization, we urge:

That every agency touching the child life of the nation shall strive to create mutual respect in the hearts of the children of different races.

(b) We are convinced that the establishment of a single standard of morals for men and women, both black and white, is necessary for the life and safety of a nation. We therefore pledge ourselves to strive to secure respect and protection for womanhood everywhere, regardless of race or color.

(c) Since provision for the education of negro children is still inadequate, we recommend:

That surveys be made of the educational situation in the local community in order that colored children may secure—

(1) More equitable division of the school fund.

(2) Suitable school buildings and equipment.

(3) Longer school terms.

(4) Higher standards and increased pay for teachers.

Since colored people frequently do not receive fair treatment on street cars, on railroads and in railway stations, and recognizing this as one of the chief causes of friction between the races, we urge:

That immediate steps be taken to provide for them adequate accommodations and courteous treatment at the hands of street car and railway officials.

(a) As women, we urge those who are charged with the administration of the law to prevent lynchings at any cost. We are persuaded that the proper determination on the part of the constituted officials, upheld by public sentiment, would result in the detection and prosecution of those guilty of this crime. Therefore, we pledge ourselves to endeavor to create a sentiment which will uphold these officials in the execution of justice.

We recommend:

That competent legal assistance be made available for colored people in the local communities in order to insure to them the protection of their rights in the courts.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR

JANUARY.

1. Saturday. Circumcision. New Year's Day.
2. Second Sunday after Christmas.
6. Thursday. Epiphany.
9. First Sunday after Epiphany.
16. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
23. Septuagesima Sunday.
25. Tuesday. Conversion of St. Paul.
30. Sexagesima Sunday.
31. Monday.

Collect for Septuagesima Sunday.

O Lord, we beseech Thee favorably to hear the prayers of Thy people, that we, who are justly punished for our offenses, may be mercifully delivered by Thy goodness for the glory of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Saviour, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect for St. Paul's Day.

O God, Who, through the preaching of the blessed Apostle St. Paul, hast caused the light of the gospel to shine throughout the world, Grant, we beseech Thee, that we, having his wonderful conversion in remembrance, may show forth our thankfulness unto Thee for the same, by following the holy doctrine which he taught; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Inn at Bethlehem.

(The Landlord Speaks—A. A. 28.)

What could be done? The inn was full of folk:
His honor, Marcus Lucius, and his scribes
Who made the census; honorable men
From farthest Galilee, come hitherward
To be enrolled; high ladies and their lords;
The rich, the rabbis, such a noble throng
As Bethlehem had never seen before,
And may not see again. And there they were,
Close herded with their servants, till the inn
Was like a hive at swarming time, and I
Was fairly crazed among them.

Could I know
That they were so important? Just the two,
No servants, just a workman sort of man,
Leading a donkey, and his wife thereon
Drooping and pale—I saw them not myself,
My servants must have driven them away;
But had I seen them, how was I to know?
Were inns to welcome stragglers, up and down
In all our towns from Beersheba to Dan.
Till He should come? And how were men to know?

There was a sign, they say, a heavenly light
Resplendent: but I had no time for stars.
And there were songs of angels in the air
Out of the hills; but how was I to hear
Amid the thousand clamors of an inn?
Of course, if I had known them, who they were
And who was He that should be born that night—
For now I learn that they will make Him King,
A second David, who will ransom us
From these Philistine Romans—who but He
That feeds an army with a loaf of bread,
And if a soldier falls, he touches him
And he leaps up, uninjured?—had I known,
I would have turned the whole inn upside down,
His honor, Marcus Lucius, and the rest,
And sent them all to stables, had I known.

So you have seen him, stranger, and perhaps
Again will see him. Prithee say for me
I did not know; and if he comes again,
As he will surely come, with retinue,
And banners, and an army, tell my lord
That all my inn is his to make amends.

Alas, alas! to miss a chance like that
This inn that might be chief among them all,
The birthplace of Messiah—had I known!

—Amos R. Wells.

Roses or Broken Fences.

PART I.

"If only they weren't so shiftless," Harriette said.

The "they" referred to the Langdons, the "Langdon tribe," Halstead had called them. Harriette did not go so far as to call them that. She didn't think she would like to be called one of a tribe, no matter what she did.

It was tiresome to look down on a house and yard like theirs, day in and day out. It hadn't been quite so bad, to be sure, when snow was on the ground, but there hadn't been very much snow this year, scarcely enough to make anything picturesque. There was a house full of Langdons and only four Isbornes. The Isbornes had been up on the hill for a life time, the Langdons only a few months. The Isborne property had very attractive grounds; the Langdon yard had been pretty bad when the family took the house, and it had surely not improved under the new regime.

There was no mother in the Langdon home and the seeming mistress was a girl who appeared to be not far from Harriette's own age. Even though she lived so near them, Harriette really knew very little definitely about the family. None of the Rockston young people had associated to any extent with them since they came. There was a boy named Jasper about Halstead's age, and a number of younger ones whose names Harriette was not sure of. Then there was a father besides, but he looked rather sober and discouraged, and did not attract Harriette very much.

"Jasper could mend that fence," she told Halstead. "Why, even a child could make it look better, and they've never done anything to make the grass grow when the other family attempted to keep chickens. And paint on the house would make so much difference."

The reason why the Langdons shiftlessness troubled Harriette quite so much just now was because of the prospective visit of a friend who had never been in Rockston before. Harriette had met Iva Ware while in the city the fall before, and had been much attracted by her. She had done so many pleasant things for Harriette during her visit at a mutual friend's that Harriette was specially anxious that everything about her visit with her should be exactly right, even to the environment. She couldn't think of anything not likely to be satisfactory except the Langdon yard.

"Cheer up, sis," said Halstead, for her thoughts must have been evident. "We'll try to keep her so interested inside the house that she won't be looking out of the window at all."

Harriette began to be so busy in her preparations for Iva that she thought less actively of the Langdons. Only in a sort of sub-conscious way did she wish for some sort of an outdoor screen that would prevent Iva from being shocked by them.

After Iva came she at first actually did forget the Langdons. Iva seemed even nicer than she remembered her. It was a great satisfaction, too, that all the home people liked her so much. She in turn seemed to like everybody. She went tramping with Hal, played and sang the old-fashioned music Mr. Isborne liked, and talked household affairs with Harriette's mother. Young though she was, she had been housekeeper for her father and brother since her mother's death, three years before.

"She's really quite a remarkable girl," Mrs. Isborne told Harriette, and Halstead added, "Nothing seems to shock or annoy her. I don't believe you need worry about the Langdons, sis. It would take more than that to really bother her."

It was odd, too, that a little later on that very day Iva should have stood at the objectionable window, and after looking out for quite a while commented on the Langdon yard for the first time. "That girl over there must like flowers," she said. "I see she is trying to train a rose to grow above the back door, and that must be a rose-bush in the garden, the old-fashioned cinnamon kind. I suppose that was there long before these people came to the house. I'm almost sure it is budded and I didn't know it was time yet. My mother had two of the loveliest cinnamon rose-bushes in our old home, with a syringa bush between. I think the rose-bushes died out after we sold the place."

Her voice was sweetly, if somewhat sadly reminiscent. Harriette was looking at her in astonishment. How could anybody, even Iva, see first or at least comment first on a rose-bush in the Langdon yard, when everything other than roses was so very glaring! "Is that all you see?" she asked involuntarily.

"No," said Iva calmly, "not all. I seem to see the results of a young girl's not knowing how to carry out any of her ideals for herself or her family except the one of the climbing rose. I see that others don't know how to help her as much as they might, or there is ill-health or misfortune somewhere. I see a young man with a rather moody face, an older one who has lost heart somehow, and a house full of children needing constant care. But above it all, I see that rose, that and the girl's eyes. I think I'd like the girl. I know I'd like to help her. Her voice sounded pleasant when I spoke to her yesterday."

"You spoke to her?" questioned Harriette, in a very surprised voice. "I didn't even know you had seen her."

"I was coming from that tramp with Halstead, and I dropped half of my bunch of flowers as I passed her house. She was outside the door and helped me pick them up. She had a wistful look and I thought then I would ask you to introduce me."

Harriette felt her color coming. She barely bowed to Clem Langdon herself on the street. She did not feel that she knew her well enough to introduce her to anybody else, and yet they were near neighbors. How queer it must seem to Iva when she knew the Langdons had been there a number of months!

The inward sense of the blush made her anxious to rise to the occasion. "I don't know her very well myself, and maybe you wouldn't care so much to know her on closer acquaintance; but of course I'll gladly introduce you if there's an opportunity."

"Let's make an opportunity right now," suggested Iva. "Are you going to be busy? Couldn't we run over?"

Harriette supposed they could, even though the proposition took her breath away. She hadn't called on the Langdons all this time herself; how odd to take a guest to see them. But she would be game. "All right," she said, "if you really want to."

When they tried to ring the bell on the Langdon front door, it gave the beginning of a tinkle and then stopped. But evidently somebody within knew the idiosyncrasies of the door-bell, for there was the sound of some one coming to answer it.

It was Clem herself, looking shabby and rather bothered. Her face fell, evidently unconsciously, when she saw Harriette, then lighted at the sight of Iva. Apparently the Isbornes' guest had made a very pleasant impression

"I wanted to ask about your rose-bush," Iva began, "so I asked my friend to bring me over to see you. It made me think of one that used to grow in our garden at home," and when Clem answered her smile, Harriette realized that there was no need of her introduction; Iva had made her own.

"Won't you come in?" asked Clem.

"We'd love to a little while, if you are not too busy," Iva said.

(To be concluded.)

Growing Old.

The days grow shorter, the nights grow longer;
The sorrows thicken along the way;
And life grows sadder, but love grows stronger
For those who walk with us day by day.

The tear comes quicker, the laugh comes slower;
The courage is less to do and dare;
And the tide of joy in the heart falls lower
And seldom covers the reefs of care.

But all true things in the world seem truer,
And the better things of earth seem best;
And friends are dearer, as friends are fewer,
And love is all as our sun dips west.

Then let us clasp hands as we walk together.
And let us speak softly in a low, sweet tone.
For no man knows on the morrow whether
We two pass on or but one alone.

—Selected.

Bringing in the Bucket.

"Oh dear!" sighed Mary, "I really must write that letter to Mrs. Norton tonight. It's got to be done this week, or there'll be trouble."

"And this Saturday, if I'm not mistaken," said Uncle Jim looking up from his newspaper. "In fact, Saturday afternoon. Why not postpone it till tomorrow, if I may ask?"

"Why, Uncle Jim!" cried Mary. "That from you! 'Why not wait till tomorrow!' I should have expected you to say, 'Why didn't you write it before?' "

Uncle Jim hid a quizzical smile behind his newspaper. "Well—since you suggest the question—why didn't you write it on Monday—or Tuesday— or Wednesday—or—"

"Oh, Uncle Jim!" Mary interrupted him. "Do stop! You make it sound so terrible! I've put it off because I haven't felt a bit well this week; and it's an awfully hard letter to write, and I dread it no end!"

"Oh, yes." Uncle Jim was politely sympathetic. "Well, I suppose it's a great deal easier to do tonight, of course."

"What in the world do you mean? It's harder, if anything."

"Oh-h? Harder? Well, at any rate I suppose you don't dread it so much?"

"I dread it just as much!"

Mary's voice showed that she was becoming a little annoyed, but Uncle Jim apparently did not notice, and kept on with his questions.

"Then you're feeling pretty well again, are you?"

"I'm feeling tired to death! You know I said so at lunch. What do you mean by all these questions, Uncle Jim? Are you making fun of me?"

But every trace of the quizzical smile was gone from Uncle Jim's face.

"I was just trying to find out," he said quietly, "just why any sensible girl waits a week abount doing something that grows harder the longer she waits, and that she dreads more and more. Besides, the delay makes her every day more and more tired. No, don't shake your head, Mary. You would have felt a great deal better physically as well as mentally if you had got that letter off your hands earlier in the week. Did you ever hear the story about the little boy who was sick with all the symptoms of overwork? The doctor asked how much work he had to do. And they said, 'To bring in a bucket of water every day.'

" 'At any particular time?' inquired the doctor.

" 'Well, he is supposed to bring it early in the morning, but he usually puts it off till the last thing at night.'

" 'And brings it in all day long!' said the wise old doctor. 'You make him bring that water in before he has his breakfast, and he'll be all right.'

"And he was!"

Mary laughed in spite of herself. "That's all very well for a small boy," she said, "but for a girl as old as I am it's different."

"How much older do you thing you are than Mr. Howard Carpenter?" inquired Uncle Jim, with one of his surprising conversational changes.

"Older? Why, Mr. Howard Carpenter is as old as father! What do you mean?"

"Simply that he was the one who told me he used it for a watchword. Was me he used it for a watchword. I aws asking him how he managed to get so much done without ever acting tired or showing strain as so many men do. And he said, 'I bring in my bucket of water the first thing in the morning.' Then he explained that for a good many years he had chosen the hardest thing in each day's work, or the thing he dreaded most to do, and had deliberately done that thing first of all—thereby losing neither time nor nervous energy in dreading it. I've determined to adopt the plan, Mary, and I respectfully pass it on to you. And now, since the sermon's over, how about a nice little walk through the woods?"

"Thanks, kind sir," said Mary, with a smile, "but that's no bucket. I'm going now to draw mine; better late than never."—Youth's Companion.

"Let Down the Net."

"Did you ever notice," said an old lady, smiling into the troubled face before her, "that when the Lord told the discouraged fishermen to cast their nets again, it was right in the same old place where they had been working all night and had caught nothing?" If we could only go off to some new place every time we get discouraged, trying again would be an easier thing. If we could be somebody else, or go somewhere else, it might not be hard to have fresh faith and courage; but it is the same old net in the same old pond for most of us. The old temptations are to be overcome, the old faults to be conquered, the old trials and discouragements before which we failed yesterday to be faced again today. We must win success where we are if we win at all, and it is the Master Himself Who, after all these toilful, disheartening efforts that we call failures, bids us "Try again." Those disciples who failed here in faith and power after Pentecost were filled with power for doing just what they had failed to do in the old days.—S. S. Times.

Leave the Miracle to Him.

"Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

Whatsoe'er He bids you, do it.
Though you may not understand,
Yield to Him complete obedience,
Then you'll see His mighty hand:
"Fill the water-pots with water,"
Fill them to the very brim;
He will honor all your trusting—
Leave the miracle to Him.

Bring to Christ your loaves and fishes,
Though they be both few and small,
He will use the weakest vessels,
Give to Him your little all.
Do you ask how many thousands
Can be fed with food so slim,
Listen to the Master's blessing—
Leave the miracle to Him!

Oh, ye Christians, learn the lesson,
Are you struggling all the way,
Cease your moaning, change to trusting
Then you'll triumph every day.
"Whatsoe'er He bids you do it!"
Fill the water-pots to brim;
But remember 'tis His battle—
Leave the miracle to Him!

Christian worker, looking forward
To the toil in harvest field—
Does the task seem great before you?
Think how rich will be the yield!
Bravely enter with your Master,
Though the prospect may seem dim!
Preach the Word with holy fervor—
Leave the miracle to Him!

—Selected.

The test of humility is the capability of bearing a reproof or an affront without either anger or worry of mind. If I can bear a slight reproof on an affront in this spirit, I am slightly humble; if I can bear a great reproof or insult, I am very humble; if I can bear no reproof, no slight of any kind, I have no humility at all.—The Seminary.

It is worth while making any effort, however desperate, to learn to pray.

For the Young Folks

A Boy's Best Rule.

Be honest, lad, in word and deed,
  In all you say and do;
Treat others in your walk of life
  As you'd have them treat you;
Don't steal another's precious time,
  Or blot a spotless name—
You may not think that stealing, 'tis
  Dishonest just the same.

Be true—there's nothing half so grand
  As character of truth;
Let never trace of falsehood stain
  The glory of your youth.
Let every thought your harbor be
  As clear and pure as day,
Sincerity of purpose gleam
  In every word you say.

Be brave—don't be afraid to stand
  Up boldly for the right,
And evil firmly to oppose
  With all your fearless might;
For real courage only fears
  What it is wrong to do—
To live a hero's life, my lad,
  Be honest, brave and true!

—L. M. Montgomery.

Borrowing a Grandmother.

"I've got something you haven't," whimpered little Joe as he took off his boots. Eben and John had been boasting of the pennies they had earned or had had given them, which were in the Orphans' Home bank. Joe had only recently come and had no bank stock. What, then, could he have to boast of?

"What is it," questioned Eben. "Tell, if you dare."

"I ain't got any folks," said John as Joe, lifting his head proudly as he brushed away his tears.

"O, pooh!" said Eben, but he whispered, for they heard the matron coming.

"I aint' got any folks," said John as he struggled into his nightgown. "I wisht I had a gran'mer."

The room held two rows of small white cots, and after the boys had knelt beside them for their evening prayer they scrambled beneath the sheets. There were twenty cots and one boy for each—very lively boys, too, but after the matron had bade them goodnight and turned off the light they had to be very quiet. But Joe's head popped up a moment as he whispered to John, his nearest neighbor, "I'm going to see my gran'mother when Thanksgiving comes."

"Shut your mouth," John returned gruffly, but he did not mean it. He felt so disgraced and alone without any "folks" that his throat ached with the effort to swallow his feelings, and as he cuddled farther into bed, he cried quietly to himself.

If you have ever been in an orphans' home, where home begins with a capital "H," you know that when the bell rings in the morning every child has to jump up quickly, wash and dress, and march down to breakfast when the second bell rings, like so many little soldiers. Twenty boys in the big room where Eben and John and Joe slept, and sixteen girls from another part of the house, made thirty-six children who marched downstairs and took their places at the long tables in the dining-room. They stood while they sang "Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow," then, sitting upon high stools, they ate their oatmeal and milk, bread and butter, and this morning there was a big red apple at each place. You couldn't have found Joe and Eben and John in that crowd of round-headed, blue, black and brown-eyed boys, but they had no difficulty in getting together as usual when they were all turned into the play-room a half hour before chapel.

"Say, Joe, how do you get to your gran'mers?" asked Eben.

"Sometimes my uncle comes and gets me. He lives with her. He's lame, but he drives a cart 'round the city. But I can go alone if I want—I ain't afraid. I go way to the end of the home g round, then I go up a street, an' down a street, an' there you are! She's awful good to me."

"Why don't you live with her then?" Eben asked.

"I did till she couldn't," and Joe shook his head sadly. "It takes too many dollars."

"Be you the only gran—granboy she's got?" asked John.

John nodded, "All dead but me."

John swung back and forth on the bars in silence. Then he said: "Couldn't she be my gran-mer if I—if I should ask her?" and then to cover his emotion he threw himself about like a young monkey.

"That's what I mean," John added quickly, "but she'd be borrowed to keep."

"You might borrow her, but she couldn't be your own," Joe answered deliberately.

"I'll ask her if she'll be your gran-mother, an' Eb's, too, if he wants. Would ye like it, Eb?" asked Joe.

Eben shook his head. "Naw, I've seen 'em, an' they shakes boys."

Joe indignantly denied this charge, and John got near enough to whisper: "I want to borrer her all alone, an' ask her myself. I never even seen a real gran'mer. Won't you take me next time?"

"Can't go till Thanksgivin'. That comes next week, but I don't b'lieve Mr. Foster'll let me take you."

The signal for morning prayers came just then and the boys had to form in line and march to the chapel. But John did not forget. Every day he kept the matter fresh in Joe's mind, and finally they decided that they would just walk out together on Thanksgiving morning without troubling the superintendent. He was very busy, for donations were coming in from every direction for the great New England anniversary—turkeys, chickens, pumpkins, potatoes, apples and all sorts of good things for the little orphans. It was not difficult to slip away, for John had several times been to the nearest store for the cook, but on this morning when he walked out with Joe without being sent his heart thumped very fast. He felt sure that Mr. Foster would not let him go when there was to be such a big dinner, and would not understand how little he cared for that compared with seeing a grandmother. If he explained they might laugh, and John felt that he couldn't bear that. So he trudged off hand in hand with Joe. They walked nearly a mile, and then came to a large house around which Joe led his friend to a basement back door, on which he rapped. It was opened by a short, plump, white-haired woman, whose smiling face won John's heart at once. She had expected Joe, but who was this thin-faced boy with big solemn eyes?

"He wants a gran'mother," explained Joe as she kissed him, "and couldn't you be it?"

Now this grandmother was old and poor, but she had a warm heart, so she said: "Why, of course I can! Come right in," and she kissed John as she led them into the kitchen. Joe's uncle sat reading his paper beside the stove, and when Joe told him that John wanted to borrow a grandmother he laughed and said he never heard of borrowing relations before, but he guessed there would be turkey enough to go 'round, and they would call it a family party. But when he found that John had run away, he put on his hat, saying that he had better see the superintendent before it was reported to the police.

Joe's mind was greatly relieved when his uncle limped away, and he and John sat down on a couch at one end of the room. There was a delicious odor in the air, and Joe explained that a turkey was roasting in "that there oven." John had never been in a real home kitchen before, for the poor little fellow was born in a home with a big "H," and he looked around with much interest. The stove was brightly polished, and at the front were two kettles in which something bubbled merrily. On the floor were round braided rugs, on one of which was a maltese cat with a tiny kitten jumping around her. A tall clock on a shelf in one corner was lazily ticking. Joe told John that it ticked a great deal slower than the Home clock, which made the days at his grandmother's longer. Joe also told him about the pictures on the wall. Over the clock were two pictures of little girls—"Wide Awake" and "Fast Asleep," which John thought were beautiful; while above the round table where the work-basket sat was "The Good Shepherd," which Joe explained meant the One in the shepherd psalm they had learned at the Home.

Grandmother Brown had been busy in her pantry beating, and chopping, and mixing, but she came out with a plate of ginger snaps," "Because," she said, "I'm afraid my gran'children will get hungry before the turkey is done."

But soon grandmother exclaimed: "This turkey is done to a turn!" and then was heard a musical sizzling as the dripping pan was taken out and the crisp, brown bird was placed on a platter and set back in the oven again. The boys watched while the gravy was made, the potatoes and squash nicely mashed and seasoned, John proudly holding the salt and pepper shakers until all was ready. O, what a dinner that was! Uncle Sam sat at one end of the table and carved the turkey, which had been sent in by a kind lady for whom grandmother had once worked. Grandmother herself helped the vegetables, and Joe, with greatest care, lifted a spoonful of cranberry jelly into each cunning old-fashioned sauce-plate. There were a few stalks of celery, most of which went to the boys, and for dessert delicious apple pie and cheese. They were all hungry and ate heartily until all were fully satisfied—and more. Then Joe and John curled up on the couch, and grandmother told them a true bear story, and one about herself—how she was lost all night in the Maine woods when she was a little girl. She told them, too, about the first Thanksgiving in 1621, when the Pilgrims in old Plymouth went out and shot wild turkeys for the great dinner to which they invited their neighbors, the friendly Indians. You can imagine how John listened!

Uncle Sam hated to interrupt this pleasant hour, but he said: "You see, I promised the superintendent I'd have this 'ere runaway back by 4 o'clock."

O, dear! John had scarcely thought of his wrong-doing all day, but how his face grew very sober. But Uncle Sam laughed as he said: "I made it all right when I went 'round there, and they'll be easy this time, but don't ye ever run away again. 'Taint right no way you can fix it."

"I don't want to go back," said John. "I like to live this way—with folks."

"Well, dear," and grandmother patted the small brown hand that had grasped her apron. "I'm going to tell a good lady I know about you. I won't say any more, but you tell the Lord what you want and be a good boy till He gets ready to give you a real home."

"I will. I'll say 'Thy kingdom come' lots o' times," and he put his arms around her neck, kissing her good-by, and whispering: "You're my gran'mer now, ain't you?"

Joe smiled in a superior way as he waited his turn, then as John turned away rubbing his eyes on his bit of a handkerchief, he whispered:

"John's had an awful good Thanksgiving, and I don't care if he does call you his gran'mother, but you won't forget that you're only borrowed, will you?"—Christian Advocate.

CARDS FOR SPREADING SCRIPTURE INFLUENCE

Prepared by AMOS R. WELLS.

Exquisite in Design. Printed on Excellent Stock. Put up in packets of six, all different designs and subjects, at 20c per pack. Separate numbers sold at $2.00 per 100.

BIBLE PRESCRIPTIONS
These suggest pertinent Bible portions for persons suffering from such maladies as:

TROUBLE	SORROW	WORRY
FAILURE	DOUBTS	ANGER

THE CHRISTIAN'S FELLOWSHIP GREETINGS
Well-selected Bible Texts and friendly sentiments, exxpressed in appropriate verses, make these cards helpful in extending Christian fellowship.

BIBLE MEMORY HELPERS
These present a method of familiarizing oneself with the great passages of the Bible, resulting in a considerable amount of Bible knowledge and a taste for still more of that fascinating pursuit.

It is easily conceived that the free distribution of these effective agents of good cheer among friends and relatives, business, Sunday school and church associates, neighbors and even strangers will accomplish much good.

GOODENOUGH & WOGLOM CO.
CHURCH & SUNDAY SCHOOL SPECIALTIES
14 VESEY STREET NEW YORK CITY

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

Walking On—What?

"I'm sick and tired of that old office!" grumbled the boy as he dropped down beside his companion and gazed discontentedly across the lovely little valley spread out before his unseeing eyes. "I've tramped all the afternoon without mentioning it, because I promised you I wouldn't, Uncle Jim; but I don't like it a bit better on that account; you can bank on that."

"Is that so?" inquired Uncle Jim reflectively. "That's too bad, now. Just what seems to be the trouble, Billy? Work too hard?"

"No," admitted Billy slowly, "it's not that—not usually. The trouble is you never know where you are. One day everything goes like a breeze, and you think things are fine; the next, everybody is fussy. You can't do a thing that suits any one; the manager criticizes that, and the boss criticizes everycizs that, and the boss criticizes everything. The next day everybody starts in to drive you. It's do this and do that; run here and run there; and then everybody gets cross and blames you for things you never did at all. The next day it's something else—fair weather again, maybe—but I can tell you this much, Uncle Jim, I'm not going to stand it much longer. It's getting on my nerves."

"Humph!" responded Uncle Jim thoughtfully. "Does sound rather trying. And yet we thought you were pretty lucky to get into that office, didn't we?—a boy just out of high school without much if any commercial training. Thought it might be a stepping-stone to something pretty good later on, didn't we?"

Billy nodded. "Ye-es," he agreed.

"And that view of the question hasn't changed?"

"No-o," admitted Billy honestly, "I don't suppose it has, only—"

But Uncle Jim kept right on. "The path is still a straight one," he mused, "and it leads right up to the hill you want to climb. But the walking isn't quite so good as you looked for. It's rough in spots—rocky and slippery and the like. And you rather expected asphalt all the way." Uncle Jim turned abruptly to Billy. "What did you walk on coming up this hill?" he asked.

Billy looked amazed. "Why, grass and rocks, of course," he said in a puzzled tone.

"And out there on the country roads?"

"Sand, mostly."

"And over yonder in the woods?"

"Well, over there we had a stretch of pretty muddy going. But what has that got to do with it?"

Uncle Jim only smiled. "And back there in town before we struck the country?" he persisted.

"Why, sidewalks, of course; some concrete and some stone. But what—"

"You think you've been telling me the truth, of course," said Uncle Jim. "But if you'd been walking on all those things you speak of, Billy, I should be sorry for your feet by this time. You've been walking on the same thing, Billy, ever since you left home, and that one thing is leather. You had the good sense to bring your own good pavement along with you—else you never would have held out so far as this, let alone enjoying our tramp. But it looks to me as if you were walking along the business road on very tender bare feet—no wonder you feel the rough places. What you

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

LEARN MUSIC AT HOME

Don't Be a "Wall Flower"

Piano, Organ, Violin, Cornet, Guitar, Banjo, Mandolin, Harp, 'Cello, Trombone, Flute, Clarinet, Piccolo, Saxophone, Ukelele, Sight Singing, Harmony and Composition, Hawaiian Steel Guitar, Tenor Banjo, Drum and Traps.

No longer need the ability to play be shut out of your life. Just mail coupon or postal to-day for our new Free Book. Let us tell you how you can easily, quickly, thoroughly learn to play your favorite musical instrument by note in your own home, without a teacher by our New Improved Home Study Method. Different, easier than private teacher way—no tiresome, dry exercises—no inconvenience, no trick music, no "numbers," yet simple, wonderful, amazingly easy for a mere child.

SPECIAL OFFER

We want to have ONE PUPIL IN EACH LOCALITY AT ONCE to help advertise our wonderful, easy system of teaching music.

We therefore offer our marvelous lessons and charge only for postage and sheet music. Beginners or advanced pupils. Get all the proof, facts, letters from pupils. AMAZING OFFER and fascinating New Book just issued. ALL FREE! Write postal to-day. Instruments supplied when needed, cash or credit.

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
371 Brunswick Bldg., New York

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC,
371 Brunswick Bldg., New York.

Please send me your free book, "Music Lessons in your own home," and particulars of special offer

Name_____
(Please print name)

Address_____

City_____State_____

the English Army. An English foraging party had invaded the farm belonging to Major Rudulph and carried off a valuable cow, the especial pet of Anne Rudulph, twelve years old. When the English soldiers took the cow she implored them to spare it; then, failing to move them, she rushed to the stable, saddled her spirited pony and galloped off to the quarters of the English general, Cornwallis, hoping to reach him before her pet cow would be killed. When she reached the British lines, the guard demanded her business.

"I must see the general at once."

"But I must know your business before I can let you pass. The general must not be troubled by trifles. Where have you come from?"

"From Darby, and my business is to see the general at once; no one can

JUST READY

The Valiant Heart

By E. M. TENISON

12mo. 280 pages. Cloth net, $2.00

Mr. Gorham presents this work by Miss Tenison, an author hitherto writing under a non de plume. It is felt that a large part of the reading public is ready to welcome another religious romance as it did Ben Hur and Quo Vadis. This romance is of equal merit with those by Wallace, Sienkiewicz and Florence Kingsley. The hero is Britic, son of the King of West Alba, in what is now Scotland. The style is a majestic, rhythmical prose—well suited to the theme as it marches along in a cadenced movement, appearing almost like a translation from an old legend in epic form.

EDWIN S. GORHAM, Publisher
11 West 45th Street, New York

need, Billy, is to carry your good sense into business. Get a pair of shoes for office wear. Cover up the bare feet and walk every day and all day long on your own good leather!"

Billy smiled sheepishly. "I see the point, Uncle Jim," he said. "What kind of shoes do you mean?"

Uncle Jim smiled in response. "Well, three qualities that wear pretty well are good humor, efficiency and perseverance; but buy your own shoes, Billy; I ought not to pick them out for you. Only don't forget that it's not party pumps you're looking for, but real boots for a good, long, stiff, cross-country hike—that's business, as I know it."—Youth's Companion.

I Want My Cow.

Yes, a long time ago; it was in 1777 that a brave little girl and a brave English general met each other, and all about a cow! It was during the war of American Independence when Lord Cornwallis was general of tell him but myself," cried the excited child. It was late in the day and Lord Cornwallis was with a number of officers when the child was brought to him.

He said kindly, "Well, child, I am the general. What do you want?"

"I want my cow."

There was deep silence, and then roars of laughter from the officers. The young girl's eyes flashed, but she stood firm.

"Why did your father not come?" asked the general.

She replied, "My father is from home, but general, while you keep me here they may be killing my cow."

"And where are your brothers?" asked the general.

"The eldest is with General Gates, the second is with Harry Lee," she replied, "and my father is with General Washington."

"So, then, I think you are a little rebel," said the general.

"Yes, sir, but—I want my cow."

Lord Cornwallis was a noble gentleman. He said: "You are a brave child; you shall have your cow, and something more." Then, stooping, he detached one of his diamond shoe buckles, and gave it to her, saying, "Keep this, and remember Lord Cornwallis can appreciate courage and truth, even in a little rebel."

So Anne had her cow again, and her descendants still treasure the gift of Lord Cornwallis to her.—Our Dumb Animals.

An Overlooked Opportunity.

"Lillian," said mother severely, "there were two pieces of cake in the pantry, and now there is only one. How did that happen?"

"I don't know," said Lillian. "It must have been so dark that I didn't see the other piece."—Exchange.

5 Great Novelties 20 cts.

AUTUMN GLORY. A new hardy plant. The most showy Autumn bloomer, surpassing all others. It is the latest to bloom, showing its full glory after frost has killed all tender flowers. Greatest novelty in twenty years. Succeeds everywhere, reaching perfection the first season from seed, and continues blooming for years. 20 cts. per pkt.

With each order we send one trial packet each of: PINK WOOLFLOWERS, new — nothing can surpass the mass of pink flowers which it shows all season.

DAHLIA LORD GOFF, lilac pink, in great profusion. Blooms in 3 to 4 months.

JAPAN IRIS, new hybrids of all colors. Magnificent.

DIENER TOMATO, grows to weigh 3 lbs. As smooth and beautiful as an apple. Most startling new vegetable.

And our Big Catalog, all for 20 cts.

Big Catalog, free. All flower and vegetable seeds, bulbs, plants and new berries. We grow the finest Gladioli, Dahlias, Cannas, Irises, Peonies, Perennials, Shrubs, Vines, etc. All prize strains—many sterling novelties.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc. Floral Park, N.Y

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address:

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

THE PATHFINDER, 4006 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

To abort a cold and prevent complications take

Calotabs

The purified and refined calomel tablets that are nauseless, safe and sure.

Medicinal virtues retained and improved. Sold only in sealed packages. Price 35c.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.

Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage

Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 843

BEVERLEY HEATING
Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL
OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

Cuticura Soap
SHAVES
Without Mug
Cuticura Soap is the favorite for safety razor shaving.

RESERVATIONS FOR EUROPE
NEXT SPRING AND SUMMER
Should be made early in order to secure good space
Telephone Randolph 155, or Write
C. O. ALLEY
STEAMSHIP AND TOURIST AGENT
830 East Main Street Successor to The Richmond Transfer Co.

You Will

be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company
The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

FOR QUICK SERVICE CALL RANDOLPH 1978-W
We Clean One Small Rug Free as a Trial
Electric Carpet Cleaning Co.
W. F. POAT
16 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.
Carpets and Rugs Washed and Dried right on the floor!
Hamilton Beach method used exclusively—the nationally advertised way.
Called For and Delivered

HERBERT L. CAIN CHURCH ARCHITECT
12 North Ninth Street, -:- Richmond, Va.
The Needs of the Sunday School, the Law of the Architect
Address Dept. 4

Jno. L. Williams & Sons
BANKERS and BROKERS
Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank
Richmond, Virginia

"The Store that Pleases"
FOR FURNITURE
Jones Bros. & Co.
Incorporated
1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer
AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE
Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va., nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate. Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES, $1.50, $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

CATHEDRAL STUDIO, ENGLISH Church embroideries and materials. Stoles with crosses, $7; plain, $5.50; handsome gift stoles, $12 up; burse and veil, $15, $20. Surplices and exquisite altar linens. L. V. Mackrille, 2604 Thirty-sixth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Tel. Chev. 1915.

I take this method of thanking my many clients for their past patronage, and assure them I am still selling Spirella corsets, and can be reached at the Wallerstein, Apartment 202, or by phone, Randolph 3694-W. MISS MYRTLE McDONNELL.

MISS M. M. TYLER, EXCLUSIVE MILLINERY. Now located at 209 North Foushee (Arcade Building), where she will be glad to have her customers call and inspect her mid-winter offerings. All $15 Hats at $5.00 to 7.00. All $10.00 Hats at $3.98.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 2397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

UPHOLSTERING.

We are making a specialty of pure South American curled hair and silk floss mattresses and box springs; our own make. Jacob Umlauf, 1326 West Broad, Richmond, Va. Boul. 725.

STORAGE TRANSFER.

We pack and ship furniture, china and wedding presents; estimates cheerfully given. Jacob Umlauf, 1326 West Broad, Boul. 725.

TRY RAW SHELLED PEANUTS FOR CHRONIC CONSTIPATION.

A wonderful remedy for children and adults, especially the aged and persons who cannot take exercise. Four pound package, native grown P-nuts, $1.00, postpaid. Directions in each package. PARCEL POST P-NUT CO., Box 134, Franklin, Va.

FOR SALE—BRUNSWICK RECORD, NO. 5006, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere, $1.00; No. 5017, Abide With Me, $1.00; both double-faced ten-inch records. Brunswick Records play on all steel needle machines. Phone your orders in. Rowlett Phonograph Co., 416 West Broad Street. Mad. 215.

SCHOOL OF NURSING.

The Children's Hospital, Washington, D. C., 150 beds, gives a three-year course in all departments, including adult work. Accredited school. Class entering March first. Address Superintendent of Nurses.

JUST RECEIVED

A new supply of

"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR,"

By Bowie.

Price $1.25 Postpaid.

Southern Churchman,

Richmond, Va.

STORAGE AND TRANSFER.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Hendricks: Entered into rest eternal in Charleston, S. C., October 1, 1920, CARRIE ANNA HENDRICKS, daughter of the late Henry W. and Cordreann Ackis Hendricks. Funeral service held in Hibben Methodist Church, Mt. Pleasant, conducted by Rev. S. Cary Beckwith, of St. Philip's Church, assisted by Rev. Sanders Guinard. Interment "Magnolia."

Harvey: Died at her residence in Salem, Va., on Monday, January 10, 1921, MRS. CHARLOTTE MITCHELL HARVEY, in her ninety-second year.

After a long and well-spent life she hath entered into the peace which remaineth for the children of God. Amen.

A. R. G.

Brooke: In Seattle, Wash., on December 27, 1920, ELEANOR BROOKE, aged seventy-eight years, twenty-four days, only sister of the late Bishop of Oklahoma. Interment in Spring Grove, Cincinnati.

"Eternal peace grant to her, O Lord!"

GEORGIE CARMICHAEL BOWEN.

On Christmas Eve the soul of GEORGIE CARMICHIAL BOWEN entered in to the Paradise of God, at her home at Remington, Va. She had a quiet dignity, a refined intellectual taste and a sweet and gentle nature that endeared her to all who knew her. Her optimism, her fortitude and her Christian faith are the precious heritage she leaves to her family and friends. She gave ner life in joyous and unselfish devotion to the Master's cause.

For all Thy saints who from their labors rest,
Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest
Alleluia.

AN APPRECIATION.

(Written by Clarke Wallace, Aged Twelve Years, in Remembrance of His Beloved Mammy, Judy Dabney.

The Life of Judy Dabney.

She was born in the year 1838, on the 9th day of May, over one-score years before the Civil War. When about nine years old she was sold to a Mrs. Thurston, whom she called her mistress, and said she had taught her all she had known. When about twenty-one she married a man named Jordan Dabney, of Gloucester County, in the year 1860, on Christmas Eve day. She had four sons and one daughter, whom all died in their younger ages except one son, whose name was Colin, and he lived to be about thirty years of age. Her husband died in the year 1870. Then Mr. Maxwell T. Clarke told her to come to Richmond to live with Mr. Clarke, and nursed his three daughters, whose names were Ellen, Bland and Grace. Ellen and Bland being twins, and they were eighteen months old, Grace being nine years old. When Grace got married she went to live with her. She had one son, whose name was Maxwell T. Wallace. Then when Ellen got married she left Grace and went with Ellen until she died. She first nursed John, then Ellen, then Elizabeth, and last Clarke, who ever after she looked at as a second mother. She was always willing. She didn't have any faults. She staid with my mother and never left her until the end, when God called her to Him, and she obeyed Him. She never failed to do what you asked her to do. She never, as I know of, told a lie, and above all she was a good, faithful, obedient and willing mammy to all that knew her. When she at last went into God's hands she was about eighty-one years old. She died in the home of Mr. Gordon Wallace, in the year 1921, on the 8th day of January, at 9:15 P. M. Her funeral was held at the home at 1 P. M., and all that knew her as a friend, both white and colored, were invited to attend it.

(The End.)

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

We acknowledge the following contributions to relief of famine sufferers in China:

Mrs. L. W. Cabell, Bremo Bluff, Va.	$ 2.50
Mrs. F. L. Marshall, White Plains, N. Y.	5.00
"Member of Grace Church," Drakes Branch, Va.	10.00
Miss Preston Ambler, Lynchburg, Va.	1.00
Miss E. E. Vernon, Frederick, Md.	1.00
F. D. Lee, Washington, D. C.	30.00

To Near East Relief Fund:

Mrs. L. W. Cabell, Bremo Bluff, Va.	$ 2.50
Miss Preston Ambler, Lynchburg, Va.	1.00

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

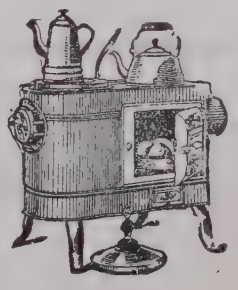
112 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING



Mail Orders a Specialty

Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL

311 North Second Street

Phone Randolph 1286-W

COSBY'S AIR-TIGHT BAKER AND HEATER

2-In-1 STOVE

Chas. H. Cosby

Plumber and Tinner

2414 Beverly Street

To Keep Every Family In Touch

The aim of The Church at Work is not only to give information of the work of the Church to everyone in the Church, but also to keep everyone in touch with the work.

It is the only medium through which the whole Church can be reached, and it would be hard to overestimate the value to the Church and the work of the Church if The Church at Work could be established as a universal medium in the Church.

If it has failed so far to become a universal medium, it is because in some parishes the paper is not thoroughly distributed, being handed out at a service or left in a pile at the Church door or perhaps not distributed at all.

In order to avoid unnecessary waste, the Department of Publicity has been obliged to give notice that after the February issue shipments of the paper will not be made to those parishes in which the paper does not have thorough distribution.

The method of distribution in the parish is of course determined by the rector, but it is hoped that eventually every rector will decide that the best method of distribution is by adult visitors who deliver the papers personally to the homes of the parish. The reports from the field indicate that the great majority of parishes have adopted this method.

Two Questions

a. Why distribute The Church at Work thoroughly?

1. Because it is the official paper of the Presiding Bishop and Council.
2. Because it will carry the story of the work of the whole Church to all the people of the Church.
3. Because it will keep the indifferent and uninformed in touch with the work.
4. Because where the paper is not distributed, its underlying purpose is defeated.

b. Why distribute by adult visitors?

1. Because boys and girls cannot establish personal contact.
2. Because mailing cannot establish personal contact.
3. Because distribution at a service cannot establish personal contact with those who do not attend.
4. Because leaving the papers at the church door to be picked up does not establish personal contact with anybody.

Do you want The Church at Work to continue to come to your parish?

Have you asked the rector how you can help in this distribution?

Presiding Bishop and Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church
Publicity Department, 281 Fourth Avenue

Personal Notes

Dean Ladd, of the Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., has appointed as Lecturer in Theology for the coming term the Very Rev. John W. Nichols, dean of the Theological Department of St. John's University, China. Dean Nichols will come into residence at the beginning of the new term, January 31.

The Rev. A. R. Mitchell, who resigned the Archdeaconry of the Charleston Convocation and accepted a call to St. James' and St. Andrew's Missions, Greenville, entered upon his new work on January 1.

Rev. E. W. Halleck, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Louisville, Ky., has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Globe, Ariz., and expects to take charge the first Sunday in March.

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE

CARPETS DRAPERIES

The Emerson Shoe

HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes

THE CORRECTOR

And

EMERSON LASTS

A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special

at $7.25

Send us your size

Woodall & Quarles

7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Have You Made Your Will?

See G. Jeter Jones, Vice-President, about this now. All conferences confidential. Phone or write for appointment.

Merchants National Bank

11th and Main Streets, Richmond, Va.

"SAFEST FOR TRUSTS"

THE BRIGHT SIDE

The months of uncertainty have been followed by lower prices. Factories are opening up and conditions are nearing normal. Sound securities are now being offered at lower prices than ever before. May we send you description of

3 Public Utility Bonds to Yield 6½% to 8%
3 Preferred Stocks to Yield 7% to 8%

EARNEST E. SMITH & CO.

Specialists in New England Securities

52 Devonshire Street, Boston

Members New York and Boston Stock Exchanges

What Do You Expect When You Put Money In The Bank?

Absolute Protection and Safety, Don't You?

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, with capital, surplus and profits of two million dollars, offers absolute protection and safety to its customers.

With more money in this country than ever before you cannot afford to keep your dollars idle.

Put them in this strong National Bank, where they will earn money for you, keep the wheels turning, and help bring prosperity to the people.

American National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

N. B.—You can send your deposits by registered letter, money order or check. The records of this Bank prove that you run no risk in banking by mail.

The Rev. Randolph F. Blackford, who resigned the rectorate of St. Bartholomew's Church, Hartsville, S. C., has at the Bishop's request undertaken the work at North Charleston and Chicora.

The Department of Missions has accepted the resignation of the Rev. Thomas C. Henningsen as a member of the Philippine Mission. Mr. Henningsen went to the field in 1916.

The Rev. W. Everett Johnson has resigned the rectorship of Christ Church, La Crosse, Wis., after a term of nine years, and has accepted the position of Secretary of Religious Education in the Diocese of West Texas. He enters upon his new duties January 20, his address after that date being San Benito, Tex. For the present he will have charge of All Saints' Church at San Benito.

The Rev. L. H. Kirkby has been appointed to take charge of St. John's Church, Kissimmee, Fla.

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street

Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd

Richmond, Va.

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS

Highest grade instruments. In use in three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is to be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.

M. P. MÖLLER

Hagerstown, Maryland

CHURCH VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Surplices, Stoles

EMBROIDERIES

Silks, Cloths, Fringes

CLERICAL SUITS

Rabats, Collars, Shirts

COX SONS & VINING

72 Madison Avenue New York

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

Gold, Silver and Brass

Church and Chancel Furniture

Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches

W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.

138 Third Street. Milwaukee, Wis.

R. Geissler, Inc.

56 West Eighth Street, New York

Memorials

FOR THE CHURCH

Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South

We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival

The Couper Marble Works

(Established 65 years)

264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.

Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent

E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend

PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN

Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.

With an Introduction by

THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

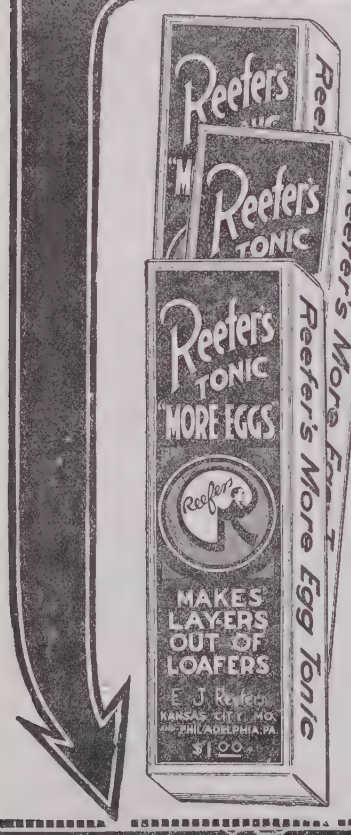
"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,



Richmond, Va.

50 Eggs a Day!

PRICES of eggs are still going up. Already in the larger cities eggs are selling as high as $1.00 a dozen. Poultry raisers with eggs to sell are going to make big money. You can be one of these—you can insure yourself a big egg yield by giving your hens a few cents' worth of "MORE EGGS" tonic.

800,000 chicken raisers have tried, tested and approved this wonderful egg stimulator. Thousands proclaim it the greatest egg producer on the market today. Don't delay in starting its use. Egg prices are soaring. This is the time of all times to get more eggs. Every day you wait means money lost. Start with a few cents worth of "MORE EGGS" Tonic now!

Got 117 Eggs Instead of 3

That's the experience of one poultry raiser who wrote me. And Mrs. Myrtle Ice of Boston, Ky., writes: "I was only getting 12 eggs a day and now get 50". Here are a few letters out of thousands:

160 Hens—1500 Eggs

I have fed 2 boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and I think they have broken the egg record. I have 160 white Leghorns and in exactly 21 days I got 125 dozen eggs.—MRS. H. M. PATTON, Waverly, Mo.

8988 Eggs From 125 Hens

Since using the "More Eggs" I have got more eggs than at any time I have been in the poultry business, about 30 years. Since March 15th to Nov. 16th I have marketed 740 dozen and only have 126 hens. I highly recommend "More Eggs" Tonic to all poultry raisers.—MRS. W. S. DEAHL, Exline, Iowa.

"More Eggs Paid the Pastor

I can't express in words how much I have been benefitted by "More Eggs". I've paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and that is not all—I paid my pastor his dues. I sold 42 1-2 dozen eggs last week, set 4 doz., ate some and had 11-2 doz. left.—MRS. LENA McBROON, Woodbury, Tenn.

Banker Endorses "More Eggs"

Some time ago I got from you "More Eggs" and it means MORE EGGS. I am now fully convinced of its utility. I have 14 pullets and 14 hens one year old and the first 10 days in December they laid 11 dozen eggs. Yours very truly, H. F. POHLAND, Pres., The Citizens' Bank of Ashland, Oregon.

27 Eggs Instead of 1

I began feeding "MORE EGGS" Tonic to my hens in November. At that time I was getting one egg every other day. Then on December 5th I brought in 27, which is pretty good for this time of the year. I think "MORE EGGS" Tonic is fine.—MRS. E. H. PALMER, Dundee, Michigan.

Doubles Egg Production

I have been using "MORE EGGS" Tonic 3 or 4 weeks now. My egg production has been doubled.—J. C. KOENINGEE, Paradise, Texas.

FREE These 3 $1 Packages

Results Guaranteed

The Million Dollar Merchants Bank of Kansas City, Mo., backs my absolute guarantee that "MORE EGGS" will produce satisfactory results, that you will be satisfied in every way or your money back at any time within 30 days. You do not run the slightest risk.

To start you using my wonderful "MORE EGGS" Tonic, I am slashing the price! Seize this opportunity to get three $1.00 packages free. I want you to begin using using it right now when it will do you the most good—when your hens have stopped laying—when prices are sky high—when getting eggs from your hens means dollars in your pocket. Fill the coupon out now. I make this wonderful offer to get you to try "More Eggs". Read our guarantee! What could be fairer?

How to Get These Three FREE Packages

Fill in and mail the coupon below. When I receive it I will send you five $1 packages of "MORE EGGS". You pay the postman for only two of them, the other three packages are FREE. You can keep the extra packages, or better still, sell them—and you more than get your money back.

3 Packages Free

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 7531 Reefer Bldg. Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Reefer:—I accept your offer. Send me five $1.00 packages of Reefer's "MORE EGGS", for which I agree to pay the postman $2.00 when he brings me the five packages. You agree to refund me $2.00 at any time within 30 days if all of these packages do not prove satisfactory in every way.

Name.....

Address.....

.....

You may send $2.00 cash with this coupon if you prefer

Send No Money

Just Mail This Coupon Don't send any money; just fill in and mail coupon. Think of the cut in prices! On this special offer, my price is not $1.00 but 40c—5 packages for only $2.00. Don't delay. Prices are going up. The more eggs you get the more money you make. Results guaranteed. Read the letters of what others have done. Your hens can do the same for you. Insure yourself plenty of eggs this winter. Get plenty of tested and tried Reefer's "More Eggs" Tonic. Get this miracle egg making product at these cut prices. Act now. Send coupon today—without delay.

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert,
7531 Reefer Building
Kansas City, Missouri

Southern Churchman

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 29, 1921. No. 5

A Prayer

Use me, O God, in Thy great harvest-field,
Which stretcheth far and wide like a wide sea.
The gath'rers are so few, I fear the precious yield
Will suffer loss. Oh, find a place for me;
A place where best the strength I have will tell.
It may be one the other toilers shun;
Be it a wide or narrow place, 'tis well,
So that the work it holds be only done.

Christina G. Rossetti.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary

Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-second year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1920. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., RECTOR

ST. MARY'S, An Episcopal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

VIRGINIA, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate Catalogue and views.

B. D. TUCKER, D. D., President; REV. C. O. PREDEN D. D., Rector: Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B. Sweet Briar, A. M. Columbia, Prin.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Published at
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.
LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D.....Associate Editor
REV R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COCKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918 $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 10 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"The truth is the only thing that cannot be improved upon."

Religion is the best armor a man can have, but it is the worst cloak.—Bunyan

It is not my imperfect love to Christ which comforts me, but His perfect love to me.—R. Besser.

We are remembered more by tenderness of heart than by brilliancy of speech.

No man has come to greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to the race.—Phillips Brooks.

Get people to believe that it is indeed more blessed to give than to receive, and the church entertainment will die a sudden death.

Life is short and we have never too much time for gladdening the hearts of those who are traveling the same dark journey with us. Oh, be swift to love! Make haste to be kind.—Amiel.

Every faithful pastor needs a Bethany, to which he can resort from the "strife of tongues," and opposition of uncongenial people, and find rest and refreshment among real friends, who understand him, and give sympathy and encouragement in his word.

Our wishes are the true touch-stone of our estate; such as we wish to be we are. Worldly hearts affect earthly things; spiritual, divine. We cannot better know what we are indeed than by what would be.—Bishop Hall.

What breaks up all other ties has no such effect on the friendship of Jesus. Friends walk arm in arm till they come to the grave, and then one of them resumes his solitary path. Our Lord said of him who died, "He sleepeth," recognizing the friendship as still existing. The objects of Christ's affection, when taken out of the world, are brought into closer union with Himself. So it was with Enoch: today he "walked with God" on earth; tomorrow he walked with Him in heaven.—J. Eadie.

It is the command of Jesus that all men who believe in His principles, and wish to see them established in the hearts and homes of men, must come out from the crowd, be baptized into His name, and march and fight together against the hierarchy of the night.

The sins we older people commit against children are legion, and they grow up to the standards we have set before them. The truth had little chance to develop in the child who was taken to the stores by her mother, and the next given a note to the teacher, "Please excuse Mary's absence yesterday, as she was sick." Or the child who was "four in the street car, five at home, and six at school."

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLESTOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Founded by Bishop Alonzo Potter in 1862.

Special students admitted. Privilege of attending course of special study at the University of Pennsylvania.

For information address the Rev. George G. Bartlett, S. T. D., Dean, 5000 Woodland Avenue.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., JANUARY 29, 1921. No. 5

THE CRIME WAVE AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

Ever since the days when the unjust steward faced the loss of his position with that despairing cry, "What shall I do, for my Lord taketh away the stewardship from me? I cannot dig. To beg, I am ashamed," idleness has been the prolific seed-bed of vice.

Of course, we always have with us a certain number of people who will not work, today there are thousands who cannot work because there is no work for them to do, and this is one of the reasons why we hear so much about a "crime wave."

Persons who do not pause to think and to look at the world, the whole world, and not just the little part of it in which they happen to live, may get a pessimistic view of the spiritual progress of mankind.

There is a class who require very little temptation to induce them to stray from the paths of righteousness, and most of what we are reading in our papers today about "hold-ups," "robberies," "burglaries," and so forth is the direct result of the present industrial situation, and conditions will right themselves when work becomes plentiful again.

Remember that Biblical character above referred to immediately branched out, and was not content with stealing himself, when he lost his position, but proceeded to seduce others into accepting falsified figures. The world has not changed so very much since those days, and today we are seeing the development of exactly the situation which our Saviour pictured when He showed us how one idle man could lead many astray.

M.

EPIPHANY—ARMENIA.

We have been constantly reading these two words lately, the one in the church on our hymn-boards, and the other in the headlines of the newspapers.

Many of us are not aware, however, that there is a close connection between the two, but in looking up the earliest celebrations of the Epiphany season one finds that its prestige was established as far back as early in the fourth century and is attested by the following paragraph from an article on the history of this season: "In Jerusalem, according to the Epistle of Macarius to the Armenians (A. D. 330), the feast was kept with zeal and splendor, and was with Easter and Pentecost a favorite season for baptisms."

This brings to our attention two things of interest, first the long period through which the Armenians have courageously held to the Christian religion, in spite of the most bitter persecutions.

And secondly, the antiquity and ancient importance of the Feast of the Epiphany which in modern times has somewhat lost its prominence and has been overshadowed by Christmas on the one side and Easter on the other.

In the early days we find the word, both in Greek and Latin frequently used in the plural, the epiphanies or the manifestations of Christ.

These plural manifestations are brought out clearly in our beloved old Book of Common Prayer, where the selections for the Gospels for the first four Sundays of this season each present a different aspect of the showing forth of our Saviour's powers and mission.

Thus, on the first Sunday after Epiphany we have the account of His answer to His mother, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business" (Luke 2:41), showing the great purpose for which He had come into the world.

On the next Sunday we have the account of the first miracle at Cana, when the water was turned to wine and "this beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee and manifested forth His glory, and His disciples believed on Him."

On the third Sunday that portion of the eighth chapter of St. Matthew's record is taken which tells us of Christ's healing of the leper after the Sermon on the Mount, and of the cure of the centurion's servant of palsy when He came to Capernaum, thus showing His power over the human body even to the extent of driving out the most incurable of diseases.

The following Sunday (and the season rarely extends past the fourth), we are given another, and perhaps the most remarkable demonstration of power, for this time it is the very elements He subjects to His command and orders the storm upon the lake to cease so that there was a great calm, and the men marveled, saying, "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him"?

It is well that we should not pass from this important and ancient Church season without realizing how beautifully our Prayer Book uses it to bring to our attention the manifold and marvelous attributes of our dear Saviour and the way in which they were always displayed and manifested for the benefit of those around Him, whom He loved.

M.

HELP A GOOD CAUSE.

One of our correspondents in this week's issue gives some startling, almost horrifying, data about the opium trade with China. About three weeks ago another correspondent wrote on this subject, not only pointing out the evil but showing the way to a remedy.

His suggestion is that Christian people should urge the passage of the Jones-Miller bill now pending in both houses of Congress.

Under the provisions of this bill the traffic in the raw material of morphia, heroin and cocaine will be prohibited, except under the strict regulation of the United States Health Service for strictly medicinal purposes.

Interested people can help along the cause of protecting our eastern neighbors from the influence of this deadly drug, against which they themselves are making such a gallant struggle, by writing to their Congressmen in both branches urging support of the Jones-Miller bill. M.

A NORTHERN LIGHT.

Probably no man in the world has so wonderfully combined the healing of bodies with the saving of souls as has Dr. William T. Grenfel, of the Labrador Medical Mission.

His is the only missionary effort which may be thought of as rousing interest in more than one nation, and the International Grenfel Association (305 Broadway, New York City), is now endeavoring to raise an endowment fund of more than a million and a half dollars to make permanent the institutional work which Dr. Grenfel and his associates have established in the Far North, and so relieve them from the constant strain of having to raise the funds to continue their work.

Dr. Grenfel is now on a lecture tour of this country with this end in view. He is able to present an extraordinary list of achievements, for his missionary activities now include the establishment and equipment of six small hospitals, three nursing stations, one hospital ship and four hospital launches.

The mission last year treated twelve thousand patients. A splendid seaman's house, built at a cost of $200,000, is now self-supporting, but the above named institutions with four industrial stations and a children's home required a budget of $81,000 for their maintenance in 1919.

This financial requirement would be far greater but for the fact that nine-tenths of the work is carried on by volunteers, many of whom are graduates of American colleges.

The work has become so extensive, and is so generally recognized among the natives, that every man who is not in fisherman's clothes is looked upon as a doctor by them.

These doctors render many services that are not taught at Johns Hopkins or other medical schools, among them being teaching industries, caring for young children, superintending the construction of a building, settling family quarrels or finding a wife for a lone fisherman.

There is nothing monotonous about the life that is offered a missionary in this field of activity. Trained nurses have also added many branches to their usual work. They manage small institutions, teach children and train the lame and blind in basket work, weaving and dressmaking.

The influenza epidemic, which did not reach Labrador until last year, in some sections killed off as much as a quarter of the population and left many orphans to be cared for. No such calamity has occurred within the memory of the oldest inhabitants.

An economic crisis is now facing these people on account of the loss of their markets for dried fish, which is their only product. Heretofore their best customers have been the inhabitants of the countries around the Mediterranean, but these peoples have become so impoverished by the war that they can no longer afford to buy the northern product.

In spite of these obstacles, Dr. Grenfel, with the splendid faith and glorious optimism which have enabled him to accomplish such wonders in the past, is confidently looking forward to the future, and the thousands who have read his books and admire his pluck and persistency will flock to hear him speak, and no doubt will give with sufficient liberality to enable him to carry forward a great Christian work which he is rendering to mankind in the Far North.

M.

Letter From Brazil.

The Rev. Dr. James W. Morris writes from Porto Allegre (Caixa-postal, N. 174), under date of December 16:

It gives me courage to think of the many devoted souls that are associated by prayer with me in this work.

And indeed there is the greatest need of unremitting intercession for us. Our church out here has come to a time when enthusiasms are apt to be chilled; her life is apt to lose elasticity and joyous movement; activities congeal and harden; their glory and freshness get dimmer; they tend to be formal. The first zeal—indeed, the first love that the Ephesian church lost—is hard to keep ardent. The church gets settled; has a definite, devoted following; is satisfied with what it has and foregoes somewhat of the missionary ardor with which at first she went out to convert souls, to extend the knowledge of the truth, to rebuke sin, and to enlighten superstition and ignorance.

I have written for the publications, plans, the whole scheme of the Nation-Wide Campaign; for I feel sure that such a movement of information, inspiration and definite appeal for sacrificial devotion of time and means is much needed out here now. Our congregations, too, and our clergy are in the condition to profit mightily from such an effort to instruct and stimulate, as well as to arouse.

We are in our summer vacation. Weather much like our summer in the States. Hot for a considerable time, then a change, a storm of wind and rain, followed by several days, sometimes, of uncomfortably chilly weather. I should think that we have here weather much like Savannah, Ga. Our vacation extends to March 1. But I am coaching my men on English during the summer. We are compelled to read a great deal of English. There are no commentaries in Portuguese, no Bible dictionaries, no history of the Church, etc. My men must read English readily so as to consult the books necessary for their course.

Two of the postulants graduated from the school this session. They have thus the preparation sufficient for beginning their theological studies, but they still need a great deal of practice in reading English. I am planning, just as soon as I get a separate establishment, to have a longer session than the school has. I am thinking of continuing until Christmas each year and thus getting about ten months of regular work. Here we have not our invigorating winter weather, so we must go at a slower pace, and keep at it longer than we do at home. But, indeed, is not vacation time in the United States somewhat exaggerated?

I am hoping that the Church can give us the house for our Seminary. It seems almost impossible to rent a suitable place in the neighborhood of the school; and if we rent we shall be constantly threatened with the problem of moving. A home of our own would settle the Seminary and give it the permanence in the minds of all our people which is so much needed. The place that we can buy near the school has many advantages. As a friend said to me lately, it is ideal. I believe I have already written about it; but it will not do harm to repeat. There is a large, well-built house on the grounds, capable of accommodating ten or twelve men; fitted with electric lights, good bath facilities, and needing very little repairs to make it as good as new. The grounds are spacious. They front on the next street to our school, and the front is ample for the building of our church next to the Seminary. The grounds run down to a stream by which they are separated from the school property; so that we could make a nice walkway between the two institutions. There are fruit trees and a beautiful clump of trees of original growth. We can get this place for 80 cantos. When I arrived this Brazilian money meant $20,000, but now with the very low exchange it is not so much as $15,000.

It does not seem unreasonable to ask the home Church for this excellent equipment for our Seminary out here. Such a gift would settle the problems of our future native ministry. It is the greatest need of our Brazilian Church just now. We must have, as soon as possible, a goodly reinforcement of godly ministers, reasonably equipped for their great task. I suggested that the four Virginias might give Brazil this home for the Seminary out here. I notice that they gave more money than they were apportioned. Why could they not take of these extra gifts and dedicate the same to supplying the great need of the young Brazilian Church?

The Bishop is back from England, and will be down here in January.

THOSE WHO SUCCEED.

Who in life are the successful ones—those who really win? Undoubtedly they who live their lives most nearly after the pattern of the Carpenter of Nazareth. These are they whom Christ has blessed because of the sincerity and power of their love and obedience. They are of the company of those who are poor in spirit, of those who mourn, of those who are meek, of those who hunger and thirst for the things which He—not the world—bestows. They are of the merciful, the pure in heart, those who make peace, those who endure persecution for their defense of the right. They are of the company of the reviled, the persecuted, the slandered—those who bear all things, believe all things, hope all things, endure all things—for His sake.

FROM AN EPISCOPAL ADDRESS.

Extracts from the Council Address of Bishop B. D. Tucker, of Southern Virginia

In reviewing the work in the Diocese for the past year, we have many causes for encouragement and for thankfulness to God, and at the same time there are some things, such as the scarcity of clergy, making it difficult to supply all our charges, which we must seek by prayer and labor to remedy.

Bishop Thomson and I have confirmed 1,208 persons, which is a larger number than was ever presented in the undivided Diocese.

In our sister Diocese of Southwestern Virginia there have been over eight hundred confirmed, making in all over two thousand. This is a wonderful manifestation of God's blessing upon our Church. I would affectionately urge our ministers to be earnest in seeking out those in their flocks who should be brought to confirmation and to give them careful instruction. I think it would be well if the ministers would arrange after the Bishop's visitation for a class for the next year, and diligently try to reach every member of his congregation who is not yet bound to the Church and to Christ in confirmation. It would greatly help the minister in this work, if he had back of him the sympathy and the prayers of his people.

The Nation-Wide Campaign.

I desire to express my appreciation of the helpful and sympathetic work of the Executive Committee, which is charged with the duty of caring, with the Bishops, for the interests of the Diocese between the sessions of the Council. The committee has done its best to carry out the purposes of the Nation-Wide Campaign, to keep in touch with all the churches, and to encourage them to pay their pledges and to appropriate, for the objects covered by the diocesan survey, the amounts available. There has been a great and not unnatural disappointment of our people at the failure of the General Church to do its full part in this large venture for Christ. This has led, not only to the crippling of institutions which looked to the General Church for help, such as the school at Lawrenceville, the Bishop Payne Divinity School, and the Home for Homeless Boys, in which we are all interested, but it has hindered the progress of the gospel in the Foreign Mission field. We had looked for a bold venture for Christ, the result of which would have been the hastening of His kingdom at home and in the lands beyond the seas. The Church seemed to see the vision, as Christ saw it, but it did not make it possible of realization and has wounded the heart of Christ. We must pray that the work may go on and that God's Spirit may so pervade the whole Church that it may give itself, without counting the cost, to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

But no failure on the part of other Dioceses can justify us in holding back, in not measuring up to our promises, and making good our consecration. We cannot over-estimate, dear brethren, the spiritual uplift, the real strengthening of the things that remain, which came to our people a year ago through the Nation-Wide Campaign. We pledged not only our quota, but an excess, and it gave us a feeling of strength and of hope in larger things for the Church. But it was not money alone. There was in every parish the awakening of dormant energies, the vision of the beauty of service, the realization of the things which we believe and the spiritual warmth which was kindled in the hearts of our people.

We must not surrender our place on the honor roll of the Dioceses which answered the call of the Church. We cannot take back that which we have offered to the Lord. Our pledges must be paid, because they are pledged to Christ. I know that it is not a time of prosperity, and that many of our people, especially in the rural sections, will find it hard to do their full part under these changed circumstances. But we older Virginians well remember how our people have passed through times of greater stress than these—how they did not lose heart, but were equal to all the chance and change of circumstance. It may be that God is testing, proving, our faith and love. Oh, my people, let us not fail Him, but let us give ourselves fully to Him, Who gave Himself for us!

Negro Education.

Two educational institutions, the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, and St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, are under the charge of the General Church, but both are located in our Diocese, and have a special claim upon our sympathy and forcibly appeal for our support. The Divinity School is the only Theological Seminary in the country for the exclusive training of colored men for the ministry of the Church. It has a judicious and a learned faculty, and its roll of alumni is an honor to the Church. It has failed to receive much needed aid from the Nation-Wide Campaign, and I cordially endorse the appeal which is to be made by the devoted president, Dr. C. Braxton Bryan, and the Board of Trustees for funds which are absolutely necessary to keep the school open.

St. Paul's, the largest industrial school for negroes, after Hampton and Tuskegee, has nearly six hundred students, but is greatly hampered in its work by the failure to receive financial support. St. Paul's and St. Augustine's, at Raleigh, have meant more, I believe, for the uplift and betterment of citizenship among the colored people of the South and for kindly and sympathetic feeling among the races than any other agencies. We must rally to their support.

Covington School.

The Home for Homeless Boys at Covington was also included in the survey of the General Church, but like the schools of which I have spoken, has failed thus far to receive assistance. This noble expression of true philanthropy, which we owe to the zeal and enthusiasm of the Rev. George Floyd Rogers, appeals most strongly to our sympathies. Its very continuance is imperilled. I cannot but feel that our warm-hearted people will give generous help in this hour of need.

Need of More Clergymen.

Looking over the Diocese, we have cause for thankfulness, and at the same time for regret. I believe that our people are awakened, as never before, to a realization of what the Church of God means in the life of the individual, of the home, of the community and of the world. There is a genuine interest in spiritual things and an earnest desire to help forward the kingdom of God. * * * The congregations are more ready than ever before to do their part, and yet there are not men to be found who will minister to them. The same thing is true in every part of the Church—and the reason for it is that the increase of the clergy has fallen far short of the extension of its work. There is no problem more serious which the Church has to face today.

The Theological Seminary of Virginia is the only one of our divinity schools which has a normal number of students, and in every part of the field, urban as well as rural, there is a serious shortage of ministers. The need is not only at home, but from all parts of the world the people are straining to see the vision of the Christ and to hear the music of the gospel. Never before have the fields, at home and abroad, been whiter for the harvest, and never, to our shame and sorrow, have the laborers been fewer. The call to spread the gospel of Christ is sounding in our ears. It seems to me that it is the Christ Himself Who is pointing to the millions of God's children who are scattered abroad and Who is asking of you and me, "How shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?" This is the supreme need of the Church. To meet it the Church must be instant in prayer and zealous in works. It has been my privilege during the past year to speak and to write often concerning the call to the ministry and concerning the duty of fathers and mothers to give their sons to this high service of Christ. Virginia has made large contributions in the past to the Church at home and abroad. On the rolls of the clergy, the dead and the living, all through the land are the names of the old families whose history is interwoven with that of the State. From the old Seminary on the Hill there went forth the pioneer missionaries to Greece, to Africa, to China, to Japan, to Brazil. But we cannot live on the glory of the past. The Church is calling today, to Virginia and to America.

> "Give of thy sons to bear the message glorious,
> Give of thy wealth to speed them on the way,
> Pour out thy soul for them in prayer victorious,
> And all thou spendest Jesus will repay."

Oh, if we would believe Him, would there not be in every congregation some young man who, hearing the call of Christ, "Whom shall I send?" would answer, "Here am I, send me!" would there not be offered day by day, by fathers and mothers, a prayer that God would honor them by calling their sons to serve the blessed Christ in the precious ministry of His Church.

The Lambeth Conference.

The past year has been marked by the meetings of the representatives of the Anglican Communion, which was held at Lambeth Palace last summer. There were more than two hundred and fifty Bishops who met together and took counsel for the things concerning the kingdom of God. I have studied carefully the Encyclical Letter and the Report of the Conference, and I give God thanks for the evidence of the guidance of His Holy Spirit in all the deliberations, and for the high note of loyalty to Christ, and of consecration to the service of the men for whom He died, which was sounded in their conclusions. They gave consideration to the question of Christianity and International Relations, to Missionary Problems, ever new, to Social and Industrial Questions and to the dangers presented by Theosophy and Spiritualism. Their conclusions were characterized by the saneness and moderation, and that absolute loyalty to the fundamentals of Christianity, which we may say without boasting, is the characteristic of the people who belong to the Anglican Communion.

The report, however, on reunion, on the essential oneness, under all divergencies of Order, of Ritual and of Practice, of the Holy Catholic Church, not only marks an advance of the goal of Christian unity, but is evidence of the guidance of the Holy Spirit and promise of the ultimate fulfillment of the prayer of Christ, "That they may be one, as Thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."

It is especially gratifying to the Church in Virginia that what has been deemed by many a mark of provincialism in our churchmanship, that is the full recognition of the spiritual validity of non-Episcopal orders, and the welcoming to the Lord's table of those who are communicants in other branches of Christ's Church, has met with the approval of the whole body of the Anglican Communion. This is the breaking down of the nearest of the barriers that separate brethren from brethren. Our first and most logical step towards Christian unity must be to bring together those of the English race who have a common tongue, a faith in the great things of religion which is essentially the same, and who share the same heritage from the English Reformation of the open Word of God and of a freedom, first declared by St. Augustine, which holds that no man may be required to believe or to practice that which may not be proved by most certain warrant of Holy Scripture. It is only such a union that will prepare the way for the coming closer together with the Church of the East and the great Church of Rome. We may thank God and take courage and look forward to the time when altar shall not be arrayed against altar, "when Ephraim shall not envy Judah and Judah shall not vex Ephraim"—but when all the tribes of God shall be as one people. As we think of the divided Church of God, we may dream of an essential unity which is illustrated in the old saying, "Distinct as the billows" (for Christianity must adapt itself in the future as in the past, to the varying needs of the races), "Distinct as the billows, but one as the sea." That is the time, which may it please God to hasten, "when the knowledge of the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

Why Build St. Luke's Hospital Now?

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D.

"Art Thou He that should come or look we for another?" This is the question that thoughtful Japanese, in search of a religion for their country, are asking of Christianity today. They have been told that it is a gospel of love and good-will. Can it produce fruit corresponding to this high claim?

In St. Luke's Hospital we have the opportunity to answer this challenge. This means that we must give it a plant sufficient to enable it to maintain its position of leadership among the medical institutions of Japan. The Japanese expect this of St. Luke's.

When several years ago Dr. Teusler broached his plan for a larger and more modern plant, the most influential men of Tokyo offered their co-operation and gave a substantial sum of money. Their help was accepted on the understanding that our Church was ready to carry the plan through to completion.

War conditions and Dr. Teusler's call to take charge of the American Red Cross in Siberia made necessary a temporary postponement. Now, however, the time has come when we must fulfill our promises or lose the confidence of those whose interest we have won.

The building of St. Luke's will have a happy bearing on the present international situation. It will stand as a symbol of our friendly interest in the Japanese.

Unless we build at once it will be impossible to hold the fine staff of Christian doctors and nurses that have been trained in preparation for the new hospital. The present plant is so limited and so poorly equipped that it affords them no scope for real work. Further, it is utterly inadequate to care for the patients, Japanese and foreign, who seek admittance.

In short, both the needs of the Christian work and our obligations to our supporters in Japan make immediate action imperative.

If we can commence work on the new hospital this spring we will open the door for an entirely new stage in the progress of Christianity.

If we disappoint the expectations we have aroused we shall not only lose this opportunity, but we shall run the risk of destroying our Church's credit in Japan and cause injury to every part of the work.

Shall not our reply to Japan's challenge be a new St. Luke's by next year?

What will the Church reply? Yes! Or shall our promise to the Japanese be merely "a scrap of paper"?

In answer to this appeal the Woman's Committee of St. Luke's Hospital appeals to every woman in the Church to help keep our faith with the Japanese. The women are asked, and have promised to endeavor to raise $100,000 by January 1, 1922, of the amount needed for this work. $60,000 is already in hand.

Gifts may count on parish and diocesan Nation-Wide Campaign quotas if desired. Contributions, both large and small, are solicited.

$1,000 will provide for a "memorial" bed.

$250 will provide room for one nurse.

It is hoped that many women may care to take one of these special needs, not only for the sake of the gifts, but that all such gifts may show a wide international interest in the hospital.

All pledges or contributions through the Woman's Committee and any enquiries as to details about gifts should be sent to Mrs. Charles R. Pancoast, Treasurer, 408 West Price Street, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Copies of Bishop Tucker's statement also may be had by applying to Mrs. Pancoast.

Missionary Progress.

Bishop Rowe has asked the Rev. Frederick B. Drane, in charge of the Tanana Valley Missions, to make the winter rounds in the interior of Alaska this year in place of the late Archdeacon Stuck. Such a visit is of the greatest value to the widely separated and lonely missionaries. They have little of outside encouragement. Many of them, such as those at Eagle, Fort Yukon, Tanana and Allakaket, have no opportunity of receiving the Holy Communion except when such a visit is made, as no clergyman is stationed at any of those points.

Mr. Drane begins his itinerary the middle of January. Starting at Nenana, he will go down the Tanana River two hundred miles to Tanana, and then across country one hundred and thirty miles to the Allakaket; returning to Tanana, he will strike up the Yukon, visit Rampart, Stephen's Village, Fort Yukon, Circle and Eagle. Then will come one of the most difficult sections of his journey, when he goes across country from Eagle to the headwaters of the Tanana, at Tanana Crossing. By that time it is likely that the trails will have broken, so that the rest of his return journey will be made by river, probably in an open boat. He will stop at Salchaket, Fairbanks and Chena. His journey will cover rather more than 1,600 miles, and will take him to all of our interior stations except Anvik. Part of the time he will be alone, using a traveling companion only as he can pick up an Indian to accompany him from one place to another in cases of special need.

During the past five years Mr. Drane has traveled the Tanana Valley much of the time alone, and has faced conditions as difficult as those which normally exist anywhere in the interior.

Two men, both well on in middle life, who have put in several years each in Alaskan missionary work, have volunteered to return to that field to help Bishop Rowe in the crisis occasioned by the recent deaths of Archdeacon Stuck and the Rev. A. R. Hoare. Bishop Rowe deeply appreciates their readiness to make further sacrifices when he finds that younger clergy are not ready to come to his aid. He has asked the Department of Missions to appoint the Rev. C. R. Rice to Juneau and the Rev. Thomas Jenkins to the care of the district on the south coast, covering several hundred miles in the Prince William Sound and Cook Inlet country.

Bishop Graves reports that up to December 1 members of our mission in China have given $2,600 for famine relief. "The $500,000 from the American Red Cross," says the Bishop, "looks like a large gift, but it is a mere drop in the bucket compared with the distress. That twenty million people are affected is a conservative estimate, and the least that will support one person until the spring is two dollars a month, or ten dollars in all. The Chinese Foreign Famine Relief Committee, of which I am a member, has raised so far about $800,000, and other committees are working in other parts of China, but with their best efforts they cannot prevent a large proportion of these people dying from hunger or disease before next May. The Chinese Government is apparently doing nothing effective. It has put on special taxes in various directions, but the Chinese business men here do not think that the money goes to the famine. I heard Bishop Lambeth give an account of his journey through part of the famine era in Shantung. When asked what he had seen of government relief in the work of his investigation, he replied that it did not come under his notice. You people in America cannot understand such indifference to human suffering and death, but it is one of the results of heathenism."

The Department of Missions asks for gifts from our people to help relieve the appalling conditions Bishop Graves outlines. Mr. John W. Wood, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, will answer questions and supply all possible particulars.

The girls at St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, have given $400 for the relief of the famine sufferers in North China. One of the American members of St. Mary's staff of teachers says: "It is perfectly amazing the way the girls raise money for all sorts of good causes. I think it shows very plainly the strengthened force of the Christian influence."

The other day a Churchwoman in Milwaukee wrote the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, who has charge of the One Day Income Plan at the Church Missions House:

"I find that in portioning out one-tenth of my income for the year, I have some money left over after pledges are met and usual contributions set aside.

"I believe that no better use can be made of what remains than to add it to the One Day Income Fund, so I enclose a post-office money order for $10 for that fund. I send it undesignated so that it may be used for whatever is most needed. May I add that, as a maid in domestic service in one family for many years, I have long known the happiness of having a stated portion set aside as a 'One-Tenth Fund' for Church and charitable contributions. I first learned to adopt that plan as a result of Church teaching in a Canadian Anglican Church, and should not wish to give it up."

A spirit such as that speaks for itself. Given sufficiently wide diffusion, it would insure the success of any enterprise involving expenditure to which the Church might put her hand.

The new dormitory of St. Agnes' School, Kyoto, has attracted a great deal of attention from the Japanese. It is built in Japanese style, and in most respects has nothing to distinguish it except its size from the usual Japanese house. Bishop Tucker says that nevertheless a Japanese educator recently came to Kyoto from Sendai, nearly 500 miles to the north, to inspect the new building. He made the journey on the advice of the Educational Department.

Baron Morimura, a well-to-do Japanese Christian, has given $50,000 to establish and endow a chair of Christianity at the Imperial University in Tokyo. Another gift of $25,000 to endow a chair of Christian Philosophy is reported.

WINTER.

Think of the almost religious impression of winter storms. Tropical storms are so terrible as to leave no moral impression at all. But our winter storm gathers up its force more thoughtfully, as if moving by great instigations, and under this performance, by God's aerial orchestra, our soul is in vibration as never under any combination of act, instrument or voice.

Think of the moral value of winter as a time for charity. In the summer God pours out His bounty so freely that none scarcely miss their needed supply. In the winter He withholds that we may take His place. The conditions of hunger and cold authenticate themselves. If there is no fire, the lack can be seen. The poor, ragged child, saying by his look, "Who can stand before His cold?" wants no certificate.

Then winter funerals. These are a trial that awakens strange inward commotions. Our heart shudders, but while our feeling is protesting, the thought arises, "Our departed is not in that hole. Let the snows fall heavy—we thank Thee, Father, Lord of the warmer clime, that our dead one lives with Thee." Practically almost nothing will compel a faith in immortality more than to bury a friend in the winter.

It is remarkable, and a fair subject for congratulation, that the great Church days are in winter or in early spring —Christmas and Easter, for example. Whether Lent is fixed, because at that time the mind is more congenially tempered for the higher meditation and severer exercises of religion some may question, but Lent in July would have much less chance of the intended benefit; and in churches not observing Lent, the time is distinguished by what are called revivals of religion. But in both cases winter becomes a spiritual harvest. The tonic force of winter gives a possibility of thought and tension specially needed for devotional exercises. It is also an advantage that we love proximity in winter, and covet more easily the warmth of assemblies and high social impulse.—Horace Bushnell.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

A COMMON FUND FOR SUPPORT OF CLERGY.

Mr. Editor: The continual decrease in candidates for the ministry, and the many vacant parishes and missions, show that there is something wrong somewhere, that should be corrected. A writer who knows conditions says: "The present system of allotment of cures, tenure of office and remuneration of our mission clergy, is far from satisfactory. The work is not evenly distributed, the stipend is generally inadequate, payment is not always prompt, the continuance of employment is not guaranteed, and the field is not half covered."

Evidently such conditions are not favorable to the work of the Church. What can be done? Possibly a common fund for the support of all clergy would remedy this and other evils. It should be a common fund for the support of all the clergy in active work in a specified diocese or district, whether missionary clergy or rectors of parishes.

It is a divine principle that all Christian people should give for the support of the gospel. It is plain that many are not giving for this purpose as they ought to give. It would be wise to have a common fund, toward which all contribute, according to their ability. There are religious bodies that contribute much more than we do; one as much as sixty dollars a year per capita of membership. Think what that would be for us. We have over one million communicants of the Church. Sixty millions each year, if our people would give at the same average per capita, sixty dollars a year.

But if our people should give only half that amount for the support of their own clergy and of missionaries, see what we would have: Ten millions for support of clergy in our parishes (a great advance over present conditions). Ten millions more for missionaries in our own land (where they are greatly needed), and ten millions for Foreign Missions.

And all this is possible if our people are aroused to do their full duty; if all our people (or even one-half of them) give according to the divine obligation, for the support of those who preach the gospel; and if those funds be kept separate from all other funds, and strictly used as a common fund for the support of those who preach the gospel. Our people are perfectly able to give such sums. And with their co-operation, all this could be accomplished.

Our parish system needs to be modified. Moneys for the support of clergy should go into some common fund; one it might be for each city, for each diocese, for each province, or for the whole nation. Godly laymen, in vestries or mission committees, should still have a voice in the choosing of pastors. But those pastors should be paid their salaries out of the common fund, and not by each parish, independently of others.

As it is now, the salaries of many of our clergy are inadequate, and in some cases irregularly and not fully paid. But let it not be thought that the inadequate salary alone deters suitable men from entering the ministry

Large salaries would attract unworthy men, and that would be harmful. The cardinal sin of the Church today is her parochialism, the selfish spirit in our parishes, the expenditure of energy and money by the parish largely or wholly upon itself.

Open wide the missions of the Church, both in foreign lands and in our own lands. Call for workers. There is plenty to do. Provide, not large salaries, but what is needed for decent support.

The first requisite change would be this: Pledges and support from all our people toward a common fund, for the support of those who preach the gospel. Then a strict separation of such funds from all other church funds. Then open wide the mission fields and provide adequate support for missionaries.

But here let it be said that these proposed changes cannot be brought about by any compulsion. Gradually they can be adopted because earnest Christian people see that this is a better way and because they see that there is need of a better system.

The decrease in candidates for the ministry, not among ourselves alone, but among other Christian bodies, should arouse us to look for the causes. They and we should see that competition and rivalry among different congregations are harmful: and that the common method, both with us and them, that of each congregation being entirely independent of others, is not the best way to do the work that Christ has given us to do.

With the funds provided, open wide the missions of the Church. Provide proper support. Workers will respond. Press upon all our people the work of missions, and along with this let an earnest and devout spirit in our homes be cultivated. Then there will be an increase in candidates for the ministry.

D. A. SANFORD.

Amarillo, Tex., January 13, 1921.

A STRANGE PLEA.

Mr. Editor: Will you kindly publish the inclosed?

J. L. S.

An Open Letter to the Bishops and Pastors of Christ's Flock.

Right Reverend Fathers in God:

There is a "lost sheep" to whose cry the Church seems almost stone-deaf. While the ninety and nine are tended with jealous care, but often with disappointing results, the wanderer is just as precious in God's sight and perhaps more promising.

This lost sheep is none other than that class of men known in politics as "radicals." Hounded by prejudiced or unprincipled government officials, they hear no shepherd's voice. Deportations, jails, ostracism and unemployment are too often their lot, even when perfectly innocent. What can the Church do for them?

The situation affords a splendid opportunity. As the Church specializes in her mission to all races, so she can most profitably specialize in ministering to all classes. To this end we should maintain a church in every industrial center, and man it with a pastor whose social creed squares with that of the honest workingman. The growing numbers of Socialists see the Church functioning on the assumption that the capitalistic system is right or that it can be made right by a little patching. Such political bias of the Church naturally repels the Socialists. They will have none of it. They want a church where the pastor will be perfectly free to preach both economic and personal salvation. Isn't the Church broad enough and catholic enough to minister to these radicals, as well as to the reactionaries?

In a word, the Church needs, in every industrial town, a veritable cave of Adullam. Under the madness of King Saul, the discontented found refuge in David. In like manner many earnest souls today see in capitalism a madness which spells its doom, and they look for God's anointed to inaugurate a new era.

May I therefore earnestly suggest this special plan, wherein churches will be maintained for the working class, and be manned by clergymen who stand for both uncompromising Christianity and uncompromising Socialism. This venture will not only save the good name of the Church, but I believe it will, under God, reap a harvest of souls equal, if not superior, to that of any field in which the Church labors.

Very respectfully,

JAMES L. SMILEY.

Annapolis, Md., January 19, 1921.

(But the Church has no gospel of "economic salvation" save that which the Lord hath commanded to be received, "That ye love one another." This must be ministered alike everywhere, to radicals, reactionaries and what not. If the Church is anywhere preaching a special gospel to a special class, capitalistic or other, the place to correct the great evil is where the evil is. It will hardly be done by repeating the same grievous error in some other place and some other form among some other class.—Ed. S. C.)

U. S. A. DRUGGING CHINA.

Mr. Editor: As children our righteous indignation was aroused when we learned in our study of the Opium Wars how Great Britain had forced Indian opium on China. Today our own United States is in the business of drugging China on a frightfully large scale. Custom records show that within the short period of five months enough morphia and opium were shipped from the one port of Seattle to give one dose to each of the 400,000,000 men, women and children of all China. Stop and think what that means by applying the same conditions to the U. S. A. These narcotics were shipped to Japan and from Japan smuggled throughout China, largely by Japanese peddlers and druggists.

There is a bill now before Congress, the Jones-Miller bill, designed to shut off this iniquitous trade. For the sake of the good name of our country, and for the welfare of the Chinese people, will you write or telegraph your Congressman and Senators today, asking their support of this Jones-Miller bill.

LLOYD R. CRAIGHILL.

Leesburg, Va.

THE MOTIVE OF THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: In your issue of the 8th instant the Rev. Mr. Sanford says, writing of "Shortage in the Ministry": "Here is the fault; it is parochial selfishness. Give all the clergy plenty to do, and with reasonable support for all who will do faithful work."

Let me add this: The man who enters the ministry with the divine call enters it with no thought of support; and he may take the most parochially selfish parish in his Diocese and in due time, and no long time, through the blessing of God the Holy Ghost, make it support him and his family too. "First things first."

BERKELEY MINOR.

University, January 21, 1921.

WORDS VERSUS ACTIONS.

Alan Pressley Wilson.

I left my home in a deep study the other afternoon, and tried to concentrate my mind upon the solution of a problem that presented itself. My reverie was broken by the harsh, raucous notes of an automobile horn and the boisterous and somewhat unrefined shouts of the occupants of the car. I looked up and saw that there were two machines going at the same rate of speed, the one ahead of the other.

In the first car sat a quiet man whose sole thought seemed to be on the wheel and the street before him. His signal was sounded only as a warning and not as adding to the general confusion, as was that in the crowded car immediately behind him.

As I looked more closely, I discerned that the second car was not traveling under its own power. A tow-line connected it with the first one, and, after having suffered a breakdown, was being towed in the garage for repairs.

"Mere words do not constitute business," I said to myself as I mused upon the occurrence. "The man who accomplishes things is ofttimes silent and of a reticent disposition: he depends not so much upon noise as action!"

You and I know people whose sole stock in trade seems to be bluster and swagger. Fortunately, we number among our valued acquaintances those who are quiet in all of their dealings and who are eminently successful.

The Divine Exchange.

He called for my life, and I offered it at His foot-stool. But He gave it me as a prey, with unspeakable addition.

He called for my will, and I resigned it at His call. But He returned me His own in token of His love.

He called for the world, and I laid it at His feet, with the crowns thereof. I withheld them not at the beckoning of His hand. But mark the benefit of exchange! For He gave me, instead of earth a kingdom of eternal peace, and in lieu of the crowns of victory a crown of glory.—Thomas Story.

As to resources, they increase according to the clearness of vision that is developed among men. Seldom will it happen in our day that any well-conceived scheme, aiming to a high social purpose, will lack in means of livelihood. Where a man's imagination is there will his life and his University, Va., January 21, 1921.

Church Intelligence

American Bible Society.

The largest budget in over a hundred years was announced today by General Secretary Frank H. Mann for the American Bible Society. It amounts to $1,222,367, and is called for by the very great demand for Bibles and Bible distribution in all parts of the world. Even Turks are calling for Bibles. The war has created a famine of Bibles in certain parts of the world, especially in Austria and Central Europe. The adoption of the new phonetic script in China will provide millions of new readers in the next few years. Children can learn the new script in three or four hours, and illiterate men and women in as many weeks.

The American Bible Society is one hundred and five years old and has issued one hundred and forty million copies of the Scriptures in one hundred and fifty languages and dialects.

ALBANY

Rt. Rev. R. H. Nelson, D. D., Bishop.

Organization of Church Service League.

The Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Albany has taken steps to properly organize the Church Service League in that Diocese. A special meeting has been held at the suggestion of the Junior Auxiliary officers of the Diocese, and these ladies, upon the invitation of the Board, attended this meeting. It was unanimously felt that the best way to organize this work would be for the Board to appoint a special commission for this purpose. This action was taken and the following persons were named as members of the commission: The Rev. O. S. Newell and the Rev. T. L. Cole representing the Board; the Rev. R. N. Turner for the Boy Scouts; Mrs. J. S. Conover, Miss Mary A. Swits and Miss Helen Hanaman, respectively, Diocesan President, Secretary and Educational Secretary of the Junior Auxiliary; Miss Edna Bassinger, Diocesan President of the Girls' Friendly Society; Richard P. Law, choirmaster, to represent the work among the choir boys; the Rev. C. R. Story, chairman of the Social Service Commission of the Diocese; Mr. Frank Harder, director of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; the Rev. Albert Gale, Mrs. Irving G. Rouillard and Mrs. E. W. Babcock representing the Diocese at large.

This commission is to hold a meeting on Monday, May 2, and report their proceedings to a meeting of the Board of Religious Education to be held on May 3. Both of these meetings are to be held in St. Peter's Guild House, State Street, Albany, N. Y., through the courtesy of the rector.

EASTON

Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, D.D., Bishop.

Southern Convocation.

The Southern Convocation of the Diocese met in St. Peter's Church, Salisbury, Monday, January 10. Evening Prayer was said by the Rev. F. J. Bohanon, of Trinity Cathedral, Easton, and the Rev. Walter Archbold, D. D., of Princess Anne. The sermon, based on St. John 14:6, and emphasizing Love, Light and Life in the Christian, was preached by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia. On Tuesday, after the celebration of the Holy Eucharist by the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, Corresponding Secretary of the Department of Missions, addressed the convocation on the Nation-Wide Campaign. In the evening the customary service gave place to a reception by the rector, wardens and vestrymen to the Bishop and Mrs. Davenport, which was largely attended.

The next convocation will be held April 12 and 13 in St. Andrew's Church, Princess Anne.

The convocation was delighted to have the Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia present, and hope that he will come again.

L. L. W.

SOUTHERN FLORIDA

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Convocation of Southern Florida.

Assembling in St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, the twenty-ninth annual convocation of this district opened at 8 P. M. on January 11, and closed at noon January 13, having an unusually large attendance of clergy and lay delegates.

The Rev. Louis G. Wood, D. D., and the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker assisted Dean Glass in the opening service, the Bishop giving his annual address which held the deep interest of the large congregation attending. At the close of this service convocation was organized.

The Rev. J. H. Davet was appointed secretary, with the Rev. William B. Hays as his assistant.

On Wednesday luncheon was served at the St. Charles Hotel for convocation and for delegates to the annual meeting of the women's organizations. That evening a delightful reception, tendered by the Bishop and Mrs. Mann at Bishopstead, gave pleasant opportunity for social intercourse.

The special committee, appointed to consider the formation of committees to co-operate with the Presiding Bishop and Council in their several departments, recommended the appointment by the Bishop of a committee to be known as the Board of Co-ordination, charged with bringing the plans of the Presiding Bishop and Council before this district, one member of this committee being assigned for each of the six chief departments of the Council. Members appointed on this Board of Co-ordination were as follows:

Missions, the Rev. R. T. Phillips; Nation-Wide Campaign, the Rev. W. B. Curtis; Social Service, the Rev. H. L. Taylor; Religious Education, the Rev. F. S. Reade; Publicity, the Ven. P. S. Irwin; Finance, the Ven. W. H. Cresson.

F. H. Rand was appointed treasurer; L. C. Massey, chancellor, and T. P. Warlow, vice-chancellor.

Delegates elected to the Provincial Synod are the Rev. S. F. Reade, the Rev. R. T. Phillips, A. J. Holworthy and F. A. P. Jones; alternates, the Rev. W. B. Curtis, the Rev. J. J. Neighbour, Floyd Knight and G. E. Krug.

An encouraging report was given of the Nation-Wide Campaign.

It was voted that the District of Southern Florida accepts the quota of $15,000 assigned to it as its share in raising the Million Dollar Endowment Fund for the University of the South, and agrees to underwrite this sum by paying 6 per cent. annually upon it or such parts of it as have not been paid, until the whole sum is paid. Further, a committee consisting of Dean Glass, Rev. R. T. Phillips and Rev. W. B. Curtis was appointed to carry out these provisions.

A lay delegate attested his approval by assuming 50 per cent. of the annual interest.

Gratifying reports were given by those in charge of work among the negroes, with special stress upon the urgent need for increased facilities and particularly that a diocesan boarding school should be provided as a most important factor in this work. Their young people now are sent to secular schools under no churchly influence, and a great opportunity is being lost.

Decision was made to change the date of convocation from January to after Easter, the date to be appointed by the Bishop. Overcrowded conditions throughout Southern Florida each winter, together with urgent claims upon laity in the cities and other business lines in January, have made such change of date long desired. Invitation to meet next year in Miami was accepted.

Ere adjourning the Bishop expressed his gratification over the progress made through the past year, the work accomplished and the spirit shown during this meeting and in what has been undertaken for the coming year, marking helpful progress on several important lines. Confident expectation and intention were given for the completion of the Diocesan Endowment before the end of this year, enabling the petition for becoming a Diocese to be made at the next General Convention, in October, 1922.

C. R.

EAST CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

East Carolina and the N.-W. C.

The following information is given by Bishop Thomas C. Darst, in a letter written to the Department of the Nation-Wide Campaign:

"As you have no doubt heard, we sent a check for balance in full on our N.-W. C. quota to Mr. Franklin a day or two ago. This is no more than we should have done, but in order to stimulate dioceses that have been holding back their payments because they had not received any of their askings, I think it should be known that East Carolina, in order to pay in full, postponed indefinitely certain important diocesan projects that we expected to finance, not from N.-W. C. askings, but from funds raised in the Diocese. It is also worthy of note that deducting amount received for diocesan support, we actually gave to the General Church a larger sum than we retained for work in the Diocese.

"I hope that we will do as well in 1921, but no one who has not visited the churches in East Carolina can understand the awful depression that characterizes almost every parish and mission, owing to the tremendous slump in the prices of tobacco, cotton and peanuts. Many of our largest contributors did not make enough money this year to pay for planting and harvesting the crops, and quite a number of them actually lost thousands of dollars. I believe, though, that they will give again this year, and perhaps it will mean more to them than ever before, for they will be giving not of their abundance, but will be drawing on their reserves."

Unitarian Clergyman to Take Episcopal Orders: Bishop Darst has recently confirmed the Rev. and Mrs. John Wesley Heyes in St. James' Church, Wilmington. Mr. Heyes was formerly a Unitarian clergyman, but is now pursuing the sacred studies preparatory to the taking of Orders in the Episcopal Church. For the time being Mr. Heyes is attached to St. John's Church, Wilmington, and will continue under the pastoral care of the rector of that parish, the Rev. R. E. Gribbin.

The two Church School Institutes held in East Carolina during the weeks beginning January 18 and 25 were well attended, and it is believed that a new interest will be taken in the Church school all over the Diocese. The first was held in St. James' Church, Wilmington; the second in St. Paul's, Greenville. St. Peter's, Washington, was to have entertained the second, but was not able to do so at the time. Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, provincial Church school worker, gave valuable assistance

Death of Prominent Layman: John Gilliam Wood, one of the most useful and prominent laymen in the Diocese, died at his home in Edenton on December 13. For many years Mr. Wood was a vestryman of St. Paul's, Edenton, a parish of much historic interest. His family has been connected with the parish since early in the eighteenth century; a connection of sustained interest and generous giving. In his will Mr. Wood left $2,500 for the upkeep of St. Paul's Church and churchyard. Another gift which has long caused grateful appreciation of many poor and needy persons is a fund to provide winter fuel. In this he follows the example of his father, Edward Wood, who died in 1872, making a similar provision.

Historic Bibles in the Diocese: Much interest has been aroused recently in the Diocese over the printing of information about the historic Bibles in the churches. In old St. Thomas' Church, Bath, there is a Bible printed in 1703, contemporaneously with the founding of Bath. The Bible has part of the Prayer Book included, and was intended especially for the church services. The present church building at Bath was erected in 1734, and it is probable that this Bible was used in the first service. Another Bible of great interest is one that was presented to St. Andrew's Church, Columbia, by Elizabeth Barrett Browning in 1888. Mrs. Browning presented this Bible through her friend, Mrs. Selby, of Columbia.

T. P., Jr.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

The Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., left Washington on Tuesday, January 25, for Erie, Pa., where he attended the annual convention of that Diocese. Bishop Harding was especially invited to attend this convention for the purpose of delivering a memorial address for the late Bishop Israel, of Erie. These two bishops had been very close friends for many years. Bishop Harding's address was delivered at the opening of the convention.

An important meeting of the Washington Cathedral Chapter was held at the American Security and Trust Company on Wednesday, January 19. Bishop Perry, of Rhode Island, a member of the chapter and canon of the Cathedral, was in the city for this meeting. The members of the chapter are: The Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., LL. D., president; the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., dean; Rt. Rev. J. De Wolf Perry, D. D., canon; Rev. William L. DeVries, Ph. D., canon and secretary; Rev. Roland Cotton Smith, D. D., canon; Charles C. Glover, Esq., Hon. George Truesdell, Charles J. Bell, Esq., William C. Rives, M. D., Hon. Henry White, LL. D., Corcoran Thom, Esq., treasurer; James Parmelee, Esq., William Holland Wilmer, M. D.

Interesting Speakers Visit Washington: Washington Church people were privileged to hear several interesting and helpful speakers from other dioceses during the past week and on Sunday, January 23. The Rev. H. B. Wilson, of Boonton, N. J., preached at St. John's, Epiphany and St. Mark's, explaining in detail the work of the Society of the Nazarene and the requirements for membership, which he is trying to increase. The chief purpose of the society is to restore the gift of healing as practiced in the early Church, but allowed to die out in later years. Bishop Talbot, of Bethlehem, Pa., was in Washington also on Septuagesima Sunday and preached at St. Paul's, of which his brother, Dr. Talbot, is rector, in the morning, and at Epiphany Church in the evening.

The Rev. Dr. Newbold, of the Diocese of Long Island, was the peracher the same day at Christ Church, Georgetown, at the 11 o'clock service.

Mrs. Patterson, of Los Angeles, Cal., conducted a class for women during the week at three of the churches every day at different hours, so that her classes were convenient to different sections of the city. The subject of her study was "Religious Practice," and was in line with the work of the Nation-Wide Campaign.

Rt. Rev. Theodore P. Thurston, of Oklahoma, delivered a series of addresses during the week, visiting a large number of the churches and speaking once at the Cosmos Club. His subject was the "Results and Status of the Nation-Wide Campaign," and he also told of some of the missionary work in Oklahoma. Bishop Thurston will attend the Diocesan Convention and deliver an address on its opening day.

The men's organizations in the churches of the different denominations located in and near Takoma Park and Brightwood will be federated and cooperate in their work, if present plans are successful. Major Jesse Lee, of Trinity Episcopal Church, outlined a program of work along this line, and details were discussed at the annual banquet of the Takoma Park Presbyterian Brotherhood on Friday, January 21. The opportunities for such cooperative work are great, and this move on the part of the men in this section of the city is good and full of promise.

M. M. W.

IDAHO.

Rt. Rev. F. H. Touret, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. J. W. Gunn, rector of Emmanuel Church, Kellogg, has accepted a call to St. Peter's Church, La Grande, Eastern Oregon, and began his residence there the first Sunday in January.

Trinity Church, Rupert, the Rev. B. C. d'Easum, minister in charge, has a well organized chapter of the Order of Sir Galahad, a society for boys and girls. Membership in the order is confined to the regular attendants at the Church school, and promotion is earned by good class work.

C. G. B.

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Garrett, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. Andrew's, Fort Worth.

A happy surprise awaited the nearly 200 parishioners of St. Andrew's Church, Fort Worth, when after the dinner which preceded the annual parish meeting on January 10, Mrs. C. O Harper presented to the church a large radiotone portrait of the venerable Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Alexander C. Garrett, now in his eighty-ninth year of age and blind, and in the forty-seventh year of his episcopate. An excellent likeness of the Bishop in his robes from a recent sitting is etched in 14-caret gold on a steel plate, which is mounted on a tablet frame of genuine mahogany with a name-plate of solid gold beneath the picture. The rector, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, accepted this splendid gift on behalf of the vestry and parishioners, and expressed appreciation of the donor's generosity and of the Bishop's long and fruitful episcopate, which has endeared him not only to his Diocese and Church, but to all Texas and beyond.

The financial reports showed that over $30,000 had been handled by parish agencies during the year, which in several respects has been a banner year for the parish.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Novel Work at Niles, Mich.

A very unusual work has been undertaken by the Rev. Harold Holt, rector of Trinity Church, Niles, which is being watched with interest by the rest of the Diocese. He has been elected and is acting as pastor of a community church in Eau Claire, a village of some five hundred people about fourteen miles from his parish. The community church is a federation of three congregations, Methodist, United Brethren and Disciples of Christ, neither of which has found itself strong enough to secure and support a pastor. It is understood that the representatives of the three churches agreed upon Mr. Holt after hearing him several times and perceiving that he preached the gospel free from sectarian peculiarities. Mr. Holt gives Sunday evenings and two days a week to this work. The outcome will be looked for with prayerful interest, especially as the rector is considered a Churchman of rather advanced type.

The Rev. Mr. Holt is also acting as truant officer for Niles. He thus has an oversight of all the boys and girls of the city. In connection with the three troops of Boy Scouts under his direction, he has devised and developed a supervisory system which has practically put a stop to habitual truancy.

F. O. G.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.

Successful Preaching Missions Held Throughout Diocese.

Preaching Missions throughout the Diocese have met with a wonderful response.

The Inter-Parochial Mission in Cincinnati is crowding Christ Church, the largest Episcopal Church in the city, every evening, and arousing great interest. The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., is the missioner. The press notices and preparatory announcements were splendidly handled. Automobiles were furnished to bring the aged and feeble to the services. The newspapers have shown a liberal spirit in noticing the meetings. Dr. Bowie's experiences as a chaplain overseas furnish him with fine illustrations which add greatly to the interest of his addresses.

The colored people of Cincinnati largely attended the Preaching Mission at St. Andrew's Mission, the Rev. E. H. Oxley, M. A. Missionary, the preacher being Ven. Henry L. Phillips, D. D., Archdeacon of the colored work in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. He had a splendid message for the people, and the closing service on the week on Sunday evening, January 16, was attended by over 500 persons, while sixteen declared their determination to become communicants of the church.

Archdeacon Reade has just returned from an eight-day mission at St. Peter's Church, Gallipolis, O., the Rev. Albion W. Ross, rector, where the services were well attended. Archdeacon Reade will hold an eight-day Preaching Mission in St. John's Church, Cambridge, O., February 13 to 20, and in St. Luke's Church, Marietta, O., March 13 to 20.

Other interesting and successful missions were held during December and January at St. Paul's Church, Martin's Ferry, by the Rev. W. A. Stimson, of the Good Shepherd, Columbus; at St. Mary's Church, Waynesville, by the Rev. Charles E. Byrer, of Christ Church, Springfield; at Trinity Church, London, by Archdeacon Dodshon; Christ Church, Springfield, by Archdeacon Dodshon; Trinity Church, Hartwell, by the Rev. George H. Hills; St. John's Church, Worthington, by the Rev. G. T. Lawton, S. T. D.; St. Peter's Church, Delaware, by Archdeacon Reade, and at St. John's Church, Columbus, by the Rev. C. W. MacWilliams .

ERIE.

Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop.

Whole Diocese Mourns the Loss of Their Bishop.

The whole Diocese of Erie mourns the sudden loss by death of their beloved Bishop, Rogers Israel. Rich and poor, old and young, Churchman and non-Churchman, soldier and citizen, alike loved him for his manly, fearless speech and action, united with a compassion as tender as a woman's towards all, especially the weak and helpless. He was well named Israel, for he was a princely man. Under all conditions he seemed to fit in, the farmer, the business man, the financiers, the soldiers, men and women, boys and girls, listened to him gladly and went away with a new song in their heart, and with higher ideals.

Bishop Israel had never been quite the same since his wife's death, and he was gradually becoming a nervous wreck. His eighteen or more months in the army saved him mentally, but physically it was too much for a man of his age, for he was as Bishop Charles H. Brent said, "no play soldier." He was a few weeks in bed, getting weaker and weaker, until for some hours before the end he knew nobody or anything going on around him. Dean VanMeter gave him the Holy Communion before he lost consciousness. He dropped off just as he wanted to, in the harness of his sacred office as a chief shepherd. His funeral was both churchly and military. The watchers round his casket in the Cathedral were four in all, two soldiers and two priests, who changed every two hours at first, and then every half hour. Hundreds of the people of Erie, of all classes, all conditions, flocked to St. Paul's to look upon that kindly and yet strong face for the last time, many of whom also knelt and said a prayer for one who so lovingly and persistently prayed for others. Quite a large congregation attended the early communion on the day of his burial, Friday, at 7:30 o'clock. This was the service Bishop Israel loved most of all. Bishop Whitehead officiated.

The whole night before, and all through the morning of that day, the guard of honor kept their watch.. At 2 P. M. the usual burial office was used, the Bishop of Western New York reading the lesson; the Bishops of Southern Ohio and Pittsburgh taking other portions. Other Bishops present were the Suffragan of Pennsylvania, the Suffragan of Western New York, and the Bishop of Colorado. The resident Greek priest in Erie also had a seat in the sanctuary. On the way to the cemetery a robed crucifer with a military man on one side and a marine on the other led the long procession of military on foot, and clergy and others in cars. Bishop Whitehead and Dean VanMeter said the prayers. Bishop Brent praying and giving a five-minute meditation on Bishop Israel's splendid life.

The late Bishop's oldest friend in the Diocese, Archdeacon Radcliffe, sprinkled the dust in the shape of a cross on the purple casket.

After the last words had been said the remains were left in dear mother earth by the side of his wife, and the large crowd returned to the city.

R. S. R.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan

New Italian Mission Opened.

A new mission was opened January 16 when a chapel on the corner of Memphis and Willard Streets, Philadelphia, was formally dedicated as the foundation of a Church for the Italian Episcopalians of the northeastern section of the city. The exercises were presided over by Bishop Rhinelander, who received two classes into membership, one of which, consisting of about thirty persons, received confirmation. The new members were presented by Rev. Silvio Biagini, the rector.

Rev. Thomas Della Cioppa, rector of the Episcopal Church of teh Emanuella, made an address in Italian, translating much that the Bishop had said in English for the Italian people. The rector, recently ordained to the ministry, could not be supported by the small congregation and volunteered to work in a mill in the neighborhood for a year, when an apportionment would be allotted to the parish by the Diocese of Pennsylvania. The name of the new chapel is Santa Maria Assunta.

Annual Service of Free and Open Church Association.

What the open Church meant for the spread of the gospel was brought out in an address made by Rev. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York City, at the annual service of the Free and Open Church Association, held in St. James' Church Sunday, January 16. "In time," said the speaker, "all the churches will realize the need of having free pews for the worshippers. Two years ago they started in Trinity Church. The difficulties were great, because some of the families had pews in the church 221 years ago. Many of the pews were owned by estates, and the ties of tradition were strong. Yet the measure was carried through without friction, because the people realized the need of it, and the result has been most satisfactory.

R. R. W.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Ordination: Mr. Edward Ellis was ordained deacon in St. Phillip's Church (colored), Richmond, on Sunday morning, January 23, by Bishop Brown. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. John H. Scott, of Essex County, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. J. L. Taylor, rector of the church. The Bishop has assigned Mr. Ellis to the charge of St. Cyprian's Mission, Richmond, where he has been working as lay reader. Bishop Brown visited St. Cyprians Sunday evening and confirmed a class of seven presented by the newly ordained deacon.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Consecration of Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese.

Before a congregation which filled every available space, the Rev. Dr. Kirkman G. Finlay was consecrated Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of South Carolina in Trinity Church, Columbia, on Friday, January 21.

A large choir, composed of the regular choir of Trinity, assisted by leading voices from nearly all the other churches in the city, rendered beautiful and inspiring music, under direction of M. Berry Seay, organist and choirmaster.

Singing the hymn, "O, 'Twas a Joyful Sound to Hear" (493), the procession entered the church in the following order: Choir; vestry of Trinity Church; the lay members of the Executive Council of the Diocese and the lay members of the Standing Committee of the Diocese; next the twoscore clergy, followed by the master of ceremonies, the Rev. T. Tracy Walsh, and the registrar, the Rev. Albert Thomas; then the Bishop-Coadjutor-elect, escorted by his two attending presbyters, the Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., and the Rev. Octavus T. Porcher, and finally the seven bishops taking part in the service.

The Epistle was read by the Bishop-Coadjutor of Ohio, the Rt. Rev. Frank DuMoulin; the Gospel by the Bishop of North Carolina, the Rt. Rev. Joseph B. Cheshire, D. D., and the Nicene Creed by the Bishop of Georgia, the Rt. Rev. Frederick F. Reese, D. D.

The Rev. T. T. Walsh, as master of ceremonies, escorted to the pulpit the preacher of the occasion, the Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of Atlanta, and a former South Carolinian. From the text, "Therefore watch and remember" (Acts 20:31), Bishop Mikell preached a stirring sermon, stressing the importance of "remembering" that the Christian Church, as the agency on earth of Jesus Christ, is worthy of the finest loyalty, the wisest thought, the best service.

Dr. Finlay was presented to the consecrator, Bishop Guerry, and the co-consecrators, Bishop Cheshire and Bishop Reese, by Bishop Thomas C. Darst and Bishop Horner. The testimony of election by the Diocesan Council was read by the Rev. A. S. Thomas; evidence of ordination, by the Rev. A. R. Mitchell; consent of the standing committees by J. Nelson Frierson; consent of the bishops by Bishop Horner; a letter of commission by the Presiding Bishop, by Bishop Reese; grounds of election, by the Rev. John Kershaw, D. D., and a certificate of compliance with the canons of the Church, by the Rev. R. Maynard Marshall.

The Litany was said by Bishop Darst, of East Carolina, with a special petition for the candidate, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Guerry, after which the procession left the church singing "The Son of God Goes Forth to War."

ALABAMA

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Annual Council.

With a large attendance of clergy and laity, the annual Council of the Diocese met in St. John's Church, Montgomery, on Wednesday, January 19. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Edmond Bennett, rector of St. John's Church, Ensley. Dr. Bennett spoke of the Pentecost and its influence upon Christianity, taking his text from Acts 2:1-3.

In his annual address to the Council the Bishop brought up the matter of a Coadjutor for the Diocese, and the question was referred to a committee to be reported on Thursday.

Bishop Beckwith's report showed the affairs of the Diocese to be in good condition, and he especially commended the devotion of the clergy throughout the State. He declared that the mission work of Alabama was unequaled by any other Diocese in the Church, and he especially commended the laymen's extension movement as one of the most progressive steps ever taken, and also the idea of the establishment of a central office in connection with the Nation-Wide Campaign.

One point recommended to the careful consideration of the Council was the decrease in the number of clergymen available. Bishop Beckwith declared that the present outlook from theological schools is not encouraging for the future ,and that the matter is one demanding serious attention.

Much routine business was attended to, committees appointed, reports read, and Council adjourned for luncheon, which was served each day by a committee of ladies from the various churches of the city. In the afternoon Bishop and Mrs. Beckwith entertained at a reception to the delegates and visitors to the Council.

The Council, at its session on Thursday morning, appointed the Rev. W. G. McDowell, of Auburn, as chairman of a commission, with power to appoint subordinate members, to raise by a canvass of the Diocese the sum of $40,000 to be used in erecting a new church and parish house at Auburn.

This action was taken amidst general enthusiasm, reports of the work of the Rev. Mr. McDowell at Auburn being received with great interest.

The plans for the new construction work call, in addition to a new church, a new parish house, which will be open to students at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and, it is hoped, will ultimately become a center for social activity at Auburn.

The question of the appointment of a Bishop-Coadjutor for Alabama, as requested by Bishop Beckwith in his address at Wednesday's session, resulted in a difference of opinion in the Council, and led to much discussion.

Suggestions that Bishop Beckwith make known his plans for the Bishop-Coadjutor were resented by some members of the Council as showing a lack of confidence in their Bishop. The question was finally put to a vote, which was declared to be in effect a vote of confidence in the Bishop of the Diocese of Alabama. The vote was 43 to 33 in favor of the stand taken by Bishop Beckwith.

Discussion was closed only when Bishop Beckwith withdrew his request for the appointment of a Bishop-Coadjutor.

A number of proposed amendments to the canons came in for much discussion, and were finally referred to a special committee to work on a revision of the canons and the constitution of the Diocese, the recommendations of the committee to be acted upon at the next Diocesan Council.

The report of the Treasurer, Mr. R. H. Cochrane, showed that the financial status of the Diocese was good and that the past year had been successful so far as finances of the Church are concerned.

Officers for the year were elected as follows:

Standing Committee—Rev. E. W. Gamble, Rev. E. A. Penick, Rev. Stewart McQueen, Dr. W. B. Hall, Mr. R. J. Williams, Judge Lee J. Clayton.

Mr. Frank Stollenwerck, registrar; Judge Oscar S. Lewis, chancellor; Rev. Stewart McQueen, historiographer; Mr. R. H. Cochrane, treasurer.

Delegates to Synod, Province of Sewanee—Rev. Oscar DeW. Randolph, Rev. Carl Henckell, Rev. T. R. Bridges, D. D., Rev. P. N. McDonald, Rev. Stewart McQueen, Rev. Louis Tucker. Mr. A. J. M. Atkins, Mr. H. J. Whitfield, Dr. W. B. Hall, Mr. Algernon Blair, Mr. W. H. Armbrecht.

The session Thursday night was featured by a service in memoriam to the Rev. E. E. Cobbs, former rector of St. John's Church, Montgomery, who died in Greensboro during the past year.

The Council adjourned on Friday afternoon, to meet next year in Birmingham.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

"The Home for Boys," Covington, to Receive S. S. Lenten Offering.

By the approval of the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., and by the action of the Executive Board of the Diocese, the Lenten offering of the Sunday schools of the Diocese will this year be given to the Home for Homeless Boys, Covington. The Home was well provided for in the approved Survey of the Church, but as yet has not received an appropriation from the General Fund, as the Presiding Bishop and Council has found it impossible to set aside anything for the Home. Emergency appropriations have been made by the Diocese of Southern Virginia and Southwestern Virginia, and the Bishop of Virginia has authorized the making of special gifts by designation through the Diocesan Treasurer on the nation-wide apportionment, to the amount of $6,000.

The needs of the Home are quite pressing, and the more than one hundred and thirty boys there will be greatly helped by generous response to these appeals.

G. F. R.

St. Barnabas' Community House.

The newly built community house at St. Barnabas' Mission in the "Piney" neighborhood of Wythe County was opened for the first service on the afternoon of the first Sunday after Epiphany, the Rev. Claudius F. Smith, diocesan missioner, reading the service, and the Rev. F. H. Craighill, missionary in charge, making the address. The service was held in the midst of what is said to have been the heaviest snowstorm in thirty years, but there was an excellent attendance of the mountain people, some of them walking several miles through the snow.

St. Barnabas' is a new work, made possible by the funds of the Nation-Wide Campaign, and the "Piney" neighborhood is a purely rural district, without even a small group of houses. The people are of purest Anglo-Saxon stock, and are very cordial and responsivve.

The community house is a frame building seventy feet long and forty wide. The main auditorium is fifty feet by twenty-four. At the rear, separated from it by folding doors, which make it possible for the whole house to be thrown open ,are two rooms each twenty feet square, which are to be used for Boy Scouts, agricultural clubs, classes in nursing, domestic science, etc., reading room, and all the social and recreational activities which it is hoped will center at this community house. There is also a large porch, and a smaller one at the rear of the house. The lot includes four acres of land, most of which will be used as a playground and recreation center.

Besides the missionary in charge, Miss M. Agnes Treat, an unusually well trained and versatile welfare worker, is already in residence at St. Andrew's, Ivanhoe, five miles away, and it is hoped that a trained nurse will soon be added to the staff.

The Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, rector of Emmanuel Church, Staunton, has been chosen as editor of the new Southwestern Virginia Diocesan paper.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Unveiling of Honor Roll.

The honor roll of those of St. John's Parish, York, who served in the army and navy of the United States during the world war, was unveiled at the morning service on January 6. The roll contains seventy-six names, and opposite five of these stars are affixed.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

DISARMAMENT.

The question of some arrangement for the limiting of armaments by agreement between the nations bids fair to occupy as important a place upon the international stage as did the League of Nations.

The question has about resolved itself into this, Shall we look forward to peace, or shall we continue to prepare for war?

The theory that large armies and thorough preparedness is a preventive of war was pretty well exploded in 1914. It was the nation best prepared and with the largest army that brought on the world struggle. So it is always certain to be. No nation is going to put huge sums of money into battleships, arms and such preparation without expecting some time to get returns on the investment by seeing them used. A naturally peaceful people may be turned into one desiring war by having an equipment for that purpose which they are eager to see tried.

Surely the churches will be a unit in trying to exert their influence in reducing warlike preparations and encouraging plans for peace. If we cannot have a League of Nations, perhaps we may at least secure an international disarmament agreement.

"GATHER UP THE FRAGMENTS."

Jno. B. Cunningham.

(We take pleasure in publishing this article, although it is somewhat local in its information. These Associations for the Blind, however, are either being formed or are already in existence in most of our States, and they are rendering a service which should interest our Church people.

The more people who belong to these organizations, and the more widely they are scattered over a State, the more effective they become. The State School for the Blind is usually their headquarters, and information can always be obtained there.)

The authors of the four gospels were all of them past masters in one very difficult and very delicate art—the art of omitting non-essentials. Always giving due scope to incidentals, they never allowed themselves to swerve from the course of the paramount business, to present Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever. Thus it happens that the scriptural portraits of certain individuals who were touched and transformed by the Master's healing ministry are portraits very faint and meager indeed!

The individuals pre-eminent in this sense are those blind men who, seeking sight, sought the Master, and, finding the Master, found light. They are known to readers of the Bible as merely "beggars—blind beggars." And so tenaciously has this incidental portraiture clung to the minds of most of us that we incline to think of all the blind of all ages as merely "beggars—blind beggars." Fortunately, there are a few people here and there who know that this conception, in so far as it applies to certain blind men and women of their own personal acquaintance, is as incorrect as would be the fancy that every trading ship which today plies the Mediterranean from Phoenicia to the Adriatic is of the self-same type and equippage as that ill-starred vessel on which St. Paul made his memorable voyage.

And the erroneous generalization arises, not through any fault of the scriptural portraiture—meager as that is—but because most of us fail to read the whole portrait. Those blind beggars share that fate of all mortal men which Shakespeare puts thus, "The evil that men do lives after them, but their good is oft interred with their bones."

Why may we not remember—and just as tenaciously as we remember the word "beggar"—that very creditable glimpse which the gospels give of that blind man whose energy, persistence and grit was such that even the anger of the multitude and the protests of the disciples could not daunt his determination to meet the Master? Or why may we not remember that laconic individual whose ready wit so nonplussed the chief priests and scribes?

It was Christ's pleasure gently to disabuse His hearers of their erroneous conceptions as to the valuation to be placed on a human life, however low might be the plane of that life—however sunken in poverty of spirit or deformity of body.

Do the readers happen to know of some of the present-day vindications of the Master's scale of values?

Do they know, for instance, that the people of South Carolina, in recent years, elected a blind man to be Superintendent of Public Instruction? Have they heard that the Virginia Polytechnic Institute now has for its Y. M. C. A. Secretary—and one of the most successful, we are told, in the history of the institute—a blind man who received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from William and Mary College in 1917? Do they know that an assistant to one of the patent law firms in Washington, who lost his sight from glaucoma eight years ago, is now cheerfully riding his handicap in a responsible Federal office as Deputy Collector of Customs for the Port of Alexandria, Va.? And that there are hundreds of others who, as piano tuners, broom makers, salesmen, poultry raisers, stenographers, musicians, teachers or lawyers, are achieving the worthwhile side by side with their sighted fellows?

Aroused to a recognition of the unexplored possibilities of its blind population, the State of Virginia, at the last meeting of the Legislature, authorized the appointment of a commission to investigate conditions of the blind of the State. Like many Southern States, Virginia was rather slow in awakening to the consciousness that its blind population is sufficiently large and sufficiently component to warrant a more definite and systematic co-operation from the State. An association, chartered as the Virginia Association of Workers for the Blind, was organized at the State school in June, 1919, with the object as its constitution states, "To promote the interest of the blind along any and all lines." It was in pursuance of this object that the Association, mainly through the indefatigable efforts and skilful engineering of its president, Mr. L. L. Watts, led the fight for the Legislative Commission. Senator S. L. Ferguson, Appomattox, Va., and Hon. Herbert Taylor, Staunton, were the legislators selected for this commission. The third member, and the commission's secretary, is Mr. L. L. Watts, himself blind, as well as a teacher in the Virginia School for the Blind. The first act of the commission was to inaugurate a complete census of the blind of Virginia. Data relating to the present condition of the blind, the cause of blindness, the percentage of blind who are unemployed, etc., etc., is being collected by means of a questionnaire distributed all over the State. With this vast and accurate array of facts and figures in hand, the commission will be able to simplify and to facilitate enormously the work of the Legislature whose progressive and broad-spirited members made possible this long-delayed investigation. There are scores of blind men in the State who, by the sudden loss of sight through some accident or disease, were thrown out of honest labor into a slough of dependence and idleness. Hourly they brood over their misfortune, chasing each forlorn hope wit ha more galling despair; and all the while there is work they could be doing, which work would give them smile for sigh, if only they had some means of acquiring the knowledge and mastery of it.

But it is high time that we should revert to our text, "Gather up the fragments." The "five thousand" had been fed and were filled. At that moment food seemed the last thing that any one should be concerned about, and still the Master commanded His disciples, "Gather up the fragments, that none be lost," and they took up more than twelve baskets full. There is a deep and beautiful lesson here, and it is this: the same miraculous hand that had created the new loaves for the feeding of the five thousand likewise created the new fragments. That hand never created a useless thing: He creates them, so He has use for the fragments.

In the fabric of modern, social and industrial life there are human fragments that will fit in places where symmetry cannot go. Some of these will shape themselves into the fair surface, covering some unsymmetrical ugliness with the beauty of its environs. Some will wedge themselves deep down into the long-neglected hollows and crevices, solidifying and strengthening the butments beneath. Ours is not to bemoan their origin or ignore their unequal destiny; ours is to heed the command, "Gather up the fragments, that none be lost," and thus may we follow in the footsteps of Him Who went about always doing good.

No man can be alone when Jesus Christ is his invisible companion.—J. H. Dunham.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

JANUARY.

1. Saturday. Circumcision. New Year's Day.
2. Second Sunday after Christmas.
6. Thursday. Epiphany.
9. First Sunday after Epiphany.
16. Second Sunday after Epiphany.
23. Septuagesima Sunday.
25. Tuesday. Conversion of St. Paul.
30. Sexagesima Sunday.
31. Monday.

Collect for Sexagesima Sunday.

O Lord God, Who seest that we put not our trust in anything that we do, mercifully grant that by Thy power we may be defended against all adversity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Purication of St. Mary the Virgin.

February 2.

Almighty and ever-living God, we humbly beseech Thy Majesty, that, as Thy only-begotten Son was this day presented in the temple in substance of our flesh, so we may be presented unto Thee with pure and clean hearts, by the same Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Christ's Love.

(Tune, "O Love, That Will Not Let Me Go!")

O Thou, Whose love didst stoop to feel
  Our weaknesses, our pain and care,
O Thou, Who didst the leper heal,
To us Thy selfless love reveal,
  That we the gift may share.

Thou once didst hear the silent plea
  Of her who touched Thy seamless dress
And came that instant whole and free,
Thou mad'st the sightless eyes to see
  And the dumb lips to bless.

Oh! give us now the surgeon's skill,
  And science freed from craft and greed,
Submissive yearning for Thy will,
Wisdom divine our minds to fill,
  And eyes to see the need.

To mothers in the pangs of woe,
  To children starving without bread,
Oh! let us feel the debt we owe,
In self-denying love to go,
  Wherever Thou hast said.

—Selected.

Roses or Broken Fences.

PART II.

Clem led the way to the family sitting-room. Although it had the marks of numerous child hands and feet, it was a surprisingly pleasant room in comparison to the appearance of the house outside. There were a good many books and that surprised Harriette, because she hadn't supposed the Langdons read very much. There were a number of pictures on the walls, too, very good copies of very fine paintings. And the whole room was in surprisingly good taste. Harriette felt bewildered. Could she have misjudged the Langdons?

Iva had picked up a baby photograph and was looking interestedly at it. "What a perfect little darling!" she commented.

Clem's eyes filled with tears. "It was my baby sister," she said. "Mother died when she was very tiny, and Daphne followed her just before we came here, when she was only two. She was the dearest little thing, and her leaving us was scarcely easier than mother's going. Since the two went, father hasn't seemed to care much about anything, and Jasper isn't happy here, not really, and he's getting careless and—not what I want him to be."

She paused as if remembering they were strangers, and then went on because she could not seem to help herself, and had to talk to somebody. But it was Iva she looked at, and not Harriette.

"I'm only nineteen now," she said, "and I was in high school when mother went, and there were so many things I've never learned to do that I needed to. We were tired of the old place because so many sad things had happened there, and we thought we could start all new here and everything would be happier. That was what started father with the thought of buying this place. But ever since we came, things have seemed to go wrong. The people are so much harder to get acquainted with than at home, and I guess they mostly judge newcomers by their outward appearance and not by their hearts. This is evidently a much harder place to put in good condition than it seemed when we first looked at it. Father can't seem to get ahead and Jasper has lost heart with it, while I can't seem to do much alone. Mary and Ernest are good children, but they're only fourteen and twelve, while the younger three are just little children."

"And there's really just you to do everything," said Harriette suddenly, "and you're only my age. Why, I think you're a perfect wonder. Why didn't I ever realize it before?"

Clem was still looking at Iva rather than at her. "I'm no wonder," she said, "truly; but mostly I've tried to do my very best, and the hardest thing in it all is to keep from getting discouraged."

Iva was smiling, an encouraging and a reminiscent smile. "I know," she said. "I haven't had as hard a time as you; but I've been through it all to a certain degree. I was just the same age as you were when my mother left me. She had taught me a good deal, but no high school girl has a chance to learn all that is necessary for a housekeeper. My mistakes were legion, and if my father and brother hadn't been the most patient people in the world, I don't know what I would have done. I had my badly discouraged times, too, and had to try hard not to be a coward. Then at last I found a secret that has helped me more than anything else in housekeeping and everything else. That is to literally take one day at a time. You know the verse:

"One day at a time,
It's a wholesome rhyme—
  A good one to live by,
One day at a time."

"Well, I learned not to look ahead even one day, just to do my certain allotted task each day, and believe that what I couldn't do would be taken care of and done right, if necessary. In the first place, I couldn't bear to look into the future without my mother. I was always saying, 'If I won't see her in heaven until I'm an old lady, how can I stand it?' One day a neighbor came in to talk to me, such a dear neighbor, and she said, 'Dear child, eternity has begun already. We are only living in time because we don't know any better. We think we have to wait for our resurrection just because we have fixed a remote time for it; but Jesus didn't say so. And we'll learn His way, only by keeping so fast hold of God's hand today that each tomorrow will bring victory and heaven a little nearer, until the difference to us between time and eternity is all bridged over and we are at peace with our dear ones. If we look ahead too much, we may miss some message from them today that will make the way plainer towards them tomorrow. I don't believe our dear ones are nearly as far away as many people suppose them to be. We must live each day so as to be sure not to miss them.' Oh, she helped me so much.

"When my mother first went, time seemed interminable. It doesn't any more. She seems nearer to me than when she first went, as if I understood her better. So I do each day's work in the home or out of it, and don't strain my eyes for eternity because I know it's right around me, waiting for me to be pure enough to see it. There, what a long preachment, but ever since you helped me pick up the flowers I've wanted to tell you this. You made me think of myself three years ago."

Clem's tears had overflowed; but they were not bitter tears, and her expression had changed. "I'll always love you for it," she said simply. "Won't you come over as often as you can, while you're here?"

"Indeed I will," said Iva, "and if I can help you in any way, please let me."

Meantime Harriette, as she expressed it afterwards to Halstead, was having as big a lesson as she had ever had in her life. Clem was a wonder and Iva was another, and where, oh, where was she, Harriette Isborne, who had always prided herself on her astuteness and her general idea of things? "Little snob," she kept saying to herself. "You horrid little snob."

But, snubbed or not, and she felt she deserved to be, nothing would have kept her away from the Langdon house after that. "I must help some way to make up," she told Iva, "to make Clem see I wasn't as horrid as I've been showing myself up to now. Iva dear, tell me how you saw so quickly what I didn't see all these weeks and months."

"I'd been there myself," said Iva, "for one thing, and for another, when I first looked at that yard, I remembered a definition for courtesy, which I had copied into my quotation note book at home—'Courtesy is the eye which overlooks your friend's broken gateway, but sees the rose which blossoms in his garden.'"

Harriette's cheeks flushed, but she looked up quickly with shining eyes. "Oh, I like that," she cried. "I need it, too. I'm going to copy it and always remember it. You and that have opened my eyes and I feel that they're open to stay open. I want to do things for Clem and all the Langdons. Oh, Iva, teach me how while you're here, so that I won't make any more such horrid, selfish mistakes."

"You won't," comforted Iva, "and you'll find heaps of ways to help and comfort after I'm gone. Just remember that it's charity as well as courtesy (and charity means love) to always look for the rose in the garden instead of the broken gateway. Starting with that, you can see the real person behind the rose better, and help him more."

"I'll try to remember," said Harriette humbly.—Marion W. Walen, in Presbyterian Banner.

Steps Upward.

Take the guide's strong hand and go
Though his name be sorrow;
Do not fear to climb with him
To a clearer morrow;
He can take thee where the night
Passes to divinest light.

Pain holds out a hand to thee—
Take it, never shrinking;
Lift thy feet and rise with him
Higher than thy thinking.
He who follows pain's behest
Has at length most perfect rest.

God has heard thy prayers. Be glad
Thou art in His keeping;
Morning songs may sweetest be
After nights of weeping;
Sad one, thou shalt sing again
In the sunshine after rain.

—Marianne Farningham.

Getting Along With Folks.

How to get along with other people, and how to help them get along with us, is pretty largely a matter of how to use one's tongue. Tongue-control produces not only self-control, but other-folks-control.

Here is how one man who is making a success of his life attacks the problem. He has laid down for himself the following rules, observance of which will be a mighty assistance to any of us:

I will not be provoking, if I know it.

I will not be provoked, if I can help it; or if I am, I will not speak till I have thought it over, putting myself in the other fellow's place.

I will not be petty. I will pass over small offenses and small annoyances without fuss or comment.

I will not insist on my way because it is my way. If the other fellow's is about as good, I'll take it.

I will say what I think, and then drop the subject, especially if it seems a case of getting hot. Argument doesn't convince after that.

I will let the other fellow have the last word, the larger half of the credit, and all of it, if he wants it.—Selected.

Seeking God.

I said, "I will find God," and forth I went
To seek Him in the clearness of the sky.
But over me stood unendurably
Only a pitiless sapphire firmament
Ringing the world-blank splendor; yet intent
Still to find God, "I will go seek," said I;
"His way upon the waters," and drew nigh
An ocean marge weed strewn and foam bespent,
And the waves dashed on idle sand and stone,
And very vacant was the long blue sea;
But in the evening as I sat alone,
My window opening to the vanishing day,
Dear God! I could not choose but kneel and pray,
And it sufficed that I was found of Thee.

—Edward Dowden.

Popularity.

This is one of those words which may denote a valuable or a worthless thing.

Of course, anybody and everybody is pleased to have "greetings in the market-places," and, even more, "chief seats in the synagogues."

But, after all, the real value of such honors depends upon the reasons for bestowing them.

To be applauded, because you chime in with the voice of the crowd, is not an applause witnessing to real merit. In fact, it may testify only to base subservience and cowardice. "The populace hisses at me, but I approve myself," was a fine old Roman declaration.

There are not a few people who go about smiling and shaking hands, but who have not the slightest interest in those whom they accost with such courtesies. And if these latter accept the greeting, as a tribute to themselves, they do so simply out of their own egotism.

Yet, such is the average egotism, most of us do feel a satisfaction in these tributes. We know, if we would only think, that they mean nothing, except the desire to stand well with us. But we prefer to accept them as a proof of our own value and others' appreciation thereof.

And so we cause both them and ourselves serious haarm. We encourage them in paying false flattery and we encourage ourselves in false self-approval.

The simple truth is that nobody should seek to be popular. If he, going on in honest endeavor to do right and to help his fellows, can thus gain their encomiums, he may well rejoice.

But to shape his opinions and to order his conduct, with the purpose of becoming "popular," is to ruin himself and to become noxious to his fellowmen.

George Herbert finely says, "Scorn no man's love." That is quite right. But love is one thing, and popularity is quite another. To do what wins love must always be Christian; to do what only wins applause may often be devilish.—The Palm Branch.

God's Surprise.

One of the surprises that God treats us to in the course of our life, which will no doubt be also the overwhelming surprise of our first review of this life from the vantage-ground of a larger and better, consists in the disclosure of the way in which our anonymous Lover has been besetting us behind and before, and laying His hand upon us. How many restraints that make for salvation have never been registered in the consciousness or printed off on the memory! How many times there are when qualification for duty is given concerning which we shall by and by hear the voice saying, "I girded thee, though thou hast not known me?"—J. Rendel Harris.

No Duplication of Sound.

If a complete list could be made of the distinctive names by which the noises produced by birds and beasts are called, it would be found that there are very few duplicates.

This may be judged even by the most common. The horse neighs, the sheep bleats, the cow lows, the pig grunts and squeals, the turkey gobbles, the hen cackles, the cock crows, the goose hisses, the duck quacks, the cat mews, the dog barks, the wolf howls, the lion roars, the bull bellows, the sparrow chirps, the pigeon coos, the frog croaks, the rook caws, the monkey chatters, the elephant trumpets, the camel grunts, the stag calls, the rabbit screams—only when wounded—the donkey brays, the bee hums, the fly buzzes, the grasshopper chirrups, the swallow twitters, the chick peeps, the hound bays and the owl hoots.

Perhaps the best word for the sound a cricket makes is used by Tennyson. "Not a cricket chirp'd," he writes "In Memoriam," although the word would fit the grasshopper better perhaps.

Tennyson prided himself on his exact word for the noises made by bird and beast. Thus he speaks of the "moan of doves," the robin's "pipe," the woodpecker's "laugh," the curlew's "whistle," the jay's "scritch," the parrot's "scream," the peacock's "squall," the fowl's "shriek," and the eagle's "yelp."—Chicago Tribune.

"Be Ye Also Ready."

"What shall be the sign of Thy coming, and of the end of the world? . . . Be ye also ready."

"What are the signs of Thy coming,
And when shall the end-time be?"
Anxious, they questioned the Master,
Curious, even as we.

Are these the signs of His coming
That loom over sea and land,
That darken the earth and the heavens?
Is the day so near at hand?

We know not; He hath not told us
This secret of the Lord;
But all we need He hath left us
To read in His sacred Word.

And pulsing through the silence
Like the far, faint throb of a drum,
"Watch, be ye also ready,
For ye know not when I come."

Sweet as a silver trumpet
Through tumult and clamor clear:
"Watch, be ye also ready,
For the time is drawing near."

—The Methodist Protestant.

Only a Dud.

While he was making his way about his platoon one dark night a sergeant heard the roar of a "G. I. Can" overhead and dived into a shell hole, the American Legion Weekly says. His head knocked the wind out of a private who already occupied the hole. There was a moment of silence, a long, deep breath, and then: "Is that you, Sarge?"

"That's me."

"Thank heaven!" exclaimed the private feverishly. "I was just waiting for you to explode."

Henry Ward Beecher once told an audience in England that very early one morning a young fellow, who was a member of Plymouth Church, came to see him in great distress of mind and soul. He had worked himself down in perfect misery because he had come to the conclusion that his supposed conversion had been a delusion, and that he was still an entire stranger to the experience of the regenerated life.

"And why?" asked the great preacher.

Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth wouldst teach
Thy soul must overflow, if thou
Another's soul wouldst reach!
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

For the Young Folks

Jesus Knows.

Jesus knows how weak and sinful
And how poor I am to-day;
By the grace He gives me only
Have I strength of heart to pray;
Blessed Jesus, loving Saviour,
Keep me pure from day to day.

Jesus knows the heavy burdens
I must bear, with sin around,
And He knows my feet will falter
Till His grace my heart has found;
Blessed Jesus, precious Saviour,
In His strength my all is found.

Jesus knows the doubts and dangers
That surround my heavenward way,
And He sends His love to cheer me,
When with burdened heart I pray;
Precious Jesus, Friend and Saviour,
Keep me in the narrow way.

—Canadian Churchman.

The Golden Gloves Family.

Dorothy sighed a great big sigh as she laid her book of fairy stories on the table.

"Oh, dear, why can't we have wonderful wishing rings, and seven-mile boots, and magic golden gloves for really and truly now? It would be grand to live in a world with things like that."

Aunt Margaret, who was visiting at Dorothy's house, smiled understandingly, for Aunt Margaret had read every one of those very fairy stories herself when she was a little girl.

"I used to look for wishing rings, Dorothy," she said, "and for seven-mile boots, and for golden gloves, too. I never did find a wishing ring or a pair of seven-mile boots, but I did find the golden gloves and I know where there is a pair for you, too."

"Really and truly golden gloves. Aunt Margaret?" asked Dorothy eagerly. "Oh, I didn't know there were any in the whole world any more."

"There are just as many golden gloves as there are hands in the world," said Aunt Margaret, "but ever so many folks live all of their lives without knowing they could wear golden gloves all the time if only they would claim them and put them on."

"Can you wear them all the time?" said Dorothy.

"If you put them on once they stay on until you do or say something that is unkind. Then they fall off and you have to put them on again."

"Please tell me where to look for mine," begged Dorothy.

"Throw up your hands," said Aunt Margaret, just like a highwayman, "and I will put a pair of golden gloves on them."

Dorothy laughed gleefully as her two little hands went up quickly.

"Now, we'll slip on the thumb of the glove first," said Aunt Margaret, as she rubbed Dorothy's thumb, just as if she were putting on a glove, while she said one word as a fairy god-mother giving her a wonderful gift would have said a magic word. The word she said was "Do." Then she rubbed Dorothy's first finger, as if she were slipping a finger of a glove on that, and said another word. The second word was "Unto." Then came the second finger and all the other fingers of that hand, and then the thumb and all the fingers of the other hand. When Aunt Margaret had slipped a word on each finger she made a motion as if she was pulling a glove up, first on the left hand and then on the right hand, as she said the last two words.

The words she put on Dorothy's fingers and pulled up on her arms were "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you."

Dorothy looked a bit disappointed.

"Oh, auntie," she said, "I thought you meant really and truly golden gloves."

"These are really and truly golden gloves, little girl, and if you will wear them all the time and get everybody else in the world to wear them, this old world will be a much more wonderful place to live in than fairyland."

Dorothy looked at her hands very seriously. Then she said, "I s'pose it would make a big difference. I don't always do unto others just like I would want them to do unto me, and I'm sure there are a lot of folks who don't wear golden gloves when they play with me. I wish I could give away about a dozen pairs to start with."

Aunt Margaret laughed. "Well, the very best way to get other people to wear golden gloves is to wear them yourself until other folks see how beautiful they are. Then all of your friends will want some just like yours."

When Dorothy was ready to go out to play she came up to Aunt Margaret. "I'm going to try playing in golden gloves this afternoon," she said. "Please put mine on for me again. I'm afraid they came off when I grabbed my story book from brother."

Aunt Margaret took Dorothy's two little hands and put the golden gloves on them again.

Then Dorothy went to play at Mary's house. Mary was her best friend. As she ran through the gate in the high hedge she heard something say, "Me-ow, me-ow." She looked and saw a little kitten with its head caught in the fence. "I'm in such a hurry. I s'pose somebody will come along and get that cat loose directly," she thought as she ran on. Then she stopped suddenly and looked at her hands. "If I were a kitten with my head caught in a hedge I guess I wouldn't want a little girl to wait for somebody else to come along and get me loose." So she ran across the grass, pushed the hedge back and gently lifted the kitten out.

"I think I'm going to like my gloves," she said to the kitten as it rubbed up against her feet and purred gratefully.

Dorothy and Mary played all the games they loved best. While they were blowing soap bubbles Dorothy saw Mary's grandmother looking and feeling all around for something.

"She's just lost her glasses again," said Mary. "She's always losing them. Come on and play. She'll find them directly." Dorothy looked down at her hands.

"I'm sure my gloves will come off if I do not find grandmother's glasses, because if I were a grandmother I know what I would want a little girl to do unto me." So she laid down her bubble pipe and found grandmother's glasses.

When grandmother held her hand a minute and said, "Thank you, dearie," Dorothy had such a happy feeling in her heart she thought, "Oh, I know I'm going to love my gloves."

When the clock struck three Dorothy and Mary were to go to the Junior Missionary Society, which met every Friday afternoon. As they passed the fruit stand on the corner they met some of the other girls and boys who were teasing Carmella, the little Italian girl whose father had the fruit stand.

"Dago! Dago!" shouted one of the boys. Carmella's black eyes flashed angrily. As she turned quickly her foot slipped and she fell into a puddle of water. The boy who was teasing her clapped his hands and shouted:

"Oh, my, what a muddle,
See the dago in the pudlle!"

Everybody laughed—everybody except Dorothy. She started to laugh, too, for Carmella did look too funny for anything, sitting right flat down in the street, but then Dorothy thought, "Oh, my gloves. I'm sure I wouldn't want any one to laugh unto me." So she went right over to Carmella and put her arm about her and helped her up. Somehow every one stopped laughing and a little bird sang a happy song in Dorothy's heart, "Golden gloves are the very best gloves of all."

The Junior meeting was fine. Dorothy loved to hear the missionary stories, to see the pictures and to sing the hymns. When they passed the basket for the offering, she was so glad mother had given her a dime to put in. While the boy was passing the basket to the children in front of her Dorothy began to think about the other dime she had in her little silver pocketbook. Mother had given her that dime for chocolate milk, and she loved chocolate milk better than anything. She looked down at her hands.

"If I were a little girl somewhere in America where there wasn't any Sunday school or church for me to go to, or if I were away off in India or Japan worshipping idols because I had never heard of Jesus, I just know what I would want the other boys and girls to do unto me." So, when the basket reached Dorothy, two dimes went in instead of one.—King's Builders.

The True Story of Tommy.

Tommy, a large, very intelligent black and white cat, wants to tell you his story because he thinks some misused, unhappy cat may hear it and hope for better days. Nine years ago poor Tommy was left by his former owners to take care of himself while they were away. They had been hard and cruel to him so that he believed nothing, trusted no one, and did not know how to purr. The people were gone some time and Tommy wandered in the woods, living on wild game.

One day he went to the little schoolhouse some distance from his old home and the teacher heard him wailing pathetically. She wanted a cat, so she told the children that they might catch him. But Tommy knew better than to be caught by children. After school, however, the teacher lured him to her by offerings left from dinner-pails. It was some time before she could touch him, but at last she caught him, and though at first he was badly scared, he allowed her to carry him home. Here he was christened Tommy.

When he was put down in his new home he went nearly frantic with nervous joy, and rubbed on all the furniture until his new friends thought something must be wrong. He drank milk as though starved, new milk twice a day with sweet skim-milk between times. Poor Tommy had been without milk so long! Slowly he grew to trust his new friends. He had a basket in a certain up-stairs room, and thither he would flee in case of fright. If his former owners passed the house and he heard their voices he would fly for his basket. When he first heard a man's voice over the telephone he sought his basket He would leave the room if a broom was used in it, and carpet slippers were a source of terror. His former name of "Old Smut," even after nine years of comfort, makes Tommy cower with fear.

As months passed he grew quiet and affectionate and at last began to learn to purr. Now he is the household pet. In the winters he still catches his tail and plays with a ball, and in the summer he clears the rabbits from the garden and the rats from the barn. He lets the birds pretty much alone, though he is a fine hunter. Tommy says to unhappy, homeless cats: "Cheer up. Some time, maybe, your chance will come as mine has. I have learned to purr and be happy and to trust people. So here is hoping for you."—Gladys Beebe in Our Dumb Animals.

Somebody's Birthday.

This is somebody's birthday,
Just as sure as fate;
Some little boy is six years old,
Some little girl is eight.
Some little boy is three today,
Some little girl thirteen,
Some little twins are exactly two—
Two apiece, I mean.

Some one is eating his birthday cake
And laughing over the plums:
Some one is counting her birthday cake
On all her fingers and thumbs.
Some one is bouncing his birthday toys
Or winding his birthday watch,
Some one is not too wise or tall
For his birthday butter scotch.

Think of the beautiful birthday books,
Think of the birthday cheer,
Think of the birthday happiness
Every day in the year!
Every day in the year, my dear,
Every day we're alive,
Some happy child is one or two,
Or three, or four, or five.

—Selected.

Jimmy's Absent Guest.

Jimmy sat listening to his father and mother as they talked about the hungry, cold and ragged little children of Europe, the helpless victims of war's cruelty. For two years Jimmy had been an enthusiastic member of the Junior Red Cross, and he knew a great deal about those very children who had aroused the sympathy of his parents, for the school children of America have been busy in many ways providing food, clothing and happiness for their little friends beyond the Atlantic.

Jimmy thought hard over what his mother had said about its being their duty to do something for the 3,500,000 children in Europe who face starvation. And then came his big idea! He was bubbling over with it at dinner-time and they were scarcely seated at the table when he launched into the subject.

"Let's have one of the children here for dinner," he said.

"What children?" asked his mother in surprise.

"Why, one of the starving children of Europe," answered Jimmy. "Don't you remember? One of the children you and daddy were talking about a little while ago."

"Just what do you mean, son?" asked his father.

"Well, it's this way," answered Jimmy. "Suppose you say, daddy, that you would like to have as a guest at our table a little child like me, but who is not going to have enough to eat this winter unless we take him into our home. Of course, he won't really sit here beside me, but you can give some money to the Relief Committee to be put with the dollars others will give to be used to buy food for the hungry children. Then we can pretend that our little child is sitting at the table with us every day until the next harvest provides the food now so badly needed. Won't you do it, daddy?"

Jimmy's father and mother, exchanging swift glances, nodded assent, and then and there his daddy agreed that the plan pictured by the boy's imagination should be put into effect. Inquiry revealing that one dollar would provide food for a starving child in Central Europe for one month, while ten dollars would keep hunger away until next summer.

There is a vacant chair beside Jimmy's at the table each day, and he eats his dinner in comfort, for he knows that their little absent guest is no longer in danger from starvation.

A Legend About Buttercups.

A long time ago there were no stars in the sky, so they say; nothing but a big round sun and a big round moon and the big round earth thousands of miles below, where all the people lived.

In this moon lived two people, the man in the moon and the woman in the moon. These two did nothing but polish the moon and keep it shining all the time.

One day the woman in the moon said: "The moon is getting so large and so bright that it will keep the people awake at night." The man in the moon said: "I will cut it down to the size of a slice of watermelon." So he went to work to do so. That night the people said: "We have a new moon tonight." The man in the moon went to work cutting little moons from what was left over. The woman said: "Why not cut stars? They would be much prettier than a lot of little moons." So the man hitched his cloud cart to a breeze and away he went hanging the little stars. "Look," said the people, "there are a lot of little stars in the sky."

One day the woman decided to clean house. She cleaned and cleaned till her husband got out of patience with her, for the dust made him sneeze and the furniture tripped him up. He decided to go away for awhile. When he came back everything was as clean as could be.

In the yard was a pile of golden shavings which the woman in the moon had swept from all parts of the house where they had been cutting little stars. The woman said to the man: "Take these pieces away. They just litter up the moon." So he got out his cloud cart and went to pour them down, and a strong breeze came along and helped to scatter them.

The next morning the children on earth went out to look around. They exclaimed: "What pretty things! They are as yellow as butter. They look like little cups and have green stems." Let us call them "buttercups."—Virginia Guide.

The Color of the Nuts.

"I am very glad that the nuts aren't red,
Or the squirrels would find them all," Tom said.
"Now, if nuts were blue," thought the squirrel, "oh, dear!
They never could hide from the children, I fear."
"If the nuts were bright," smiled the tree, "I know
Not a nut would be left on the ground to grow."
So they all agreed in the wood and the town,
That the very best color for nuts must be brown.

—Martha Burr Banks.

A Long Waddle.

A pair of wild ducks recently built their nest on the northern side of the boating pond, in the middle of Central Park in New York City. That is no place, however, for a mother duck to bring up a family, for on spring and summer afternoons a gasoline launch goes chugging round the lake, and young people paddle boats here and there with splashing oars, and little children play near the water; yet in due time eight timid ducklings appeared.

The little brown mother must have had some terrible fright one spring af-

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausealess colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calomel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Druggists sell Calotabs only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

ternoon. She hastily decided that she would lead her family to the "breeding pond," nearly a mile away, at the lower end of the park. There her ducklings would be safe, for the park authorities have inclosed the water with a fence of wire netting, so that the swans and other varieties of aquatic fowl may rear their young in comparative seclusion.

But the little ducks could not fly, and the entire distance to be traversed was through the most frequented part of the park. Because the journey had to be made on waddling little feet, it called for confidence in man that was appealing and wonderful.

The straggling down line formed at the margin of the boating pond, and started to waddle across the broad circular esplanade. In the center of this promenade there is a splashing fountain. When the duck and her little ones had reached that point, a crowd of children and men and women began to form; and as the procession continued on its way the escort grew larger and larger.

When the little brown mother had led the ducklings as far as the great arch beyond the fountain, she confidently piloted them through the ice cream restaurant and past the soda water fountains, where many people sat at tables.

Then came one of the most difficult achievements in the journey. For after the family had passed the restaurant, they encountered two long flights of steps. Up these the bunches of fluffiness, encouraged and urged forward by the mother, fluttered with many a tumble. At last the line of nine waddlers reached the top of the stairs, and here policemen formed themselves into an escort; henceforth the procession had an official guard of honor.

Beyond the stairway is a park road, on which many automobiles and carriages passed rapidly up and down. These the police halted until the mother had led her family across.

Then came the asphalt-paved mall, with countless baby carriages, hundreds of children at play, and donkeys dragging little cartloads of girls and boys. Through all this teeming press the police opened a narrow canon for the trusting little mother and her quacking brood. The crowd jostled behind, but no one offered any hindrance. And all the while it was clearly evident that the wise brown leader knew exactly what she was about, and where she wished to go.—Presbyterian Standard.

How a Little Eskimo Knows Her Age.

The Eskimo people have no books. They can neither read nor write. But they can tell you right away, by looking into a bag, how old is each little fat Eskimo playing about the hut in the snow and cold.

This is the way they know: When a baby comes to an Eskimo's house, or igloo, a fur bag is given to the little one. She is to keep this bag as long as she lives.

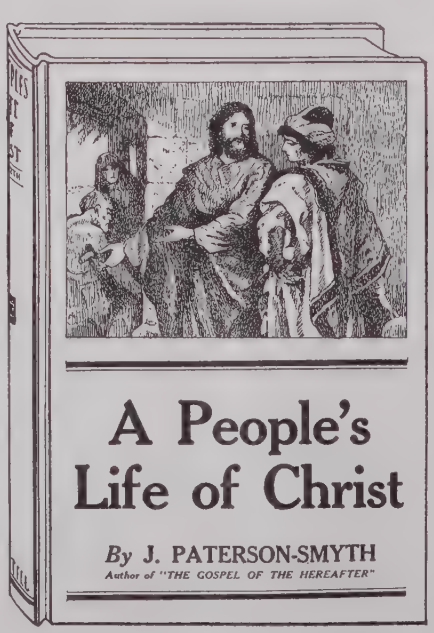
Every year, when the sun comes once more after the long, cold Greenland night, a bone is put into the little bag. So when you look into the bag and see seven bones, you know that the little owner is seven years old.—The Myrtle.

We need a better sense of proportion in our prayers—fewer prayers for safety and more for the cause of Christ. —Oldham.

R. Geissler, Inc.
56 West Eighth Street, New York
Memorials
FOR THE CHURCH
Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address: THE PATHFINDER, 4006 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.



Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

Leake Printing Co.
ENGRAVING, PRINTING, EMBOSSING.
Special attention to out-of-town orders.
Samples sent upon request.
615 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

HAVE YOU READ
PATERSON-SMYTH'S GREAT LIFE OF CHRIST
Author of the Popular Work, "The Gospel of the Hereafter"

¶The world has seen many "Lives" of our Lord since Farrar wrote his famous "Life of Christ."

Every new age requires a new interpretation written in the light of latest research. Here is the new popular version for this day and generation, an everybody's life of Christ, which the ordinary man may read for the sheer pleasure of reading it, and which enables him to put himself in the place of one who has seen and known the Lord in the flesh.

A Handsome Gift Volume
ONLY $3.50 NET

ORDER AT ONCE! Only a limited quantity available for Southern Churchman readers

¶Bishop Charles Fiske writes: "Have just read it . . . Tells the old, old story in a modern way, every chapter a vivid picture; the brief history of the Great Life told with the skill and interest of present-day biography. Ought to be as popular in our day as Farrar's was in his. The story is so told as to meet present-day needs: the hunger, so keenly felt since the war, for some definite knowledge of the unseen world; the social implications of the Gospel; a clear and definite answer to the question, 'What is God like?' "

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Enclosed please find.....for which please send me by return mail .....copies of A PEOPLE'S LIFE OF CHRIST, by J. Paterson-Smyth.

Name.....

Address.....

BEVERLEY HEATING
Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURGH, SCHOOL
OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond. Va.

Cuticura Soap
—The Healthy—
Shaving Soap
Cuticura Soap shaves without mug. Everywhere 25c.

RESERVATIONS FOR EUROPE
NEXT SPRING AND SUMMER
Should be made early in order to secure good space
Telephone Randolph 155, or Write
C. O. ALLEY
STEAMSHIP AND TOURIST AGENT
830 East Main Street Successor to The Richmond Transfer C

You Will

be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company
The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.
Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage
Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 843

HERBERT L. CAIN CHURCH ARCHITECT
12 North Ninth Street, -:- Richmond, Va.
The Needs of the Sunday School, the Law of the Architect
Address Dept. 4

Strength.

The beginning of strength is to know our weakness; and yet we must not dwell on it. The worst thing possible would be, of course, to hover over the thought, "How very weak I am; I am always going wrong"; to excuse ourselves because of it. Yet we must, from time to time, take one honest look at our weakness; we must have a solid, sensible conviction as to what it is, or we shall not find the remedy for it; we must, on the other hand, never acquiesce in it as a necessity of our constitution. And then, if that Accusing Spirit taunt us with our weakness, as he will in order to keep us weak and low; if some of those who ought to strengthen us "cast the same in our teeth," as the sons of the prophets told Elisha that his influence was passing away from him with the departure of Elijah, . . . we have but to answer as he answered: "Yea, I know it, hold ye your peace—I know my weakness, but it concerns you not—me and my Lord it does concern; and He out of weakness will make me strong." —Archbishop Benson.

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer
AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S
SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE
Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

"The Store that Pleases"
FOR FURNITURE
Jones Bros. & Co.
Incorporated
1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

Jno. L. Williams & Sons
BANKERS and BROKERS
Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

FAMINE RELIEF.

For the convenience of our readers we publish the addresses of the treasurers of the various Relief Funds whose appeals for the starving, and especially for starving children, are so urgent and touching. The Southern Churchman will forward contributions to any of these, but to save time, postage and possibility of miscarriage, checks would better be sent directly to the treasurers as below:

Near East Relief (formerly "Armenian and Syrian Relief")—Cleaveland H. Dodge, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City.

European Relief (Central and Eastern Europe)—Franklin K. Lane, 42 Broadway, New York City; or locally for Virginia, DeSoto Fitzgerald, 218 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Chinese Famine Relief—Remit through Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

We acknowledge the following additional contributions to the fund for the relief of the sufferers from famine in China:

Miss M. L. Douglas, Brown's Cove, Va.	$10.00
R. W. Davis, Fountain Inn, S. C.	5.00
Mrs. J. W. Nall, Roanoke, Va.	20.00
Mrs. J. A. G. Davis, Greenwood, Va.	1.00
Mrs. W. J. Smith, Charlotte, N. C.	3.00
Mrs. S. C. Amber, Lynchburg, Va.	3.00
Guild of Stras Memorial Church, Tazewell, Va.	30.00
Mrs. J. H. Johnston, Atlanta, Ga.	5.00

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va. nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate. Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES, $1.50, $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

CATHEDRAL STUDIO, ENGLISH Church embroideries and materials. Stoles with crosses, $7; plain, $5.50; handsome gift stoles, $12 up; burse and veil, $15, $20. Surplices and exquisite altar linens. L. V. Mackrille, 2604 Thirty-sixth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Tel. Chev. 1915.

MISS M. M. TYLER, EXCLUSIVE MILLinery. Now located at 209 North Foushee (Arcade Building), where she will be glad to have her customers call and inspect her mid-winter offerings. All $15 Hats at $5.00 to 7.00. All $10.00 Hats at $3.98.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

TRY RAW SHELLED PEANUTS FOR CHRONIC CONSTIPATION.

A wonderful remedy for children and adults, especially the aged and persons who cannot take exercise. Four pound package, native grown P-nuts, $1.00, postpaid. Directions in each package. PARCEL POST P-NUT CO., Box 134, Franklin, Va.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. BARNAbas offers to laymen seeking the Religious Life opportunity of trying out their vocation and of caring for the sick poor. Address Brother Superior, Gibsonia, Pa.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

ORDERS FOR HAND KNIT SWEATERS, Scarfs, Golf Socks. For information write M. C. Catlin, Sweet Springs, W. Va.

SCHOOL OF NURSING.

The Children's Hospital, Washington, D. C., 150 beds, gives a three-year course in all departments, including adult work. Accredited school. Class entering March first. Address Superintendent of Nurses.

JUST RECEIVED
A new supply of
"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR,"
By Bowie.
Price $1.25 Postpaid.
Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Va.
STORAGE AND TRANSFER.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

SEVEN BEAUTIFUL SONGS

for church and home, with music for the piano. "The Mountain Flower," "The Wonderful River," "The Christian Banner," "The Battle of Ages," "The Fading Flower," "The Rosebud You Gave Me" and "The Flower Queen." Standard Sheet Music size, ordinary voice. All seven for $1.25, postpaid. Order from Otto Lundell, Room 323, 155 N. Clark St., Chicago.

HELP WANTED

LADY CANVASSERS, LIVING AT HOME, can make extra money in spare time. Big commissions. Room 385 Jefferson Hotel, Richmond, Va.; evenings between 8 and 9.

WANTED — CONSECRATED CHURCHwoman, preferably a Southern woman between thirty and fifty years of age, to act as matron of Home for Wayward Girls. Must start on small salary. References required. Write to B-1426 Blanding St., Columbia, S. C.

HOUSEKEEPER OR MOTHER'S HELPer. Competent to supervise care of three small children and oversee three servants. Permanent position; good home. Give age, education, experience and salary expected in first letter. Address P. O. Box 919, Greensboro, N. C.

WANTED — A COMPETENT HOUSEkeeper, who can take charge also of four small children. Church family. Apply Miss Hill, 703 Commerce St., Fredericksburg, Va.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS
PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Kinsolving: In Washington, D. C., December 9, 1920, CHARLES J. KINSOLVING, beloved husband of Rachel Clagett Kinsolving, and eldest son of the late Rev. O. A. Kinsolving, D. D., passed into eternal life. He had a rare gift of true friendship, and was loved and honored by his family and a large circle of friends.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

IN MEMORIAM.

The death of MISS CATHARINE VIRGINIA BOUSH, which occurred at her home in Norfolk, Va., January 9, 1921, removed from our midst a beautiful character of womanhood. She was the daughter of Jonathan Eilbeck Boush and Virginia Willey Boush, and a direct descendant of Samuel Boush, the first Mayor of Norfolk. Her maternal grandmother was a Wallace, another old family which was among the first settlers in the Great Bridge section of Norfolk County. She was reared an Episcopalian, and was a life-long member of that Church. She is survived by a sister, Miss Genevieve Boush, and a brother, Mr. H. M. Boush.

Miss Boush was an estimable woman, loyal and true in all the relations of life; her lovable qualities made and retained a number of life-long friends, in whose memory her goodness and worth will linger. She was endowed with a rare combination of jewels, such as gentleness, modesty, refinement, amiability and charity—the basic and sterling characteristics of a good woman. She also possessed the indefinable something that surrounds a womanly woman.

It is with deep sorrow that I realize "her presence will no more gladden my eyes, or her voice thrill my ears," but the memory of her friendship will grow sweeter and dearer each year till the end.

J.

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING

Mail Orders a Specialty

Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL

311 North Second Street

Phone Randolph 1286- W

Ask God to give thee skill,
In comfort's art,
That thou mayst consecrated be,
And set apart
Unto a life of sympathy
For heavy is the weight of ill
In every heart;
And comforters are needed much
Of Christ-like touch.

—A. E. Hamilton.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Sydney K. Evans, D. D., has been ordered to the U. S. S. Pennsylvania as aid on the staff of the commander-in-chief, Admiral Henry P. Wilson, U. S. N. Chaplain Evans received the degree of D. D. from St. John's College, Annapolis, at the last commencement of that institution.

The Rev. Winfield Shiers, assistant in Old St. Paul's, Norfolk, Va., has declined a call to become rector of Nottoway Parish, Southampton County, Va.

At the request of Bishop Graves, Mr. Robert A. Magill has been appointed missionary in the District of Shanghai for evangelistic work. Mr. Magill is now a student at the Theological Seminary, is to be ordained to the diaconate in June as a candidate from the Diocese of Virginia, and will sail for China late in the summer.

Miss Gertrude Lester has been appointed missionary teacher in the Cathedral School, Havana. Some years ago Miss Lester served as a missionary at Guantanamo. Later she became connected with one of the sugar plantations in Southern Cuba, where her work was under the direction of the Bishop of Cuba, though her support was provided by the plantation company. Miss Lester now returns to her former connection as a regular member of the mission staff.

The Rev. Stephen H. Granberry, rector-emeritus of St. Barnabas' Church, Newark, N. J., may still be addressed at Newark.

The address of the Rev. D. A. Sanford is changed to Amarillo, Tex., where for a time he will do work under Bishop Temple.

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, will be in this country during January and February. Early in January he delivers three lectures on missionary work overseas at the Virginia Theological Seminary. After January 15 he will be glad to take appointments to speak to Sunday congregations, and a few representative gatherings of Church men and women. While in this country Bishop Tucker desires to secure $12,000 for the erection of a parish house at St. John's Church, Osaka. The congregation has already given $3,000. Appointments for Bishop Tucker can be arranged with Mr. John N. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Ordinations.

In St. James' Chapel, of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, on January 1, Bishop Lloyd ordained to the diaconate Mr. Wallace Edmonds Conklin, on behalf of the ecclesiastical authority of the Diocese.

In the Cathedral of Our Merciful Saviour, Faribault, Minn., on January 2, the Bishop of Minnesota ordained Mr. Harold Beach Adams as deacon. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Dr. F. F. Kramer and the sermon was preached by the Rev. H. M. Ramsey.

Deposition.

This is to certify that on Thursday, December 30, 1920, in Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, S. D., and in the presence of the Very Rev. E. B. Woodruff and the Rev. Richard M. Hardman, Ph. D. presbyters of the District of South Dakota, I deposed from the sacred ministry of the Church

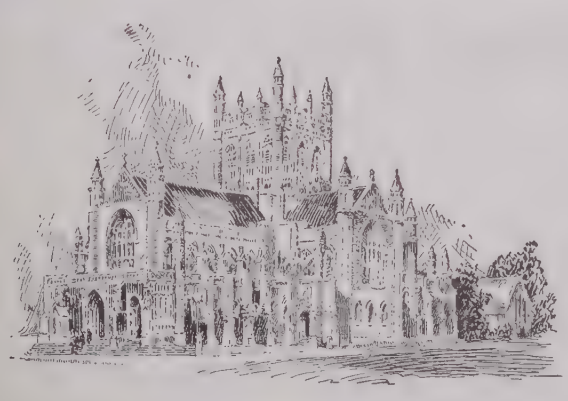
Edwin A. K. Grant, Deacon, for causes not affecting his moral char-



Through the Application

of practical Christianity in the business world an individual or corporation attains its greatest success. We strive to do this by SERVICE.

The Union Bank of Richmond

1104 East Main Street

What the Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Says About the New Hymnal

THE NEW HYMNAL

With Both Words and Music

Single copies.....$1.20 per copy
In lots of 100 or more.. 1.05 extended payment
In lots of 100 or more... 1.00 cash
Carriage Charges Extra

"The introduction of the New 'Musical' Hymnal in Trinity Cathedral," writes Dean Francis S. White, "has made it possible to develop 'part' singing by the congregation. During the summer months the sermon time Sunday afternoons was utilized for a devotional use of the Hymnal. This type of community singing proved so popular that the Dean and Mr. Kraft, the organist, have agreed to give one Sunday afternoon each month to the congregational singing of hymns new and old, which this collection offers."

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

14 Wall Street, New York City

acter and in accordance with the provisions of Canon 35 of the General Digest, he having declared to me in writing his renunciation of the ministry of this Church, and not having, during an ensuing period of six months' suspension, withdrawn that renunciation.

Hugh L. Burleson,
Bishop of South Dakota.

Faith.

Faith is the power to see God. It is the vision of the unseen. It is the eye that is able to penetrate below the material surface and see the underlying Spirit of God. It is the faith that gives a man the right sense of proportion, the new perspective, which results in the new life. It was faith which Jesus possessed in the supreme degree, and which was His chief gift to men.

To begin with, fear is impossible to the man who has faith, who has understood the reality of the love of God.

A man cannot fear physical danger if he really has faith; for God is the source of all good life, and the Lord of death.

When the disciples of Jesus were in danger of shipwreck, and awoke Him up in alarm for their safety, He said, "What, have ye not yet faith?" If they had had faith they would not have worried. They would have done all they could calmly and bravely, knowing that if after that they perished it was a sign that their work in the world was finished, and that God was calling them to work elsewhere. Fear and worry are useless and senseless, if only we could realize it. They accomplish nothing, and rather hinder.

Similarly, it is unthinkable that the man who has faith should fear men. At the worst, men can only kill the body, and what does the death of the body matter if one believes in the God of the spirit? If God matters, men do not matter. What they say and think and threaten does not count. The man of faith is free to make right decisions without fear or favor.

Nor must the man of faith be a prey to worldly anxieties. If God clothes the flowers and feeds the sparrows, He will feed His human children. To do one's best in faith is better than any amount of worry. After all, most worry comes from unwillingness to accept a conventionally lower standard of life than what we are accustomed to. Yet the man who has faith and love can be as happy in a workhouse as anywhere else. He has treasure that no one can take from him—the kingdom of God within. Jesus was often hungry and homeless, but it did not worry Him, for His meat was to do His Father's will.

The man who has faith is also free from the tyranny of passion and inherent weakness. It is true that men are normally slaves of their hereditary tendencies as modified by the circumstances of their education and surroundings. A man is the meeting-place of forces over which he has little control, and they will mold his life unless some stronger force is introduced to counteract them. But if a man has been born again and has the eye of faith, a new factor, a dominating factor has entered the environment of which he is conscious; and it is the thought of God which will over-ride and nullify all contrary influences, even those of heredity and habit.

Finally, the man who has faith will not be subject to false ambitions. Having once seen the true good, he will see at a glance the spuriousness of the imitation.

The Evangelical Education Society
Of the Protestant Episcopal Church

Office: The Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia

AIDS STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY AND DISTRIBUTES EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

President: WILLIAM S. HARVEY, ESQ.

Active Vice-President: The Rt. Rev. THOMAS J. GARLAND, D. D.

General Counsel HAROLD GOODWIN, Esq. | Treasurer ALFRED LEE, Esq. | General Secretary Rev. S. LORD GILBERSON, M. A.

FORM OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to "THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH," incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the first Monday in November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, ———— dollars, or ———— real estate, to be used for the general purpose of the Society.

What Do You Expect When You Put Money In The Bank?

Absolute Protection and Safety, Don't You?

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, with capital, surplus and profits of two million dollars, offers absolute protection and safety to its customers.

With more money in this country than ever before you cannot afford to keep your dollars idle.

Put them in this strong National Bank, where they will earn money for you, keep the wheels turning, and help bring prosperity to the people.

American National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

N. B.—You can send your deposits by registered letter, money order or check. The records of this Bank prove that you run no risk in banking by mail.

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special

at $7.25

Send us your size

Woodall & Quarles

7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Thus in the kingdom of God there are no physical or moral cowards, no slaves of passion, weakness or false ambition. All are fearless and altogether free; and in the records of the life of Jesus Christ will be found ample indications that He Himself possessed the fearlessness and freedom of faith which He preached. There is no sign that He was ever influenced by the fear of men or of physical danger, that He was ever anxious, or that He was ever swayed by passion or false ambition.—Donald Hankey.

For the conduct of life habits are more important than maxims, because a habit is a maxim verified. To take a new set of maxims for one's guide is no more than to change the title of a book; but to change one's habits is to change one's life. Life is only a tissue of habits.—Amiel.

Aroused by the distressing conditions of some of our clergy, two congregations in Toronto are sending cheques to a few of which they have learned. One vestry considers that while a favorable balance is good, a balance carried over is bad for the congregation. —Floreant.

BONDS

SOUND BONDS

FOR INVESTMENT

ARE AVAILABLE NOW

To Yield 6¼% to 8%

May we supply you with details?

Earnest E. Smith & Co.

52 Devonshire St., Boston

Members New York and Boston Stock Exchanges

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co

Office: 1217 East Cary Street

Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd

Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival

The Couper Marble Works

(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.
Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent

E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend

PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN

Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.

With an Introduction by

THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's. Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,

Richmond, Va.

50 Eggs a Day

Yes—fifty a day. How? Read the letter below.

"'More Eggs' Tonic is a Godsend," writes Mrs. Myrtle Ice, of Boston, Ky. She adds, "I was only getting 12 eggs a day and now I get 50." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs", the wonderful egg producer, and you will be amazed and delighted with results.

3 $1.00 Packages FREE

If you wish to try this great profit maker, simply write a post card or letter to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, and ask for his special $2.00 offer, three $1.00 packages Free. Don't send any money. Mr. Reefer will send you five $1.00 packages of "More Eggs." You pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the price of just two packages, the three extra packages being free. The Million Dollar Merchants Bank of Kansas City, Mo., guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your $2.00 will be returned at any time within 30 days—on request. No risk to you. Write today for this special free offer.

Poultry Raisers Everywhere Tell Wonderful Results of "More Eggs"

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor

I can't express in words how much I have been benefited by "More Eggs." I have paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and that is not all—I paid my pastor his dues. I sold 42½ dozen eggs last week, set 4 dozen, ate some, and had 1½ dozen left.
MRS. LENA McBROON. Woodbury, Tenn.

1200 Eggs from 29 Hens

The "More Eggs" Tonic did wonders for me. I had 29 hens when I got the tonic and was getting five or six eggs a day. April 1st I had over 1200 eggs. I never saw the equal.
EDW. MEKKER, Pontiac, Mich.

160 Hens—1500 Eggs

I have fed two boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and I think they have broken the egg record. I have 160 White Leghorns and in exactly 21 days I got 125 dozen eggs.
MRS. H. M. PATTON, Waverly, Mo.

Send No Money!

Don't send any money; just fill in and mail coupon. You will be sent at once, five $1.00 packages of "MORE EGGS." Pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the three extra packages being FREE. Don't wait—take advantage of this free offer TODAY! Reap the BIG profits "MORE EGGS" will make for you. Have plenty of eggs to sell when the price is highest. Send TODAY—NOW!

3 $1.00 Pkgs. Free

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, n391 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.
Dear Mr. Reefer:—I accept your offer. Send me the five $1.00 packages of Reefer's "More Eggs" for which I agree to pay the postman $2.00 when he brings me the five packages, the three extra packages being free. You agree to refund me $2.00 at any time within 30 days, if all five of these packages do not prove satisfactory in every way.

Name.....

Address.....

You may send $2.00 cash with this coupon if you prefer

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

The Intercession of Christ.

How are we to represent to ourselves the intercession of Christ, while guarding with jealousy like Christ's er? The scriptural representation of own, the spontaneous love of the Fath-Christ as an intercessor strengthens the faith of penitents by holding before their mind the ceaseless virtue of His atonement as the sole ground of their acceptance. The Father assuredly has no need to be either prompted, or coaxed, or entreated to extend that mercy which it is the joy and glory of His Fatherhood to extend to every penitent. But we have need to be encouraged to trust in His mercy. Evermore, therefore, is that Man Who bore our sins to be thought of as the right hand of advocacy. Beside the Father "of an infinite majesty," as well as infinite love, there is One above Whose love is not more, but whose majesty is less. He lies closer in to a man than any one who is not a man can do. Let our human nature often complains alike of the one side and of the other. We resent the severity, and we will not admit of our need of the grace. Him search us, and when by the mysterious link of human brotherhood He has thus known us in our adversity, let Him tell to the Father what we cannot tell. Let Him justify us, if He can, or confess for us, or pray in our name, as to His supreme gentleness shall seem meet; and it shall be well.—J. Oswald Dykes.

The Nature of Wisdom.

On the nature of wisdom, the teaching of Holy Scripture is clear and striking. It says there is a wisdom of man, and this is the knowledge of the true end or purpose of life—call it happiness, call it perfection, or what you will—a knowledge which answers to some extent, those ever-recurring questions, "Why was I made?" and "What am I now?" and "Whither am I going?" This is the wisdom which the author of Ecclesiastes sought for everywhere, and yet hardly found. It is this over which, as discovered, the Book of Proverbs rejoices as more precious than gold and jewels, and from the rough ore of which it forges the current coin of its proverbial philosophy. But there is also a wisdom of God, and this is the idea or purpose of His dispensation to man, rolling alike in the stately march of Nature's law, or in the little world of the soul within. The fear of the Lord is declared to be the beginning of wisdom, and to the desponding author of Ecclesiastes, it seems to be the whole treasure of man.—Bishop Barry.

Divine Wisdom.

Christ loved the children, and in His view childlikeness was the beau ideal of character. But not childishness, which is an opposite thing. Not the caprice, the whim, the peevishness, which frequently mark and mar the behavior of the young. He had watched the boys and girls playing in the open market spaces at marriages and funerals. He had seen them quarrel, because they were never all in the same humor at the same time, this set wanting the merry game, while their neighbors demanded the mournful one. Just so. He said it was with His own generation. John had come, stern, austere, preaching repentance; and the people wished something more genial and glad. Then He followed Himself, with words of grace and mercy and peace, eating and drinking with publicans and sinners; and the people asked for something stricter and more severe.

The divine wisdom has these two sides: It thunders its thou shalt not against our sins. It woos and wins us to pardon and newness of life. But Then the King's sentence upon us will be sharp and heavy, as it was upon the men and women of His day.—Alexander Smellie.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank
Richmond, Virginia

Sacramental Wine

Absolutely Pure Grape Wine

Made expressly for use at the Communion Table

Established 1857

Phone, Write or Call Tel. Cortlandt 3001

H.T. Dewey & Sons Co.

Address Either
138 Fulton Street, New York City
or Cellars, Egg Harbor, New Jersey

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley
FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

Southern Churchman

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 5, 1921. No. 6

CHINA FAMINE RELIEF

Forty Millions Near Starvation
Fifteen Millions Now Starving
Ten Thousand Are Dying Daily

One Dollar Will Save a Life for One Month
How Many Lives Will You Save?

Sixty thousand clergymen of all commissions in the United States have been asked to use Sunday, February 6th, to set the need before their people.

Cable from Chinese Admiral (Relief official):

"Famine affects five northern provinces. Fifty millions involved Twenty millions starving. Many dying of cold and hunger. Whole districts living on weeds and leaves. Selling or drowning children. Whole families committing suicide. Old kill themselves, leaving younger to seek food in other provinces. Children suffer most. Government exercising great efforts to cope with distress. Heroic measures taken by charitable societies. Calamity so colossal difficult to secure funds for adequate relief Epidemic feared next spring."

"The famine in China is an appalling calamity. Forty-five million people are directly affected. . . .

"The Presiding Bishop and Council of the Episcopal Church hereby urge every member of the Church to consider and contribute towards the relief of these suffering people."—Thos. F. Gailor, President of the Council.

We Must Act Now!

The Department of Missions is forwarding money by cable each week. Send all contributions to 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, marking them "For China Famine Relief," and making checks payable to Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

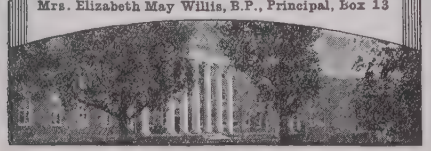
NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-third year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA



Prepares boys at cost for college and university Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., RECTOR

CHATHAM Episcopal Institute

FOR GIRLS CHATHAM, VA.

Rt. Rev. A. M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Episcopal Visitor
Rev. C. Orlando Pruden, Rector. Beautiful and healthful location. 10-acre campus. Modern equipment. Athletics, Gym. College Preparatory. Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Catalog.
Mrs. Elizabeth May Willis, B.P., Principal, Box 13

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D.....Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 3 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Most men drift; a few navigate.

Faith is mind at its best, its bravest, and its fiercest.

Every duty we omit obscures some truth we should have known."—Ruskin.

Learn to say "No"; it will be of more use to you than to be able to read Latin.—Spurgeon.

Who trusts in God's unchanging love
Builds on the Rock that none can move.

It doesn't cost anything to say good morning, even if it is raining.

Where Christ brings His cross, He brings His presence; and where He is, none are desolate and there is no room for despair.—Mrs. Browning.

Through every rift of discovery, some seeming anomaly drops out of the darkness and falls as a golden link into the great chain of the order.—E. H. Chapin.

As some rare perfume in a vase of clay
Pervades it with a perfume not its own,
So, when Thou dwellest in a mortal soul,
All heaven's own sweetness seems around it thrown.
—H. B. Stowe.

Lord, take my heart, for I cannot give it,
And when Thou hast it, oh, keep it,
For I cannot keep it for Thee:
And save me, in spite of myself, for Jesus Christ's sake.
—Fenelon.

To be silent, to suffer, to pray when we cannot act, is acceptable to God. A disappointment, a contradiction, a harsh word received and endured as in His presence, is worth more than a long prayer.—Fenelon.

I find God made known as He is manifest in man. We say a great deal about the manifestation of God in nature, as He reveals Himself in the forces and arrangements of the outer world; and this is well. But, after all, I cannot help believing that our best conceptions of God come through the men and women who have been so related to the life of God that they have been enabled to tell us something about Him in and through their own lives.—Rev. Francis B. Hornbrooke.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLES TOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Girls, Under the Auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia
Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Music and Art. Intermediate and Primary. Session begins September 22, 1920. For particulars, address

MISS EMMA S. YERBY, Principal

National Cathedral School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof buildings in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College Preparatory. Advanced and Special Courses. Music and Art.
The Bishop of Washington,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal.
Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head
Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 5, 1921. 6

THE NEW BISHOP OF NEW YORK.

The interest of the whole Church last week was centered on the election in the Diocese of New York. The Bishop of New York has more than local importance. Because he can be the spokesman for this Church of ours in the greatest city of the new world, he becomes in some sense the representative of us all. What he achieves or fails to achieve, what he speaks of prophetic truth or futile commonplace, inevitably affects the estimation in which this Church is held in all the land and subtly affects our estimate of ourselves.

The Southern Churchman has sometimes profoundly disagreed with Dr. Manning. It deplored his attitude of opposition to the share which our Church had in the Panama Conference. It has believed that the rigid ecclesiasticism by which at times his sympathies were hampered is an anachronism in this modern time. But in every instance of disagreement we have recognized Dr. Manning's courage and sincerity. He was courageous when he fought the Panama Conference, and he lost his seat among the New York delegation to the General Convention of 1916 as a consequence. He was courageous in the years long before, when, as the new rector of Trinity Parish, he set himself to reform the conduct of the tenement house properties which were part of the corporation's great endowment. And he was most courageous of all when he espoused the "concordat" with the Congregationalists against the astonished resentment of many of his former associates of the High Church school of thought. Many a man can stand up boldly against his recognized antagonists; it is the rarer man who for the truth as he sees it can separate himself from his friends.

For this reason, therefore, and for another one, the Southern Churchman congratulates Dr. Manning upon the great recognition which has come to him, and welcomes him with gladly accorded honor to his high post of leadership. The second reason is the belief that Dr. Manning has within him the spirit which makes a man grow. He is not afraid to expand his views to meet expanding needs. He has shown himself increasingly independent of ecclesiastical party in the power of a real devotion to the things that count for the kingdom of Christ. Some men are fossilized by their own self-importance when they are elected Bishops. If we read Dr. Manning's record aright, we believe he will be sensitive to the greatness of his possible service, open-minded, forward-looking and forward-leading. He faces a great chance, and our confidence is that he will meet it greatly.

CONGRATULATIONS—WITHIN LIMITS.

"Congratulations." This is the word that heads the report mailed a few days ago by Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer of the National Council of the Church, to all the rectors of parishes. It is his report of the results of the Nation-Wide Campaign for 1920.

In one fine fact the word is justified. There is reason for congratulation in the record which shows that in this past year the contributions from the dioceses and missionary districts to the advance of the whole Church's work increased more than 100 per cent. In 1919 the gifts totaled $1,411,971.69; in 1920 the total was $3,013,916.68. This means that because of the Nation-Wide Campaign the Church is twice as able as she would have been without it to strengthen her existing work and to carry forward the frontiers of the kingdom at her great points of opportunity. In whatever may be said in any quarter of the Church in criticism of some phases of the Nation-Wide Campaign, in whatever may be said in this column today concerning the disappointment of yet greater hopes, still let the remembrance of this great achievement be embodied. Within twelve months the Church has made an increase more than equal to the entire amount which represented the former limit of her giving, as reached through the slow progress of laborious years.

From another standpoint also this reason for congratulation is apparent. Only five among all the dioceses and missionary districts failed to register some advance in their giving, and not a single one of the eight provinces failed. The Seventh Province, in the Southwest, advanced its record of 1919 262 per cent.; the Fourth Province, including the South Atlantic States, advanced 215 per cent.; and the Third Province, which includes the Virginias, Maryland and Pennsylvania among its dioceses, gave 132 per cent. more than it had ever given before—a very great increase in amount of money, since this province had been one of the most loyally generous in the whole country in the years before the campaign began.

What, then, are the things that qualify the message of congratulation?

In the first place, there is the fact that only five dioceses have paid 100 per cent. of the amount for which they were asked. These are Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, East Carolina and Porto Rico. Certain other dioceses pledged in full the quota for which they were asked, and it may be that their complete payments still will be made; but as the records stand now only these five in the whole Church, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, have measured up completely to the Church's task.

In the second place, there is the fact of the great discrepancy between the whole amount which was asked for by the Church and the amount received. The total quota for the work of the Church at large, outside of that needed for the work administered by the several dioceses within their own borders, was $8,177,347. It is thus plain that we have come less than half way toward the goal which we set before us when the Nation-Wide Campaign began.

What is the reason for this partial failure? We believe that underneath all lesser causes the root difficulty lay in this. There was a lack of simple faith in the power of a great spiritual adventure to achieve unprecedented ends.

The genius of the Nation-Wide Campaign lay in its challenge to the loyalty of all the people. It did not attempt to underwrite a vast sum by the pledges of a little coterie of the superlatively rich. It believed in the immense potentialities for sacrifice and for service that could be called out from tens of thousands of men and women who individually could give little, but altogether could give much. So the plan of the campaign was to persuade all the people for a time to think, to study and to pray concerning the Church's work, her resources and her needs. Upon the readiness of the average man and woman to respond to a great appeal, once the reason for that appeal was understood, the faith of the campaign rested. So the leaders who planned the Nation-Wide Campaign, and the bishops and rectors who espoused it, did not fear to lay before their dioceses and parishes appeals for such a standard of giving as had never been seriously dreamt of before. They knew what the first effect would be. They knew that men and women would be staggered by the sheer incredibility of the thing. They knew that some would be struck literally speechless, and that others would recover their speech only in outraged and clamorous protest. But they knew something else. They knew that if they kept the flags of their own faith flying where they had planted them, there would come a change in the spirit of the people. Courage would be provoked by the very seeming desperation of the task to which it was dared. There would come a kindling of pride, a summoning up of the inner forces of confidence and self-reliance, and at length the enthusiasm of a contagious courage which would enable the Church in a new esprit de corps to accomplish what the uninspired would have called impossible.

Wherever there was this faith, the campaign succeeded. Wherever men believed in the quickening power of the Spirit, that power was manifest. That is the glory of the lesson of 1920, and in that is the promise of greater success for 1921.

THE ORGANIST.

The National Association of Organists, through its Committee for Promoting the Interests of Organists, begs to present to the clergy some facts concerning the preparation and musical equipment the organist must have to carry on his work effectively, and regarding his relations with the church he serves.

It is hardly necessary to state that, rightly conceived and executed, music has a great devotional value, and that its planning and maintenance are of prime importance.

The organist must possess high intelligence, and, having secured a good general education, must thoroughly master the various subjects which are essential to his work. He must keep abreast of the times by constantly studying the best new music.

As the organist of a church is nearly always the choirmaster, he must have a knowledge of voice training and a wide acquaintance with vocal literature.

He must not only be in full sympathy with the devotional function of religious music, but he must be trained in its use and be familiar with its history.

It is obvious that this work involves as much preparation and equipment as that of a person entering any other profession. The music of the church cannot be adequately rendered by those who have not the requisite qualifications.

In view of these facts, the Association asks you to consider whether the organists who are serving your churches receive the recognition and encouragement they deserve. Do you keep in close touch with them, thus preventing them from feeling isolated? Such contact will reveal the scope of their attainments and possibilities of service as yet unrealized.

The Association would also express its grateful appreciation of the inspiration which organists are receiving for the better performance of their work in many a church throughout the country.

What of the future? It is undeniable that the standards of church music have greatly improved during the last few years. It is equally true that unceasing vigilance, persistent education and really trained musical leadership are necessary to continue that improvement. The conditions under which organists work must be such as to induce the finest young men and women to enter that profession—or ministry, as it can rightly be termed.

One encouraging fact is the increased interest in religious education. Vacation Bible schools and week-day Church schools require music, and organists may assist greatly in working out the musical program. This affords valuable experience for young organists under proper supervision.

The Association invites your suggestions and also your co-operation. It is reaching organists throughout the country. What message can it take them from you? What do you need that they can learn to supply?

There are also special musical problems in your churches that await solution. The facilities for training organists can be increased, and young players encouraged to take up the study of the instrument. A used organ returns real results in producing the material from which your trained leadership will come. You may also be able to organize a committee to advise with you and your organist on all musical matters in the parish, thus securing a continuity of musical policy that is often lacking.

The Association hopes to become a clearing house of facts and methods, at the service of all the churches of the country. Its aim is the advancement of Church music and a better understanding between clergy, congregation and organist.

Address Headquarters, 49 West Twentieth Street, New York, or any State or Local Council of the Association.

THE LITURGY.

How many of us realize the beauty of our liturgy? Of course, we think it is pretty and believe that it is far superior to the average service of the nonliturgical churches; but how many realize that it is a great epic poem expressing the deepest emotions of generations? What a difference do we feel when any man makes a prayer of his own in the emasculated English of the twentieth century! What a floundering do we notice when an Episcopal minister tries to keep away from his Prayer book! A frog out of water has a bonanza in comparison.

Lord Macaulay, though not a religious man, felt the beauty of the liturgy. He says that the Ter Sanctus, which he called the trisagion, was the high water mark of English prose. Stedman, the famous American critic, says: "I regard the venerable liturgy of the historic Christian Church as one of the few world-poems, the poems universal." If this be true, how important that it should be well read and not well butchered!

J. L. H.

THE GIFT.

With hands outstretched unto the God of Might,
I asked that power should be given me
To change the wrong in this old world to right,
And put an end to all its misery.

Again I asked the God of Melody
To grant the gift of music to be mine,
That I might heal the world's long agony
By flooding it with harmonies Divine.

Kneeling, I prayed unto the God of Life
To give me power to heal the world of pain;
To put an end to pestilence and strife
And make of earth an Eden once again.

Vainly I called on heaven to let me do
What God in His Omniscience left undone,
Till one day in my heart the question grew,
"What if the need of Pain is not yet run"?

"What gift, O Lord, shall I then ask of Thee
With which I best may help the multitude,
Whereby Thy kingdom come more speedily,
And all the hosts of Satan be subdued?"

Humbly I waited at God's altar dim,
To hear what gift it was I most did need;
And lo! the answer came to me from Him:
"Faith that is even as the mustard seed."

—Helen Compton.

An old minister wrote to a young minister: "It is better for your people to love your heart than for them to admire your head."

A VIRGINIA MISSIONARY

Ernest Barker, Principal of King's College, London, in the London Challenge.

In the spring of this year I saw Virginia at last. I had long dreamed of the Blue Mountains, and at last the chance came, and was gladly grasped, of seeing in the daylight the mountains of my dreams. When I first caught sight of them from the train—a gentle, rumbling, dignified Southern express—I could have sung: when I looked on them that evening from the campus of the University of Virginia—an evening of orange sunset, with the mountains underneath the glowing orange really and literally blue, like a mass of translucent wild hyacinths—I could almost have cried.

On the last day of my visit to the University of Virginia I actually went to the very spurs and foot-hills of the Blue Mountains. A Rhodes scholar from "the House," now Episcopal minister in the mission church, opposite the gate of the University, which I had attended the day before (it was full of young men, and full also of the Spirit of the Lord), took me in his car, through the sunny freshness of a spring morning, with green things springing and the red soil smiling, to visit the Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge. I shall always remember the visit. I found that the Archdeacon over thirty years ago had come from my own college in Oxford (he was an Englishman) to take a cure of souls in the Virginia hills. His church and vicarage lay on a green slope, with a single line of railway in the valley beneath. I sat in his study, looking over the garden and down the slope, and talked with him of Oxford, and our college, and of what he had done since he left Oxford and his college to come to Virginia, in distant days when I was a boy at school.

He had done much, very much—so much that I shall always cherish the memory of our meeting and the inspiration of our talk. He spoke gently and shyly, making little of himself; but he had a story to tell—and he told it with a modest simplicity—which made the pulse of his hearer quicken. It is a story which he tells now to the world, so quietly and with so pure a candor that it must wind itself into every reader's heart, in a little volume just published in America, called "The Church of the Living Waters."

"He that believeth in me, as the Scripture hath said, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." The missionary on the ridge of the Blue Mountains believed; and the living waters have gone out as a stream along the valleys and among the hills, with healing and with blessing for the mountaineers. The story of the mission, as it is told by the missionary, has the simplicity and the charm of the story of early Franciscanism. He has dreamed dreams, and he has seen visions; and they have come true. "One morning about dawn the missionary, who was on a visit, awoke, and from the window of the cabin in which he was sleeping saw a beautiful sight. It was the Lost Mountain which rose towering to the clouds on the opposite side of the valley. The light blue haze which hung upon its side was suffused with a rosy glow of dawn, making it look like a vision of the New Jerusalem. The thought which came to the missionary at that moment was this: Why should not the Sun of Righteousness arise upon the poor Lost Mountain? The vision was soon followed by the coming of a deputation from the people of the Lost Mountain to ask him to extend the work and open a school on their mountain as well."

A man who can dream dreams and work quietly for their accomplishment until he sees them build themselves day by day into reality—such a man will not lack fellow-workers. For faith is a contagious thing: and he who keeps his own faith bright and burning will kindle faith in others. It came about that a young lady, who was a member of one of the missionary's parish churches, and caught the fire of his faith, became his fellow-worker, and gave generously to the mission in the mountains. Her name is a name well known in England. "This lady, who was so closely identified with the mountain work, and whose old home is situated near the mountains, where it was first started, has recently been brought before the eyes of the whole world through her fight to win a seat in the English House of Commons, a fight which ended in victory."

The missionary's book is not only a history: it is something more. It is a call and a challenge to faith. "He that believeth in me . . . out of him shall flow rivers of living water." The missionary has mused on the text: he has mused on its fulfilment in his own life; and as he has mused he has seen a new vision, the vision of the Order of the Thousandfold, which he invites all who believe to enter. For just as there are stores of natural energy, which by thought and planning can be made to issue forth for the service of man, so (the missionary has come to believe) there are also vast stores of spiritual energy, which by prayer and faith can be made to flow for the benefit of all mankind. "Any child of God, no matter how humble his sphere in life may be, if he will exercise his faith and seek earnestly to be made an instrument through which the divine energy can work, may certainly look for great things to come out of it. . . . And so it has seemed to the missionary that others might be glad and willing to associate themselves with him in a society, to be called, perhaps, 'The Order of the Thousandfold.' The idea would be that each member would daily, in his or her prayers, ask earnestly for a thousandfold increase in usefulness to God and man."

The beginning of the Order goes back to a time, now some three years ago, when his little child led the missionary to a new vision. Day by day, about noon, he had been accustomed for many years to go to his church, ring the bell, and hold a solitary service to commend his work to God, and to pray for the fulfilment of the promise of the flowing rivers of living water. "The months went on, and nothing special happened to show that the prayer was being answered. At last, one day, while he was praying alone in the chancel of the church at mid-day, after he had rung the bell, something strange did happen. He heard the door open, and the pattering of feet up the aisle, and, to his surprise, he found his little girl of four years of age kneeling near him: she had also brought her doll, which was made to kneel, too. So they were all three kneeling in a row; the missionary, the child and the doll . . . the child kept on coming, and when the missionary was away from home she would go up with her mother and help her ring the bell, and would then kneel down, as she was accustomed to do when her father was there. The doll, however, soon stopped coming. The prayer service was a simple one; the missionary and the child knelt down, and first of all he placed his hand upon her head, and asked God to bless her and make her a blessing wherever she went and as long as she lived. Then they prayed for all missionaries everywhere. . . . Then a few simple words were spoken which she repeated, too, such as for the poor people everywhere, and the sick people, and the people everywhere who had no one else to pray for them, and all who asked to be prayed for. Then when the prayers were over, they stood up side by side, and the missionary, holding the child's hand with his left one, extended the right hand and blessed all those for whom they had been praying. This, to the child, was the ceremony of blessing the world."

The knowledge of this little service spread; and results followed its spreading. And thus the coming of the little child to break the loneliness of the missionary's prayer service helped to open up, as it were, a new spring of living waters, and they spread all the further in consequence.

There shall never be one lost good! What was shall live as before;
The evil is null, is nought, is silence, implying sound;
What was good shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more;
On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven, a perfect round.

—Browning.

The grave of Albert Durer, the great painter, is in the cemetery of his native city, Nuremberg. On his tombstone they have graven the word emigravit—he has emigrated.

Let Thy grace accompany me all the days of my life, that I may, by a holy conversation, and an habitual performance of my duty, wait for the coming of our Lord, and be ready to enter with Thee at whatever hour Thou shalt come.—Bishop Jeremy Taylor.

The thoughts which we harbor within us, and which go out through the doors of our mouths and our hands, determine our real character. One of the highest of spiritual luxuries is the enjoyment of pure, exhilarating and sublime thoughts.

Tag Day in Chinese Cities for Famine Victims.

In helping China over the terrible crisis presented by the famine in the northern provinces, Americans will be helping those who help themselves. Not only has the Chinese Government taken active measures for relief of the sufferers, but the large cities are busily engaged in raising funds from private individuals. What is more, they have taken a lesson from American experience in these matters and have adopted methods as up to date as any that may be found in New York, Chicago or any city of the United States.

Chinese papers just received at headquarters of the American Committee for China Famine Fund tell of "Tag Day" in Peking. In all, men and women students from thirty-five colleges participated. The various sections of the city were carefully marked out and allotted to various colleges; the students exhibited the utmost keenness in patrolling the streets, and one gathers that few passers-by escaped being "tagged." In addition, the billboard artists were conspicuous, placarding the city with posters descriptive of the tragic facts of the famine area. By consent of the Board of War, airships flew over the old city, across whose walls no stranger in the old days might so much as peer, and airplanes scattered appeals for the famine sufferers.

Similar scenes, the American Committee is informed, have been enacted in other cities. In Shanghai, it is reported, as evidence of the immense strides which the emancipation of women has taken in China, largely the result of education in our missionary schools and colleges, that daughters of the most exclusive and fashionable families in Chinese society took an active and enthusiastic part in "tag day." A far cry this, from the old days when Chinese girls of good family had their feet tightly bound in childhood, and were condemned in consequence to hobble painfully for the rest of their lives. No woman with feet so constricted could have stood the rigors of collecting in the streets on a "tag day"! That is one of the many blessings for which Chinese womanhood today is thanking the teaching of our Christian missionaries. Today those missionaries are laboring heroically to feed not only the souls, but also the poor wasted bodies of the 45,000,000 people in North China who are in imminent peril of starving to death. And they are relying, as in the past, on the practical sympathy of the Christian churches of America to provide the funds which are so urgently needed. Funds may be contributed either to local churches, to Foreign Mission societies, or to the Treasurer of the American Committee for China Famine Fund, Vernon Munroe, The Bible House, New York City.

World Conference on Faith and Order: An Appeal for Funds.

In a day when the admitted hope of the world is in the discovery of human unities, and when the recognized method to that great end is conference, it would be disastrous to allow the work of the World Conference on Faith and Order to be crippled and perhaps fail from lack of funds for its work But such is our peril. A few large gifts from interested men have carried us through hitherto. Even if similar sums were forthcoming from the same men, it would not be fair to accept them unless more general support were given at the same time. The sum needed per annum is not great, and, if divided among the churches which have been active, would be a heavy tax on none. We need $50,000 now. Our treasury is nearly empty, and unless help comes we shall have to discontinue work in a few months.

Never has there been a more auspicious moment in which to proceed. The Geneva Conference, the report of which has just been published and may be had on application to Robert H. Gardiner, 174 Water Street, Gardiner, Me., has served to dispel misunderstanding and to create understanding by throwing into bold relief the difficulties and hopes of our undertaking. The general interest aroused is more than at any time during the past ten years. The program for study conferences and the development of the Continuation Committee is being put into effect.

It should further be remembered that the unceasing thought and labor of Robert H. Gardiner have brought us to the place of honor and usefulness reached. So wise and valuable a service, which has few parallels in history, must not be allowed to be maimed because of a sum of money so small as to be as nothing in comparison with what is being spent on indifferent and unimportant matters.

I commend this whole consideration to the attention and generosity of the Churches in America. We have no right—and I would add no need—at this time to look for funds from the churches of those crippled and devastated countries abroad which are turning to America for light and encouragement and leadership. Let us not fail them—or ourselves. There are still multitudes who believe that the tottering, because divided, kingdom of Christianity must be unified. The alternative is too frightful even to be contemplated. But it is the alternative.

Gifts should be sent to the United States Trust Company, 47 Wall Street, New York City, marked for the World Conference Continuation Committee.

Charles Henry Brent,
Chairman of the Continuation Committee.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

THE DAILY PAPERS AND CHURCH AFFAIRS.

Mr. Editor: Will you permit a personal reference, as means of making clear some of the great changes that are taking place for the better, because without such reference the changes will not be understood? Thirty-one years ago the writer began to report news of churches of New York for the daily newspapers of New York. At that time Church news was far below par. Frankly, I was laughed at by editors of Boston, New York and Philadelphia morning dailies when I proposed that they report Church affairs, other than Church scandals. It is almost impossible to comprehend the feeling toward Church news obtaining three decades ago in editorial sanctums.

Almost nothing save rows and failures were reported. Only the merest tyros were put on to report Church news, if reported at all. Today every reputable daily in New York has upon its staff one or more well informed men, in some cases women, in entire sympathy with churches and their aims. These experts are among the ablest men and women on the staffs. Upon the death of Bishop Burch, later when a convention was called to elect his successor, and finally when Dr. Manning was chosen, reports and editorials showed wonderful grasp of the situation, marked sympathy with the Church, recognition of the importance of the office of Bishop of New York, and splendid tributes to the men voted for and finally the leader chosen.

Such was the record of great dailies of New York—the Times, the World, the Herald, the Sun, the Globe, the Tribune, the Evening Post. Intelligence, accuracy, possible only to men and woman who know churches, who know New York, and who know men, appeared. Nothing could be finer than editorials appearing in the Times, the Tribune, the Herald and other papers concerning Dr. Manning and the office he has been chosen for.

Right publicity is of tremendous value. Some of us who have grown old in endeavors to obtain it want Church people to realize some of the results of long continued efforts within and without sanctums, and to rejoice with us. We are sure the editor of this paper, and all of its readers, will so rejoice, and thank God for the progress made. We will also thank the editors of the great dailies in question, and commend their excellent judgment and kind words.

EUGENE M. CAMP.

New York, January 28, 1921.

The following editorial from the New York Times of January 28 shows the importance New York papers attach to the election:

Bishop Manning.

Dr. Manning has long been thought of as a clergyman who might some day become Bishop of New York. His character, experience and service marked him out as eminently fit for that high office. To many it was a surprise that he was not elected in succession to Bishop Greer. It was explained then that Dr. Manning's sympathy with the movement for Christian unity had given offense to some of the High Church party, though he himself was supposed to be of it. But that objection, if it existed, and all others were swept aside on Wednesday, and Dr. Manning was chosen Bishop amid warm expressions of approval and good-will both within and without his Church.

Peculiar gratification will be felt at his success in the face of the grotesque newspaper attack upon him, at the last moment, on the ground that he was of English birth. The author of that attack seemed to think that the business in hand was not the election of a Bishop, but the canonization of a saint, when it is customary for a devil's advocate to come forward with the worst that can be said. At any rate, he came forward in that guise with his usual vociferated slander. Its only effect, however, was to make the calling and election of Dr. Manning sure. The preposterous assault upon him won him support which he otherwise might not have had. John Selden said that ecclesiastical assemblies no doubt act under divine guidance, but that it is the "odd man" who really determines their decisions. Dr. Manning might not have got the necessary vote of the odd man if he had not been so indecently and foolishly assailed.

The new Bishop's thorough-going Americanism needs no attestation. Throughout the war his light was not hidden under a bushel. And his modest bearing, his proved capacity, his industry, his success in administering the large affairs of Trinity parish, will assure his taking with him into his new work not only the good wishes, but the high expectations of the people of this city.

THE TEACHER AND THE CHILD.

Mr. Editor: It was my privilege last week to attend a Sunday School Institute in Wilmington, N. C. At this institute Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, of Memphis, gave four lectures daily for four days. These lectures dealt with the pupil and the teacher and with the Christian Nurture Series.

In my whole experience I have not heard a series of discussions pertaining to the Sunday school so full of constructive advice and helpful suggestions. Nor have I yet heard so clear, comprehensive and "converting" a presentation of the Christian Nurture Series as was given us by Miss Cooper, who is an expert in child pedagogy and child psychology. Not only has Miss Cooper studied the authorities on child life and child teaching, but both in day and Sunday schools she has had long experience, which really makes her an authority on subjects connected with the training of children. Any parish or diocese is fortunate in securing the services of this valuable and capable leader for lectures and conferences. I have never seen her equal.

There are one or two observations I would like to make through your columns in this convention. This and similar institutes that I have attended from time to time have been attended by comparatively few delegates. All present were charmed with what was here offered, and were literally filled with practical suggestions and with spiritual enthusiasm. They all deplored the fact that the hall was not filled with parents, with teachers in secular schools and Sunday schools, and with others interested in children. Few parents, and indeed few teachers, know child psychology and the mental characteristics of children of certain ages in any real sense.

Wherever these conferences are held, and where those in charge have procured experts like Miss Cooper, our people ought to let it be known to parents and teachers, both of secular and religious subjects far and wide, and should exercise every effort to get their attendance. Parents will do well to attend these conferences and institutes, as much that is helpful and enlightening always comes out in their sessions.

Not until the public school teacher, the private school teacher, the Sunday school teacher and the parents, especially the mothers, all get together in group conferences, will anything like an adequate solution of the so-called "child problem" be had. There should be a parent-teachers' association in every community for the purpose of dealing intelligently and effectively with the subject of child development.

THOMAS F. OPIE.

Red Springs, N. C.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

Mr. Editor: The opening year brings to the attention of your many readers the claims of a multitude of serious needs at home and abroad. The unparalleled prosperity of our country, however, makes us the people to whom the world must look for such enterprises as are truly worthy. Many of your readers have had their interest in the past enlisted in the cause of Church work in Central America, where thousands of American citizens are in serious need of those spiritual and educational privileges which the Church alone can supply. In the recent past the work was hardly considered worthy of the active oversight of a Bishop. Now we have two bishops there and next month a third much needed apostle is to be consecrated. The chief need of every mission field is men. Central America has found and is finding them. Bishop Dunn reports that when he came to this country in 1919, the response enabled him to put more of the needed workers in the field. During 1920 appeals from a distance realized less than one-sixteenth of the previous year. He writes: "You will see at once how seriously handicapped we shall be next year, even though I have husbanded some of the funds." Cannot the splendid faith of this apostolic missionary, whose exceptional success has won the appointment of a Coadjutor to be consecrated on St. Matthias' Day, command the more active endorsement of American Churchmen who know something of the work he is doing among our fellow-citizens who sojourn in the Diocese of British Honduras and Central America?

Send gifts to E. H. Bonsall, Land Title Building, Philadelphia.

FLOYD APPLETON,
American Commissary.

January, 1921.

The Great Commission

Japan Appeals for Workers: Bishop McKim, of the District of Tokyo, Japan, needs recruits, both men and women. His staff of clergy is seriously depleted. Two of the most important sections of the Diocese are without foreign clergy to lead in the work of supervising a number of mission stations and establishing new centres. "There has never been a time," says Bishop McKim, "when opportunities have been greater, and our ability to meet them so weakened as now."

Notable Missionary Development: English missionary authorities say that there is no part of the world where the movement towards Christianity is so strong as in West Africa. In a single year there have been more adult baptisms in Nigeria than in any other mission field of the Church of England during a corresponding period. Unlike what is found in the mass movements in India, every stratum of society is equally involved, so that winning Nigeria for Christ is no empty phrase. It is possible within the present generation, though not with the missionary forces available today. One missionary has charge of a district containing 160 scattered churches, besides many villages where there are inquirers who have not yet reached the stage of building a church for themselves. These African congregations are entirely self-supporting. They do not appeal for funds, but for leaders, men who can train others to go forth and teach the countless thousands appealing for the knowledge of the true God.

New Diocese in North Africa: After many delays, due to a desire not to offend Mohammedan feelings and leaders, the Church of England has at last established a separate diocese in Egypt and the Soudan. The first Bishop is the Rt. Rev. Llewellyn Gwynne. For a number of years he has been the Bishop of Khartoum, but has been known as the suffragan of the Bishop in the Diocese of Jerusalem and the East. Egypt and the Soudan have hitherto been included in that Diocese.

Rev. Paul Micou, President of "Council of Church Boards of Education."

Perhaps it will be "news" to many Church people to know that there is a "Council of Church Boards of Education," which is composed of two representatives from each of thirty Boards of Religious Education, of thirty communions.

To this large body of educational experts the Rev. Paul Micou, of our Department of Religious Education, was recently elected president for this year.

At the meeting of this Council Mr. Micou described the reorganization of the central agencies of the Episcopal Church, especially as it affects religious education. He was listened to with intense interest, and was asked so many pertinent questions that he was kept on his feet nearly an hour.

Church Intelligence

CONGRATULATIONS!

$3,013,916.68 paid as of December 31, 1920, against pledges of $3,173,-491.86.

We have not received every cent pledged for 1920, but the Church, as a whole, has accomplished a difficult task in a splendid way. The result is particularly pleasing in view of the existing business depression and proves what can be done when all work together. This is the first year of a new system, and some few dioceses have not yet created an organization that is equipped to produce the best results.

Contributions from all the domestic dioceses and missionary districts show an advance from $1,411,971.69 in 1919 to $3,013,916.68 in 1920—an increase of $1,601,944.99, or 113 per cent.

The Third Province, with an increase of $492,209.68, shows the largest total advance, while the Seventh Province, with 262 per cent., holds the percentage record.

Porto Rico, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and East Carolina have paid 100 per cent. of the quota. Maryland also shows the largest increase in dollars, namely, $107,008.48, while the Missionary District of San Joaquin has the largest percentage of increase, namely, 404 per cent.

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,
Treasurer.

TENNESSEE

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.

Eighty-ninth Convention.

The convention opened in Calvary Church, Memphis, on January 19.

Bishop Gailor, assisted by Bishop Beatty, celebrated the Holy Communion. The Rev. Charles T. Wright, rector of Grace Church, Memphis, preached a strong sermon on the way of salvation, which is found in Jesus Christ. Bishop Gailor opened and closed the convention, but at various times called on his Coadjutor to assist in presiding.

At its business session the convention adopted a canon which will put the control of religious affairs in the hands of a centralized agency, consisting of the Bishop and Council. The head of the State Church, the Coadjutor Bishop, the Suffragan Bishop (if there be one), the secretary of the convention, and the treasurer and chancellor of the Diocese are ex-officio members of the Council, which is to be composed of nine ordained priests and nine laymen who are communicants.

The elected members of the Council are composed of three clergy and three laity from each of the three divisions of Tennessee. Every year six members will be elected to serve for three years. Those elected this year are:

Clerical—For the West: C. F. Blaisdel, C. T. Wright, J. B. Russell. Middle: P. A. Pugh, H. D. Philips, J. R. Sharp. East: W. C. Whitaker, W. J. L. Clark, W. A. Jonnard.

Lay—West: D. W. De Haven, B. F. Witcell, Bolton Smith. Middle: C. T. Wright, C. D. Martin, H. C. Gerhart. East: J. B. French, R. K. Gibson, G. M. Ellsworth.

This complete reorganization of the Diocese was by far the most important business transacted.

The report of the Committee on Religious Education was intensely interesting, and showed an enormous amount of work done.

On the day following, Bishop Gailor celebrated the Holy Communion and gave a spiritual talk to the clergy, after which the convention reopened at Calvary Church.

The convention will meet in Chattanooga next year, and the Rev. B. B. Ramage will preach the Otey memorial sermon before that body.

The following delegates were elected to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. C. T. Wright, P. A. Pugh, J. M. Maxon, W. C. Whitaker, W. J. L. Clark, F. Du M. Devall; Messrs. J. B. French, Douglas Wright, D. W. De Haven, Charles Martin, H. A. Oliver, Walter Goodman. Alternates—The Rev. Messrs. H. D. Phillips, B. B. Ramage, George O. Watts, A. Warner L. Forsyth, Thomas S. Russell, Howard Cady; Messrs. G. F. Finigan, B. F. Witsell, John Shortridge, T. K. Robinson, R. H. Fitzgerald, W. N. Jenkins.

Before the close of the convention, Dr. Wright spoke in favor of completing the Cathedral at Memphis in the life time of Bishop Gailor. The Bishop appointed Dr. Maxon, of Christ Church, Nashville, to be chairman of the committee to raise the endowment of the Episcopate from twenty-seven to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The church in Memphis was congratulated for its royal entertainment and hospitality to the delegates. The lunches served every noon were delicious, and the people showed every courtesy to their visitors.

B. C.

MARYLAND

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Convention Held in Baltimore.

The one hundred and thirty-seventh annual Convention of the Diocese of Maryland, held in Ascension Church, Baltimore, the Rev. John D. LaMothe, D. D., rector.

In his address Bishop Murray referred to the most successful year in the history of the Diocese. Maryland had given four times as much to the work of the General Church as it had ever given. There has also been an increase in the number of confirmations. Bishop Murray made extended reference to the Lambeth Conference, calling attention to the fact that quotations from reports of special committees may not be cited as conclusions of the Lambeth Conference. Only the resolutions bind the conference as a whole. The Bishop spoke on international and other affairs. He expressed the hope that the United States, in negotiations with foreign governments, would propose, and, if possible, perfect plans for comity, mutual understanding and the establishment of co-operative relations in every phase of trade and commerce.

"Ourselves united," the Bishop said, "we could afford to set an example of good will for the harmony of the world, by action that would indicate not only desire, but also determination, for an era of international forbearance and love.

"Faith in God for us, both clerical and lay, calls for loyalty to the sacred and solemn vows of our Church memberships; for the indestructible enthronement of the Holy Scriptures as the Word of God, of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds as our Confession of Faith, of the Holy Sacraments of Baptism and the Supper of our Lord as generally necessary to our salvation and of the continuity of orders bearing the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole body of Christendom. As well pluck the Constitution from the structural fabric of our State government as eliminate the creeds and sacraments from the body of the Christian Church. Suggestion of such action should ever be treated as an expression of lawless religious Bolshevism, and, please God, always will be so treated here in the Diocese of Maryland."

The Bishop also touched on labor problems. He said, "Capital and labor must be productive, and to this end capital must recognize labor as capital, and labor must recognize capital as labor, mutually agreeing on a fair day's work, nothing less and nothing more on either side, and living up to the agreement on both sides."

The Bishop announced the unanimous election of Joseph Packard as "first Chancellor" of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Maryland and a presentation of a testimonial to Mr. Packard by the convention was made by Edward Guest Gibson and William M. Chipchase. For half a century Mr. Packard has been a member of the Diocesan Convention and active in its affairs.

Memorial services were also held for two clergymen who died during the year—the Rev. Frederick Charles Fraser Shears and the Rev. Levin Johnson Sothoron.

Thirteen candidates for priests' orders were announced as follows: Alexander K. Barton, Harry Graham Bragg, Edmund L. Gettier, Jr., Edmund B. Tottan, Reginald R. Genois, Rush Wiley Smith, Victor S. Ross, Cornelius R. Dawson, Herbert E. Catlin, Theodore N. Barth, Paul Hartzell, Gustave Hamilton Caution and Arthur Lee Kinsolving.

The Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Archdeacon of Maryland, presented his first report on the missionary work since the division of the Diocese into two missionary areas with two Archdeacons; one for the city of Baltimore, the other for the remainder of the Diocese.

The Rev. Romilly F. Humphries, D. D., Archdeacon of Baltimore, gave his port on the work of the city of Baltimore, especially City Mission work,

A budget of $280,000 was voted for the work of the Diocese and that of the General Church. The concluding session of the convention was held on the Cathedral grounds, where an inspection was made of the Synod Hall, the first unit of the Cathedral group, now in process of construction. A brief service of memorial for Maryland soldiers and sailors who died in the war was held about the Victory Cross. The development of the Cathedral congregation has brought to the fore the problem of the relations of individuals to the Cathedral organization. Shall there be a parochial organization within the Cathedral? A special committee was appointed to study Cathedral organizations throughout this country and to report at the next convention. The nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States has raised the question of the right of women to vote for vestrymen. Mr. Joseph Packard presented a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate this question and report later.

R. F. H.

NEW YORK.

Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D.,
Bishop-Elect.

The Rev. Dr. Manning Elected Bishop. Report of Convention.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Parish, is to be the next Bishop of New York, provided the Church authorities approve. He will be the tenth Bishop of the Diocese, the fifth Trinity rector to be chosen to this great office, and the successor to the late Bishop Burch.

The convention of the Diocese assembled on January 26, with Holy Communion in the Cathedral, and an address by Bishop Lloyd upon the services of the late Bishop. Following came the convention itself in Synod Hall, with the Rev. Dr. Harry P. Nichols as chairman. Almost three hundred clergy were in the voting order, and practically every parish and mission was represented in the lay order. There was some discussion over an open or a closed convention, but the open order prevailed. Contrary to the usual plan in New York, nominating speeches, with applause barred, were permitted.

Four candidates were named. They were the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, of Trinity; the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Slattery, of Grace; the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, of St. Thomas', and Bishop Thomas, of Wyoming. In presenting Dr. Stires, the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks stated that the rector of St. Thomas' had with difficulty been induced to stand for election. The Rev. Dr. Parks injected a mild attack upon the Rev. Dr. Manning for seeking union with Catholics, even Eastern ones, and brought in the only partisan note of the day, by lauding the Protestant position and charging, not the Roman Church, but certain elements within it, with the aim of making the United States an Irish Catholic republic.

No attention was paid by other presenters of candidates to the partisan note, and none others made any. Throughout the convention no party spirit prevailed. What used to be called Low Church people warmly supported Dr. Manning, some speaking for him, while some supposedly Highs supported Dr. Slattery. It would be impossible to imagine a convention in any Diocese in which less personal element prevailed, certainly of any feeling, and more earnestness in a desire to know God's will and do it. In naming Dr. Slattery, the Rev. Dr. Silver, of the Incarnation, said the clergy of New York are the most unshepherded of shepherds, and that a Bishop is needed who will be a father in God to the clergy as well as to others.

Three ballots were cast, Dr. Manning leading from the first, with 89 clerical and 59 parishes, Dr. Slattery 75 and 37, and Dr. Stires 73 and 52, in the first ballot; and in the second, Dr. Manning 101 and 64, Dr. Slattery 74 and 38, and Dr. Stires 63 and 40. In these votes Bishop Thomas had in the first ballot 28 and 10, and in the second 20 and 5.

At the end of the second ballot the Rev. Dr. Parks withdrew the name of Dr. Stires, and as he did so, closed with an appeal for the support of the Rev. Dr. Slattery. The Rev. Dr. Van de Water, a former supporter of the Rev. Dr. Stires, made a counter-appeal for the Rev. Dr. Manning. These two incidents came as near as any to personal differences. On the third and last ballot Dr. Manning was chosen with 126 clerical votes, when 123 were needed, to Dr. Slattery 109, and in the parish vote 75 when 71 were needed, to 59 for Dr. Slattery. The withdrawal of Dr. Stires' name eliminated him for the third ballot votes.

Amid some confusion and much cheering, Dr. Stires moved to make the election unanimous, and this was done by the convention with enthusiasm. Dr. Stires and Dr. Van de Water then escorted Dr. Manning to the platform, where he pledged acceptance, and led the convention in prayers. Preceding the convention, the great dailies of New York gave much prominence to the convention, and were excellently well informed and exceedingly discreet in their utterances. Never before was so much space given, and never before were so many people in New York interested in the outcome. The situation was most unusual. Even editorials were indulged in by the daily papers, not advocating candidates, but dwelling upon the greatness of the office, the great service of Bishop Burch, and the vital concern New York and America had in the selection.

The Rev. Dr. W. T. Manning, Bishop-Elect of New York.

One exception was a yellow daily, which in both morning and afternoon editions effusively attacked Dr. Manning on the grounds of being a British subject and sympathizer. Not only members of the convention, but the public of New York resented the unwarranted attack. Following his election, Dr. Manning refused all comment. It was stated that Bishop Lloyd will continue with Bishop Burch's appointments, being duly honored in so doing, and that the salary of Bishop Burch will be continued to his family up to the day the new Bishop is consecrated.

Following the election, the convention, the Church and the city rejoiced, which fact was reflected in the daily papers, which contained editorials praising the selection, commending the work of the Church, commending the work of all churches. The unity work of Dr. Manning, his record in Trinity Parish, his tremendous influence in civic affairs, his service in the war, were factors in his election. He was nominated by Mr. Edmund L. Baylies, head of the Seamen's Church Institute, and deputy to the General Convention.

Three matters influenced the trend of the New York Convention toward Dr. Manning, and caused that trend to end in his selection to this great office. These three were: 1. The large place he occupies in the public mind of New York and America, gained by the eminently sound things he has said and done. These sound things include patriotic sentiments, uttered in 1917 and later and earlier, when somebody was needed to speak New York's voice, and his unalterable loyalty to Jesus Christ as God and Saviour—his soundness in the faith that over and over again in the dark days of the world war and since, rang out in a doubting atmosphere 2. His business acumen and bold stand in Trinity Parish, effecting reforms that everybody had wanted for years, including all in the parish, but which, somehow, had not been realized. The opportunity came to Dr. Manning and his vestry, and they met it. The effect of their work upon New York, upon the Church in America, upon religion as a militant force everywhere, was tremendous; and 3, Dr. Manning's known sympathy with lay effort, his confidence in laymen, and his known desire that everybody take hold and do things, without always standing off on just this form or that. Laymen in the convention were heard, advocating his selection on just this ground of doing things; obedience to canons, loyal to the Church, but Christ's cause taking advantage of new methods.

Dr. Manning was born in Nottingham, Eng., in 1866, but came to America with his parents at the age of sixteen. He was educated at the University of the South, and has been given divinity degrees by several universities. His first parish was Redlands, Cal., then he served at Sewanee as Professor of Dogmatic Theology. Next he was rector of a Lansdowne, a Philadelphia suburban parish, and then of Christ Church, Nashville. From Nashville he came to St. Agnes' Chapel, New York. While there he was selected Bishop of Harrisburg, which election was immediately followed by his election by Trinity vestry as assistant rector to the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix. Upon the death of Dr. Dix he succeeded to the rectorship and at once entered upon the difficult administration of that great parish. He was also elected to Kentucky and Western New York. During the war he served as volunteer chaplain at Camp Upton. On Washington's Birthday, 1917, at a critical moment in America's war preparation history, he delivered an address in St. Paul's Chapel, New York, which, being published in full in the New York papers, and many beyond New York, had tremendous effect in bringing New York's opinion to the sound position it ought to have entertained months before it did. He is a chevalier of the Legion of Honor of France.

The New York Tribune says editorially:

The choice of Dr. Manning to be the next Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York brings to that post ability of the first rank. Both as the executive head of a great parish and as preacher and pastor, he ranks among the ablest spiritual leaders of the city. His success now is the victory of a strong man who prevails on his merits —there is no hint of that compromise upon a second best or inoffensive personality which so often occurs in conventions, diocesan and otherwise.

No one, we think, will take too seriously the somewhat heated statements made in Dr. Manning's name, but without his authority, touching the application of curb bits to restless clergymen. Dr. Manning has the strength to use a bit; he has also shown in his own parish a breadth of outlook which bears testimony of a generosity and largeness of mind and negatives any narrow use of strength. The task which faces him is one of union upon essentials, and he will belie his whole career if he administers his high office upon any other plan.

There will be especial rejoicing that the stanch Americanism and active patriotism of Dr. Manning have been thus recognized. His voice was a powerful one for right during the war. The enemies he then made are greatly to his credit. He will take office with the hearty good will of the entire unhyphenated population of the city.

C.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Services at St. John's.

A series of "quiet half hours" at noon on Fridays during Lent until the beginning of Holy Week will be conducted at St. John's Church by Canon George W. Douglas, acting rector of the church. After a short interval and the ringing of the church bells the quiet half hour will conclude with the shorter litany. These services will be an appropriate following up of the Lenten preparation service organized by St. John's Church and held on February 4 at the residence of Mrs. William J. Boardman. This service is known as a "Quiet Day for Women," and was conducted by Dean Rousmaniere, of St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral, Boston, Mass.

Regular healing services are being held at St. Stephen's Church every Tuesday, alternating between 8 P. M. and 10:30 A. M. On Tuesday, January 25, more than one hundred persons were present at the service, and there have been many testimonials of great gain from these services. Similar services which have been held regularly at Epiphany Church are equally well attended, and all who take part feel a growing demand for more activity along this line of the Church's work.

The Washington Committee on "Lighthouses" for the blind in France reports that ten thousand dollars has been contributed here to the $120,000 fund, which, when secured, will be used to make permanent the "lighthouse" work in France for the 3,000 soldiers of that country who were blinded in battle. The Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, of the Diocese of Washington, is a member of the Washington Advisory Board, and among those who have accepted membership on the local committee are Canon and Mrs. George William Douglas, now of St. John's, and several laymen of the Diocese.

Among the gifts of interest for this splendid work was a white and gold table rug, woven by a one-arm blind soldier in France, and presented to the committee by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. It was auctioned for the benefit of the fund and brought $100.

All Saints' Church, Chevy Chase, suffered loss by fire recently when the organ in the church was completely destroyed. Services have been continued as usual, and will be until a new organ is installed.

Bishop of Oklahoma Addresses Woman's Auxiliary: The regular monthly meeting of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at St. Paul's Church, Washington Circle, on [illegible]mons would soon fail to attract and Tuesday, February 1, at 2:30 P. M. The regular business of the Auxiliary was attended to, and the special feature of interest on this occasion was a stirring address by Bishop Thurston, of Oklahoma.

M. M. W.

LOUISIANA

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Council of Diocese Largely Attended.

The eighty-third annual session of the Council of the Diocese of Louisiana was held in Christ Church Cathedral, New Orleans, January 25 to 28. There was a large attendance of delegates from all parts of the Diocese. Present at the Council were the Rt. Rev. Troy Beatty, Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee; Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., of New York, representing the Nation-Wide Campaign, and the Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, of New York, representing the Department of Social Service. The annual sermon was preached by the Rev. Ernest N. Bullock, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lake Charles. The Rev. Sidney L. Vail was elected Secretary of the Diocese, and the following were elected members of the Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. R. S. Coupland, A. R. Edbrooke and A. R. Berkeley, and Messrs. Warren Kearny, J. D. Hayward and W. B. Machado. The Council unanimously decided to take over the property known as the Colored Industrial Home, situated on Gentilly Road, New Orleans, and a committee was appointed to make the proper transfer and form an Executive Board. The report of the Nation-Wide Campaign was most encouraging, showing that the Diocese had paid $41,203 on its pledge of $38,632 and against its quota of $60,295. The Finance Committee reported a large increase in revenue, enabling an increase in the Bishop's salary and placing the clergy on a minimum salary of $1,500 per annum for single men and $1,800 for married men. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Robert W. Patton on the follow-up work of the Nation-Wide Campaign; by the Rev. Charles N. Lathrop on Social Service, and by the Rev. C. B. K. Weed, City Missionary, on the work he is doing in the various charitable institutions of the city.

Church Club of Louisiana: The annual meeting and banquet of the Church Club was held in Trinity Parish House on January 24, about one hundred and thirty being present, the largest attendance in the history of the club. Reports showed the club to have been very active during the past year, the membership having been increased to two hundred and ninety-two. Addresses were delivered by the Rt. Rev. Troy Beatty, Bishop-Coadjutor of Tennessee; the Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, Bishop of Louisiana, and the Rev. Robert W. Patton. The supper was served by the ladies of Trinity Parish and was a most enjoyable feast. The election of officers for the coming year resulted as follows: President, Mr. George M. Rogers; First Vice-President, Mr. William A. Bell; Second Vice-President, Mr. W. H. Hendren; Secretary, Mr. Warren Kearny, and Treasurer, Mr. Biddle W. Allen.

On January 10 Mr. Robert G. Tatum delivered a lecture before the club. Mr. Tatum spent several years in Alaska and accompanied the late Archdeacon Stuck in his ascent of Mount Denali, and the accounts of his experiences on that expedition were most interesting and much enjoyed. The club provided a supper for the boys of the various parishes in St. Paul's Parish House on January 8, when over one hundred were present and Mr. Tatum gave them an illustrated lecture on Alaska. He also spoke before the Woman's Auxiliary and at several of the churches during his stay in the city.

F. H. G. F.

NORTH TEXAS

Rt. Rev. E. A. Temple, D. D., Bishop.

Convocation Well Attended.

The eleventh annual Convocation of the Missionary District of North Texas was held in Amarillo, beginning Sunday, January 23. Although Bishop Temple is in poor health, he was able to be present at the church services and to preside at the business sessions of convocation. At the Sunday services the Rev. A. D. Ellis, rector of the church at Beaumont, Tex., was the preacher, and Rev. J. A. Ten Broeck, of New York, at the service on Sunday night. At the same time, when business sessions of the convocation were going on, the Woman's Auxiliary was holding their meetings, with a good attendance. In all, about sixty delegates were in attendance, either at the convocation or at meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Considering the long distances to be traveled, this may be considered as a markedly good attendance.

To mark the tenth anniversary of Bishop Temple's consecration, a loving cup and a traveling bag were presented to him at a reception held at the house of Mr. H. W. Galbraith.

The convocation closed on Tuesday evening, when the Rev. W. E. Gardner, D. D., of New York, gave a valuable and much appreciated address on Christian Education.

The next convocation will be held at Colorado, Tex., in January, 1922.

The missions at Colorado and Big Springs are now to have a clergyman, the Rev. F. Eteson, who will reside at Big Spring. The Rev. D. A. Sanford, residing at Amarillo, will supply some other mission stations for a short time.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Annual Council.

The three most prominent notes struck in the annual Council of the Diocese, which was held in St. Paul's Church, Newport News, were the advance of work in the Diocese during last year, the need of men for the ministry and the call for religious education, particularly stressing the return of a teaching ministry.

The Council was opened on Tuesday morning, January 25, with the service of the Holy Communion administered by Bishop Tucker, assisted by Bishop-Coadjutor Thomson, the Secretary of the Diocese, the Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., and the rector of the church, the Rev. Henry G. Lane.

The Rev. W. E. Rollins, D. D., of the Virginia Theological Seminary, preached the opening sermon. Dr. Rollins took as his theme the need for a teaching ministry. He stressed most particularly the fact that hortatory ser-hold the attention of intelligent people, and that what the laity of the Church will listen to and what they need is not so much exhortation, but more teaching in regard to the fundamental necessities of religion. He gave some valuable topics for a teaching ministry.

After the closing of this service the Council was organized for business, and Bishop Tucker made his annual address, which dealt with the work in the Diocese during the past year and showed a tremendous advance, particularly in regard to the number of confirmations. The confirmations in the Diocese of Southern Virginia during the past year by the Bishop and the Bishop-Coadjutor were 1,208. This number was larger than the number confirmed last year, before the Diocese was divided. The Bishop stressed the great need for men to enter the sacred ministry, and also the increasing call for a Diocesan school for boys. The work of the Archdeacon in vacant parishes, which was made possible by the Nation-Wide Campaign, strengthened and rehabilitated many churches which would have otherwise languished for want of services. The Bishop called attention of the Council to the fact that this completed fifteen years of service since his elevation to the Episcopate. After expressing his grateful appreciation of the help and co-operation of Bishop Thomson, the Bishop said: "I assign, therefore, to the Bishop-Coadjutor the special care and supervision over all churches aided by the Diocesan Missionary Board and over the colored congregations of the Diocese. I give to him full and equal authority in dealing with these churches, in filling the vacant cures in this part of the field, and in settling questions which may arise in his visitations. We will visit, as we have always done, all the churches and missions of the Diocese in rotation. He and I, as your servants in the Lord, keeping in loving touch with all the congregations, will labor together for the upbuilding of the Church which is dear to us both." In a fitting resolution the Council expressed its gratitude for the tremendous service rendered by Bishop Tucker during the past fifteen years.

Bishop Thomson's address, which was delivered after lunch, was mainly given to a report of his official acts. He dealt briefly with the action of the Executive Committee in regard to the funds of the Nation-Wide Campaign. The report of the Executive Committee of the Diocese, which was read by Bishop Thomson, showed an immense amount of work done mainly as a result of the Nation-Wide Campaign. The Treasurer of the Nation-Wide Campaign reported that there had been collected during the year $142,600, and of this amount there has been paid out $129,000, $57,000 being spent in the Diocese, including the $21,700 disbursed through the Diocesan Board of Missions in its assistance to clergy and lay workers in this Diocese.

Report of the Committee on the State of the Church struck a note of optimism along various lines, but sounded a call for the need of men to man the numerous counties in this Diocese which are at present without resident clergymen. Religious education has been set forward in the Diocese by the work of that committee during the past year. Particular stress is being placed on the advancement of work in the Sunday school, and a step in the right direction was made when this Diocese joined Southwestern Virginia and Virginia in maintaining a school for Sunday school teachers and clergymen to be held in Charlottesville during the summer. The program for religious education is a progressive one, and by persistent industry on the part of those behind it will have a much needed effect upon the Church in the future.

The night session was given over to the subject of Foreign Missions. The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Kyoto, Japan, a son of the Bishop of the Diocese, delivered a masterly address upon the progress and outlook of Christianity in the Sunrise Kingdom. The Rev. Dr. Bell, of the Virginia Seminary, on Wednesday morning, in making the report of the Committee on Increase in the Ministry, brought out the fact that the Virginia Theological Seminary was the one Seminary whose enrollment had gotten back to normal again. He stressed most emphatically the dire straits the Church is in and the pessimistic outlook for the next few years, unless the ministers in their various congregations under God are able to call more men into the ministry of the Church. For Southern Virginia he indicated a progressive program, which his committee would carry out in placing before fit men the subject of the call to the ministry.

In the brief report of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, among other things was brought out the intention of the Auxiliary to establish the "Loulie Taylor Letcher Memorial" to honor the memory of the only president of the Southern Virginia branch up to the time of her death in July, 1920. Mrs. Letcher had been president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Southern Virginia for twenty-eight years, and during that term of service, in season and out of season, had endeavored to promote the cause of missions, and had endeared herself to thousands who were earnestly seeking to set forward the kingdom of God.

The Rev. W. A. Brown, D. D., was elected Secretary of the Diocese; Mr. W. W. Old, Jr., Treasurer; Judge Thomas H. Willcox, Chancellor, and the Rev. C. B. Bryan, D. D., Register. The Standing Committee: The Rev. J. Cleveland Hall, D. D., the Rev. E. R. Carter, the Rev. M. B. Marshall, Mr. George Mason, Mr. C. Wiley Grandy, Mr. E. W. Maupin, Jr.

Committee on Finance: The Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., the Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, D. D., Mr. T. W. Matthews, Mr. W. W. Old, Judge Thomas H. Willcox.

Diocesan Board of Missions: The Rev. D. W. Howard, D. D., the Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., the Rev. C. B. Bryan, D. D., Mr. F. W. Darling, Mr. E. S. Reid, Mr. C. J. Faulkner.

The above committees and Board, together with the Bishop and Bishop-Coadjutor, by canon, constitute the Executive Committee of the Diocese.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod for 1921, which is to be held in Wilmington, Del., were elected as follows:

Clerical: The Rev. Messrs. H. G. Lane, D. W. Howard, D. D., Herbert N. Tucker, and E. Ruffin Jones. Lay: Messrs. E. B. Hodges, F. W. Darling, G. G. McCann, and E. W. Maupin, Jr.

Supplementary deputies:

Clerical: The Rev. Messrs. J. C. Hall, D. D., John F. Coleman, A. L. Kenyon, and S. C. Steinmetz, S. T. D. Lay: Messrs. G. L. Hume, H. S. Vass, Guy S. Jackson, and W. F. Gilkeson.

After hearing from the various colleges, all of which were encouraging from the standpoint of personal and discouraging from the standpoint of financial aid, the Council adjourned to meet in St. John's Church, Hampton, Va.

The night session was given to diocesan missions, which was ably handled by the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, of Petersburg, and the Nation-Wide Campaign, which was most eloquently presented by the Rev. W. H. Milton, D. D., of the Central Office in New York.

M. B. M.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

N.-W. C. Appropriations Made.

The Executive Committee of the Nation-Wide Campaign in the Diocese of Virginia held a meeting in Richmond on January 25, and made appropriations for the year 1921. Reports from the campaign office indicate that the receipts during the year 1921 will be about the same as in 1920, or between $275,000 and $280,000. Most of the appropriations were for 1921 payments on appropriations made last year covering the whole three-year period. The first appropriation was one of $90,000 to cover the diocesan quota of $89,125 for the work of the general Church.

Religious Education in Church Boarding Schools.

The Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Virginia convened the second Conference on Religious Education in secondary boarding schools on January 24, in Richmond. Bishop William Cabell Brown presided as chairman. Eight members of the Board were present, together with twelve principals, chaplains and other representatives of nine boarding schools under Church influence, and six representatives from two parochial day schools. The boarding schools represented were: Episcopal High School, Woodberry Forest School, Virginia Episcopal School (in affiliation with the work of the conference, though not with the Diocese), St. Christopher's School, Stuart Hall, St. Anne's School; St. Catherine's School, Stuyvesant School, Blue Ridge Industrial School. St. Andrew's Church and Emmanuel Church parochial schools were also represented.

Mr. A. R. Hoxton, principal of the Episcopal High School, acted as secretary of the conference, and the Rev. E. L. Woodward, M. D., was made head of a committee of continuation, with power to accept others on the committee, for co-ordinating the work of the schools until the next annual conference.

The conference defined a Church school to be "a school under diocesan supervision as to its religious education," and such schools are eligible for membership in the conference. The supervision exercised by the Diocese was understood to be similar to that exercised by a college board over the standards of secular education in secondary boarding schools required for college entrance.

The conference unanimously decided that hereafter, in the outline of the courses of study in school catalogues and in listing subjects on school reports of all kinds, Religious Education should be given priority of mention to indicate its primary importance among the objectives of Church schools. All certificates of graduation from schools of the Diocese and of other schools associated with the conference will bear the signature of the Bishop of the Diocese, attesting that the prescribed course of religious education has been duly completed.

Paragraph 3, page 16 of the Program of 1920 was amended by unanimous vote, to read "The school curriculum should include not less than two, but preferably three, forty-minute periods a week, etc." Copies of this program may be had upon request from Rev. G. M. Brydon, 400 Old Dominion Trust Building, Richmond, Va. It should be in the hands of every school trustee, teacher and parent of boys or girls at Church schools.

Suggestions were offered for overcoming the tendency of students to be careless about the daily Scripture readings of the Christian Nurture Series; cards with places for daily checks for each student's use, as an incentive to read each day the designated passage; and the assignment of five minutes at the opening of each day in the schoolroom for all students to employ under supervision in devotional Bible reading.

A motion was carried that the courses in Religious Education included in the curriculum to require two or three forty-minute periods a week, should be in addition to such work as might be made a part of the History and English Literature Courses.

Progress was reported from various schools in the adaptation of the Christian Nurture Series for boarding school use.

The expenses of delegates from the schools attending the conference were met through the D. B. R. E. from its N.-W. C. funds. A delightful supper was served the conference by the ladies of Grace Church, in the parish hall of which the conference was held. These annual conferences are evidently filling a very urgent need in strengthening the work of Religious Education in Church schools, which is so apt to be relegated to a secondary place as a result of the very great difficulties which surround it.

E. L. W.

The Mite Boxes for the Lenten and Easter offering of the Sunday schools have been mailed to all of the Sunday schools in the Diocese. If they have not been received, or if more are needed, write to the Rev. G. M. Brydon, Old Dominion Trust Building, Richmond, Va.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.

Northwestern Convocation.

The winter meeting of this convocation was held in St. Paul's Church, Weston, the Rev. John S. Alfriend, rector, on January 25, 26 and 27. There was a good attendance of the members, and the services, which were held morning and evening, were much appreciated and well attended. The first service was held on Tuesday evening, when the Rev. Jacob Brittingham, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Church, Wheeling, preached a very forceful and practical sermon from St. Paul's question asked the Galatians, "Ye did run well, who did hinder you?" A business session was held on Wednesday morning and various matters of interest and importance were disposed of, after which there was celebration of Holy Communion, the Rev. Ilbert de L. Brayshaw, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Parkersburg, being the preacher. Mr. Brayshaw gave a most stirring address, which appealed to all, to practice greater earnestness and promptness of action in the Christian life. Luncheon was served in the Masonic Temple, and it was pleasing to have present the ministers of the different churches in Weston—Presbyterian, Methodist, Roman Catholic and other churches. Convocation met again in the afternoon, and an essay on "Family Culture, Religion in the Home," was read by the Rev. J. Logan Fish, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wheeling. The subject introduced was one of interest to all present, and the discussion of it went on until time to adjourn in the evening. At the evening service addresses were given by the Rev. R. E. L. Strider, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, and Professor F. R. Yoke, Superintendent of the Public School. Weston, the subject being "Education in Church and State." Excellent addresses were given, which proved of great interest to the large congregation present. On Thursday morning, after closing up the business of the convocation, Bishop Gravatt, at the service which followed, spoke on the subject of Church Unity, which was very much appreciated, and all present felt grateful to the Bishop for his clear presentation of this much talked of subject. The invitation of the Rev. E. Nelson MaConomoy, B. D., rector of Grace Church, Elkins, to meet at his church in September was accepted.

J. L. F.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

To Organize Roanoke Branch of Layman's League.

On January 25 the Men's Club of Christ Church, Roanoke, invited the Churchmen of the three parishes to meet the Bishop at Christ Church Parish House and hear him on his diocesan plans. The Men's Club of Christ Church acted as hosts of the occasion, greeting the men, and after the addresses, serving refreshments. The Bishop expressed a desire to have all the men in the Diocese band together for the advancement of the work, in loyal aggressive interest and support by word and deed, pointing out the needs and opportunities. A committee composed of the Senior wardens of the three churches were appointed to nominate officers, and a Board of Directors of the Roanoke branch of the Diocesan Laymen's League. The men will be called together to receive this report and organize at an early date.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Diocesan Church of St. Mary Now Pro-Cathedral of Diocese.

The Diocesan Church of St. Mary, Philadelphia, has become the pro-Cathedral of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, according to an announcement at the Church House.

The members of the Cathedral Chapter of the Diocese are now engaged in the legal formalities of taking over the Diocesan Church, and the pro-Cathedral will become the nucleus of the movement to build an imposing Cathedral at Twenty-third Street and the Parkway.

The Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of Christ Church, has been elected a member of the Cathedral Chapter, and he will become one of the canons of the Cathedral. William Ellis Scull has been elected registrar of the Cathedral Chapter; Sidney A. Wright, treasurer, and Andrew Wheeler, presentor.

An event of triple importance to the members and congregation of All Saints' Church, at Wynnewood, was observed January 30, when, at the 11 o'clock service, the church bell was dedicated, its newly appointed rector instituted, and the church itself consecrated by the Bishop of the Diocese.

The bell was dedicated as a memorial to Rev. Andrew S. Burke, former rector of the church, in recognition of his work in the parish.

The Rev. Gibson Bell, who was recently elected rector, was instituted into that office by the Bishop. Mr. Bell is the head master of the Montgomery School at Wynnewood and has had charge of All Saints' Church during the last year.

Chapel of the Mediator: The tenor bell of a set of chimes presented to the Chapel of the Mediator, Philadelphia, by Mrs. George C. Thomas and her daughter, Mrs. Schuyler Volkman, was hung in the church belfry January 19. It weighs a ton and a half, almost as much as the Liberty Bell. The complete set of eleven chimes will cost about $10,000. The tenor bell will be rung as a summons to church service until the ten others are delivered. Mrs. Thomas also gave about three-fourths of the fund for the new building, dedicated in March, 1919, as a memorial to her husband.

The right of women to attend the Diocesan Convention as delegates is becoming the subject of a lively discussion among members of the Diocese.

The consensus of opinion among the members of the Churchwomen's Club of the Diocese is that the attainment of equality in the world of politics should also be followed by the right to be represented in Church activities on a larger scale.

The question was discussed January 24, when a "Church Forum" under the auspices of the Church Club took place in the auditorium of the Inasmuch Mission, at Tenth and Locust Streets. "Women as Delegates to the Diocesan Convention" was the topic for discussion.

Mrs. R. R. P. Bradford and Dr. W. H. Jefferys, of the City Mission, presented arguments for the Churchwomen who seek admission, and Mrs. Horace Brock spoke for women of the Diocese who are opposed to representation in the convention.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Upjohn, rector of St. Luke's Church, Germantown, spoke for the clergy who are opposed to the plan, and the Rev. Wood Stewart, rector of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Chestnut Hill, told of the experience of the Diocese of Olympia, Wash., in a similar movement. After the four opening speeches there was an open discussion with three-minute addresses.

Congregations of five churches participated Sunday night in the annual service of the parish of the Holy Apostles. They are: The Mother Church, the Holy Apostles, the Chapel of the Mediator, St. Simon the Cyrenian, and the Memorial Chapel of the Holy Communion. These churches have a combined communicant list of approximately 3,500 persons. The service was held in the Church of the Holy Apostles. The Rev. George E. Osgood, father of the Rev. P. E. Osgood, vicar of the Chapel of the Mediator, preached. There were no services Sunday night in any of the Chapels in Holy Apostles' Parish.

R. R. W.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

A FREE PEW RECTOR ELECTED BISHOP.

As we read the accounts of the election of Dr. Manning to the bishopric of New York, probably the most influential position in our Church in America, one remembers with satisfaction the courageous and successful fight that he made in the richest parish in this country against that iniquitous system in our churches—pew rent.

After its abolishment in Trinity Parish, New York, and in some of our other leading and influential parishes throughout the country, there was hope that this legacy of the medieval class conditions would be abolished from all our churches, but, like so many other high resolves and bright prospects for reform which seemed on the verge of fruition at the close of the great war, it has sunk into oblivion.

One cannot but wonder if the Saviour were to come to one of these churches, and find a group of strangers waiting in the vestibule until after the reading of the first lesson, if He would not pass by them with that same firm, quick step which once carried Him into the temple court, and entering the building, proclaim in the same voice of authority, "My Father's house is an house of prayer, but ye have made it a place of privilege."

It is a far cry from the free hillsides of Galilee, and the crowded street corners and fishing docks of Capernaum, and the comfortably cushioned and high priced pews of our modern fashionable churches, but it is encouraging to see a man who has made a victorious fight against this pernicious practice promoted to the Episcopal office in his Diocese.

MOB VIOLENCE.

Again one of our Southern States has allowed the fair fame of the South to be besmirched by the committal of a cruel crime in the name of the enforcement of the law.

The burning at the stake of a negro in Arkansas is an atrocity which should not be allowed to pass unnoticed by the religious press.

There might be some excuse for mobs taking matters into their own hands if our courts were slow to move, or allowed justice to miscarry, but such is not the case, and there is no pretense that there is ever undue delay in the trial of these cases; on the contrary, the usual court procedure can be, and generally is, expedited to save time and any excuse for violence.

Recent developments in North Carolina and Kentucky show the way in which the tendency to take the law into private hands is spreading from racial disturbances to private quarrels between white citizens and to industrial conditions.

Alabama is another State where this same spirit seems to have tainted even the State constabulary.

The most effective way to put a stop to this attitude of disregard of law and of legal procedure is to try to create public sentiment of disapproval of such methods. Not merely a passive, quiet disapproval, but an active, outspoken condemnation that will be as aggressive as the inciters of mobs, and will arouse people to a sense of the danger into which we are drifting, by indifference to these outbreaks.

KEEP IT UP.

We are glad to note that at its recent session of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, held in Garden City, N. Y., that body so far departed from its specific field of action as to pass the following resolution:

"Meeting at an hour when plans are being proposed that look toward the reduction of armaments and the endeavor to re-establish this shaken world with its outlook toward peace rather than toward war, this conference wishes to voice its prayerful hope that wisdom, power and success may attend these proposals.

"In registering this expression of its eager desire, the conference is confident that it speaks not only for itself, but for the great mass of its constituencies at the home base and no less for its thousands of representatives in all the great lands of the world."

This question of disarmament is one that is big enough, Christian enough, to be in order for discussion and approval at any gathering of Church people.

A NEW FIELD FOR DIPLOMACY.

Young nations, like some children, are occasionally very precocious. The Minister Plenipotentiary, who has just arrived from the young republic of Czecho-Slovakia, has brought with him a group of men who are unusual in the suite of an embassy.

Dr. H. Stepenck, who is the diplomatic representative of this new republic, has brought with him a number of experts in various branches of governmental activities.

One member of his staff is going to study our educational system with a view to ascertaining any methods or plans which could be used to advantage in his own country.

A scientific agriculturist is also included in this list of embassy attaches who will make a special study of that line of industry and find out if we have anything here that would be helpful to those Bohemian farmers who have recently achieved their independence.

In like manner we find that he has men of science and experts in industrial management, all eager to learn, and to pass on to the various departments of their home government those things that we have here that they could use there.

Surely this gathering of the best things of one country to pass along to another opens up a line of diplomatic activity that can be quite as useful to mankind as the drafting of treaties or attendance upon large State or social functions.

CORN FOR THE STARVING.

The following news item in the field of relief work will be interesting to our readers, who are bound to be eager for any news that gives promise of feeding the starving in the world:

"Whatever might be said of interested motives, the offer of fifteen million bushels of corn by the farmers of the Middle West to the relief of starvation in Central Europe marks a new era in large-scale American philanthropy and is highly creditable to the generosity and good sense of a group whose gifts to the various social agencies functioning overseas have always been large, though not as spectacular as those of wealthier groups in our cities. Indeed, at the offices of the American Relief Administration, the Survey learned that this offer was not specially solicited, but that, on the contrary, owing to shortness of time, the campaign for a fund of $33,000,000 to wind up that body's operations in Europe has largely concentrated on the larger centers of population. There is every hope, by the way, that the sum asked for will be forthcoming, since already about two-thirds of it are received or guaranteed. The offer of the farmers sets a new precedent in gifts in kind. So far as could be learned, the only considerable donations of produce for foreign relief during the war have been a consignment of pigs and the results of a sheep-shearing contest by Western farmers, both to the Red Cross.

The inspiration for this large offer seems to have come from J. R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau, which represents a million and a quarter farmers. He wired to Mr. Hoover that the corn growers were willing to "market their surplus corn in relief and take their pay in goodwill," pledging themselves to deliver the corn at the nearest railroad points."

Faith will be of more use to us than any other grace, as an eye, though dim, was of more use to an Israelite bitten by a serpent than all the other members of his body. It is not knowledge, though angelical, nor repentance, though we could shed rivers of tears, could justify us; but only faith whereby we look on Christ.—T. Watson.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

FEBRUARY.

1. Tuesday.
2. Wednesday. Purification B. V. M.
6. Quinquagesima Sunday.
9. Ash Wednesday.
13. First Sunday in Lent.
16, 18, 19. Ember Days.
20. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Thursday. St. Matthias.
27. Third Sunday in Lent.
28. Monday.

Collect for Quinquagesima Sunday.

O Lord, Who hast taught us that all our doings without charity are nothing worth; send Thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before Thee. Grant this for Thine only Son Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

Collect for Ash-Wednesday.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who hatest nothing that Thou hast made, and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent; create and make in us new and contrite hearts, that we, worthily lamenting our sins and acknowledging our wretchedness, may obtain of Thee the God of all mercy, remission and forgiveness: through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Lent.

Through all these long, sad, forty days of Thine,
Lord, fill me with adoring sympathy,
In meek attendance may I mark Thy steps,
Content to walk the lonely path with Thee.
O fasting Christ!

From cold, compulsory service make me free,
For Thy great heart would none of grudging love;
I would unbidden taste the cup with Thee,
And vain and worldly pleasures rise above,
O loving Christ!

To live so emptied of this worthless self
That Thy great love may fill and through me shine;
To wrestle in my wilderness with sin,
And conquer through Thy grace and strength divine,
O tempted Christ!

'Tis sweet to feel that so I touch Thy life,
So share Thy conflict over sin for me,
That with Thee in the garden I may pray,
And weeping, bow before Thee on the tree,
O suffering Christ!

And then, Thy sorrows having humbly shared,
To greet Thee, Lord, as one long loved and known,
When with exultant heart on Easter Day
I hail Thee Victor o'er the sealed stone,
O risen Christ!

—Harriette H. Brooks.

Without Reference to Merrill Conway.

The home of her childhood and early girlhood was closed, her guardian left behind, and Merrill sat waiting for the conductor to call out the name of the town to which she was going to attend school. Ever since her mother's death Merrill's mind had been in a daze, and even the thought of the school had seemed like a dream. Now she was waking up to the fact that she was almost there.

"I dread it," she thought, "because I've always been so quiet and not like other girls. I don't know how to be like them. I'm just stiff and silly."

She had wondered how the head of the school would look. When she saw a gentleman with iron gray hair and a most kindly face, evidently waiting for her, she looked first into his eyes. They were honest eyes, those of Mr. Steele, and she trusted them.

"I have two of the boys to pick up somewhere," he said. "Oh, here they are. Miss Conway, Mr. Hamilton Trent and Mr. Halford Kingsland."

Merrill smiled shyly and answered briefly the boys' polite attempts at conversation.

It was an ordeal to her to face that long dinner table, but she tried to be brave. She liked the girl by her side, who she learned was Patsy Connolly, but she felt shy of her sister, Kathleen. Mrs. Steele seemed kind, but she looked dignified to Merrill.

It was Friday night and there were no lessons to be studied. The boys and girls sang college songs after dinner, Patsy playing the piano and Hamilton Trent his violin. Merrill would have enjoyed it all had she not felt strange and self-conscious. Patsy went to her room with her later to help her unpack, but even with her Merrill was constrained. After a while Patsy seemed to understand she would rather be alone and left her.

Merrill did her unpacking and lay down in bed, quiet but wakeful. Mrs. Steele tapped on her door and hoped she would be comfortable. Merrill tossed and turned, her throat growing hot and dry. At last she decided she must have a drink to cool it. She had seen a pitcher of ice water on the dining room sideboard. She would slip down and get a drink.

She went down stealthily and found the pitcher of water. Going upstairs again, she paused at the landing to get her bearings. Suddenly she heard voices and realized she was just outside some one's door. It must be the Steeles' room, for she could distinguish Mr. Steele's voice. She did not mean to listen, but heard her own name and paused involuntarily.

"She seems self-centered, this little Miss Merrill," she heard. "I dare say she was so sheltered and humored by her mother she never had a chance to knock the corners off. When she learns to live with and help people without any reference to Merrill Conway, she'll make good. I don't think she's weak; just unformed and undisciplined."

Merrill's cheeks burned in the darkness. Was she like that? Self-centered and self-conscious; that meant selfish. Her mother had never told her she was like that. She wanted her mother then. She crept back to bed and cried a little before she went to sleep.

But in the morning she realized that Mr. Steele had not meant in the least to be unkind. Perhaps she had been meant to hear those words because she needed them. She knew she very often was fretting about herself and her own needs, wondering if somebody was making a criticism about her, fearing she was not going to make a good impression, that she was not going to have time or money or comfort enough in certain specific cases, looking at self as if it must be catered to. She had not thought but that it was taking the right sort of care of herself. Suddenly she knew it was not.

She plunged into the work of the school-room, for she was fond of books. Gradually she fell into the routine of the household. There were few rules in this home-like school, but much honor. She could not help liking the young people, big Hamilton, bright Halford, girlish Patsy and studious Kathleen. She loved Hamilton's violin and by dint of courage consented to be his accompanist in the absence of Patsy.

But she never quite forgot the words she had heard. "If I'm like that, I'll conquer myself some day," she thought; "I'm going some time to absolutely forget Merrill Conway. When I've done it once, I'll know I've started fair."

"You're ever so much nicer than I thought you were at first," Patsy Connolly said to her one day frankly; "I thought you were stiff and queer, but you're not."

Merrill loved Patsy then. "I guess you're all teaching me not to be," she said.

Merrill learned to skate and slide that winter, besides going on long tramps. She grew to have more color, a better carriage and to be less self-conscious. Best of all, she was learning to find her real self through intercourse with the healthy, wholesome people around her.

One evening, it was March then, Merrill, coming from the school-room, paused at the living-room door because the group there looked so cheerful. Halford was glancing over the Rockston evening paper while Hamilton studied, and Patsy, at the piano, was running over the latest song. "I'm crazy for some music," Patsy was saying; "I'd give a heap tonight for a really good concert."

Halford answered quickly. "Same here, and say, there is a concert over in town which sounds good. If we could make up a party, I'd take a chance on seats." His voice was eager.

"Would you go, Merrill?" asked Patsy. "And Ham?"

They both agreed eagerly, if Mr. Steele had no objection. He offered none and the four rushed through a hasty toilet and just caught their car. It was a really fine concert as they all agreed.

At quarter past 9 Halford looked at his watch. "This is an intermission," he said. "It's just half through."

"Why, it's going to begin again right off," said Patsy, "or else the man is going to say something. He was, for he had mounted the platform and put up his hand for silence. "An important telegram has just come for a member of this audience," he said, "for Mr. Hamilton Trent."

There was a hush. Hamilton, suddenly pale, rose and took the telegram. As he read it, he looked helplessly at Merrill next him. She read the few significant words, "Your mother very ill. Come at once."

Merrill reached for her hat. "I'll pass it to the others," she whispered, and then we must slip out before the music begins."

Halford hunted up a time table and they found a train would leave at 10. They started for the station, Hamilton still looking dazed. "Do you know the western connections?" asked Halford. "I suppose it's too late to get a sleeper?"

They were silent, trying to think of other needs. When Merrill asked an impulsive question, they remembered the most important item of the journey. "Have you money enough with you?"

Hamilton's voice faltered. "I have but two dollars in change. What shall I do? I can't miss this train."

Halford was shaking his head. "I can't do much better. Here's what I have. Come into the station and help me count."

Patsy had fifty cents in her purse. While she helped the boys count, Merrill slipped away. When she came back she was holding something tight in her hand. "Take it, please, Ham," she said; "I always wear this little jewel bag and keep my money in it. There's forty dollars. That will take you through all right, won't it? And here's some silver I had in my other purse. Take it all. You may need more than you expect before you get through."

He was looking down at her. "But I don't know when I can get it back. I—"

"Please don't," she begged. "We're all just brothers and sisters at Sunshine Hall. I'm so glad I have it to help with."

"Here, shake hands," said Hamilton. "Thank you in words doesn't seem to mean anything."

"Here's the train," cried Patsy. They crowded around Hamilton and gripped his hands. Merrill felt tears in her eyes and brushed them aside. Hamilton stepped on board and was lost in the throng.

Merrill was really crying now softly. "It's almost like when my mother was so ill," she said.

They looked at one another. "God save Ham's mother for him," begged Patsy softly.

Perhaps Hal felt that he had had all the emotion he could stand. "Come on, girls," he said. "There's an East Rockston car. We'd better be getting home. Merrill, I guess I'll have to borrow some money from you, too. I gave Ham all I had."

Merrill grasped. "Why, I gave him all I had, too—everything."

They stared blankly at each other. The car stopped and then went on again. "We'll have to walk," said Patsy, but her voice was cherry, and she smiled at Merrill as to a comrade. "It's only five miles. It won't hurt us."

So they started out, and as they walked through the late moonlight evening none of them felt worried or fretted. In spite of the sadness, there had been sweetness about it, too.

When they reached home there were eager questions, for Hamilton had been beloved of them all. It was Mr. Steele who had sent the messenger to the concert hall. "And so you had to walk home," he said, "at 11 o'clock," but he was smiling as if he were well pleased with them all. "I don't believe you thought of yourselves so very much tonight."

The words lingered with Merrill when she was in her room. Why, no, she had not thought of herself at all, not the least bit; only of Hamilton and the desire to help him. She realized that the acts we do unconsciously show us where we are, and that her sympathies had widened and self narrowed since she came to Sunshine Hall. Realizing it, the last drop of bitterness her memory held of Mr. Steele's speech the night of her arrival vanished into nothingness.

"Oh, I'm so glad to know that I did forget myself," she thought; "that I've begun to look at myself straight and up at the girl God meant me to be. I'm going to keep on until everything I do—everything—is without reference to Merrill Conway."—M. S. Wonson, in Presbyterian Banner.

The Master's Voice.

In the still air music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty hides unseen;
To wake the music and the beauty, needs
The master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, touch us with Thy skillful hand—
Let not the music that is in us die;
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us: let not,
Hidden and lost, Thy form within us lie.

Spare not the stroke; do with us as Thou wilt,
Let there be naught unfurnished, broken, marred;
Complete Thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, O our God and Lord.

—Selected.

Another Lent.

Once more we are coming to the observance of the Lenten season, and, while we feel that experience has determined the main principles to guide us in getting the most good from the season, we also ask whether there may be changes and new ways of making use of the season for the best spiritual results. We cannot count, as a generation ago, upon a substantial number of devout people who will be in their places for the daily services. It may be that in some parishes less frequent services may be necessary, or changes in the hour of holding them, and in their character. We ought to be inventive and able to hold services which are adapted to the occupations of our people. A great many do not desire an address with the service of worship every day. There must be variety in the subjects presented, and a hearing may well be sought for the presentation of some subjects which are unlike the sermons on the Lord's day. We must feel the necessity of being interesting in subject and manner of presentation, not depending upon the faithful few who come from a sense of duty.

In many parishes it has been found possible in Lent to have a series of sketches of the lives of men and women who have been great servants of religion and of their generation. The lives of many missionaries and the lessons drawn from them have been stated with great advantage. People generally are interested in what is biographical, and it is well to let them know that there are saints in the latest generation as well as the first. No literature goes before missionary literature in interest and in giving us many lives of self-sacrifice which make an appeal to men and women in the strongest way. It is hard to go on year after year in a parish and keep fresh and interesting in preaching and lecturing and teaching, but it can be done, and Lent is a very good time in which to do it. It is a misfortune to have everything stereotyped so that people anticipate just what will be said. In one of his addresses, the Bishop of London read an extract from a letter of a soldier returned to his former parish. He wrote that he "found the parish church the same, dull, old place." There is a demand for what is interesting, for what makes an appeal in a new way, and Lent is a good time to learn what will interest and help people.

Lent finds people disposed to listen and the conditions favorable for teaching and learning. We need a great deal more teaching than we have. It is largely displayed by rhetorical discourse which pleases people, but does not edify. Every one who has charge of religious work should not bind himself too closely to old and familiar ways of using Lent, but should be ready to study carefully what is most likely to help his people and determine to be fresh and interesting in his appeal to them.—Newark Churchman.

Trust.

My home is not so great;
But open heart I keep.
The sorrows come to me,
That they may sleep.

The little bread I have
I share, and gladly pray
Tomorrow may give more,
To give away.

Yes, in the dark sometimes
The childish fear will haunt;
How long, how long, before
I die of want?

But all the bread I have
I share, and ever say,
Tomorrow shall bring more
To give away.

—Josephine Preston Peabody.

There is a touching story, told of a modern sculptor, who was found standing in front of his masterpiece, sunk in sad reverie; and when they asked him why he was so sad, "Because," he answered, "I am satisfied with it. I have embodied," he would say, "all that I can think or feel. There it is. And because there is no discord between what I dream and what I can do I feel that the limit of my growth is reached." Unless we saw an ideal far above us the actual would never approximate toward it. Therefore, dissatisfaction and unrest, born of the contrast between these two, are the very prerogative of man, by which he is marked off from the happy contentment of the brutes beneath him, and from the happy peacefulness of the angels of God. For the individual and for the species the condition of our progress is a distance beckoning us and a feeling that we have not already attained, neither are already perfect.—Alexander Maclaren.

"John," asked the teacher, "what is a synonym?"

"A synonym," said John, "is the word you use when you can't spell the other one."—Ex.

The Christ Who came of old to His own
As truly comes to them now;
When the faithful before His altar throne
With hearts believing bow—
Emmanuel, then and now.

—H. M. Kimball.

For the Young Folks

A Boy's Life.

It isn't the vict'ry that counts, boys;
It's the way you put up the fight;
It isn't the path that you go, boys,
As long as you travel it right.

It isn't the goal at the top, boys,
That counts when the journey is through;
But the fellows you've helped on the road, boys,
That tells in the balance for you.
—Post-Intelligencer.

The Eighth Answer.

"The eighth answer is the easiest of all," Jean Carston said emphatically.

Jean was spending the afternoon with Miss Margaret Upton, and they had been going over the weekly Bible lesson together. There were ten girls in Miss Margaret's Bible class at St. John's, and all of them loved their quiet, thoughtful teacher dearly. Impulsive Jean thought that she loved and understood Miss Margaret best, and she had been delighted when her teacher had asked her to spend the afternoon with her. Jean seldom saw Miss Margaret alone and she was glad of the opportunity it gave her to talk freely to her friend.

The Bible lesson was a review of the Ten Commandments, and Jean's ready memory had found no difficulties in the order and wording of the Decalogue. She had repeated the great sayings thoughtfully and correctly, and one by one she discussed the commandments with Miss Margaret.

Miss Margaret had smiled an odd little smile at some of Jean's interpretations, but at the girl's last words she had not smiled at all.

Watching her expression, Jean had asked, "Why, don't you think the eighth answer is the easiest, Miss Margaret? Surely, you never knew any one who stole?"

"Surely I have," came the quiet answer. "I once knew a bank cashier who embezzled and came near ruining a whole town, and—"

"But that was only one person in your whole lifetime," argued Jean. "Ordinarily one simply doesn't know any one who steals, and, of course," she added, smiling, "one doesn't steal one's self."

And still Miss Margaret's quiet eyes said much, and her quiet lips said nothing.

"I wish you would tell me what you are thinking about," Jean said impulsively.

"I wasn't thinking about the bank cashier," smiled Miss Margaret. "He and his sins were buried long ago." She looked hard at Jean. "I believe I will tell you what I am thinking about," she said. "It's like a story, and maybe I can make you see it. It is what I often think about when I say the eighth answer."

"Oh, please tell me," begged Jean, as she curled herself up in the Morris chair and gazed at the leaping hearthfire.

"My story happened years and years ago," Miss Margaret began. "It is about a group of girls who attended a high school in a town a very long way from here.

"It seems as if I could see them now—there was Gertrude, a quiet girl, with a very fine mind and a keen sense of humor; and there was her chum, little dimpled Adelaide, whom every one loved. There was Mary, the blonde beauty, and Pauline, who was so vivid that every one forgot her freckled nose. There were all these, and one other, a girl who had come from far away, a city girl. We all admired her greatly. I say we, for I might as well tell you now that I was one of those high school girls.

"We all thought there was no one like Daphne Dalton, and I am sorry to say Daphne shared our opinion, although she was far too clever to let us realize it. Daphne's dainty clothes, her pretty face, and her bright ways captivated us. She led, and we were only too glad to follow. Life at the old high school had always been a pleasure; with Daphne there it promised to be a joy."

Miss Margaret paused and Jean begged her to go on. "I'm so interested," she said. "Daphne is fascinating."

"So she seemed to us," said Miss Margaret, "but gradually, as the winter wore on, we were surprised to find that our favorite was not every one's favorite. Daphne's teachers treated her with consideration; but it puzzled us because they seemed to find nothing remarkable in her.

"It was my brother, Ted, who first showed me where I stood. I had quoted one of Daphne's sayings. I thought everything she said at that time was clever. I see now that the cleverness was all overlaid with sharp backbiting. Ted listened, then he talked to me in a way that made my cheeks hot, and made my mind whirl.

" 'Before I'd believe everything that Dalton girl said!' he scoffed. 'She's bright, but we fellows all consider her very disagreeable because she's so personal. Everything she says has a horrid little sting at the end of it. She laughs at people, not with them. I'm sorry to be saying these things about your friend. It seems horrid of me, I'll admit. I wouldn't speak if it were not for one thing, and that is that all you girls, who used to be so jolly and frank and friendly, are getting like Daphne. You laugh at little personal things that aren't really funny, and you can't praise any one whole-heartedly because you've grown to be critical. You say, "Yes, but—"whenever you hear any one praised, and the but is always something disagreeable. You have all set out to pick little flaws in people. Sometimes the flaws are there, and usually they are not. I don't know what you call that sort of thing, that I call it plain stealing!'

" 'Stealing!' I repeated, quite shocked.

" 'Yes, stealing!' Ted insisted, 'detracting from other people's happiness and peace of mind and popularity.'

" 'Ted!' I said reproachfully, but even as I spoke I knew he was right.

"I decided not to speak to the other girls, but just to try to turn the conversation to something pleasant and kind when it tended to become sharp and sarcastic. You have no idea, Jean, how difficult I found my self-imposed task. The habit of critical and unkind speech had taken deep hold of our little group. No one seemed to be safe from the little barbed words we had not realized could hurt any one. Now that Ted had showed me what we were doing I realized that gradually we had included all our elders and betters among our targets. Our teachers were often criticized, and even our dear, saintly old pastor did not entirely escape our cruel little remarks. I noticed that the girls always laughed when critical thrusts were made, but I don't think they really enjoyed them much. As a group we were growing to have discontented faces. Little curves of unkindness had set themselves about our lips.

"The winter was only half over when Ted showed me what was happening, and during the weeks I tried to counteract Daphne's influence I was most unhappy. The girls paid very little heed to me, and Daphne showed plainly that she did not like me. I think she realized that I did not now approve of her as I had done earlier in the year. Things wore on in a kind of weary way, and then at last the crisis came.

"The time for the election of teachers for the next year had come, and soon the Board of Directors would meet and make their choice. We students had never thought we had anything to do with choosing our instructors. That had always been the School Board's affair, but this year, quite suddenly, there sprung up a feeling of opposition to our dear principal, Professor Manley, who had served us faithfully for five years.

"The students were taking bitter sides and rival petitions were drawn up and presented to the School Board. Ted and I were very angry, for we knew now where all the trouble had started. Professor Manley had not passed Daphne in her mid-year English examination, and she had been deeply offended. I saw that Ted was right, entirely so, in his idea of stealing. If Daphne should take Professor Manley's position from him by her unkind speeches it would be stealing.

"Ted and I talked a great deal, then. We had only talked to each other before. We met with a great deal of opposition, but, fortunately, there were others who saw things as we did. Finally, every one did, and dear Professor Manley was re-elected by a majority vote. Those were anxious times, however, and Ted and I never forgot them. It seemed quite sad that no one could be sorry when Daphne decided to go to boarding-school."

Jean knew that Miss Margaret was garet as she finished. "I think you were perfectly splendid," she said. "It's a remarkable story."

"I did very little," said Miss Margaret, "very little, indeed. It was Ted who scored—as he always has."

Jean kenw that Miss Margaret was thinking of her brother, now a clergyman.

Jean did not speak again for some time. She sat looking quietly into the fire. "Miss Margaret," she asked at last, "did you ever hear what became of Daphne Dalton?"

"Something very unpleasant and unusual, too. Daphne got herself into a court trial for slander, and was convicted. She had to pay a great deal of money to settle the case, and I hope she learned that the law is on the side of the kindly word and action!"

"How perfectly terrible!" said Jean. "You certainly have given me a new idea of the eighth answer, Miss Margaret."

"We can't be too careful in making any of the answers," said Miss Margaret, smiling.—Frances Kirkland, in the Young Churchman.

Who Pushed the Boat Off?

It was the delightful moment after the tea party that had honored Mary Ellen's fourth birthday. Eight children, of almost as many sizes, had romped and feasted; and now, when Uncle Don suddenly appeared around the corner, the same thought popped into eight little heads.

"A story!" they cried. "Please tell us a story."

"An animal story," added the boys.

"'Nanimal story, echoed Mary Ellen from her perch upon Uncle Don's shoulder, "about 'nelephants."

Although there had been a panther-tiger-crocodile gleam in the boys' eyes, it was generally agreed that this was Mary Ellen's day and her time to choose. So the big Uncle Missionary Man began:

"Far away in the upper part of India is a country called Burma, a land of wonders. And way up in the northern part of Burma is a big town called Bhamo. The river that flows by the town down to the sea is called by the funny name of Irrawaddy, and is filled with boats going down to the great port of Rangoon and back. Some of them carry passengers and queer traveling bazaars, and some of them are loaded with great cargoes of rice.

"One day a great boat was getting ready to start from Bhamo for Rangoon, filled with tons of rice to be shipped all over the world. By and by everything was ready, and the captain gave the order. But for some reason the boat didn't start. The engineer, all the crew, and all the machinery seemed to be of no use. The boat had become stuck in the soft oozy mud that is constantly forming on the Irrawaddy shores. In vain the captain shouted and the engine snorted and the crew tugged with great ropes and beams. The big boat would not go.

"At last a happy thought struck the captain. 'Send for the elephants,' he commanded. And so they sent for the big government elephants to come and push the boat off."

"Can nelephants push boats off?" asked Mary Ellen in wonder.

"They can when they are trained, Midge," volunteered Lester importantly. "They have trained elephants in the animal show that can do 'most anything."

"And of course they are wonderfully strong," continued Uncle Don. "The government catches and trains wild elephants to do nearly all the heavy work over there. So when the four huge elephants heard the signal, down the hill they padded on their great cushioned feet, follow-your-leader fashion. It seemed, to look at them, as if they could just pick that big boat up in their trunks and send her floating down the river, they were so big and strong.

"Well, at the word of command, the big four lined up alongside the boat and began to push. They braced their feet and pushed with their foreheads. On each forehead was a padded cushion, which made it easier to push against the hard side of the boat. 'Push!' cried the elephant trainer, and they pushed till the great muscles stood out on their necks. But the boat would not budge. 'Push!' cried the captain again. But the boat still stuck there in the mud. What was to be done?

"Now up on the hill little Sin Galay, the baby elephant, was watching his mother straining with all her might, side by side with the other elephants. You know, if anything happens to a baby elephant when he is with his mother, not only does she stop to help him, but every other elephant will stop his work and go to help, no matter where. This hinders the work so much that little Sin Galay was left behind when the four big elephants were called down to the river.

"But when he saw his mother there working so hard, and the muscles all standing out on her neck, it was too much for little Sin Galay. Down the hill he padded his little pink and black self, and lined up close by the side of his mother. Then, although he had no cushion on his little forehead, he stretched his neck out and began to push, too. He pushed and pushed, till the muscles on his neck stood out with the effort. All the men and boys stood by laughing. But just then a wonderful thing happened. Slowly, so slowly you could scarcely see it, the great boat began to movev. Yes, now she was surely moving.

"'Once more!' cried the captain, and with a mighty effort the elephants pushed, till the boat at last swung out and steamed with her cargo down the river.

"And now there's just one question I'm going to ask, and the one who answers it right chooses the next story. 'Who pushed the boat off?'"

"Why, the four trained elephants," shouted the boys together.

"The baby nelephant," cried Mary Ellen. "The baby did it!"

"I think they all did it, the big elephants and the baby Sin Galay," said Margie thoughtfully.

"Margie wins," replied Uncle Don. "The captain and the crew and most of the bystanders all agreed that little Sin Galay's wee bit of help may have been just the little bit needed. Or else his proud mother may have worked just a little harder when she saw her baby helping, too. Anyway, Sin Galay got his full share of credit and a bath and scrubbing down with the others. And you know it takes us all, big folks and little folks together, to do this old world's work, even a little lady just four years old," he laughed, tossing Mary Ellen up four times and one to grow on.

After the last little guest had gone Margie said, "I think I'll help mother dry the dishes." "Me, too!" cried Mary Ellen. Whereupon the boys sprang to the task of clearing up the lawn, and putting away chairs and playthings.

That evening mother said to father: "That was the very easiest birthday party I've ever given. Every one helped so well, especially at the end, when the children are usually so tired."

Bob glanced over at Uncle Don, who was cutting the leaves of a new book. "I guess you may thank Uncle Don and Sin Galay for that, mother," he said.

"Bless the boy," laughed his uncle, "what had we to do with it?"—R. W. Tobias, in Sunday School Times.

Seventeen people were needed to carry a missionary offering recently made by an African station. Currency, always scarce in Africa, is even scarcer since the war, so the people made up their gift from eggs, palm kernels, oil and peanuts.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street

Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen

Prompt and Reliable Service

To abort a cold and prevent complications take

Calotabs

The purified and refined calomel tablets that are nauseless, safe and sure.

Medicinal virtues retained and improved. Sold only in sealed packages. Price 35c.

A Nursery Echo.

"Mother," said George, "we had a nice time yesterday afternoon at Uncle John's. Do you know that there is an echo behind the barn? I wish we had one here."

"Well, so we have," said mother. "This house is full of echoes."

"It is?" said George. "Where must I stand to make my voice come back to me?"

"Anywhere you choose; but I think the nursery is the best place."

Off ran George, delighted; but as he entered the room he saw that Baby Ned had possession of his new kite and was proceeding to fly it. "Put that kite down," he cried angrily. "You will break it to pieces, you bad boy!"

"Bad boy, bad boy!" shouted the baby.

And mother entered the nursery just in time to prevent a serious difficulty. "I think you found your echo sooner than you expected," she said soberly when peace was restored.

George hung his head. "Oh, is that what you mean, mother?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied; "that is what I mean. Just as the echo behind the barn sent back the very tones of your voice, so your little brother and sister reflect back your tones and manner. I think that if you will remember this it will make you very careful how you speak."

Later in the day George was playing stage-coach with the little children, and with his shouting and his trumpet setting the nurse almost crazy. "I wish," she cried out angrily, "that you would go downstairs. You are such a noisy, horrid boy!"

"You are a horrid old thing yourself," he shouted back. And then suddenly he began to laugh. "Why," he said, "I was an echo myself that time." And as his mother came in just then, they had another talk about echoes, and both George and the nurse determined to try to make some pleasant ones before the day was over.

When Baby Ned's supper came upstairs he was cross and would not drink his milk, and said that his bread was "sour."

"George," said mother, "now is your chance." And George ran into the room and was so funny and bright with the baby that in a few moments he was in high humor, and as mother listened, she could not tell which was the laugh and which was the echo.—Parish Visitor.

The Box in Which the Smiles Are Kept.

"If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would like to gather them, every one,
From nursery, school and street.
Then, folding and holding, I'd pack them in,
And turning the monster key,
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deep, deep sea."

"If I knew the box where the smiles are kept,
No matter how large the key,
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard
'Twould open, I know, for me.
Then over the land and over the sea,
broadcast,
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day."

A School for the Blind in India.

Not every one knows of the good work done in our Mission School for the Blind at Rentichintala, India. Mrs. R. M. Dunkelberger has been in charge of it since 1914. It was started as a private enterprise by Mrs. Albrecht, but now is a regular part of the mission. There is both an educational and industrial department. Thirty dollars supports a pupil for a year.

A Japanese "boy" came to the home of a minister in Los Angeles recently and applied for a position. Now it happened that the household was already well supplied with servants, so the minister's wife said, "I am sorry, but we really haven't enough work to keep another 'boy' busy." "Madame," said the Oriental politely, "I am sure that you must have. You may not know what a little bit of work it takes to keep me employed."—World Outlook.

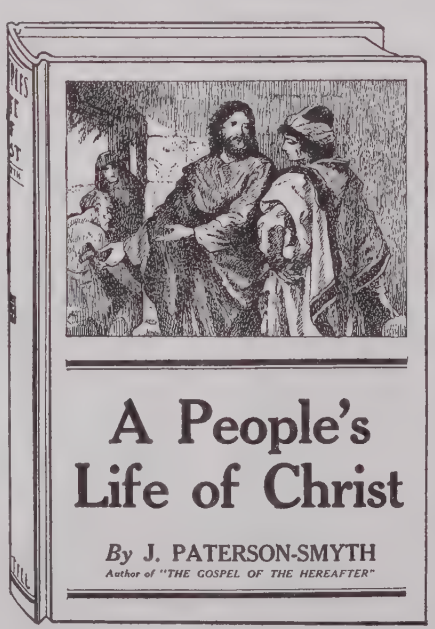
R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.

Leading Fancy Grocer

AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S
SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE

Special attention given to out-of-town orders.

Catalogue mailed on application.



HAVE YOU READ

PATERSON-SMYTH'S GREAT LIFE OF CHRIST

Author of the Popular Work, "The Gospel of the Hereafter"

¶The world has seen many "Lives" of our Lord since Farrar wrote his famous "Life of Christ."

Every new age requires a new interpretation written in the light of latest research. Here is the new popular version for this day and generation, an everybody's life of Christ, which the ordinary man may read for the sheer pleasure of reading it, and which enables him to put himself in the place of one who has seen and known the Lord in the flesh.

A Handsome Gift Volume
ONLY $3.50 NET

¶Bishop Charles Fiske writes: "Have just read it . . . Tells the old, old story in a modern way, every chapter a vivid picture; the brief history of the Great Life told with the skill and interest of present-day biography. Ought to be as popular in our day as Farrar's was in his. The story is so told as to meet present-day needs: the hunger, so keenly felt since the war, for some definite knowledge of the unseen world; the social implications of the Gospel; a clear and definite answer to the question, 'What is God like?' "

ORDER AT ONCE! Only a limited quantity available for Southern Churchman readers

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

Enclosed please find.....for which please send me by return mail .....copies of A PEOPLE'S LIFE OF CHRIST, by J. Paterson-Smyth.

Name.....

Address.....

BEVERLEY HEATING
Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL
OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

Comfort Baby's Skin With Cuticura Soap And Fragrant Talcum
For sample Cuticura Talcum, a fascinating fragrance, Address Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

RESERVATIONS FOR EUROPE
NEXT SPRING AND SUMMER
Should be made early in order to secure good space
Telephone Randolph 155, or Write
C. O. ALLEY
STEAMSHIP AND TOURIST AGENT
830 East Main Street Successor to The Richmond Transfer Co.

You Will

be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company
The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.
Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage
Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 845

HERBERT L. CAIN CHURCH ARCHITECT
12 North Ninth Street, -:- Richmond, Va.
The Needs of the Sunday School, the Law of the Architect
Address Dept. 4

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.

The Archdeaconry of Reading held its winter session at Trinity Church, Pottsville (the Ven. H. W. Diller, rector), on Tuesday and Wednesday, January 11 and 12. The opening service, at which the Rev. William C. Emhardt preached the sermon, was followed by a smoker. Ten-minute addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. William B. Guion, J. P. Briggs, Arthur D. Appleton, James B. May and William DuHamel. Dr. Anthony, of Wayne, conducted the Quiet Hour at noon. A proposed canon re-erecting the Archdeaconries which were inadvvertently wiped out at the last Diocesan Convention evoked spirited discussion.

Four Church School Institutes were held under the auspices of the Department of Religious Education on January 18, 19, 20 and 21, at Trinity Church, Carbondale (the Rev. E. G. N. Holmes, rector); St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre (the Rev. F. W. Sterrett, rector); St. Mary's Church, Reading (the Rev. W. R. Wood, rector), and St. Peter's Church, Hazleton (the Rev. A. E. Clattenburg), respectively. The same program was followed at all the institutes. The Rev. J. L. Ware discussed the answers to a questionnaire he had sent out. Miss Helen I. Jennings, provincial secretary, discussed "A Practical Method of Teacher Training for the Diocesan Church Schools." The Rev. Dr. Caley led a discussion on "The Master Teacher." Various clergymen discussed the Sunday school as a parish problem. Miss Jennings spoke on "How Our Diocesan Schools May Be Built Up." Dr. Caley spoke on "The Vital Importance of the Sunday School."

W. M.

(Continued on page 21)

"The Store that Pleases"
FOR FURNITURE
Jones Bros. & Co.
Incorporated
1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

Jno. L. Williams & Sons
BANKERS and BROKERS
Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

☞ Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

FAMINE RELIEF.

For the convenience of our readers we publish the addresses of the treasurers of the various Relief Funds whose appeals for the starving, and especially for starving children, are so urgent and touching. The Southern Churchman will forward contributions to any of these, but to save time, postage and possibility of miscarriage, checks would better be sent directly to the treasurers as below:

Near East Relief (formerly "Armenian and Syrian Relief")—Cleaveland H. Dodge, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City.

European Relief (Central and Eastern Europe)—Franklin K. Lane, 42 Broadway, New York City; or locally for Virginia, DeSoto Fitzgerald, 218 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Chinese Famine Relief—Remit through Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

We acknowledge the following additional contributions to the fund for the relief of the sufferers from famine in China:

Mrs. Wickham, Lorraine, Va.	$10.00
Mrs. M. B. Johnston, Dublin, Va.	5.00
Miss Ethel D. Boston, Frederick's Hall, Va.	3.00
Deaconess, Christiansburg, Va.	10.00
Mrs. E. J. Richardson, Christiansburg, Va.	5.00
Mrs. R. Galbraith, Kerrsville, Tex.	10.00
Mrs. W. T. Yancey, Woodville, Va.	5.00
Mrs. R. B. Lawson, Jr, Bluemont, Va	5.00

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va., nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate. Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches. rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES. $1.50. $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

MISS M. M. TYLER, EXCLUSIVE MILLINERY. Now located at 209 North Foushee (Arcade Building), where she will be glad to have her customers call and inspect her mid-winter offerings. All $15 Hats at $5.00 to 7.00. All $10.00 Hats at $3.98.

I take this method of thanking my many clients for their past patronage, and assure them I am still selling Spirella corsets, and can be reached at the Wallerstein, Apartment 202, or by phone, Randolph 3694-W. MISS MYRTLE McDONNELL.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

FOR SALE—BRUNSWICK RECORD. NO. 5006, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere, $1.00: No. 5017, Abide With Me, $1.00; both double-faced ten-inch records. Brunswick Records play on all steel needle machines. Phone your orders in. Rowlett Phonograph Co., 416 West Broad Street. Mad. 215.

ORDERS FOR HAND KNIT SWEATERS, Scarfs, Golf Socks. For information write M. C. Catlin, Sweet Springs, W. Va.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

HELP WANTED

WANTED — CONSECRATED CHURCHwoman, preferably a Southern woman between thirty and fifty years of age, to act as matron of Home for Wayward Girls. Must start on small salary. References required. Write to B-1426 Blanding St., Columbia, S. C.

HOUSEKEEPER OR MOTHER'S HELPer. Competent to supervise care of three small children and oversee three servants. Permanent position; good home. Give age, education, experience and salary expected in first letter. Address P. O. Box 919, Greensboro, N. C.

WANTED A WORKING HOUSEKEEPER for small family, no small children. Family located at Roland Park, Baltimore, Md. Apply to George A. Whiting, 1214 Continental Trust Building, Baltimore, Md.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER DESIRES A position to teach English, French and music. References given and required. Address Miss Randolph, Arrington, Va.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Brown: Entered into life eternal in Charles Town, W. Va., on January 26, 1921, SARAH HAMMOND BROWN, daughter of the late Robert T. and Margaretta Brown.

"Faith's journeys end in welcome to the weary."

Williamson: Entered into rest from the Mercy Hospital, Baltimore, January 16th, ROBERT BURWELL WILLIAMSON, of Graham, Va., in his fifty-first year. He was the son of the late Thomas Williamson, of Lexington, and Sally Burwell Nelson, of Clark County, Va., and grandson of the late General Thomas H. Williamson, of the Virginia Military Institute.

He is survived by his wife, formerly Mona Killey, of Vivian, W. Va., and by six children, also by two brothers, Thomas Nelson and William Garnett Williamson.

"There the Lord commanded His blessing, even life forevermore."

NANNIE RANDOLPH HETH.

Entered into life eternal on January 10th at her residence in Washington, D. C., NANNIE RANDOLPH HETH, daughter of General Harry Heth and Harriet Selden. She was buried in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, Va. Her early days were spent in a beautiful home on the James River, and the rest of her noble life in Washington, D. C.

Nannie Randolph Heth was a member of many organizations, the Colonial Dames, Daughters of the American Revolution, Daughters of the Confederacy, and for eighteen years president of the Southern Relief Society. An earnest, devout Churchwoman, she bore her many sorrows and burdens with bravery and sweetness, and an unfailing trust in God.

We her friends will miss beyond all telling her love and unfailing devotion.

"He bade her rest for a season,
For the pathway had grown too steep,
And folded in fair green pastures,
He giveth His loved one sleep."
—T. L. T.

"Hee professed alwayes to love and seeke Peace: and it was his usuall Preface in his Treaties, that when Christ came into the world, Peace was sung, and when Hee went out of the world, Peace was bequeathed."—Bacon's Henry VII.

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING

Mail Orders a Specialty

Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL

311 North Second Street

Phone Randolph 1286-W

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes

THE CORRECTOR

And

EMERSON LASTS

A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special

at $7.25

Send us your size

Woodall & Quarles

7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va.
STORAGE AND TRANSFER.
JUST RECEIVED
A new supply of
"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR."
By Bowie.
Price $1.25 Postpaid.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.

The Bishop and Chapter will have charge of the affairs of the Diocese of Southern Ohio in the future in all departments, replacing the Cathedral Chapter, which acted as a Board of Diocesan Missions only, and lining up the Diocese with the Presiding Bishop and Council idea of the General Church.

This was the principal business of the forty-seventh annual convention of the Diocese of Southern Ohio held at Trinity Church, Columbus, January 25 and 26.

As first proposed, the Chapter was to consist of six presbyters, eight laymen and four women, but by a vote of 97 to 14, the women were omitted, and the presbyters increased to eight and the laymen to ten.

The new Chapter organized immediately with the following as heads of the several departments: Missions and Church Extension, the Rev. Frederick L. Flinchbaugh, D. D.; Board of Strategy, the Rev. Frank H. Nelson, D. D.; Education, Professor W. T. Magruder; Social Service, the Rev. E. S. Chauncey; Nation-Wide Campaign, the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer.

The new Chapter is composed as follows: The Rev. Messrs. C. E. Byrer, Frank H. Nelson, B. H. Reinheimer, Sidney E. Sweet, E. F. Chauncey, E. A. Powell, L. P. Franklin, F. L. Flinchbaugh, and the Very Rev. Dean S. B. Purves, ex-officio; Messrs. W. O. Frohook, Mortimer Matthews, Gideon C. Wilson, W. T. Magruder, A. W. Schell, J. B. McGrew, Roderick Jones, H. R. Mather, A. S. Matchette, George Wood.

The Standing Committee is the Rev Messrs. C. E. Byrer, Frank H. Nelson, S. B. Purves, and Messrs. W. O. Frohook, D. S. Sowers and Mortimer Matthews.

The address of the Bishop-Coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., contained this sentence: "In no parish where the Nation-Wide Campaign is in complete operation is there any internal dissension. It is destructive of personal and parochial selfishness." Bishop Reese urged the Church in the Diocese to take a stand against race hatred, religious hatred and prejudice, as shown in antagonism to the Jew and those of other Christian beliefs. Such hatred and prejudice is a sin against God, un-American and un-Christian.

The thirty-second anniversary of Bishop Vincent's consecration was made the subject of felicitation and marked by the presentation to that venerable father in God, of a beautiful floral tribute.

The House of Church Women of the Diocese met simultaneously with the convention, taking up the subject of the work of the Girls' Friendly Society, the Church Mission of Help, Church Service League and the Nation-Wide Campaign.

The house joined with the convention in listening to the annual addresses of the Bishop and Bishop-Coadjutor, in a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion, and in a closing inspirational service at which the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., President of the General Council of the Church, spoke on the Nation-Wide Campaign, and the Rev. Norman Burdett Nash, of Cambridge Theological School, on recruiting for the Christian ministry.

The new Chapter has offered to the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, rector of Christ Church, Dayton, whose splendid work in organizing the Nation-Wide Campaign in the Diocese, is universally and gratefully recognized, the important position of Executive Secretary. Mr. Reinheimer has taken the office under advisement.

C. G. R.

PITTSBURGH

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

Interesting Meeting of Annual Convention.

The fifty-sixth annual convention of the Diocese, held in Christ Church, Allegheny, Pittsburgh (the Rev. F. Orr Johnson, rector), beginning on the evening of the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, was devoted entirely to Diocese routine, with full and interesting reports from the several committees and institutions.

In the Bishop's address delivered at the opening service emphasis was given to the falling off of candidates for the ministry, and earnest appeal made that the matter be kept urgently before the people. He further deplored the failuse of the last convention to provide the need for a Bishop-Coadjutor and expressed the conviction that the need was even greater at this time.

In the organizing of the convention the Rev. George W. Lamb was again elected secretary, and the usual committee appointed.

A resolution was adopted admitting deputies from all parishes to seats and votes in this convention, regardless of unpaid assessments, though not remitting the balance.

Reports of the Missionary Commit-

You Can Send Your Boy or Girl to Any College in This State

At but small sacrifice to yourself through our "COLLEGE PLAN"

Ask or write for booklet

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK

Tenth and Main

"The Bank with the Three Doors of Opportunity"

EASY, PLEASANT, PROFITABLE

Others Find It So, Why Not You?

Here is your chance. If you have an hour or two a week to spare you can turn every minute of it into money by taking orders for subscriptions to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, the oldest Episcopal church paper published in America; endorsed by Bishops and Clergy, and by churchmen everywhere. Every dollar raised by subscription to be devoted to the betterment of the paper.

Liberal commission paid on each order and a generous bonus on your production.

JUST CLIP AND MAIL THIS COUPON

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,

815 E. Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen: Please send me full details about your offer to subscription representatives.

Name..... Town.....

Street, or R. F. D..... State.....

tee and Board of Trustees for the Diocese showed in the former increasing activity, and in the latter a gratifying condition of the funds, so much so as to justify a reduction in assessments for the current year. Three changes were made with regard to the Missionary Committee, to bring it more in line with the organization of the General Church. Its name was changed from "Missionary Committee" to "Executive Council." Its number was increased by the election of three additional laymen, so that now it consists of six clergymen and nine laymen, together with the Bishop Administrative Secretary and Archdeacon. The title of the Archdeacon was changed to that of Field Secretary.

The report of the Woman's Auxiliary showed great activity and increase of work and gifts in every line of endeavor. The Thank Offering goal is set at $10,000, of which $2,500 is in hand, from the first year's ingatherings.

A proposed change in the constitution offered in last convention was ratified, giving representation in the convention by one deputy, to missions recommended by the Missionary Committee.

The salary of the Bishop was increased to $10,000.

The elections include:

Chancellor, Mr. George C. Burgwin, Pittsburgh; Registrar, the Rev. T. J. Bigham, Pittsburgh; Standing Committee, the Rev. Drs. Hills, Howell, Shero, and the Rev. Mr. Van Etten; and Messrs. T. J. Danner, N. P. Hyndman, H. H. McClintic and C. S. Shoemaker.

Executive Council (three-year term) —The Rev. Messrs. C. C. Durkee and F. Orr Johnson; Messrs. George P. Rhodes, Alan R. Wells, H. Lee Mason, Jr.; (two years) Edward Snodgrass, Jr.; (one year) V. L. P. Shriver.

Deputies to Provincial Synod—The Rev. Messrs. Thomas J. Bigham, F. Orr Johnson, Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., and Homer A. Flint, Ph. D.; and Messrs. Harvey H. Smith, Alan R. Wells, Marcellin C. Adams and Randall T. Van Pelt.

Invitations for the convention of 1922 were received from St. Paul's Church, Kittanning, and Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, the decision to be made later by the Bishop and Standing Committee.

J. C.

ERIE.

The Convention.

The eleventh annual convention convened in the Chapter House of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul on Tuesday, January 25. The Archdeacon of Meadville, the Ven. Martin Aigner, D. D., was elected president of the convention, and the Rev. Albert Broadhurst, secretary.

The Standing Committee of last year was re-elected by unanimous consent. Deputies to Provincial Synod are the Rev. Messrs. E. J. Owen, Martin Aigner, D. D., J. E. Reilly, D. D., William I. Reynolds, Messrs. E. V. D. Seldon, J. W. Johnson, C. F. Mackey, H. E. Vosburg, Sr. The proposed change in Canon VII to admit the new order of Bishop and Council was postponed until after the election of the new Bishop. The reports of the Standing Committee, the Treasurer of the Diocese, the Board of Trustees, the Archdeacons, the Committee on Canons, the Executive Missionary Board, the Nation-Wide Campaign, the Board of Religious Education, and many others

Unwise Handling of Money

There are still some people who either thoughtlessly or deliberately keep their money in secret places of their own, trying to protect it themselves instead of keeping it where money belongs, namely, in a strong bank.

The National State and City Bank—for over half a century a progressive Bank of the South—invites your accounts, small or large.

National State and City Bank

1111 E. Main Street, - - Richmond, Va.

Have You Made Your Will?

See G. Jeter Jones, Vice-President, about this now. All conferences confidential. Phone or write for appointment.

Merchants National Bank

11th and Main Streets, Richmond, Va.

"SAFEST FOR TRUSTS"

CHURCH PEWS

PULPIT FURNITURE

SUNDAY SCHOOL CHAIRS, BLACKBOARDS, ETC.

Virginia School Supply Company

2010-12 West Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

FOR QUICK SERVICE CALL RANDOLPH 1978-W

We Clean One Small Rug Free as a Trial

Electric Carpet Cleaning Co.

W. F. POAT

16 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Carpets and Rugs Washed and Dried right on the floor!

Hamilton Beach method used exclusively—the nationally advertised way.

Called For and Delivered

were heard and properly disposed of by the convention.

On the second day of the convention Bishop Harding gave a beautiful tribute to the late Bishop Israel. During the two days' sessions a special Diocesan Committee and the Standing Committee both added their just and righteous acknowledgements of Bishop Israel's work and worth.

The G. F. S. representative from New York gave a brief but telling account of that society's great work, and why it should be kept up and added to. The new General Missionary and leader of the Nation-Wide Campaign in this Diocese, the Rev. A. W. S. Garden, gave an address that attracted his hearers. A great deal of business was done during this convention, and the spirit during the sessions was especially kindly.

Two weeks after Easter a convention will meet to elect the Second Bishop of Erie.

R. S. R.

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS

Highest grade instruments. In use in three thous. and churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is to be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.

M. P. MÖLLER

Hagerstown, Maryland

CHURCH VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Surplices, Stoles

EMBROIDERIES

Silks, Cloths, Fringes

CLERICAL SUITS

Rabats, Collars, Shirts

COX SONS & VINING

72 Madison Avenue New York

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

Gold, Silver and Brass

Church and Chancel Furniture

Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches

W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.

803 Third Street. Milwaukee, Wis

O. Luetke's Art Works

Church Furnishings

IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.

Est. 1886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street

Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd

Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South

We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival

The Couper Marble Works

(Established 65 years)

264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.

Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent

E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend

PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN

Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.

With an Introduction by

THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS, and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,

Richmond, Va.

50 Eggs a Day

Yes—fifty a day. How? Read the letter below.

"'More Eggs' Tonic is a Godsend," writes Mrs. Myrtle Ice, of Boston, Ky. She adds, "I was only getting 12 eggs a day and now I get 50." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs", the wonderful egg producer, and you will be amazed and delighted with results.

3 $1.00 Packages FREE

If you wish to try this great profit maker, simply write a post card or letter to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, and ask for his special $2.00 offer, three $1.00 packages Free. Don't send any money. Mr. Reefer will send you five $1.00 packages of "More Eggs." You pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the price of just two packages, the three extra packages being free. The Million Dollar Merchants Bank of Kansas City, Mo., guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your $2.00 will be returned at any time within 30 days—on request. No risk to you. Write today for this special free offer.

Poultry Raisers Everywhere Tell Wonderful Results of "More Eggs"

"More Eggs" Paid the Pastor

I can't express in words how much I have been benefited by "More Eggs." I have paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and that is not all—I paid my pastor his dues. I sold 42½ dozen eggs last week, set 4 dozen, ate some, and had 1½ dozen left.
MRS. LENA McBROON Woodbury, Tenn.

1200 Eggs from 29 Hens

The "More Eggs" Tonic did wonders for me. I had 29 hens when I got the tonic and was getting five or six eggs a day. April 1st I had over 1200 eggs. I never saw the equal.
EDW. MEKKER, Pontiac, Mich.

160 Hens—1500 Eggs

I have fed two boxes of "More Eggs" to my hens and I think they have broken the egg record. I have 160 White Leghorns and in exactly 21 days I got 125 dozen eggs.
MRS. H. M. PATTON, Waverly, Mo.

Send No Money!

Don't send any money; just fill in and mail coupon. You will be sent at once, five $1.00 packages of "MORE EGGS." Pay the postman upon delivery only $2.00, the three extra packages being FREE. Don't wait—take advantage of this free offer TODAY! Reap the BIG profits "MORE EGGS" will make for you. Have plenty of eggs to sell when the price is highest. Send TODAY—NOW!

3 $1.00 Pkgs. Free

E. J. Reefer, Poultry Expert, 6532 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Reefer:—I accept your offer. Send me the five $1.00 packages of Reefer's "More Eggs" for which I agree to pay the postman $2.00 when he brings me the five packages, the three extra packages being free. You agree to refund me $2.00 at any time within 30 days, if all five of these packages do not prove satisfactory in every way.

Name.....

Address.....

If you prefer, enclose $2.00 cash or money order, with this coupon. This brings your order sooner. C. O. D. packages sometimes take longer in the Post Office.

Personal Notes

The Rev. E. Nelson MaConomy, of St. Stephen's Church, Wyandotte, Mich., has accepted the call to Grace Church, Elkins, W. Va., and entered upon his rectorship the first of January. Mr. MaConomy is a young man of energy and ability. He has been rector of St. Stephen's Church for about four years, and previous to that was rector of one of the churches in the city of Detroit.

The Rev. W. A. Jonnard, chairman of the Board of Religious Education of Tennessee and rector of St. John's, Johnson City, has been offered the place of student chaplain at the University of Mississippi.

The Rev. George Cleveland has been transferred from Williamson to Ronceverte, W. Va., and the associate work. Mr. Cleveland will be located at Ronceverte and will have charge of the work at Lewisburg, Clover Lick and Marlinton.

The Rev. F. A. Van Sciver, a former Methodist minister, has been confirmed by Bishop Talbot and placed in charge of Christ Church, Forest City, Pa.

The Rev. Cyril E. Bentley, who resigned St. Luke's Church, Lincolnton, N. C., on January 1, is now Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Atlanta, with headquarters in St. Philip's Tower, Washington and East Hunter Streets, Atlanta, Ga., and should be addressed accordingly.

The Rev. J. Hindry-Harrison, of St. Ann's, Nashville, Tenn., just completed a successful healing mission in his parish.

The Rev. Ernest W. Foulkes, formerly at St. Paul's Church, Minersville, but recently of Christ Church, Rochdale, Mass., has become priest in charge of St. Mark's Church, New Milford, and Grace Church, Great Bend. Diocese of Bethlehem.

The Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., who received a call to the Seamen's Home and other work in Charleston, S. C., has finally decided to remain in his present work in Beaufort, N. C.

The Rev. W. Frank Allen, from the staff of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, becomes rector of Christ Church, Towanda, on February 1.

The Rev. Alfred M. Smith will be chaplain in charge of the religious services at the Inasmuch Mission, Philadelphia, these services now being held under the auspices of the City Mission of Philadelphia.

The Rev. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving should be addressed at 311 South Jackson Street, Jackson, Mich.

R. Geissler, Inc.
56 West Eighth Street, New York
Memorials
FOR THE CHURCH
Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address: THE PATHFINDER, 4007 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

The Richmond Mica Co.

Oldest Ground Mica Factory in the World

Manufacturers of

GROUND MICA OF UNSURPASSED PURITY AND LUSTRE

BY EXCLUSIVE PROCESS

Factory, 321-323 S. Ninth St.
Office, Cor. Eighth and Main Sts.
RICHMOND, VA.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

Southern Churchman

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 12, 1921. No. 7

Lent

Awhile in spirit, Lord, to Thee
Into the desert would we flee;
Awhile upon the barren steep
Our fast with Thee in spirit keep:

Awhile from Thy temptation learn
False Satan's wileful lures to spurn,
And in our hearts to feel and own
"Man liveth not by bread alone,"

O Thou once tempted like as we,
Thou knowest our infirmity;
Be Thou our helper in the strife,
Be Thou our true, our inward life.

And while at Thy command we pray
"Give us our bread from day to day,"
May we with Thee, O Christ, be fed,
Thou Word of God, Thou living Bread.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School
NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-third year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School
LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., RECTOR

ST. MARY'S, An Episcopal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

VIRGINIA, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten-acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate Catalogue and views.

B. D. TUCKER, D. D., President; REV. C. O. PRUDEN D. D., Rector: Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B. Sweet Briar, A. M. Columbia, Prin.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D..Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 3) cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There never was a heart homesick for heaven that heaven was not homesick for it.

Goodness is often very expensive, but the larger the investment the richer the returns.

"Suffering may be a rod to chastise; it may be a scepter to empower."

To be disinterested is to be strong, and the world is at the feet of Him whom it cannot tempt.—Amiel.

To know what is going on in the mission fields is a liberal education.—Mark Hopkins.

Patience may not be an attractive grace to the sufferer, but it comes in handy almost every day.

There is a difference between sitting before the fire and thinking about doing good, and going out in the cold and snow to do it.

"If you are on a railway train, your falling asleep will not hinder you from reaching your journey's end. If you are in Christ, you will pass into glory, even though you may do so in a state of insensibility."

The loyal acceptance of what may seem to us a lower alternative is often the first stage of some transcendant mission, and the perfect performance of insignificant duties may lead us very far into the spiritual life.—Illingworth.

Ah! little dream our listless eyes
What glorious presence they despise,
While, in our noon of life,
To power or fame we rudely press—
Christ is at hand to scorn or bless,
Christ suffers in our stead.
—Keble.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital
—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,
REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School
(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

The General Theological Seminary
CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL
CHARLES TOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Founded by Bishop Alonzo Potter in 1862.

Special students admitted. Privilege of attending course of special study at the University of Pennsylvania.

For information address the Rev. George G. Bartlett, S. T. D., Dean, 5000 Woodland Avenue.

Beware of making your moral staple consist of the negative virtues. It is good to abstain, and teach others to abstain, from all that is sinful or hurtful. But making a business of it leads to emaciation of character, unless one feeds largely also on the more nutritious diet of active, sympathetic benevolence.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

It is a strange fact that the human mind has always held to the immortality of the soul, and yet has always doubted it. . . . Were the belief not true, the doubt would long since have vanquished it, for nothing but truth can endure constant questioning.—Theodore Munger.

According to the old legend, it was only when it fell behind him, where he could not see it, that the saintly man's shadow healed the sick. This is a parable. Goodness which is aware of itself has lost much of its charm. Kindnesses which are done unconsciously mean the most.—Selected.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 12, 1921. No. 7

A BISHOP OF SOULS.

A few weeks ago a youngish man from another Diocese was conducting a mission in one of the chief cities of the Middle West. From the pulpit he looked down every night as he preached upon a man sitting in a chair specially placed for him at the head of the middle aisle. According to the record of the calendar, he would be counted an old man. He could not hear well, and that was why he sat so near. But that particular preacher had never in his whole experience felt the presence in the congregation of a spirit that seemed more eager to listen, and a soul more ready in the truest sense to hear.

The man in the chair was the Bishop of the Diocese. He had not come there as an observer. He had not come as an ecclesiastic merely to lend his sanction to what was going on. He came with that beautiful openness of soul which only a little child or a mature saint can possess. His whole presence radiated, not the caution and conservatism which one usually associates with age, but the enthusiastic sensitiveness of an imperishable youth. To have him there was an inspiration which no messenger could for an instant fail to be aware of. There was something in his look, and in the unconscious but emphatic movement of his head and hands, which brought the sense of a sure co-operation and an uplifting strength.

Outside the Church one had the same sense of his sympathy and a greater sense of his undimmed vigor. Active in body, strong in voice, luminous in mind, he gave one a new realization of the gracious power of an experienced leadership. His thoughts were not tied to the years that are gone. They touched with alert and imaginative sympathy all the needs and opportunities of today.

There are many who will guess who that Bishop is. When all Bishops are like him, the value of episcopacy will need no further argument.

SOMETHING TO BEWARE OF.

There has recently come to the Southern Churchman, and perhaps there has come to all the clergy of the Church, a little leaflet entitled "The Alliance Bulletin." It is the first issue of "The Official Organ of the Churchmen's Alliance." When one looks for a statement as to what this new organization may be, he finds the answer clearly set forth. It seems that in Lent, 1919, there was preached at St. Ignatius' Church, in New York, by the Rev. Dr. Jenks, a sermon "in which he pleaded for some organization of effort on the part of Catholic laymen throughout the American Church. The proposal was taken up with much energy by certain New York laymen, and after a careful canvass an organization was effected at a meeting held in New York City on October 10, 1919." The clergy, we are told, responded with an alacrity very gratifying to good Catholic minds. And the result has been the formation of various branches of this Alliance in different parts of the country. It is an organization primarily for laymen. It has created now a committee on propaganda, and the Bulletin is one of the means by which it is intended that this propaganda shall be set forth.

On the first page of the leaflet there is printed a summary of what the Churchmen's Alliance stands for. Here is part of that summary:

I.
Doctrine, Discipline and Worship.

1. The Faith of the undivided Church.
2. The Church's godly discipline as enforcing the law of Christ.
3. The Eucharist as the chief service on Sundays and Days of Obligation.

II.
The Seven Sacraments.

1. Baptism, with proper matter and form, as the Sacrament of Regeneration, necessary for the salvation of every man.
2. The Holy Eucharist, securing to the faithful—
(a) Christ, really present and ever to be adored, in the Sacrament.
(b) A true Sacrifice for the living and the dead.
(c) Jesus Christ Himself as the Food of eternal life.
3. Confirmation for the fulness of the Holy Spirit's Gifts, for all, and at an early age.
4. Penance, as the covenanted remedy for mortal sin committed after Baptism.
5. Holy Orders, for the creation of Ministers of Apostolic Succession, whose ministry is to be exercised in the Catholic Church.
6. Holy Matrimony, for the sanctifying of an indissoluble union between husband and wife.
7. Holy Unction, for the strengthening and healing of the bodies and souls of the faithful.

The president of the Alliance is Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff, of Philadelphia. Two of the vice-presidents are the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D. D., of Chicago, and the Rev. William H. Van Allen, D. D., of Boston.

It is, of course, the right of any organized group of men in the Church to further their ideas and set them forth by what straight-forward propaganda they will. It is the right of these gentlemen, and others of like mind, to further the principles which they espouse in their Alliance, and we admire the definiteness with which they set their principles forth. Undoubtedly there will be much pleasure in "Catholic" circles over this new organization, and plenty of "alacrity" in spreading its message.

On the other hand, no one will question the equal right of a Church paper to combat propaganda, however devoted be the motive of its sponsors, which we believe to be highly dangerous. This Churchmen's Alliance stands for the sort of rigid ecclesiasticism which would lie like a blight upon the widest human sympathies of this Church if ever it should become prevailing. It stands for a sacramentarianism which is mediaeval in its point of view. It stands for a sacerdotal conception of the ministry which we believe to be fundamentally out of touch with the mind of today, and which however it might have served in Italy and Spain, has no message for the spiritual imagination of America.

When we say these things, we are not speaking from theory alone. There have been sections of this country where that extreme point of view which calls itself Catholic has colored the life of our Church. It has had its way in the creation of Dioceses, in the election of Bishops, in the dictation of the whole spirit of the Church, from the minutest point of ritual out to the whole matter of its contact with other religious bodies and with the community in general. When one surveys the record of the Church in these "Catholic" Dioceses, it is certainly not such as to create any desire in the minds of people in general to see the rest of the Church patterned after the same stripe. This Church of ours in those sections remains a feeble thing—slow in growth and slight in influence. If the fundamental reason can be described in two words, those words perhaps might be those which were used in a recent article of the "Church Times" of England, when with proper Catholic sacerdotalism it spoke of the Church as "Christ's Monarchy." This sort of interpretation of the Church's meaning which thinks of it in the terms of "monarchy," which sets its priests apart from other people in jealous prerogative, and arrays its bishops in mitres and sets them on thrones, is repugnant to the spirit of the American people. The Churchmen's Alliance, in so far as it sets itself to represent this point of view, has no message for the spiritual democracy today, and the more plainly that be said, the better.

IS WOMANHOOD IN DANGER?

In a committee gathered together in an Eastern city a few days ago to consider certain community problems, a man who is thought of among his fellows as careful in observation and considerate in speech said this:

"I believe there never was a time when more men were living straight than there are today, and never a time when more women were going to the devil. We are beginning to get a single standard of morals, but we are getting it low instead of high."

That is a dismaying suggestion; but when it is made, there is no use hiding our heads like ostriches and refusing to look the matter in the face.

Is there a danger today that the modesty and sweetness of womanhood is being undermined?

Certainly there are some facts which point that way. There is a growing immodesty in the dress of young girls and even of older women, which sometimes descends in the clothes worn (or omitted) at dances to the level of indecency. There is at times a pandering to the sensuous so gross that it can hardly be unconscious; and the only explanation for which is that some girls—and their far more culpable mothers—have deliberately sacrificed a sweet and fine reserve in their bold appeal for "popularity."

No one can set down the limits to which the disintegration which begins with social immodesty may extend. Let young girls grow up to think that clothes and the dances which ought to be confined to the disreputable are a part of "smart society"; let the line be blurred between the lovely and the common, and presently the most essential distinctions are in danger. The failure to set up any clear principle in what seem the lighter matters compromises the authority of principle in graver things. A generation which is not purposeful enough to maintain right standards of conduct everywhere could not be astonished at disaster anywhere.

What, then, do we need?

We need the mobilizing into effective strength of the right opinion which now is scattered and therefore futile. It is hard for one girl or one mother to exercise much influence against a demoralizing fashion. It is hard for any individual to check at a social function some behavior which may be palpably unwholesome. There must be the shaping first of a public opinion which is conscious of its strength, and prepared to make itself controlling. It is here that the groups of women who belong to our Christian congregations have their great opportunity. They can organize gatherings where the facts of modern life, as they affect particularly our girls and young women, are frankly and truly discussed. They can diagnose existing difficulties, and decide how these can be met. They can formulate social standards to which they will give the great power of their united influence. If the Christian women cannot and will not do this, who will? "If the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted?"

THE GRACE OF CHRIST IN LENT.

Again—and this year very early—we have come to the beginning of Lent.

The collect for the First Sunday bids us pray: "O Lord, who for our sake didst fast forty days and forty nights; give us grace to use such abstinence, that, our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey Thy godly motions in righteousness and true holiness. * * *"

This prayer, as we see, is directed to our Lord Jesus. We are thinking of Him who was made flesh for us, and who is for us the perfect revelation of the unseen God. All our Christian experience, when it is most vital and glowing, comes close to Him. We are inspired most not when we think of our religion as a series of commandments graven on stone, nor as a code of morality, nor a program of church observances. It means most to us when we remember that Christianity is a new life lived in the Spirit and by the grace of Jesus Christ. We remember that He was tempted like as we are, save that He was without sin. He bore our human limitations, went through our struggle, blazed the way for us to victory. All that we strive for finds its pattern in Him, and our strength in striving lies in the knowledge that the Spirit of our Master will be at the side of every disciple who tries to follow Him.

So, as we come into Lent, we remember that its most beautiful significance comes through the fact that it commemorates an experience of Jesus. For forty days and forty nights after His baptism He was in the wilderness of the Jordan, tempted of the devil. "For our sakes" He went through that experience. It was for our sakes because through that temptation He was fitting Himself to serve the world of men. He was subduing every lower choice, mastering His impulses, shaping His will, to the perfect consecration.

We remember what those temptations were. The suggestion came first that He should take the stones and turn them into bread—a suggestion symbolic of what He always might have done if He had chosen—that is, to take the raw materials of the world's possibilities and by His amazing power use them for His own advantage.

The second temptation bade Him throw Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple and call upon God's power to save Him. In vital terms this meant the temptation to believe that His life, because of its pre-eminent holiness, ought to be delivered in this world from pain, from danger, persecution, misunderstanding, death.

The third temptation was that He should gain the kingdoms of the world by making terms with the spirit of worldliness—take the short cut to influence, win power by compromising His spiritual ideals with the lust of things as they are. He refused: and chose rather to hazard the issue of His whole life's service upon His unswerving faith in the efficacy of righteousness and love to win their own clean victory.

These were His temptations, and these He endured "for our sake"—"for our sake" because the end of it was that He might set Himself free from every bond of self-seeking, in order that His life might serve His Father's purpose and accomplish the redemption of human hearts.

As we contemplate the meaning of our own forty days now that Lent begins, we ought to have for ourselves the same purpose which the Master had. What we want is to set ourselves free from crippling and unworthy interests. We want to discipline ourselves to master our own desires, to shape our own wills in order that they, too, may be true to God's plans, and free in God's name to serve as best they can all the life we touch.

"Who for our sake didst fast forty days and forty nights," the invocation of this prayer goes on to say: That word "fast" is put here in emphatic position. We must remember that fasting was not the primary object of Jesus in those days in the wilderness. He did not go apart that He might fast. The fast was merely incidental. He withdrew into those silent places in order that He might concentrate His thought absolutely upon the great questions and decisions which He must shape for His life's destiny. He wanted to think through His life's choices. In order that He might do that completely, he ignored for the time the impulses of the body. He was hungry and thirsty not for the sake of being hungry and thirsty, but because from that tense and awful communion with His own soul, and with His Father's soul, He could not stop to turn aside for food and drink. He subdued the flesh that the spirit might be freed.

Such is the place that fasting properly should hold in our Lent. It is not the end, but simply a way to the end. The real end is a new devotion of ourselves to the thought of God. In order to make that complete, we need to withdraw attention from food and drink—set ourselves free from the slavery of those desires which might cripple our spiritual earnestness. Then in just that measure we need to be led to fast. We need to be willing to go hungry and thirsty of those things which ordinarily we take delight in, if by so doing we can feel within ourselves a new integrity of self-mastery, a new enfranchisement of thought and imagination from the things of the flesh, in order that we may dwell in the things of the Spirit.

"Give us grace," the prayer goes on, "to use such abstinence that, our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey Thy godly motions in righteousness and true holiness."

Mark those first three words. We do not come to the keeping of Lent in any thought of our own strength. We come to it just as we come to the Holy Table, saying, first of all, "We do not presume to come, O merciful Lord, trusting in our own righteousness." We trust instead in the great and manifold mercy of the Master, who knows all that we desire, and all the difficulties on the way, and who alone can give us strength to gain the ends that gleam down the long vistas of those paths in life which are alone worth while. And what is it that we ask Him to give us grace to gain? It is abstinence, we say. Yes, but abstinence for what? Not abstinence for its own sake—not the mortification of the flesh for the sake of mortification. It is such abstinence as shall subdue our flesh to the spirit, and make us thereby ready to obey the motions of God.

Here, then, the searching meaning of Lent strikes straight home to the conscience of each one of us. We are to ask ourselves what those things are in which we truly need the subduing of our flesh in order that we may obey the better those impulses which come from God.

No one can specify those things for another; but each knows them for himself. Here is one life which is being ruined by gross dissipation in the body. Here is another which is allowing all its best energies to be paralyzed by laziness. Here is another which is bartering the sweetness of unselfish interests through narrow covetousness and mean concentration upon its own indulgence. Are we like these? Are we cherishing some hidden fleshly sin? Are we slothful in good works? Are we selfish in our plans and purposes? Are we letting the clog of common things hold us back, unready for the "godly motions" of the Spirit of Jesus?

In the Lenten time of meditation we can answer these questions for ourselves; and in the power of the Christ who conquered His own temptations, we can set ourselves if we choose to conquer ours.

BOOK NOTICES.

For "the Church in Thy House."

Family Prayers. Published by The Board of Religious Education of Virginia. 400, Old Dominion Trust Building, Richmond, Va. Price, 10 cents, ten or more copies, 6 cents each.

A good work, well and wisely done. We have gone through this little booklet carefully and can hardly conceive anything better for its purpose: the kindling and the wood, all ready to be lighted upon the family altar by the flame of parental devotion. And oh! there are so many homes all through the land, which father and mother, or certainly mother, wish so much to make really Christian homes and the nurseries of Christian piety and living, which lack just this thing every day. And why? Usually because the parents are diffident and don't know how, or think they don't. Then here is just the little helper and guide they need; nothing long or difficult or stilted, but short and simple morning and evening readings and prayers, for a week, with additional collects for special occasions and directions to find others in the Prayer Book and a few helpful suggestions. The clergy will want them by the dozen for distribution. But let every head of a Church family, who hasn't by practice already outgrown the need of such aids, send a dime to the Rev. G. M. Brydon, at the address given above, and get his or her own.

Sunny Windows and Other Sermons for Children. By Walter Russell Bowie, D. D., Rector St. Paul's Church, Richmond. Fleming H. Revell Co. New York. For sale by the Southern Churchman Co. Pp. 190. $1.25.

In a previous volume of these little sermons, entitled "The Children's Year," which has had a large circulation, Dr. Bowie "made good" in a difficult field. Here are forty-six more of his bright, pointed and always interesting talks to the little men and women of his congregation. An object or an incident which is often quite commonplace is shown or described and told about so entertainingly, and with such literary skill withal, that the truth to be illustrated or enforced grows out of it like a flower from a plant. There is nothing mawkish or puerile in these sermons, but clean and winning appeals to the best in the child which he will understand and respond to. We know of nothing of their kind so good for the use of parents or teachers or for a child's own reading. And grown folk too may read them with profit. G.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

George Matheson offers us the most suggestive of phrases for a brief meditation on "The Lord's Prayer." "Teach us," he says, "the boundaries of prayer." The Lord's Prayer does not exhaust the possible content of prayer nor offer us an unvarying formula. Prayer is a continent with hidden mines and mystic mountain tops and rivers of devotion and fruitful fields and populous cities of need. And the Lord's Prayer bounds it. Prayer is bounded on the one side by brotherhood—no prayer can be selfish—Our Father. On another side by the filial tempted—confident, loving, obedient, undictating—Our Father. Yet again by reverence—Hallowed be Thy name—irreverence passes out of the region of true prayer directly. Still once more by a holy passion for the supremacy of God's will in every aspect of life—Thy kingdom come. By extreme moderation in the demand for temporal things—Give us day by day our daily bread. By our unquenchable longing for goodness—Forgive us our sins. By our unquenchable charity—For we forgive. By a sense of the spiritual and moral dangers to which we are exposed—Bring us not into temptation.

Inside such limits what petitions are not possible. To end with, prayer should have above it all the sky of entire consecration to the Father's will—Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.—W. B. Oliver.

FROM PAIN TO PAIN.

From pain to pain, from woe to woe,
With loving hearts and footsteps slow
To Calvary with Christ we go,
See how His precious blood
At every station pours.
Was ever grief like His?
Was ever sin like ours?

—F. W. Faber.

THE CONSECRATED GIFT.

Bishop Beckwith's Sermon: On the Occasion of the Consecration of St. Andrew's Church, Birmingham, Alabama, October 31, 1921.

I have often had occasion to remark that the most striking, the most dignfiied, the most fitting, the most devotional, and the most instructive service in the Book of Common Prayer is the one which last engaged our worship. I believe this statement to be true.

The Church regards every step in the life of her children as of utmost seriousness, and not one to be slightingly passed over, because of the relationship that necessarily exists between what we do and what we are. Therefore the Church claims the right to bless every act of life with a carefully ordered service that shall link even material things with things spiritual.

The smallest coin that reaches the treasury is not lost sight of. The Church never uses the word "collection" in connection with our gifts. She calls them "alms" and "oblations" and "offerings," and makes them a part of the most solemn act of worship that can engage the human heart,—even a part of the Holy Communion itself.

As an ilustration of this careful guardianship of the Church, witness the many services of the Prayer Book—a service for every serious act—beginning at the cradle, where the infant is consecrated to God in holy baptism; through thoughtfully arranged Christian instruction; in Confirmation and the Holy Communion; in the marriage service, which begins the Christian's obligation to the social life; at the sick bedside; at the Family Altar; and resting not until the empty grave has been filled, and the final blessing has been pronounced over the body of those who do not rest from their labors.

Nor is the Church less thoughtful of the official responsibilities of those whom she authorizes to speak and to teach in her name. Touching the ministry, the Scripture saith,—"No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." In order, therefore, that her ministers may be "called, tried, examined and admitted thereunto," the Church has provided the 'Form of Ordination' and she requires its unvarying use. Having ordained her ministry, the Church provides for the establishment of the relationship of rector to the congregation in the "Office of Institution of Ministers," and in order that the building to be used for public worship and instruction may be set aside for this sole purpose, the Church accepts the gift from the people with due solemnity, and in the "Form of Consecration of Churches" forever assumes responsibility for the use of the building, as well as for the worship that shall be conducted therein, and for the teaching that shall emanate therefrom.

This Brings Us to the Service of Today.

For many years the members of this congregation have toiled, and saved, and given in money, time and energy for the erection of this house, and now that its construction has reached completion, the building is offered to the Church for Consecration.

A stranger to the ideals of the Church would naturally ask the question: If the congregation is privileged to erect and to pay for the building, why should not the congregation, through its clerical or lay representatives, consecrate the building? What is there about the service of consecration that the rector of the parish cannot do? Why was it necessary to secure the presence of the Bishop of the Diocese in order that this building might be consecrated as a house of worship?

These questions are perfectly natural, and in the answer to these questions lies the genius of the Church.

Let it be clearly borne in mind that we are not here merely as an association of men and women with a common interest. We are gathered here as members of God's family, the Church, and the Church of God is a Body,—even the Body of Christ. Life, and growth, and development in the members, separate and apart from the life of the body is not only inconceivable, it is impossible. The bud must be grafted into the vine, and must become a part of the vine; otherwise it cannot receive the life of the vine. The Consecration service marks, even as it insures, the establishment of a relationship between the Church as the whole, and the parish as a part. The act of the congregation is complete when the building has been erected and offered as a gift.

The service of Consecration is broader in scope and deeper in meaning than the mere "dedication" of a building. In this house the worship of Almighty God is to be conducted, and Christian instruction is to be given; and some authoritative body must be responsible for both. The continual change in the rectorship of the parish, too often at the will and whim of the people; and the frailty, and foibles, and erratic fancies of the human mind, even as best constituted, would render it unsafe to place the congregation at the mercy of any one man, without the guidance, direction and control of a higher power.

In the Consecration service the parish of St. Andrew is, by the act and the authority of the Diocese, made a part of the General Church; and in the same service the Diocese, through the Bishop, assumes spiritual jurisdiction over the building, the worship, and the clergyman who ministers at this altar and teaches from this pulpit. Thus only could the congregation be assured that the rearing of your children shall be in the "Truth as this Church hath received the same"; and that the worship shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Book of Common Prayer. There are no free-lances in the Church of God.

. . . It is for this reason that "congregationalism" and "parochialism" can be maintained only as a moral crime. "Congregationalism" is an effort to tie strings to a free gift after the men and women who made the gift are dead; and thus to render meaningless the sacred service of Consecration. 'Congregationalism" is dishonesty to men who are dead and disloyalty to the Church that seeks to live and give life. It is for this reason that, whereever "congregationalism" or "parochialism" has been permitted to encroach upon the activities of the people, the fruit of the toil, labor and gift has been rendered void. "As the body is one and hath many members, so also is Christ." We are members one of another. The member that will not support the body, cannot receive life giving blood from the body. The member that seeks to live for itself, and in itself, and by itself, must die. This is nature's law, and it is God law; and that law we cannot abrogate.

As an expression of our love and devotion to God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and that we may glorify His Holy Name in praise, and Prayer, and service, we have erected this house. I am persuaded that we have met here today in an honest and good heart to offer a prayer in lasting stone, that God would make His dwelling place among us. I am also persuaded that we have determined to do our part to ourselves, to the Diocese of Alabama, and to the general Church, as that part should be done,—both in the terms of the gift and in the service that consecrates that gift.

To that end, we shall walk awhile with the Master in the temple of old, and learn from Him the true value of the gift, and how that gift may be used to the glory of His holy name.

The following passages have been chosen from the twenty-first chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, and from the eleventh chapter of the Gospel according to St. Mark.

"And as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with costly stones and gifts, He saith, As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down."

"And they came to Jerusalem, and Jesus went into the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves; and would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple. And He taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the House of Prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves."

It is beyond the possibility of the human mind to conceive a contrast of thought more striking than that presented in these two passages of Holy Scripture. They are taken from different writers, and they were spoken on different occasions; but both bear upon the one and same temple,—the house sacred to every Jewish heart, because it was the center of their existence as a nation, as well as the place erected for the worship and service of Almighty God.

The passage from St. Luke presents the human estimate of the gift, based upon its material cost and grandeur: the passage from St. Mark presents the divine estimate of the same gift, based upon the use to which the gift was subjected.

If any people could ever have a right to be proud of their place of worship, certainly that people were the Jews. There was at that time only one temple for the worship of the whole nation, and no cost seemed too great for its adornment. Among the noted sights of the city of Jerusalem was the temple; and it was both natural and human to boast of the beauty and dignity of the building. They were men just as we are men, and it may be that that which was natural to them is also natural to us—that what was sin to them may be a warning to us.

The Master passed over the goodly stones and the costly gifts, and estimated the value of the building by the use to which the building had been put; and in the light of the use to which the building had been put, the Master said: "Not one stone shall be left upon another"—the gift is rejected.

My dear brethren, we have come together today to consecrate to the same God another temple. It behooves us to consider for a moment the cause for the Master's grief, and the reason for His rejection of that earlier temple.

For the merchandise and for the tables of the money-changers that had found their way into the temple, there was every possible excuse, if any excuse was possible. All that was done in this respect was done "in the name of religion," and for the furtherance of the worship of the people. Oxen, and sheep, and doves were required for the sacrifices which constituted the main part of the Jewish worship. These things were necessities, and it was not possible for the many who traveled from far countries to bring these necessary things with them. The oxen, and the sheep, and the doves had to be procured after these traveling strangers had reached the city; and the hours for the sacrifice were restricted.

More than that,—a common money was not at that time in use, and the law required that the sacrifice should be paid for in a certain coin. Provincial values had to be exchanged for local coinage.

Hence for the worship of the temple, and for the convenience of the worshipper, it would seem not only justifiable, but absolutely necessary that provisions for the sacrifices should be made in the courts of the temple where the sacrifice must be offered.

If ever merchandise were permissible, in any possible association with the worship of God, it was permissible when the Master frequented the temple at Jerusalem. I am sure we would have justified the custom, just as we do now justify an hundred other customs of like kind today, when such customs are painted and plastered with the various blends of so-called "Christian pigments." And yet, because of these things which were allowed then, and which I fear we are in danger of allowing today, the Master rejected the building with the withering statements: "Ye have made My house a den of thieves."

God asks at our hands a free gift, and in order that the gift may be more free, God requires us to give a part of what we most value: the gift must be at the cost of sacrifice.

My dear brethren, are we not in danger of making the gift, freed from all sacrifice, when we mingle "merchandise" with the sacred services of the Temple? Are we not in danger of permitting "merchandise" to enter into the construction of the building, even before its construction is completed? Thus easily may the errors of the past be compounded without evil intention or purpose. We shall have fewer regrets in the future, and fewer failures in the work we have undertaken, if we are frank and candid with ourselves in the present.

We have all had our experiences in Church work, and observation has given us full occasion to know that coin of curious gathering does find its way into the treasury of God.

Indeed, so sordid have become the modern methods of raising "Church money," that the thinking mind is forced to conclude that the free-gift-offering is among the things forgotten; and that sacrifice, for the sake of giving, is a lost art in the Church.

It was once taught and believed that "one-tenth" belonged to God; and that no man could begin to give, until he had paid the debt of one-tenth.

It was once the accepted obligation, resting upon all, to bring as an offering to God of the "first fruits" of the flocks, and the herds, and the fields; and that even such a gift must be sanctified by personal sacrifice—this was under the old dispensation, before the Christ had come.

Today, when money is to be raised for the building of a Church, we resort to the "penny-show"; and the "penny-entertainment": the twisting of a coin from the stranger's pocket over the table of "Church suppers," and "Church bazaars": the sale of "Church cakes," and "Church biscuits": "Church aprons," and "Church handkerchiefs": often supporting the sacred worship itself by methods of pious merchandise which link us all too closely to that sad day, when the Master wept in the temple and rejected the Gift of His own peculiar people. We do these things, and our excuse is: "It is for the Church," whereas, our reason for not doing these things should be, because it is for the Church.

In pointing out the great risk we run today, I shall not be misunderstood or misinterpreted. Lying hardby the danger is a very great and a very precious privilege; and we shall not lose the good by seeking to avoid the evil. We not only have the right, but we are called upon to use our talents, whatever they may be, as well as our financial possessions for the glory of God. The woman who is quick and accurate with her needle, and well practiced in the science of cooking, has the same privilege in the use of these for money making, as has the man at law or behind the counter. The danger does not lie in working in any legitimate way for money, even though a part or the whole be given to the Church: the danger lies in dragging the Church into the markets of the world, and thus making sacred things common. On the point at issue, the New Testament is perfectly clear. A certain man, named Ananias, sold a piece of property, and in the sale he had a definite purpose in mind: he intended to give the price to the Church. In rebuking him for deception, St. Peter said, "Whilst it remained, was it not thine own? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power?" So may we sell and buy, and do what we will with the proceeds when the transaction is done; but in the transaction we shall not drag the Church of God into the marts of the world; nor shall we permit merchandise to encroach upon the courts of the temple.

My dear friends, we may think of these things as we will; and in our human weakness, we may find justification for looseness of method in raising money for the Church, upon the ground that "the end justifies the means"; but one thing is sure—we cannot rub out the Master's words; nor can we erase the Master's action. The one single instance of the violence of righteous anger exhibited by our Blessed Lord was in this connection: He made a whip of cords, and drove out of the temple those who sold and bought therein, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, saying: "Take these things hence: Make not My Father's House a house of merchandise: Is it not written, My House shall be called of all nations a House of Prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves."

At the same time, we shall not forget His acceptance of the modest "upper chamber"; nor shall we lose sight of the Master's tenderness in the house of Simon the leper; nor His gracious acceptance of hospitality in the humble little home at Bethany. Above it all and beyond it all, we shall not forget the Master's unsurpassed laudation of a gift of two mites,—the free-will-offering of a poor widowed woman.

The Master stands ready to accept this house as a gift from us, if we are prepared to make the offering in the spirit He has defined; and, forbidding the encroachment of every thing He has rejected, to consecrate its solely to His honor, and for the glory of His holy name.

In what has been said, I am persuaded is expressed the mind of this congregation. This house stands for so much that is fine; so much that is noble; so much that is splendid—we shall not stop short of all that shall make it none other than the temple of the Living God. We shall not forget the many who loved this place even in the early beginning of its construction, and who have now passed on in waiting for us who are to follow. We shall have in mind the full scope and meaning of the service that consecrates this house for the worship of our God; and we shall see that nothing enters into its structure; nothing in the service that shall be rendered here; nothing in the teaching that shall emanate from here; nothing into its maintenance, that shall make us ashamed to offer, even to the Giver of all good things, St. Andrew's Church, as the best we could do for the honor and glory of His holy name and His holy worship.

And then, we shall not forget that we are members one of another: that from henceforth St. Andrew's is a part of the great Church that seeks to "go into all the world" to publish to others the glad news that has come to us; and that whatever is undertaken either in the Diocese of Alabama or by the General Church,—that shall become our obligation and privilege, to be made a part of our daily work both in gift and in service.

And lastly, let us never forget that the teaching we shall here receive must arm us; and that the worship we shall here engage in must embolden us to go into the highways and hedges, where are the poor, and the ignorant, and the blind, and the hopeless, to tell them of the Christ and of His kingdom—not resting until all within our reach have been brought into our Father's house, and have learned to say with Jacob of old: "Surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not. How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the House of God, and this is the gate of Heaven."

In this way shall this house stand alone and apart from all that is unhallowed and worldly. In this way shall this house become sacred, honored and loved by us all. We shall beautify and adorn it. We shall devote to it our time, thought and energy. We shall bring here our trials and our temptations; our failures and our triumphs; our sorrows and our disappointments,—and our rejoicing too. We shall gather here for prayer, and for praise, and for instruction. We shall learn the blessedness of the Master's promise: "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them."

Verily, this House shall be none other but the House of God, for we shall have made it the House of Prayer.

The Supernatural and the Spiritual.

Bishop George H. Kinsolving; Council Address.

The miraculous in the New Testament, viewed in a certain way and considered as an abstract proposition, does put a severe strain on faith, and presents a grave problem to the understanding, and if we single out special manifestations of the miraculous and examine them alone and apart from all other considerations, we do encounter that which is justly perplexing and even incredible. But the way to approach the understanding of the miraculous is in the first place to be clear in our minds what it is we mean by miracle. If there was any such materialistic and atheistic world, as we have tried to show you there is not, and if miracle was what it has been popularly defined to be, then it would be indeed difficult and not at all in harmony with modern thought to claim for it a reasonable acceptance. The common idea seems to be that miracle, as Canon Scott Holland describes it, "is some abrupt and inexplicable violence, a breaking in upon and interrupting the operation of cause and effect, and holding natural law in suspense, a sudden inroad of disruption into an ordered and integral whole." Or, in other words, something done against nature. Such an idea of miracle has long since been abandoned, and in its place, as Holland has also said, "A new rush of thought has passed over us, and it would be indeed intellectually disastrous if, at such a time, when personality is disclosing to us new possibilities, and under such a spiritual invasion, we were to be satisfied with obsolete formula for miracles which we had fashioned under the pressure of the days when the mechanical idea of nature dominated us."

The spiritual and the supernatural are now becoming more and more recognized, not as working against nature, but as part and parcel of the operation of the reign of law in the universe of God, viewed in its wholeness instead of detached sections and parts. We are beginning to know too much about the material to remain materialists. . . . The world may look on at Christ's spiritual work as it did at His wonderful deeds of mercy and power when He lived among men in the flesh; the critic may gaze with cold incredulity upon the Christian and at his divine Master; men may even rise up like the inhabitants of the city in which the demoniac was publishing the good news of his recovery, and bid Christ to depart out of their coasts, but Christ and His religion will live through the ages and go on conquering and to conquer as long as men and women can go forth, publishing it in Decapolis and throughout the world that Christ has done great things for them. The testimony of living witnesses speaking out of the fullness of loving and grateful hearts is the chief influence under God for the dispelling of the dark clouds of unbelief which hover around the restless, faithless minds of so many of the poor, disobedient children of our Father; and it is the abiding consciousness of having this personal testimony as a part of our experience which must ever serve to keep the Christian fixed and steady amid the corruptions and temptations of a captious and gainsaying generation.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

DR. STUCK'S PARENTAGE.

Mr. Editor: In a recent letter which I received from Miss Stuck, a sister to the late Venerable Hudson Stuck, she made the following statement: "Will you disabuse people's minds, as far as you are able, of the error current in America that my brother was the son of a clergyman? Our father was a business man, having for the greater part of his adult life an interest in a large timber business."

Will you kindly make a statement to this effect in the Southern Churchman? I shall greatly appreciate it.

Sewanee, Tenn., February 2, 1921. ROBERT G. TATUM.

A TEACHER COMMENDED.

Mr. Editor: Mrs. Ethel Patterson, of Los Angeles, Cal., has recently been in our city conducting a series of classes in "The Practice of the Presence of God." She came unsolicited and unheralded, but it must have been the guiding hand of Providence that brought her to us. I feel that I, for one, must voice my opinion of her work in this way for the benefit of those who may have an opportunity, here or elsewhere, to hear her. I count it one of my greatest privileges to have attended her classes, and cannot too strongly recommend her to every one, both old and young.

MRS. WILLIAM EDWARD COX.

Richmond, Va., February 5, 1921.

The Great Commission.

NOTES FROM THE MISSIONS HOUSE.

In a letter just received by the Department of the Nation-Wide Campaign, Bishop Tyler states that with two exceptions the salaries of all the clergy in North Dakota were increased during 1920. Of these increases seven were made entirely by the parishes of which the men are rectors. In the cases of the missionary clergy whose stipends are supplemented by the Presiding Bishop and Council, at least one-half of the increase, and in several instances more than half, were made by the local congregations to which those clergy minister.

Bishop Tyler adds: "To my mind, the Nation-Wide Campaign is the greatest movement that has ever been proposed or attempted by the Church. I can absolutely say that never since I have been Bishop in North Dakota has anything so helped the Church here as this great movement."

About $12,000 has been received by the Presiding Bishop and Council for relief of famine in China, one subscription for $5,000 coming last week from Mr. F. M. Kirby, head of the Kirby 5 and 10 Cent Storec, who is a member of St. Stephen's Parish, Wilkes Barre. All money received by the Presiding Bishop and Council for the Chinese Famine Fund is sent at once by cable to Bishop Graves and the relief work is done by our own missionaries. Every dollar received is sent, no transmission charges for the cable being placed against it. Those who wish to contribute in this way should send their gifts to the treasurer, Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

"Obeying an impulse caused by seeing the picture of Miss Marietta Ambler, Kyoto, in the Spirit of Missions, I am enclosing a check for $100 to be sent to her. Such a posture and expression are worth $100."

So wrote a layman from Michigan the other day, after seeing the picture of Miss Ambler and some of her kindergarten children on page 25 of the January number of the Spirit of Missions.

"Read what Miss Ambler says about the needs for a new building at Koriyama and about kindergarten work in Japan," says Dr. John W. Wood, executive secretary of the Department of Missions. Dr. Wood visited Miss Ambler's kindergarten when he was in Japan and says that it is altogether worth-while. He is most anxious, as is Bishop Tucker, that a new building should be erected for the kindergarten before the present one comes tumbling down on the top of the young children entrusted to the Church's care.

Gifts for this purpose can be sent to the Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Spanish-Americans and Mexicans to the number of a million and a half are now in the United States, according to an Interchurch survey recently completed. About 450,000 in Texas, 50,000 of them in San Antonio; New Mexico, about 250,000; Arizona, 100,000, and California nearly as many; thousands in Colorado, Missouri and Kansas, and others scattered all the way to New England. Los Angeles is mentioned as one of the cities which are "largely Mexican"!

Church Intelligence

Busy Building.

The fortieth annual report of the trustees of the American Church Building Fund Commission shows the past year to have been the most active in its history. Its pledged support has made possible the erection of 129 churches, rectories and parish houses in this country and in China and Japan. In this work loans in the sum of $262,200 have been offered and accepted, and gifts and grants in the sum of $54,225. The figures for this year bring the grand total of loans made since organization to $1,313,376.22 and gifts and grants to $342,737.88.

The trustees point out that the accomplishment of this work has placed all but 20 per cent. of the Permanent Fund in the hands of the Church for its use; that the balance of the fund, at the present rate of negotiation of loans, will last but a few months; that the entire income, less operating expenses, has been given away; that their work of serving the Church cannot go forward at the present rate of development without the aid of the Church in the increase of the Permanent Fund; and appeals to the Church for offerings from parishes, and for donations and legacies from individuals for this purpose.

The Church is the sole beneficiary of the fund. Her own interests are the only ones considered and conserved. Every dollar contributed to the fund does a double duty, serving first as a loan, and later going out as a gift from accrued income. The trustees believe that the Church for its own sake will answer this reasonable appeal. The office of the American Church Building Fund Commission is in the Church Missions House, New York City.

Stowe's Clerical Directory: The 1920-21 Edition.

Stowe's Clerical Directory of the American Church for 1920-21 is being delivered to the subscribers. The book has been compiled and published under very great disadvantages and perplexing conditions in the publishing world. However, the edition is completed and copies of this book may be secured by applying directly to the publisher or through any book store.

So many of the clergy have changed their addresses within the last six months that the addresses may not be, in every case, correct. The forms closed the middle of September.

We trust that this directory will be of value to all of the bishops and clergy. It is an effort to furnish a book which shall take the same place in the ecclesiastical world that "Who's Who in America" takes in the secular and business world.

The Rev. Andrew D. Stowe, D. D.
131 East Fourteenth Street, Minneapolis, Minn.

PITTSBURGH

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

The Misuse of Our Churches.

Certain incidents in the parish of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, have caused the rector and his colleague to announce that hereafter there shall be no evening weddings in the church except under exceptional circumstances, and the Bishop of the Diocese, having had similar experiences, made the following declaration in his address at the annual convention: It is the obvious duty of the Church to stand behind any bold witnessing for truth in the face of a gainsaying world. To be a prophet has never been a popular role —witness Jeremiah and others of the Old Testament times, Savanarola of later years and many a martyr of recent date. Said St. Stephen, "Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?" To utter warnings, to instruct the ignorant, to combat the vicious, to rebuke the worldly, to disregard the unreasonable, is a function of the ministry which is conspicuous by its absence in the priesthood of many of us. Too often we seek refuge in generalities. All honor to any, therefore, who speak with authority and declare, "Thus saith the Lord," whether men hear or whether they forbear. The Church has a right and a duty to declaim against lawlessness in social customs, against immodesty of dress, against extremes of worldly fashion, against the insulting intrusion of frivolities into the place where God's honor dwelleth—against the unveiled head in public worship, against disregard of apostolic teaching and sober Church tradition. Said St. Paul, giving the final authoritative word, "If any one seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God."

"Our church buildings have been ill used long enough by a really arrogant class of thoughtless and irreverent people. I would that all our clergy and Church folk would set their faces and utter their protest against all such invasion by the fashionable world into sacred things."

The Standing Committee elected at the annual convention on January 26 has organized by the election of the Rev. John Dows Hills, D. D., of Bellevue, as president, and the Rev. William Francis Shero, Ph. D., of Greensboro, as secretary. The stated meetings of the committee will be held on the Tuesdays preceding the Ember Days.

Church Club Dinner: The mid-winter dinner of the Diocesan Church Club was held at the McCreery dining-rooms on Thursday evening, January 27. The guest of honor and speaker was the Rt. Rev. Charles D. Williams, D. D., Bishop of Michigan. Bishop Williams spoke of present conditions in England and the Lambeth Conference, and held his audience of over two hundred men spellbound for an hour and a quarter.

Charitable Requests: By the will of the late Mrs. Minnie Kalchthaler, of St. John's Parish, Pittsburgh, the following bequests were made. St. John's Church, $2,500; St. Barnabas' Home for Incurables, Gibsonia, $1,000; the Episcopal Church Home, Pittsburgh, $500.

Woman's Auxiliary Observes Triple Anniversary.

The annual meeting of the Pittsburgh Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was this year observed as a triple anniversary, the events commemorated being the conversion of St. Paul, the forty-first anniversary of the organization of the Pittsburgh Branch, and the thirty-ninth anniversary of the consecration of the Bishop of the Diocese. The gathering was held at St. Andrew's, Pittsburgh, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, with address by Bishop Whitehead. At the close of the service the Rev. John G. Magee, of Nanking, China, spoke. The annual business meeting and election of officers followed. The reports of all the officers showed progress along the different lines of effort, and were optimistic as to the prospects for the labors of the current year. The officers of 1920 were re-elected with the exception of two vice-presidents, who on account of increasing years declined another term of service. To mark the Bishop's anniversary a basket containing thirty-nine American Beauty roses was presented to him, with the congratulations and best wishes of all the members of the Auxiliary.

J. C.

St. Stephen's Church. Sewickley, Pa.

Five beautiful stained glass memorial windows have recently been installed in St. Stephen's Church, Sewickley, the Rev. A. C. Howell, rector. The first, the north transept window, has for its subject the "Soldiers," or "Triumph of the Cross," and is given anonymously. The fine and comprehensive inscription, "To those who tried," is magnificent and has an appeal for those who fall to rise again.

The second, or south transept window, has for its subject "St. Paul," and is given by the congregation in commemoration of Lieutenants Tingle W. Culbertson and Charles Hyde, Jr., both of whom died in France August 5, 1918, heroes of the great war.

The subject of the third, large clerestory west window, is "St. Stephen." This window represents St. Stephen before the Council, and is given by Mrs. Charles C. Ramsey in memory of her husband.

The fourth, or south aisle window, has for its subject "The Supper at Emmamus," and is given by Mrs. Jan Koert in memory of her husband and of her brother.

The fifth, a small west window, whose subject is "Sir Galahad," is given by Mrs. J. D. Culbertson, Sr., in memory of her son, Tingle W. Culbertson.

In all these windows Gothic canopy-work is introduced as frame-work and the tracery work above the main figures have emblems or sacred monograms referring to the subjects beneath.

TEXAS

Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Bishop of Texas Vetoes Woman's Suffrage.

For the first time in the twenty-nine years that the Rt. Rev. George Kinsolving has been Bishop of the Diocese of Texas, the right to veto a measure of the Diocesan Council was exercised, to keep the women of the Church from sitting as delegates, with the right to vote in Council. The speeches against woman suffrage were weak and lame as compared with the militant harangue of the favoring side. When the vote was taken the majority was overwhelmingly in favor of the ladies. After his non-concurrence was announced Bishop Kinsolving explained that he had exercised his constitutional right conscientiously, and after hearing all the arguments in favor of women's rights. "Woman is not a ruler of the Church," the Bishop declared. He also stated that he attended the Church Conference of Lambeth in London, Eng., at which time the women demanded the vote and equal rights in the Church. "Nothing occurred in that conference to cause me to change my mind in regard to my view that woman is not a ruler," he stated. "In the years to come there will probably be women in the pulpit, but I shall not be here; I shall probably look over from above." Bishop-Coadjutor Quin, however, made it quite clear that he was heartily in favor of allowing the women in the Council and expressed his sorrow at the untimely end of the discussion.

The second most important feature of the Council, which met in Houston on January 21-25, was the passing of a canon providing for an executive board composed of six clergy and nine laymen, to carry on the work of the Church between meetings of the annual Council. This board corresponds to what is called in several dioceses "the Bishop and Council." It not only has power to carry out all mandates of the Council, but has authority to initiate legislation, so far as it is not contrary to the canons and constitution. Its work is to include missions, finance, publicity, student work, social service, and such other departments as it may from time to time see fit to initiate.

The work of the young people and the responsibility of the Church for them also played a large part in the unofficial work of the Council. The Rev. Paul Micou was the chief speaker at the sessions of the Student Council, under the direction of the Rev. Harris Masterson, diocesan secretary of student work. One hundred and fifty students attended the Council, representing the five chief universities of the Diocese. Miss Helen Hendricks and the Rev. Y. Y. Tsu also presented phases of student work. The Cranmer Club of Rice Institute, Houston, entertained the visiting delegates at the University Club on Saturday afternoon.

The Rev. W. E. Gardner addressed the Young People's Service League Saturday morning on "Church School Ideals." The Rev. Gordon M. Reese also spoke to the young people. The afternoon program was given at Herman Park and included a picnic.

The business session of the Church Service League, which included the Woman's Auxiliary, Daughters of the King, Church Periodical Club, Girls' Friendly Society, the Guild of St. Barnabas, was held at Trinity Church Tuesday morning. Thirty-eight parishes and missions were represented by delegates. The purpose of the session was to encourage the formation of the league in all parishes, and reports were given from churches where the organization has been formed, which inspired the delegates to go home and do likewise. Miss Helen Hendricks gave an address on recruiting for the Church, and Mrs. Kinsolving brought a message from the Lambeth Conference in London. She told the league that Mrs. C. S. Quin has been selected by Mrs. Davidson, wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as a delegate to go to England. Mrs. C. S. Quin served as chairman of the meeting in place of Mrs. Percy Pennybacker, who was unavoidably absent.

The corporate communion of the Diocese was held at Christ Church on Sunday at 11 o'clock, Bishop Kinsolving being the celebrant, assisted by Bishop Quin. The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor was preacher.

Night mass meetings were held each night at Christ Church, at which addresses were made on Religious Education in Co-operation With the Public Schools, by Mr. Edward Sargent, of the General Board of Religious Education, and by the Rev. William E. Gardner, from New York headquarters. The Rev. Y. Y. Tsu, a post-graduate student in Columbia University, and a priest of the Chinese Holy Catholic Church, described student life to the Student Council on Saturday and presented the work of the foreign missionary on Sunday night.

The results of the elections were as follows: For the Executive Board—The Rev. Messrs. L. C. Harrison, R. DeOvies, W. N. Claybrook, Harris Masterson, Houston; J. M. Pettit; Messrs. F. W. Catterall, J. C. Wilson, A. J. Dossett, W. S. Farish, K. E. Womack, W. G. Franklin, Gus Taylor, Eugene Blount, T W. Davidson.

Standing Committee—The Rev. Messrs. S. M. Bird, Peter Gray Sears, Charles Clingman; Messrs. A. J. Dow, G. A. Taft. Chancellor—R. W. Franklin. Secretary of the Council—The Rev. F. J. Bate.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod—The Rev. Messrs. L. V. Lee, H. B. Jamison, L. C. Harrison, Charles Clingman, S. M. Bird, W. N. Claybrook; Messrs. G. A. Taft, F. B. Weeks, Sam McNeal, W. G. Franklin, A. J. Dossett, W. J. Battle.

The Council closed with a diocesan dinner at the Rice Hotel, at which Bishop Quin acted as toastmaster and Bishop Kinsolving, Mr. W. J. Battle and the Rev. R. DeOvies made addresses. Eight hundred delegates were present from forty-seven parishes and missions of the Diocese.

The next Council will be held in Waco, in January of 1922.

H. M. K.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Recruiting for the Ministry.

Acting on the suggestion of the Commission on the Ministry appointed by the Department of Religious Education, the Bishop has sent a strong and earnest letter to the clergy urging them to make an effort to obtain recruits for the ministry offering the following program: First, to call together early in Lent a congregational conference after some week-day evening service calling attention to the decrease in the number of postulants for Holy Orders, asking parents what reasons they can give that their sons do not offer themselves for the ministry. Second, to look over the list of young parishioners and select those whom the clergy are led to believe would be fit and worthy to serve at the altar; get in touch with the parents and the young men themselves and approach them on the subject; and third, at every service during Lent, with suitable explanation to the people, summon them to pray both in public and in private that young men in the congregation who are apt and meet may offer themselves for the ministry. Enclosed in the letter was a collect which the Bishop has authorized for use in the public services of the Church in the Diocese during Lent.

Inter-racial Conference: An inter-racial committee composed of five white men and five negro men has been called together in Savannah by the Bishop to discuss the race problems and how to remedy some of the unfortunate misunderstandings existing between the white and colored people. Sunday, January 23, was inter-racial Sunday in the State, and on that Sunday the rector of Christ Church, Savannah, the Rev. John Durham Wing, D. D., delivered a masterly and forceful sermon on the race problem in America today. Dr. Wing took his for text Rom. 15:1, "We then, that are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak," suggesting as some of the solutions of the problem that there be vigorous and unrelenting opposition to lynching; that the negro must be assured of even-handed justice in the courts; that he must have adequate educational advantages, and that he must have improved living conditions.

The Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta, the Rev. H. H. Barber, rector, held its annual parish meeting on Wednesday, January 12. Reports from all parish organizations were read, one of the finest being that of the Church school. It was decided at this meeting to form the Church Service League, to take care of much of the social service work which has heretofore been divided among the several societies of the parish. This is the first parish unit of the league to be formed in the Diocese. After the business meeting refreshments were served by the women of the parish.

Mrs. G. K. B. Wade, Supply Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary from the Church Missions House, visited Savannah Thursday, January 27, and at a joint meeting of the four parish branches, preceded by a corporate communion at Christ Church, spoke to the members on the new plans for box work. The night before Mrs. Wade met with some of the members of the branch of St. Augustine's Church (colored), and left Thursday afternoon for Brunswick to visit the next day the School for Negro Boys and Girls of St. Athanasius' Parish.

St. Michael and All Angels' Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, Savannah, held an interesting meeting January 21, using the Missionary Calendar for the program. The members met in the church, and after the opening prayers by the rector, the Rev. J. D. Miller, different members read from the calendar some of the subjects treated. After the program the members adjourned to the parish hall and supper was served.

E. D. J.

IDAHO.

Rt. Rev. F. H. Touret, D. D., Bishop.

Dean Chamberlaine to Be Canon Missioner of Easton, Md.

The Very Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, dean of St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, has resigned his work in Idaho after eighteen years of service in the district, and accepted the position of Canon Missioner under Bishop Davenport, of the Diocese of Easton. His resignation has been accepted with great reluctance by the Bishop and Chapter, and resolutions were adopted expressive of appreciation of long years of service.

During his ministry in Idaho, Dean Chamberlaine labored for three years among the Mormons, two years at Blackfoot, and among the Indians on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, two years on the new Twin Falls irrigation tract, four years among the miners in the Coeur d'Alene mining district of North Idaho, two years as Archdeacon, and the past five years as dean of St. Michael's Cathedral. During the latter period he succeeded in working off a debt of $10,000 on the cathedral, and had the joy of assisting in the service of consecration with Bishop Funsten and Bishop Tuttle in 1918. The number of communicants has been nearly doubled, and a handsome memorial organ and Tiffany window presented.

Dean Chamberlaine has been president of the Council of Advice, examining chaplain, chairman of the Diocesan Nation-Wide Campaign Committee, registrar, librarian, secretary of the board of St. Luke's hospital, alternate and deputy to the General Convention of 1916, and deputy to the General Convention of 1919.

He will take up his new work in the Diocese of Easton about April 1.

TENNESSEE

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting at the same time the convention of the Diocese met, the sessions being held in Calvary Church, Memphis.

The convention was opened with celebration of Holy Communion by Bishop Gailor, assisted by Bishop Beatty and the Rev. Charles F. Blaisdell, rector of Calvary Church. Following the communion service, Bishop Gailor preached on the theme, "And His Mother Kept All These Things in Her Heart."

The business sessions were presided over by Mrs. Loaring Clark, president, and ten officers and forty-two delegates were in attendance.

Reports of the educational work being conducted by the Auxiliary were exceptionally good and showed considerable progress being made in this direction. It was announced that Miss Nannie Hite Winston, of Louisville, Ky., a gifted leader, will be in charge of the summer conference on mission work at Sewanee this year.

B. C.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

The Annual Convention.

The twenty-sixth annual convention of the Diocese of Washington was held at St. Stephen's Church on February 2 and 3, beginning on Wednesday morning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, and adjourning late Thursday evening. The regular session of the convention was opened with the Bishop's annual address, in which many important points were stressed. The completion of the Cathedral was made the subject of a strong appeal to the Church people of Washington, as well as those all over the country. The convention was urged to use the coming Lenten season as a time of reconstruction and to let its preaching be the enforcing of the call and claims of our Lord Jesus Christ. Bishop Harding paid tribute to the life and character of the late Rev. Dr. R. H. McKim, and named others who had passed away during the year. He commented on the results of the Nation-Wide Campaign, saying that it was a long way from failure to note that the Diocese sent three times as much to the Presiding Bishop and Council and for the general work of the Church as it had ever done in its most successful year. The Bishop lamented the lack of men offering themselves for the ministry, and referred to the falling off in Sunday school enrollments. The remainder of Wednesday and all of Thursday were given over to business sessions, with the exception of Wednesday evening, when the regular missionary service of the Diocese was held in St. Stephen's Church. Every available space was used for the unusually large congregations which attended, and splendid adresses by Bishop Thurston, of Oklahoma, and Dr. James E. Freeman, the new rector of Epiphany Church, made the service one long to be remembered and of great inspiration.

At the regular business session much important routine business was accomplished, and several important items of new business brought up. The report of the Committee on Social Service, presented by the Rev. C. R. Stetson, emphasized the need of the Church's support of the child labor bill, now pending in Congress, and the evil results which might follow the proposed blue Sunday laws for the District. It was pointed out that such a law is likely to defeat the chance for any Sunday restrictions here, and that a good substitute for the present drastic measure before the House would be more effective than a support of the so-called "blue laws." Bishop Harding at this point spoke very forcibly of the need of a Christian Sabbath in Washington, deploring the fact that so many Church people do their most elaborate entertaining on Sunday, employing numbers of servants and turning the day into one of social affairs.

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education, through Canon W. L. DeVries, gave a report urging a large attendance in the Sunday schools and more young men for the ministry, and offered a resolution which the convention adopted that the clergy get in closer touch with the young men of the Church with this in view. By another resolution adopted the Church Service League was given recognition by the Diocese. Dean C. C. F. Bratenahl gave a report of the Church Pension Fund Committee, stating that it is expected that by the next annual convention certain recommendations will be made regarding a merger of the Church Pension Fund and the Service Clergy Relief Fund.

Action to guard against indiscriminate collection of funds for social or charitable work in the name of the Episcopal Church was taken by the convention. It was decided in resolutions adopted that hereafter persons desiring to make such collections must secure permission from the Board of Social Service, which in turn must have the sanction of the Bishop.

The Philips legacy to the Diocese was accepted and a committee appointed to administer such funds as may become available before the next convention, when a permanent canon will be appointed to use the fund for the Diocese under the provisions of the will. The amount is estimated to be about $50,000, and is to be used for the missionary work of the Diocese of Washington. When this work no longer needs the income from this fund, the money shall be used to extend the missionary work into Maryland and Virginia. The will also provides that funds may be used for the education of missionaries for such work. The committee appointed consists of the Bishop of Washington, two clergy and two laymen.

The Committee on "The House of Churchwomen" was continued until the next convention, with the Rev. Herbert Scott Smith as chairman. Reports of the Nation-Wide Campaign were given by Rev. D. W. Curran, chairman of the District Committee of the Nation-Wide Campaign, and cheering word as to the success of the undertaking was brought by the Rev. William H. Milton.

A canon law of unusual interest, adopted by the convention, was to the effect that unless all parochial reports are in the hands of the Bishop before January 15th the clergymen and lay delegates from the delinquent parish shall be precluded from holding any office in the convention, either by election of the convention or appointment by the Bishop. This step was taken as a result of the difficulty which has attended getting reports in time for the convention. So many parishes have been delinquent in this respect that the Bishop has found it almost impossible to get an accurate report of the state of the Church.

A committee was authorized to make arrangements for the securing of a salaried publicity agent whose position would be a permanent one.

By unanimous consent the Bishop's salary was raised $2,000.

The following committees and deputies were elected:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. G. F. Dudley, L. R. Levering, Herbert Scott Smith, J. W. Austin; Messrs. Marcus Benjamin, J. H. Gordon, W. C. Rives.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. C. P. Spaulding, C. T. Warner, G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. W. Curran; Messrs. S. E. Kramer, H. L. Rust, H. P. Blair, E. L. Stock.

The convention is to meet next year at Trinity Church, of which Rev. David R. Covell is rector.

The Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman was formally instituted as rector of Epiphany Parish Sunday, February 6, at 11 A. M., by the Bishop of the Diocese. Senior Warden George Truesdell delivered the keys of the church to the new rector, who preached the sermon and administered the Holy Communion. Dr. Freeman will be present at the services at 8 P. M. on Ash-Wednesday at Epiphany Chapel, when he will talk informally to the people. A large reception to Dr. and Mrs. Freeman and Miss Freeman was held in Epiphany Parish Hall on Monday evening, February 7, when all the clergy of the Diocese and the people of the parish were invited.

M. M. W.

Laymen's Lenten Services: The Laymen's Service Association, organized in the Diocese of Washington about two years ago, made up of branches in many parishes of the Diocese, with a membership of about five hundred men, is a strong, virile body of men, whose desire is to aid the individual parish by initiating work and aiding the rector.

During Holy Week of last year this organization held mid-day services, which were well attended. This year, through the courtesy of the manager of Keith's Theatre, services will be held daily from February 14 to Good Friday, with the exception of Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The Washington Federation of Churches has been invited to join this year in making these gatherings more largely attended by the men of all denominations. The services begin promptly at 12:30, with a hymn, followed by a short prayer by a different resident clergyman each day, then a layman of note will address those present for fifteen minutes, ending with a hymn and the benediction.

Many prominent speakers have already been secured, and it is confidently felt that these services will be largely attended by the residents of the national capital. A hearty invitation is extended to all Christian persons to be present. The unique feature of these services will be that they will be addressed by laymen. L. G.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

D. M. S. Takes Over Support of Woman Workers.

The Executive Committee of the Diocesan Missionary Society held a regular meeting in Richmond on February 1, with a large attendance of members. Several appropriations for 1921, which were not in hand at the December meeting, were presented and granted. The outstanding action of the meeting was the assumption by the Diocesan Missionary Society of the salaries of all women workers in the mountain mission districts. These salaries have hitherto been paid out of funds raised by the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, and by the missionaries themselves, and this action will mark a real forward step in the missionary work of the Diocese. This will mean an increase of ten thousand dollars annually in the appropriations of the society. The Nation-Wide Campaign Committee has set aside to the society $50,000 for 1921, instead of $40,000 in 1920.

Endowment Fund for Church Schools.

A special meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Church schools in the Diocese was held in St. Paul's Parish House, Richmond, on Tuesday evening, February 1, with a full attendance of members.

The Rev. F. E. Warren and Mr. Ward Marston, both of Urbanna, were elected to fill vacancies in the board, to serve until the next annual Council nominates men for permanent membership. Reports of the present financial condition and prospects for the current year were made by each one of the three schools, St. Anne's, St. Catherine's and St. Christopher's. These reports were most encouraging, showing that each school is in splendid financial condition and doing effective work. In this first year of the system these schools show a total enrolment of between three hundred and fifty and four hundred boys and girls, and prospects are very bright for great growth in enrolment. Each school is planning to introduce as part of its curriculum the complete program of religious instruction which is being prepared by the Diocesan Board of Religious Education.

The board devoted a great deal of the time of its meeting to discussion of plans for the development of the schools already in the system, and for the establishment of the two schools to be started at Tappahannock and Urbanna. The payment of the purchase price of the land to be secured at these two places was ordered; the further disposition of the Nation-Wide Campaign appropriation for 1921 was referred to the Finance Committee for report to a meeting to be held about March 1.

At this meeting the Bishop reported the receipt of two checks, one of $25 from the Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church, Richmond, and one of $50 from a laywoman of the Diocese, to start an Endowment Fund for the Church schools. Another member of the Church augmented these gifts to a sufficient amount to purchase a one hundred dollar Liberty Bond, as the nucleus of this Endowment Fund. This purchase has since been made. From this little seed we hope that a large and useful Endowment Fund will go. It can easily be seen that in measure as the Endowment Fund grows, the schools will be enabled either to reduce tuition charges, or devote more of their income to the establishment of scholarships for boys and girls unable to pay the full prices.

Meeting of Churchmen's League.

The most interesting as well as the best attended meeting of the Churchmen's League of Henrico Parish was its winter meeting held last Friday evening, February 4, in All Saints' Parish House, Richmond.

The feature of the evening was an address by Bishop Brown on the work of a Bishop of a Diocese. He spoke of the burdens necessarily resting on a Bishop and of the ways in which a Laymen's League could help in lightening these burdens. This is just what the Churchmen's League is for—to help wherever it can in the work of the Church as a whole, and particularly in the Diocese of Virginia, and more especially in the parish of Henrico.

This league is composed of the rectors, all members of the vestries of each church in Henrico Parish, and one delegate for each fifty communicants or fraction thereof. The Executive Committee consists of one member from each church in Henrico Parish and the usual officers, all of whom must be laymen.

At the meeting just held the Committee on Work in Vacant Parishes reported that there were no vacant parishes that could be reached within a reasonable time from this city, because the league was seeing to it that services are held in all such parishes. The committee also reported that wherever possible the work in each vacant parish should be taken care of by one man instead of several, experience having shown that this method is more satisfactory.

The Committee on the Work of the City Missionary is busily engaged in forming a volunteer motor corps to assist Mr. Montague in his work.

Short addresses were made by several members, all of which were helpful and much enjoyed. The roll was called by churches, and Monumental stood first with fourteen members present.

B. J.

The Rev. William B. Lee, for nearly forty years rector of Ware and Abingdon Churches, Gloucester County, has resigned, to take effect June, 1921, when he will retire from active work. Mr. Lee's long and laborious ministry in Gloucester has endeared him to the people of the county in and out of his own congregation, who unfeignedly regret the necessity of his relinquishing his work.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Home for Boys, Covington: An Urgent Appeal.

I have just learned that there is an epidemic of whooping cough and measles at the Home for Boys at Covington, Va. One death from pneumonia has resulted.

Everything used in such cases of illness is needed, above all, funds with which to provide medicine and trained nurses.

I feel it to be my duty to make known these facts in order that such as can help may as speedily as possible send relief to this worthy institution in its hour of distress.

I heartily commend this cause and earnestly appeal to all who can do so to minister in such ways as they can to these suffering children.

Robert C. Jett.

Stuart Hall: At the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Stuart Hall, held in Staunton, the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop of Southwestern Virginia, was elected a member and president of the board; Bishop Arthur C. Thomson, Bishop-Coadjutor of Southern Virginia, vice-president; Mr. J. S. Cochran, secretary, and Mr. A. F. Robertson, treasurer. This action gives the new Diocese of Southwestern Virginia official representation on the board, in connection with Southern Virginia and Virginia.

MARYLAND

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Md-day Lenten Services.

The mid-day Lenten services, which are being held as usual this year in Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, the Rev. Dr. A. B. Kinsolving, rector, are the only mid-day services held in the city this Lent. The following is a list of the preachers, beginning February 9, Ash-Wednesday:

Ash-Wednesday—The Rt. Rev. Theodore P. Thurston, D. D.

February 10—The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D.

February 11—The Rev. Wyatt Brown, Litt. D.

February 14 to February 16—The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, President St. Stephen's College.

February 17—The Rev. Hugh Birckhead, D. D.

February 18—The Rev. Clifford Gray Twombly, D. D.

February 21—The Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D.

February 22 to February 25—The Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D.

February 28 to March 4—The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., LL. D.

March 7—The Rev. William L. DeVries, Ph. D., D. D.

March 8 to March 11—The Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D.

March 14—The Rev. William H. Garth.

March 15 to March 18—The Rev. William H. VanAllen, D. D., LL. D.

March 21—The Rev. Henry H. Marsden.

March 22—The Rev. S. Arthur Huston.

March 23—The Rev. Samuel McComb, D. D.

March 24—The Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D.

Good Friday, March 25—The rector. Three hours' service.

What else does anxiety about the future bring thee but sorrow upon sorrow?—Thomas A. Kempis.

One secret act of self-denial, one sacrifice of inclination to duty, is worth all the good thoughts, warm feelings, passionate prayers, in which idle people indulge themselves.—Card. Newman.

People pay far more attention to our example than to our advice.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

LET THE LITTLE ONES COME UNTO ME.

We have so often regretted the lack of institutions supported by our Church for the help and refuge of the destitute that it gives us the keenest pleasure to publish this week the account of the Jarratt Home for Girls, which, although not strictly a Church institution, is nevertheless receiving regular and substantial support from the Church.

It is all the more gratifying, too, to know that this tribute to the good work being done here comes from a person who is not a member of our own communion herself, but is the very efficient head of the Associated Charities of one of our large cities.

This article is perhaps a trifle local, but we feel that it is interesting to our readers throughout the South to know of the good work being done at Jarratt, Va., and we may say here too that this department will welcome communications of giving information concerning any other such institutions in any of our Southern Dioceses.

The preliminary part of this communication will throw some light upon the life of children who, even here in our own dear land of plenty, are destitute of garments which in most homes are thought to be essential to decency if not to comfort, truly half the world does not know how the other half lives.

We conclude with the following letter received this week:

"My Dear Mr. Montague:

Last Friday I took two of our little children up to the Episcopal Home at Jarratt. This morning, at the Case Committee meeting, I was telling our group of women about this trip, and how entirely satisfactory I found the home, and the Episcopalians present were all most interested in having other Episcopalians know of the work that is being done for the children by the Church as a whole. I am therefore writing you the story of the day, and you can use as much or as little of it as you like for the Southern Churchman, if, of course, any of it is suitable for that paper. The people who are helping this home would, I think, greatly appreciate having a little publicity concerning their work.

Martha and Lena were two little girls without a father and with a feeble-minded mother. The home from which home by extreme courtesy, and the children had no knowledge of the care they had come could only be called a and love that is usually extended to youngsters of their age. When the mother of the children was sent to a hospital, both the children were taken to the City Home. Later, when it was found that she would never be able to care for them again, they were sent to the Children's Detention Home until arrangements could be made to take them to Jarratt. This moving about from one place to another had made the children extremely nervous, and when I called for them at 7 A. M. I was greeted with howls of woe. These quieted, however, after we had gotten the taxi, and interest in the surrounding scenery made them forget they were with a total stranger. When we arrived at Broad Street Station, however, trouble broke out afresh when the colored porter put his head into the taxi. The children absolutely refused to walk; I had to pick one up under each arm—children of three and five weigh something, too—and waddle with them to the ticket office. They were diverted by being perched on each side of the ticket office and watching the man behind the bars. Tears were forgotten and Martha agreed to walk to the train, when unfortunately, a would-be helpful man, knowing that the time in which we had to catch the train was extremely limited, attempted to pick her up; both the children began screaming at that, and again I had to carry a double pack. After we got in the train skies cleared again, and in their efforts to thoroughly clean the windows on the car, all minor disturbances were forgotten. They had had so much to do with nurses for the last few days that they could not get over the fact that I was not a nurse, and I had to tell my name at very frequent intervals. This Martha found most diverting, and would insist on going down the aisle informing sympathetic travelers that that was not a nurse, but was Miss Whiting. Interest in this statement never failed to bring forth revelations concerning her apparel, the most interesting of which was that she had on an underskirt, and any one who would listen to her chatter was forced to see this beautiful article—which came from the twenty-five cent store, and was the first she had ever worn.

After a trip with many other diverting instances, we arrived at Jarratt station, and had to go nine miles in an automobile. The children bounced around like peas on a griddle until I held them, and then they went to sleep until peacefully we arrived at our destination. The minute the car stopped howls began ,and it was a very noisy party that was welcomed by Miss Gage, a woman about thirty who loves children, and to whom children turn as a matter of course. Her little family all adore her.

Jarratt is not an institution in any sense of he word. The home can only accommodate nine children, and is literally a home. There is a large living-room, comfortable dining-room, then the kitchen and a small room which is used for the children's playthings, though they do not keep them there by any manner of means. There is a large room with seven single beds for the little girls, Miss Gage's room, which also has two cribs in it, and another room which accommodates Miss Gage's assistant—not a very large place, but beautifully neat, and there is an atmosphere of cheer and comfort, which would make a home out of a hovel.

Some months ago we placed a little girl there, who had never known any care or attention. Today she is about four years old, and very fussy indeed about having fresh clothes and plenty of hair brushing, and she was full of suggestions as to what Lena and Martha should do, and Miss Gage was sure that she would have a beautiful time showing them how to take care of themselves, for Dorothy has become so independent that she resents actively anybody's having to wash her face. Six months ago the child would never have thought of saying excuse me, where today she is as courteous as the best brought up child you know. All the children are gaining weight, and I was much pleased to see the change which had been made in one of our little girls who lately became motherless. The only side we had ever known was a shy and timid one, but at Jarratt she is the liveliest little miss imaginable, full of fun and laughter.

The two new arrivals, having exercised their lungs sufficiently to create an appetite, ate a hearty meal, then entered into a lively game of romp with some of the older children. In the midst of this diversion I retreated for fear of starting a fresh outburst if I waited for any farewells.

I then visited one of the men who has been most influential in starting and caring for this home, and who has the welfare of the children very closely at heart. The whole community is interested in the home as a whole, and in the children as individuals, and the children receive as much love as any child needs. They are petted and made much of by every one. All the people in the community give generously of what they have to share, as I have heard from various sources they have not much money, but they give clothing, etc., to the full extent of their ability—in fact, we had better call it sharing rather than giving. One man of about sixty years old keeps the home supplied with fire wood, which he has to cut himself, though he is not physically strong enough to do this work. There are many other instances of the same sort of self-sacrifice for the cause.

A good many people know of the fine work being done at Covington, but few people know of the equally fine work that is being done at Jarratt, and I hope you will be able to give a little publicity to this home. I am sure that if the children placed there do not turn out fine women, it will not be the fault of Miss Gage or any of the people connected with the organization."

General Secretary.

Faith: All upon which the term of Paulinism has been bestowed is contained in embryo in this verse—"This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him Whom He hath sent"—which at the same time forms the point of union between Paul and James. Faith is the highest kind of work, for by faith a man gives himself; and a free being can do nothing greater than to give himself. It is in this sense that James opposes works to a faith which is nothing more than intellectual belief; and it is in a perfectly analogous sense that Paul opposes faith, active faith, to works of mere observance. The faith of Paul is really the works of James, according to the sovereign formula of Jesus. "This is the work of God, that you believe."—F. Godat.

We reach the stars sometimes by stooping down to the mud of the world's need.—Bryan Collier.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

FEBRUARY.

1. Tuesday.
2. Wednesday. Purification B. V. M.
6. Quinquagesima Sunday.
9. Ash Wednesday.
13. First Sunday in Lent.
16, 18, 19. Ember Days.
20. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Thursday. St. Matthias.
27. Third Sunday in Lent.
28. Monday.

Collect for First Sunday in Lent.

O Lord, Who for our sake didst fast forty days and forty nights; give us grace to use such abstinence, that our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey Thy godly motions in righteousness and true holiness, to Thy honor and glory, Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Chrysalis.

Virginia C. Castleman.

In long unbroken sleep I once did lie.
No sight nor sound pierced thro' my torpid brain;
No victor hand broke thro' the encircling chain
In whose dull grasp I lingering came to die.
No light of heavenly radiance from the sky
Might enter the dark portal of my prison—
Until my body from its grave had risen
A sordid, groveling thing of earth was I.
I woke with joy! for echoes of a song
More sweet than mortals know burst on my ear,
And beauteous color swept with light along
The pathway of the sunlit heavens clear:
My soul uprose, shook off its chain, and strong
On shining pinions left its dwelling drear.

An Episcopal Mendicant.

When I am asked to write something for the Alaskan Churchman about the twenty-five years' episcopate of Bishop Rowe, I turn with relief from narratives of fatigues and exposures, of short rations and low temperatures, of perils and escapes, concerning all of which the Bishop is habitually reticent except under pressure, to a consideration of the more humdrum, but much more anxious and really onerous task of supervising the work throughout the district and of securing the funds necessary for its prosecution. Taking for granted that hardness which the missionary is enjoined to endure as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, I am confident that Bishop Rowe would set down the raising of the funds for his work as his heaviest responsibility during these twenty-five years.

The Board of Missions does the best it can, and, one feels sure, has always done the best it could, with the resources at its disposal. In some respects it has been complaisant to Alaska; has shown a willingness to consider and concede the special charges which the physical conditions of the work involve. The Board is multi-shouldered and stalwart, and doubtless bears much blame that should not be laid upon it. It is no purpose of mine to add thereto. Alaska has only gratitude to the Board of Missions.

Yet it is an old story of the missionary episcopates that they are turned loose upon their work with all the means of doing it to seek; that the consecration service over, the new Bishop is despatched to his new work with little more than a set of vestments from the parish of which he had been the rector, and, perhaps, an Episcopal ring from the clergy who had been his brethren.

The Board does not build churches or schools or rectories or hospitals. It will provide stipends or parts of stipends for clergy whom the Bishop discovers and induces to come to him, and for the rest it allows the Bishop to solicit funds. Of course, we understand that all this is to be changed by the Nation-Wide Campaign, and every missionary Bishop is hoping and praying that the change may indeed come.

But all through his quarter of a century of office it has been Bishop Rowe's task to secure a great part of all the moneys expended in Alaska by solicitation among the parishes of the older dioceses. He was a compelling and constraining figure, newly come out of the waste places of the earth, newly come from "silent, smoky Indians" of the Yukon, from the fur-clad Eskimos of the Arctic coast, from the little companies of white men pushed further into the cold and darkness of the frigid zone that even the quest for gold had lured men before; from living their life and sharing their food and their quarters. The story he told moved as much by the modesty and simplicity of the teller as by its strange facts. There was always a drawing back rather than a pushing forward, a waiting rather than an anticipation; there was no eagerness to be heard; he always took the lowest seat and waited to be asked up higher.

Some of us indeed who listened to those early narratives at General Conventions of the Church were indignant at the little and perfunctory regard shown him by the "lords of the articles" in their arrangements for public speaking, and at San Francisco, when his time was so intruded upon and overlapped by an important, loquacious layman from the East, that he had a scant ten minutes at the end of a long night meeting for the story he had come so far to tell, we made arrangements to secure a church and to gather a special audience for him; from which time and place dates my own resolve to go to him if he should ask me.

In the great parishes he was always warmly received, I think, and as he went his rounds he interested generous persons here and there who contributed to his work and enabled buildings to be erected and equipment to be provided. But the ceaseless burden of such solicitation, the need of long absences from his jurisdiction and constant travel and speaking, if the enterprises already set on foot were to be maintained and others started—all this was more trying and wearing, I am sure, than the hardships and privations of the winter trail. I warrant the Bishop had rather have been traveling with the dog-sled over the snow and ice of the interior than rolling in Pullman cars from town to town and making his reiterated appeals for financial support. It had to be done, and it was done; sometimes with gratifying success and sometimes amidst continual discouragements; it was done, and the work went on and grew and spread. But as Bishop Rowe looks back on those twenty-five years, I am sure that his advocacy and mendicancy, the long months spent away from his people and his work, the anxious days and nights lest his funds should be insufficient to meet his bills and provision his far-flung stations, took much greater toll of his strength and spirit than all the hardships of the North.—Archdeacon Stuck in August Alaskan Churchman.

Communion.

(By a Western Logging Camp Blacksmith.)

Lord, this cathedral Thine own hands have made;
Its peer no mortal eye hath ever seen;
Wide walls of golden silence hung with green,
And pews of sunlit, shimmering brocade;
Majestic fluted pillars to uphold
A vast blue-vaulted dome, ablaze with light—
While altar cloths, with twining flowers bright,
Bear sacraments in carven cups of gold.

Thy creatures hymn their thanks for life and love;
Sweet fragrance from a thousand censers floats—
What melodies divine, from myriad throats,
Rise anthem-like in praise to Thee above!
My spirit kneels, Thy blessing to receive;
Though I am mute, Thou knowest all my thought;
I feel Thy presence, and my faith hath brought
To me a peace that Thou alone canst give.

—Seattle Churchman.

For the Southern Churchman.

A Legend of the Wheat of Bethlehem.

From the French.

Eugenie Du Maurier.

In Bethlehem, a name which signifies the House of Bread, the new-born Child Jesus was resting in a manger. A pale head of golden wheat, overlooked at harvest, lay entangled amid the straw which served as a bed for the Divine Child. And joyously upbearing this very sweet burden, the head of wheat exclaimed: "Oh, dear Lord God, it is a great honor for me to be thus chosen as a part of Thy bed. My whole desire henceforward is to become Thy food, and thus to be used of Thee."

And the Child hearkened, smiling, to this sweet prayer.

So when Joseph and Mary took their Son to carry Him down into the land of Egypt—fleeing from Herod, who would have destroyed the Lord of the world—the head of wheat fastened itself to the clothing of the Child by its myriad barbed points and clung forcibly that it might accompany its gentle Creator.

Not very far from Bethlehem they had occasion to cross the fields of Amaliel, an Israelite of heartfelt integrity, and one who feared God. On beholding the travelers this patriarch greeted them courteously and said: "The Lord be with you! May He grant you health and length of days!" Then he added: "This lovely Child Whom you carry is the fairest ever seen in the land of Israel. Even the Messiah, I verily believe, will have no more beautiful countenance!"

"I give you thanks," said Jesus' mother. "The Lord hath granted to you to see the day of His Christ."

Then perceiving on the Child's garment the head of golden wheat, she took it off, flung it into an open furrow with this prayer: "May it please God to multiply these grains of wheat and pour blessings on the house of Amaliel!"

And the wheat murmured as it fell: "O Lord, make me the bread which shall feed Thy Sacred Body—and may I never be parted from Thee!" Ere long the grains of wheat sprouted in the furrow, each seed grew and blossomed and bore an hundredfold.

Thus it was with every succeeding harvest in the fields of Amaliel. The blessing of the Lord was multiplied upon his house, because he had greeted with joy the Child of salvation. So he became very rich and powerful in the land of Judea.

Every year, in the month of Nisan, he would make out of his wheat a very pure bread and carry it to Jerusalem to be used at the Feast of Unleavened Bread. And when many years had passed, Jesus called Peter and John, disciples whom He loved with His whole heart, and said to them: "Behold, I keep the passover with My disciples! Go ye, therefore, and make ready a large upper room, duly garnished, and well supplied with all things required by the faith of the prophet, a lamb, unleavened bread, and bitter herbs." Thus going forth, they met by the way a man bearing white loaves, very beautiful. To whom they said: "If it so please you, give us some of this bread, for the Master is to keep the Passover, as it is written." "Take them! take them, good masters!" was the reply. "I know you as the apostles of Jesus of Nazareth. And I, too, Amaliel, believe that He is the Messiah, the Son of God, Who is come into the world."

After supper Jesus took the bread and gave thanks to His Father, for the hour of His love had come. Now at that great moment the grain which had become bread sang in His heart: "Thanks unto Thee, O Lord of goodness! Thou hast heard my prayer, and deigned to choose me for the nourishment of Thy sacred body. Blessed be Thou for Thy remembrance of the wheat stalk of Bethlehem which once lay beneath Thee in the manger of Thy infancy! Lo, now it is my perfect joy to be crushed in Thy service and made for all time the symbol of Thy blessed body to those who shall take bread in remembrance of Thee."

The "Garden of Children" in Japan.

From a missionary standpoint it is because there are so many children everywhere, in the cities or on the village streets, who could be so easily gathered into a kindergarten, and because in a mission kindergarten one is usually so untrammeled by government regulations and so free to teach Christianity to children at the most impressionable age, that kindergarten work in Japan offers a field of such extraordinary missionary interest. Not only have we a free hand to teach Christianity every day to the children, but in some instances, far from opposing Christian teaching, the parents seem eager for this very thing, for it sometimes happens that in spite of a well-equipped government kindergarten in the neighborhood, parents will send their children preferably to a Christian kindergarten. They somehow feel that a Christian kindergarten has something to offer—some peculiar method of building character in the child which a government kindergarten, however well equipped, does not quite seem to possess.

As there are few Christian primary schools in our own mission—none into which the children may enter after leaving a mission kindergarten—one realizes that every day in the kindergarten must count if the seeds of Christianity are to be so thoroughly sown that neither indifference to Christianity nor hostility towards it, in a heathen home or in a non-Christian primary school, shall be able to take from the child that faith in the true God which has begun to be his in the kindergarten.—Selected.

The Touch of Human Hands.

The touch of human hands—
That is the boon we ask;
For groping, day by day,
Along the stony way,
We need the comrade heart
That understands,
And the warmth, the living warmth
Of human hands.

The touch of human hands—
Not vain, unthinking words,
Nor that cold charity
Which shuns our misery;
We seek a loyal friend
Who understands,
And the warmth, the pulsing warmth
Of human hands.

The touch of human hands—
Such care as was in Him
Who walked in Galilee
Beside the silver sea;
We need a patient guide
Who understand,
And the warmth, the loving warmth
Of human hands.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

The Scale of Eternity.

"We know that the only sensible thing to do really," said Bishop Gore in a recent sermon, "is to reckon our lives on the scale of eternity; there you see the real relation between the value of eternal things and of temporal things. You see the worthlessness of living for the world which passeth away, with the scribes and the Pharisees, the moneyed men and the politicians. The only people who have right and reason on their side are the people who live for eternal things."

If for one hour our modern world could hold in vivid certainty as a living conviction this old gospel truth of which Bishop Gore reminded his hearers, the new order, for which tired, timid, over-anxious, sorrowing people the world over are praying today would become a glad reality. The most practical doctrine in the gospels is that which proclaims the immortality of the soul. We all care too much for the wrong things. We love too little the real things. Christianity has always been the most effective social gospel because its roots lie deep in other-worldliness.—The Churchman.

When a Boy's Lazy—When He's Not.

Probably there never was a boy whose parents didn't seriously suspect him of being lazy. Yet there never was a boy who did not like to work. The explanation of this paradox (which could be extended to girls without much refitting) lies in the fact that parents and children, at least when the children are little, usually disagree about what sort of thing is worth doing. The parents look on work as the thing which ought to be done, and that is what the customary—not to say normal—child does not want to do. That is what he resists as long as he can and shirks whenever he can—accepting entirely from that viewpoint the parental judgment that he hates work with a mighty hatred. Yet the hardest-hearted parent imagined in tragic romance never imposed on a child any task harder than the normal boy will take voluntarily—when it happens to be something that he himself has thought of and wants to do for his own amusement—something, for instance, like digging a cave in a stony hill for a pirate's den or rowing a boat ten miles to a good fishing cove. Work that the boy wants to do—which, of course, he never would think of calling work—is just fun, and fun a fellow could keep up all day and all night if folks would let him.

Obviously, then, the true boy can no longer be lazy after somebody convinces him that the thing he ought to do—the thing worth doing—the thing that will be of benefit to other people and help the world along—is just as much fun as the self-pleasing little idea that he hits on out of his own head and for his own entertainment. That is to say, the achievement of habits of industry comes by a sort of religious conversion (better not tell the boy that, though; it would frighten him again), having quite the same quality that brings a lad to religious experience in other lines of interest. For making an industrious boy out of a lazy one is essentially a process of enlarging him from a place where he cares only for himself and what interests him to a place where he is genuinely in sympathy with other folks and is ready and pleased to do what helps a lot of people, rather than himself alone. Socialization of his mind is what happens regarding this sort of work; and when his mind and heart are socialized all the way through, so that he thinks socially on every subject that touches him and other folks then, behold, he is at least well inside the portals of religion.—The Continent.

The highest achievement of charity is to love our enemies; but to bear cheerfully with our neighbor's failings is scarcely an inferior grace. It is easy enough to love those who are agreeable and obliging—what fly is not attracted by sugar and honey? But to love one who is cross, perverse, tiresome, is as unpleasant a process as chewing pills. Nevertheless, this is the real touchstone of brotherly love. The best way of practicing it is to put ourselves in the place of him who tries us, and to see how we would wish him to treat us if we had his defects.—Francis de Sales.

For the Young Folks

Waiting to Grow.

Little white snowdrops just waking up,
Violet, daisy and sweet buttercup!
Think of the flowers that are under the snow,
Waiting to grow.

And think what hosts of queer little seeds—
Of flowers and mosses; and ferns and weeds,
Are under the leaves and the snow,
Waiting to grow!

Think of the roots getting ready to sprout,
Reaching their slender brown fingers about,
Under the ice, and the leaves and the snow,
Waiting to grow.

Only a month or a few weeks more,
Will they have to wait behind that door,
Listen and watch. for they are below—
Waiting to grow!

Nothing so small or hidden so well,
That God will not find it and very soon tell
His sun where to shine, and His rain where to go
To help them grow.

—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Fireflies.

Did you know that lightning-bugs, or, as some people call them, fireflies, have very weak eyes? Yes, when the world and all the little things on it were being made these little yellow and black bugs were not given strong eyes. Afterwards, when they would go out for nice little flying exhibitions, the sun hurt their poor little eyes so that they could hardly see. So they decided to do as the owls and bats did, and wait until night before they flew through the air on different little errands. And let me tell you now, that every little lightning bug has a tiny little home. Never mind where they live, but a very wise little bird told me. The fireflies thought that it would be so nice for them to go to see each other after the sun had disappeared, but instead of that they found that they really couldn't see any better at night than they did when the sun was shining, so they didn't know what to do.

At last they called a meeting in a big oak tree and all the lightning bugs made suggestions. Finally one wise old bug said: "My friends, I have listened with deep interest to all the suggestions, but it seems to me that the simplest thing has not yet been thought of, and that is, if our eyes are not enough for us to see with, we will have to carry something else along with us, and that would have to be a light." All the others agreed with him, and so it was decided that every firefly would carry a little light, not strong enough to disturb the birds sleeping in the trees, but enough to give each bug a light around him.

So they hired a swallow to fly to where the stars were, and break off little pieces of them. Of course, they only wanted little tiny pieces. The swallow took a large mulberry leaf, sewed it together so as to make a little pouch, and stuffed it full of grain, and in one corner of the bag he put a green crab-apple which he had scooped out and filled with water. When all was ready he looked quite fine with his little leaf bag slung over his back.

He flew and flew and finally he reached the clouds. But it was in the day that he reached the clouds, so he had to wait until night before he could even see the stars. But when it was dark except for the stars, he went from one star to another and broke off little pieces of each.

The swallow's bag was empty because he had eaten all the food, so he filled it with the broken pieces of stars. The next day he began to fly back down to earth. He flew all that day and night, and early the next morning he reached home.

At first he was too tired to talk, but after he had eaten he told about his long journey and gave the star pieces to the lightning bugs, and they fastened them on.

Sit out on your summer porch some summer afternoon and watch it grow dark. Soon you will see a little light near the grass, and a few feet away another and another and another, until finally all the air is filled with tiny little fires moving from place to place. It is nothing but the lightning bugs with their lights making little calls on each other and enjoying themselves generally. And if you notice closely you will see some of the lights disappear and then come back again. That is because the pieces of stars twinkle and disappear just as the stars in the heavens do.

I don't care what the wise folks say,
I know that the stars used to be round before the swallow broke off some of the pieces and made them pointed instead.

For the Southern Churchman.

Little Ike Walton.

Florence Aylen.

Little Ike Walton used to wish
That he might catch some elegant fish;
And his wish was father to the deed,
For he caught all the fish that he could need.

Then he made a fire as hot as could be,
And he took down a pan he'd hung on a tree;
In it he put the bacon from town,
And fried it until 'twas a nice golden brown.

He put the fish right into the fat,
And he shook it like this, and he shook it like that;
He watched it, so it wouldn't burn,
And ate it when it was done to a turn.

And when he had eaten up all the fish,
He washed his fork and he washed his dish;
eat,
They like them because they are sharp and sweet.

And every day in the month of June,
He was heard whistling a jolly tune;
He was seen coming with rod and line,
To catch the trout while the fishing was fine.

Mr. Hains and the Bear.

Real bears and live boys who really lived and did the deeds recorded of them, and when the places where they lived can still be pointed out and visited by the children and grandchildren of those boys, when they figure in a tale that is just as true as the truth, the facts are worth recording, even if the place was the mountainous county of Schuylkill, Pa., and the time eighty years ago.

Neighbor Hains' good wife had tucked their two children in the "trundle" bed pulled out from beneath the large bed, and they were peacefully sleeping, the head of the little bed against the wall and directly beneath a window that looked out toward the mountain, and then finishing the tasks of the evening, she and her husband sat down to enjoy a quiet half-hour before retiring. A slight noise outside the window aroused them, and, looking in that direction, they were startled to see an immense black bear standing with its paws upon the window sill, calmly surveying the room and its occupants. It was the sleeping children, Mr. and Mrs. Hains, the two big dogs lying sleeping upon the hearth before a low, smouldering fire and the few articles of backwoods furniture, including the big rifle that hung upon brackets fastened to the joints overhead.

Mr. Hains thought of the rifle, too, and quickly taking it down, raised it to his shoulder and aimed it at the unwelcome visitor, who appeared to pay no attention to this war-like act upon the man's part. But the man did not shoot, and after a moment's look about the room, the bear ambled away. Neighbor Hains explained the next day to inquiring people that he was afraid to shoot, lest broken glass might fall and cut his children's faces. Some of the neighbors, who, of course, had never met even a small bear at close range, were unkind enough to say they heartily believed the first part of the explanation. In a few minutes there was a great uproar in the pig-yard, where the hogs intended to supply the family bacon, lard and sausage for the coming winter were being fattened. In the house the dogs awoke and were turned out to go to the rescue of the hogs. The latter in desperation leaped over the fence and ran down a long field towards the woods, followed by the bear and the dogs. Mr. Hains stood guard at the house and kept everything safe until morning.

The two dogs were soon driven off by the great bear and came limping back home, and the hogs all were home in the morning, but one, which was found killed and partly eaten in the edge of the wood near a great pine tree. The neighbors were all told of the attack by the bear and agreed upon a plan to square accounts that evening. They realized that they had a famous old female bear that lived in the Big Swamp to deal with, but felt confident they could kill her.

Mr. Hains and a neighbor tied the remains of the unfortunate porker to a sapling within easy range of the pine tree, and towards dusk a dozen men armed with rifles climbed into the tree to await the coming of the bear to indulge in another meal on fresh pork at Neighbor Hains' expense. They brought their dogs with them, leaving them at the house where Mrs. Hains and the children had the greatest time in their lives keeping them from tearing each other to pieces. Frequent calls from the tree for Hains to hurry down, as the bear might come at any moment, finally caused him to let some chores go undone and hasten toward the large pine. His steps were considerably accelerated as he neared the tree by the announcement that they heard the bear coming, which was indeed true, and he had barely reached a safe position upon one of the lower limbs when the bear came under the tree, looked up, sniffed disdainfully and went on to her supper of pork.

Now the men began shooting. At first the bear retreated a short distance into the woods, but would immediately return to her feast.

At first the men had no excuse for not hitting the bear excepting poor marksmanship, but soon it became too dark to see clearly and Mr. Hains called to his wife to liberate the dogs. With the dogs in hot pursuit, the bear started for her home in the swamp and the hunt was over as far as the men were concerned for that night. One thing that pleased Hains was the fact that they all agreed he had done the wise thing in not attacking the bear single-handed the night before, not on account of the glass falling in the sleeping children's faces, but because they said one bullet would only have enraged the big beast and she would probably have sprung into the room and—here the speaker would pause, shake his head ominously, which was as much as to say the worst would surely have happened. Each one of the gunners declared that he had hit the bear a number of times, and that she was "more than a bear," which might mean anything your fancy could suggest. You know this happened in a German settlement, and at that time no superstition, however weird or absurd, was beyond belief.

Up on the mountain-side lived a miner, who had three boys, Peter, Tobias and George, ranging in years from seventeen to twelve. They had a cousin, John, who lived not far away. When these boys, who were all good marksmen, and loved hunting and fishing, heard how the men had let the bear escape, they were very indignant, because they were not permitted to join in that hunt, and said that the bear had not escaped full of bullet holes, as the hunters averred, but that they had one and all had an attack of "bear fever" and had never touched the bear. Perhaps this was true, for Hains, in looking over the ground afterward, saw where bullets had hit trees ten to thirty feet away from the remains of the hog.

It was not long until the bear killed a sheep near the boys' home, and they secretly planned to see what they could do. Like the men, they dragged the remains of the sheep within easy shooting distance of an old rail fence that skirted the woods. There they planned the attack. Tobias was armed with a large flintlock rifle, "Old Suse" by name, that shot a bullet weighing over one-half ounce, with which he expected to kill the bear on the spot. However, if he failed to do so, George, the younger brother, armed with a shotgun, loaded with a large bullet, was to get into action. If the bear still came on, Peter, the eldest brother, armed with a big axe, and John, the cousin, who was lame and could not run if he wanted to do so, armed with a hatchet, were to prevent the bear getting over the fence while the others were reloading their guns. Incidentally, Peter had fortified his nerve and celebrated the affair in advance by draughts from a barrel of hard cider. In consequence, he frequently demonstrated by wonderful flourishes of the big axe how he would cut Madam Bear into bear steak in just about four strokes. The other boys dexterously dodged the big axe and had all taken their proper places to await the expected marauder.

They had not long to wait. Soon they heard the breaking twigs and branches and rattling stones that told of Bruin's reckless on-coming. All were ready and waiting only to get a good opportunity to look along the sights of "Old Suse," see the fire flash in the pan, hear the loud roar of the big gun and then witness the end of the big bear of the swamp.

But there was a quick step behind the boys, and their ears caught the sharp swish of a birch rod as Grandpa Taylor kept time to his steps. Consternation seized the young hunters. One glance at their grandfather's face read disapproval of the hunt.

"Home with you, boys! What are you doing here?"

"Oh, grandpa, listen; the bear is coming!"

"Yes, and she will get you, too. Home with you, I say!"

In the "good old days" boys knew better than to "talk back," however much they might feel like doing so. There was but one thing to do—shoulder arms and retreat toward the house and leave Bruin to eat her supper in peace.

The boys built a bear pen of logs on the mountain soon after, and really had the satisfaction of knowing that the big bear had been in the trap, but on account of her great size and strength had forced open the door and escaped. The boys brought Tobias some hair that she had scraped off her back in getting out of the trap. It was fully six inches long and glossy black. The sick boy—he had typhoid fever—sighed as he thought how the big bear's glossy coat might at that moment been lying on the floor of the "best room" in their home, if only Grandpa Taylor had been a few minutes later in finding them and he had bidden "Old Suse" to "bark at the bear." As it was, she was never captured, as far as any one could learn. Her immense footprints were occasionally seen for years, but she seemed to have given up her taste for flesh and became a well-behaved bear, subsisting upon nuts, roots, berries, grubs, and occasionally, when in luck, feasting upon honey stored by bees in trees and rocks in the woods.—Presbyterian Banner.

When Pussy Purrs.

I wonder what you're thinking of, my darling little cat?
It may be meat, it may be cream, to make you sleek and fat.
Perhaps you think of trees to climb, or birds that fly so high;
It may be mice you try to catch, as by their holes you lie.

I know you think of something (it's a secret that I've found),
Because I hear, close to my ear, your thought-wheels going round.

—Mary K. Best.

Whom to Thank.

At the feet of a medical missionary a grateful father and mother knelt to worship her as a god, for she had restored their child to health. Hastily the missionary cried out to them, "We are not gods. Worship the true God." "You must be a god," they said; "no one but a god could have saved our beloved child from death." "Suppose," said the missionary, "that I wished to bestow a valuable gift upon you and sent it by the hand of one of my coolies, whom would you thank, the coolie or myself?" "We would thank you, of course; the coolie is your servant." "And so I am God's coolie, by whose hand God has been pleased to send you this gift of healing; and it is to Him you must bow and give thanks.—Selected.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street
Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd
Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"The Store that Pleases"

FOR FURNITURE

Jones Bros. & Co.

Incorporated

1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

Jno. L. Williams & Sons

BANKERS and BROKERS

Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

"Gumption" and a File.

If a boy has any "mechanical faculty," if it comes to him to use tools, let him be thankful. Such a gift of nature—"gumption" it is sometimes called—deserves to be cultivated. It will serve its possessor many a good turn.

"When I was fourteen years old," said a business man, "it became necessary for me to go out into the world and earn my share of the family expenses. I looked about with small success for a week or two, and then I saw a card hanging in a store window: 'Boy Wanted.'

"I smoothed down my hair, brushed the front of my jacket, and walked in.

"'Do you want a boy?' I asked of the clerk.

"'Back office,' he said.

"I walked back to the little den with a high partition around it, and pushing open the door, which I noticed was slightly ajar, cap in hand, I stepped in.

"It was a chilly day in November, and before I spoke to the proprietor, who was bending over a desk, I turned to close the door. It squeaked horribly as I pushed it shut, and then I found that it wouldn't latch. It had shrunk so that the socket which should have caught the latch was a trifle too high. I was a boy of some mechanical genius, and I noticed what the trouble was immediately.

"Where did you learn to close doors?" said the man at the desk.

"I turned around quickly. 'At home, sir.'

"'Well, what do you want?'

"'I came to see about the boy wanted,' I answered.

"'Oh,' said the man, with a grunt. He seemed rather gruff, but somehow the crisp speech didn't discourage me. 'Sit down,' he added; 'I'm busy.'

"I looked back at the door.

"'If you don't mind,' said I, 'and if a little noise won't disturb you, I'll put that door right while I'm waiting.'

"'Eh!' he said quickly. 'All right, go ahead.'

* * * "When I put my file back in my pocket and turned around the man at the desk was staring at me.

"'Any parents?' he asked.

"'Mother.' I answered.

"'Have her come in here with you at 2 o'clock,' he said, and turned back to his writing.

"At twenty-five I was a partner in the house; at thirty-five I had half-interest: and I have always attributed the foundation of my good fortune to the only recommendation I then had in my possession—the file."—Selected.

What Was It?

Once there was a little three-cornered black seed. It was in a small blue envelope, with many others like itself. Polly Mary was carrying them out to her garden. It was a bright May morning. Polly Mary carried the envelope clasped very tightly in her small, moist, pink fist; but one corner was not sealed tightly, and this one little seed slipped out. Straight ahead tripped Polly Mary, never noticing it at all. Down, down it fell and struck "click" on a pebble in the path. But Polly Mary was singing, "I'm going to have a garden gay," and so of course she did not hear. It was a very tiny click anyway. The little seed was sound asleep, so it did not feel hurt. It bounced off the pebble and fell again. This time it dropped into a soft, warm place—a little hole close by the old birch post that helped hold up the Concord grape trellis. Only that morning Chippy Chirkytail, the chipmunk who lived in the garden wall, had remembered hiding an acorn there in the fall and had dug it out.

Down into the little round hole where the acorn had lain slid the little black seed, still sound asleep. It had been sleeping almost a year. But that very night there came a brisk shower and settled the warm earth down around the little seed like a soft blanket. In the morning the sunshine came and made its bed still warmer; and then, what do you think? The little seed began to wake up and stretch—just a little bit at first, but the sunshine kept coaxing it. "I'm growing, I'm really growing!" it whispered to itself. "It's such fun." The very next morning it said earnestly: "I can't stay down here any longer. I feel as though there was work for me to do up there somewhere."

Up, up, up into the warm sunshine it pushed its way. The black overcoat dropped off, and there were two beautiful green leaves.

"Why-ee! I'm not a seed any longer. I'm a plant. Now I must grow."

So the little new plant grew and grew and grew. Another leaf came, then another and another and another, and the stem became very long and slender. It swayed in the sunshine.

One evening a merry breeze came along and stopped to play a while. It played so hard that the little new plant grew dizzy. It could not stand up straight. The merry breeze flitted away, with not so much as an "I'm sorry." Probably it did not notice at all. O, how queer the little new plant felt. "What shall I do? what shall I do?" it gasped.

"Here," said a dry, crisp, pleasant voice; "lean on me." It was the old birch post.

"O, thank you," whispered the little plant. And it leaned hard and soon was fast asleep. In the morning it was a whole inch taller and had walked in its sleep twice around the post. It felt safe and comfortable. "Do you mind, Mr. Post, if I keep right on leaning?" it asked timidly. It did seem much to ask of a neighbor."

"Not a bit ,not a bit," quickly answered the post. "Lean as long and as hard as you like and climb high."

"O, thank you," said the little plant.

So it leaned and clung and climbed till one day it reached the top and said "Good morning" to the grape-vine.

"Good morning. But who are you?" asked the old grape-vine quizzically.

"I—I'm a little new plant," it stammered.

"Well, well, cheer up," said the grape-vine. "So long as you are happy it doesn't matter who you are."

"Still, I should like to knok," thought the plant. But about that time it became so interested in some little things that were growing out beside its leaves that it forgot to wonder and just grew.

Then one morning a lovely blue blossom came out of one of those queer little things that had been growing beside its leaves. Polly Mary was trotting along with her watering pot when she caught sight of it. "O, O!" she called to her mother, "there's the loveliest blue morning-glory! Such a beauty! Before any have blossomed in my garden!"

"Goody, goody!" laughed the little plant. "Now I know! I'm a morning-glory! I must blossom just all I can to deserve such a lovely name."

"I never shall have any blossoms, never!" said a dry, choky voice.

"O, dear birch post!" cried the morning-glory, "don't talk that way. My blossoms are yours just as much as they are mine. Don't you see, if it had not been for your kindness I should have been quite discouraged. I should have dragged in the grass and been run over and never would have had a single blossom, not one. Don't you see that they're our blossoms?"

"Well, that is a comfort!" exclaimed the old birch post. Its voice sounded crisp and cheerful again. "'Our' blossoms! Well, well, well! Just look; tomorrow morning we shall have seven! Well, well, well!"

So the old birch post and the little new plant that by its help had grown to be a graceful morning-glory kept their part of the garden lovely all summer long.—Minnie L. Upton, in Sunday School Times.

5 Great Novelties 20 cts.

AUTUMN GLORY. A new hardy plant. The most showy Autumn bloomer, surpassing all others. It is the latest to bloom, showing its full glory after frost has killed all tender flowers. Greatest novelty in twenty years. Succeeds everywhere, reaching perfection the first season from seed, and continues blooming for years. 20 cts. per pkt.

With each order we send one trial packet each of: PINK WOOLFLOWERS, new — nothing can surpass the mass of pink flowers which it shows all season.

DAHLIA LORD GOFF, lilac pink, in great profusion. Blooms in 3 to 4 months.

JAPAN IRIS, new hybrids of all colors. Magnificent.

DIENER TOMATO, grows to weigh 3 lbs. As smooth and beautiful as an apple. Most startling new vegetable.

And our Big Catalog, all for 20 cts.

Big Catalog, free. All flower and vegetable seeds, bulbs, plants and new berries. We grow the finest Gladioli, Dahlias, Cannas, Irises, Peonies, Perennials, Shrubs, Vines, etc. All prize strains—many sterling novelties.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc. Floral Park, N.Y

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausealess colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calomel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Druggists sell Calotabs only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

BEVERLEY HEATING
Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL
OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

Cuticura Soap
The Velvet Touch
For the Skin
Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

Personal Notes

The Rev. H. Scott-Smith, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Houlton, Me., will have charge of the Mission of St. John's, Bainbridge, Ga., for the balance of the winter. The charge also includes the missions of Epiphany, Cuthbert and St. Paul's, Fort Gaines.

The Rev. Rudolph E. Schultz has resigned St. James' Memorial Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., and will remove on March 1 to Warren, O. His place will be filled by the Rev. Lewis Norman Tucker, of St. Stephen's Church, McKeesport, Pa.

All correspondence intended for the Secretary of the Diocese of Texas should be sent to the Rev. F. J. Bate, Gregg House, 209 West Twenty-seventh Street, Austin, Tex.

On account of ill health, the Rev. D. Vincent Gray, of St. Andrew's Church, New Kensington, Pa., has been advised to seek a higher altitude and drier climate, and will remove shortly to the Diocese of Spokane.

The Rev. Arthur E. Woodward, rector of Trinity, Van Buren, Ark., has accepted a call to become rector of St. Paul's, Palmyra, Mo. Mr. Woodward spent several years in missionary work in the Diocese of Missouri, and has been greatly missed since he went out of the Diocese three years ago. He will take charge of the work at Palmyra the first of April.

The Church of the Good Shepherd, Pittsburgh, has called the Rev. F. S. Gray, of the Diocese of Erie, and he is already at work in his new field of labor.

The Rev. Arthur Murray, curate at the Pro-Cathedral of the Nativity, Bethlehem, has accepted a call to St. John's Church, North Adams, Mass.

The Rev. Charles B. Dubell, of Paulsboro, N. J., has accepted the rectorship of St. John's Church, Camden. He will succeed the Rev. J. H. Townsend, who will retire from the ministry. The new rector will take charge on April 15.

The Rev. John Gass, of Ascension Church, Frankfort, Ky., who has accepted the call to become associate rector of Trinity Church, Parkersburg, will enter upon his new work in the very near future.

The Rev. John Talbot Ward, formerly rector of St. Clement's Church, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has entered upon his duties as rector of St. Mary's Church, Burlington, N. J.

RESERVATIONS FOR EUROPE
NEXT SPRING AND SUMMER
Should be made early in order to secure good space
Telephone Randolph 155, or Write
C. O. ALLEY
STEAMSHIP AND TOURIST AGENT
830 East Main Street Successor to The Richmond Transfer Co.

You Will

be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company
The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.
Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage
Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 845

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 10c.

Washington, D. C.—Special.—In order to let people all over the country see for themselves how valuable the Pathfinder can be to them, the editor of that old-established national weekly offers to send his paper on trial 8 weeks for only 10 cents. The 10 cents does not begin to pay the cost, but the editor says he is glad to invest in new friends. The Pathfinder has been going for 28 years. One family in every 65 in the entire United States now takes it. Thousands more would take it if they realized what they are missing. Only a dime sent to the Pathfinder, 116 Langdon Station, Washington, D. C., will keep your whole family informed, entertained, helped and inspired. Unusually good serial and short stories. No matter what other papers and magazines you may take, you will find the Pathfinder worth many times its cost.

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop
ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING
Mail Orders a Specialty
Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL
311 N. Second St. Phone Fan. 1286-W

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

FAMINE RELIEF.

For the convenience of our readers we publish the addresses of the treasurers of the various Relief Funds whose appeals for the starving, and especially for starving children, are so urgent and touching. The Southern Churchman will forward contributions to any of these, but to save time, postage and possibility of miscarriage, checks would better be sent directly to the treasurers as below:

Near East Relief (formerly "Armenian and Syrian Relief")—Cleaveland H. Dodge, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City.

European Relief (Central and Eastern Europe)—Franklin K. Lane, 42 Broadway, New York City; or locally for Virginia, DeSoto Fitzgerald, 218 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Chinese Famine Relief—Remit through Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

We acknowledge the following additional contributions to the fund for the relief of the sufferers from famine in China:

Members of Grace Church, Berryville, Va.	$ 3 00
Miss Helen Wells, Riverton, N. J.	5 00
Junior Red Cross Herndon Seminary, Herndon, Va.	12 00
Cash	1 00

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

PRIVATE HOME AND SCHOOL FOR CHILDREN.

An English lady, owning large country place twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va., nice school near, will take several small children to board and educate. Terms upon request. References given and exchanged. Address R, T, C, Southern Churchman.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

AUTOS FOR HIRE.

NEW AUTOMOBILES, $1.50, $2 AND $3 hour. Ben Auerbach, Boul. 5171-J, Ran. 2866.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

ORDERS FOR HAND KNIT SWEATERS, Scarfs, Golf Socks. For information write M. C. Catlin, Sweet Springs, W. Va.

CATHEDRAL STUDIO, ENGLISH Church embroideries and materials. Stoles with crosses, $7; plain, $5.50; handsome gift stoles, $12 up; burse and veil, $15, $20. Surplices and exquisite altar linens. L. V. Mackrille, 2604 Thirty-sixth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Tel. Chev. 1915.

FOR SALE—WINESAP, ALBEMARLE Pippins, $6.00-$7.00 a barrel for the benefit of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, Green county, Va. Apply to Rev. George P. Mayo, 111 N. Fifth St., Richmond, Va.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

MISS M. M. TYLER

Invites you to inspect her line of GAGE Tailored HATS. Also the ADVANCE Showing of Spring Hats in the most attractive shapes.

209 N. FOUSHEE ST.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Va.
JUST RECEIVED
A new supply of
"THE CHILDREN'S YEAR,"
By Bowie.
Price $1.25 Postpaid.

NIAGARA METAL WEATHER STRIPS Saves 25 per cent. Fuel, Prevents Rattling Windows, keeps out Dust, Dirt and Storm.
CINCINNATI REVERSIBLE METAL AND WOOD FRAME SCREENS.
L. F. HEROLD,
2 N. 11th St., Richmond, Va.
Phone Randolph 3550.

HELP WANTED

WANTED — CONSECRATED CHURCHwoman, preferably a Southern woman between thirty and fifty years of age, to act as matron of Home for Wayward Girls. Must start on small salary. References required. Write to B-1426 Blanding St., Columbia, S. C.

WANTED A WORKING HOUSEKEEPER for small family, no small children. Family located at Roland Park, Baltimore, Md. Apply to George A. Whiting, 1214 Continental Trust Building, Baltimore, Md.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER DESIRES A position to teach English, French and music. References given and required. Address Miss Randolph, Arrington, Va.

WANTED—POSITION AS NURSE, COMpanion to invalid desired, by widow. References given and requested. Address, Mrs. E. M. Stith, Gladys, Va.

WANTED—A COMPETENT LADY AS companion. Must be well educated, a good reader; also understand knitting. Age between 35 and 40; Episcopalian preferred. Address, stating full particulars, with references, Mrs. J. C. H., Buck Hill, South Richmond, Va.

WANTED—A COMPETENT MIDDLEaged woman, white or colored, to cook and take entire charge for a family of four adults. Laundry done out. In the mountains of Virginia. House has modern conveniences. Good wages and a permanent home to the right person. Reply A, care Southern Churchman.

APPEAL.

For the Endowment Fund of "Old Pohick Church," the Parish Church of Mount Vernon, the home of Washington.

Again we would remind our friends and the churches of the various dioceses of the needs of Old Pohick Church, which call for a moderate endowment fund to guarantee its upkeep in part, as well as the perpetuation of its good work. At least $50,000 is required. Of this only $3,000 is in hand.

As Bishop Tuttle said in his commendation of the fund some years ago, "The committee make appeal to the patriotism of the nation, and especially to the members of the Episcopal Church, to send their personal gifts, or church collections, on or after Washington's birthday, February 22nd, to this fund. I think this appeal is a worthy one, if only it can get a hearing in these days of want and woe clamoring on every side for help," and still clamoring with loud voice this season, but we trust that the call for Pohick may not be forgotten.

Please make checks payable to the order of the Pohick Church Endowment Fund, and send them to Mr. Harry R. Burke, Treasurer, care Burke & Herbert, Bankers, Alexandria, Va.

Committee:
REV. SAML. A. WALLIS, D. D., Chairman, Alexandria, Va.
MRS. ELIZABETH B. A. RATHBONE, Vice-Regent, Mt. Vernon Association.
MR. HARRISON H. DODGE, Superintendent, Mount Vernon.
MR. ROSEWELL PAGE, Richmond, Va.
MR. PAUL KESTER, Alexandria, Va.
COL. ROBERT E. LEE, Of Ravensworth, Va.
MISS ELIZABETH M. SHARPE, "Woodlawn Mansion," Accotink, Va.
MRS. LEWIS W. HERTLE, "Gunston Hall," Va.
MRS. EDWIN F. SWEET, Washington, D. C.
REV. E. W. MELLICHAMPE, Rector Pohick Church, Accotink, Va.

RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the Vestry of Ware Church, held on the 24th of January, 1921, in the directors' room of the Bank of Gloucester, Inc., at Gloucester, Va., Rev. William B. Lee tendered his resignation to take effect on the 30th day of June, 1921.

A committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions, which are as follows:

1st. This vestry regrets that our beloved Rector should find it necessary to resign his charge as Rector of Ware Church, having nearly completed his fortieth year as Rector, and it is with sorrowing hearts that we accept his resignation. He has been with us in our joys and griefs for all these years, always sympathetic, loving and gentle, rejoicing with those who have rejoiced an dweeping with those who wept he has endeared himself to our hearts.

2nd. We trust that our Heavenly Father will bless and keep him in his declining years, and preserve him from care and grant him health and happiness.

3rd. Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this vestry, a copy published in the Southern Churchman, and a copy sent to the Rev. Wm. B. Lee.

C. E. CARY, Chairman.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Hunter: MISS MINNIE D. HUNTER, daughter of James and Mary Graeme Hunter, of Richmond, Va., died on Monday, January 31st, at "Rutledge," Albemarle county, the residence of Mr. Wm. G. Farish

Funeral services were held from Christ Church, Charlottesville, Va. Interment in Riverview Cemetery.

"Heaven's morning breaks,
And earth's vain shadows flee."

Wallis: Died, on Friday, December 17, 1920, in Chesapeake City, RICHARD SAPPINGTON, son of the late Arthur Johns and Anna M. Wallis, of Kent county, Md.

Services were held from the Church of the Good Shepherd, in Chesapeake, on Sunday, December 19th.

Sublett: From the Charles Town General Hospital, Charles Town, Jefferson county, West Virginia, MISS JUDITH A. SUBLETT entered into rest on January 25, 1921, after a long life bravely and usefully lived.

"Let the weak say, I am strong."

Powell: Died at Chase Home, Annapolis, Md., on February 4th, in her 70th year, MISS R. C. POWELL, eldest and only remaining daughter of the late Charles L. Powell, of Alexandria, Va.

Funeral from Christ Church, Alexandria, at 1 P. M., Sunday, the 6th.

REV. S. S. HEPBURN,
Worton, Md.

Stuart: Entered into life eternal on January 8, 1921, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Robert Beale, Washington, D. C., SOPHIE CLARKSON, widow of Rev. Albert R. Stuart, D. D., late rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, D. C.

"Now the laborer's task is o'er;
Now the battle day is past;
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last."

Balmer: Died, in Richmond, Va., January 31, 1921, MRS. EMMA TATUM BALMER, widow of Leo R. Balmer.

Interment was in Hollywood, February 2nd.

Cocke: Died, at his home in Fluvanna county, December 27, 1920, JOHN HARTWELL COCKE, son of Doctor C. Charles Cocke and Lucy Oliver Cocke, formerly of Bremo, and grandson of General John Hartwell Cocke, of Venerable Memory. Representing a family identified with the best life of Virginia for many generations, Mr. Cocke was born and reared at Bremo and finished his education at the University of Virginia. He was a Virginia planter by inheritance and spent most of his life in his native county in that capacity. A loyal friend, warmly esteemed in his community, and a devout churchman, he was senior warden of Grace Church, Bremo Bluff, Rivanna Parish, and served God in that congregation faithfully and devoutly to the end of his days. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lottie Woolling Cocke, and by his two sisters, Miss Mary B. Cocke and Miss Lelia B. Cocke, of Bremo.

B.

MEMORIAL MINUTE TO DR. PEYTON B. GREEN.

In the early hours of Sunday, December 19, 1920, after what had been a typical day of hardship and self-sacrifice, the soul of Peyton B. Green, Doctor of Medicine, Vestryman of St. John's Church, and President of its Men's Bible Class, entered into a more abundant life.

We, as Vestrymen charged with the administration of the temporal affairs of the Church, have known him as one always ready to do his share and more in administering the business of the Church, and as a contributor generous to the point of real sacrifice.

To hundreds in this and neighboring counties he has been not only the beloved physician, but a dear friend as well; and he labored among them up to, and beyond the full measure of his strength, always ready at the call of rich and poor alike, giving of his sympathy and compassion as unreservedly as of his medical skill; thinking nothing of his own convenience and comfort, and holding nothing helpful to be too much trouble. And this was true, not only in his practice of medicine, but in every relationship of life.

To him and his influence is directly due the founding of St. Barnabas' Mission, and it must ever stand as a memorial to him. He will be sorely missed in many an humble home, but his memory will be held dear, and will be preserved not only in personal recollection, but in the lives of many children whom gratitude and affection have made his namesakes.

We, the Vestry of St. John's Episcopal Church, Wytheville, Virginia, hereby express our deep and abiding sense of the loss sustained by the Church and the Community in the death of Dr. Peyton B. Green, and we direct that this expression of our appreciation of his life and character be preserved in the records of the Vestry, and published in the local and

JUST READY

More "FIVE-MINUTE TALKS"

By Walter R. Bowie, D.D.

SUNNY WINDOWS

Author of "The Children's Year"

AND OTHER SERMONS

Here is another volume of Dr. Bowie's talks to youngsters, all attractively suited to the child mind. The subjects are arresting themes, calculated to almost invariably catch the attention of boy or girl—while the treatment thereof is simplicity itself.

As the Record of Christian Work said: "Dr. Bowie's talks are capital—straight to the hearts of children, clever, interesting, helpful."

Cloth, $1.25 net

For Sale by

Southern Churchman Co., Richmond, Va.

Through the Application

of practical Christianity in the business world an individual or corporation attains its greatest success.

We strive to do this by SERVICE.

The Union Bank of Richmond

1104 East Main Street

You Can Send Your Boy or Girl to Any College in This State

At but small sacrifice to yourself through our "COLLEGE PLAN"

Ask or write for booklet

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK

Tenth and Main

"The Bank with the Three Doors of Opportunity"

EASY, PLEASANT, PROFITABLE

Others Find It So, Why Not You?

Here is your chance. If you have an hour or two a week to spare you can turn every minute of it into money by taking orders for subscriptions to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, the oldest Episcopal church paper published in America; endorsed by Bishops and Clergy, and by churchmen everywhere. Every dollar raised by subscription to be devoted to the betterment of the paper.

Liberal commission paid on each order and a generous bonus on your production.

JUST CLIP AND MAIL THIS COUPON

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,

815 E. Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen: Please send me full details about your offer to subscription representatives.

Name..... Town.....

Street, or R. F. D..... State.....

church papers, and that a copy be sent to the bereaved family.

IN MEMORIAM.

Virginia Mosby Pleasants, younger daughter of the late Matthew F. and Lydia Mosby Pleasants. 1856-1921.

In the life of this modest gentlewoman, whose entrance into the great Beyond it is desired to chronicle here, there were no dramatic episodes, no resounding events to record. She added to a unique unselfishness a distinct charm of personality, as ready for play as for work. She kept in touch with the currents of this time of change and stress and was always alive to the stirring call for new forces, new strength, new light to make possible the upward way.

In her early childhood she was confirmed at St. Paul's, and from that time until the end came on the third of February, when, at the age of sixty-five she passed to the higher life, she was a regular attendant and conscientious worker in the various activities of the church.

For many years she was secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary resigning when threatened by blindness from cataract.

She was a recognized influence in the many organizations to which she belonged —the Woman's Club, the Colonial Dames, the Daughters of the Revolution, the Suffrage League, and others, but it was in her steady and earnest work in the church, her regular attendance at the Bible Class, her genuine enjoyment of her church privileges, that her light shone brightest, and will continue to shine while her memory is kept fresh in the many hearts that loved her.

In her home the beauty of her life shone resplendent—as other self to her sister, Mrs. Reginald Gilham, as loyal friend and comrade to her brother, Reginald Gilham, she formed the connecting link in the circle which acted as mother and father to the orphan children of their brother—This sacred trust made the climax of her home life, and it is to the circle thus bereft that the break comes with most crushing force. For them the sympathy of a large circle of friends can avail but little, the light has gone out of the home and only God Himself can rekindle it.

A man enjoys the greatest peace of mind when he has once settled himself in a firm and steadfast belief of God's providence, and an absolute dependence upon His design and will.—Quesnel.

It is of record that a visitor once ventured to ask Alfred Tennyson what he thought of our Saviour. They were walking in a garden. The poet was silent fora moment. Then he stopped by a beautiful flower, and pointing to it, said, "What the sun is to that flower, Jesus Christ is to my soul."—A. W. Robinson.

R. Geissler, Inc.
56 West Eighth Street, New York
Memorials
FOR THE CHURCH
Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

In Historic Old St. John's

More than a century ago those stirring words were uttered—"Give me liberty or give me death!"

Yet to-day in this free country hundreds of thousands voluntarily deliver themselves into the bondage of poverty because they either can not, or will not learn to save. The way to freedom is—WORK—SAVE —and when opportunity comes you are prepared to meet it.

We place at your disposal all of our facilities and invite you to call upon us. You will find us glad to serve you.

Planters National Bank

Main and 12th Streets

Resources Over $20,000,000.00

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

Sacramental Wine

Absolutely Pure Grape Wine

Made expressly for use at the Communion Table

Established 1857

Phone, Write or Call Tel. Cortlandt 3001

H.T. Dewey & Sons Co.

Address Either

138 Fulton Street, New York City or Cellars, Egg Harbor, New Jersey

ORGANS

for Church and Home

Send for our beautifully illustrated catalog of the famous Estey, Packard and Corley Organs—showing styles and prices of our great stock.

Easy payment terms can be arranged

The Corley Company

213 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

The Evangelical Education Society
Of the Protestant Episcopal Church

Office: The Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia

AIDS STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY AND DISTRIBUTES EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

President: WILLIAM S. HARVEY, ESQ.

Active Vice-President: The Rt. Rev. THOMAS J. GARLAND, D. D.

General Counsel HAROLD GOODWIN, Esq. Treasurer ALFRED LEE, Esq. General Secretary Rev. S. LORD GILBERSON, M. A.

FORM OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to "THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH," incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the first Monday in November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, ———— dollars, or ———— real estate, to be used for the general purpose of the Society.

In Writing to Advertisers, Please Mention the Presbyterian of the South.

Peace.

Peace is the feeling of being forgiven—a quiet conscience—a stilling sense of the love of God. That is the first thing. Then, growing out of that, it is a certain contemplative habit of mind that deals silently with unseen things, which lives up high enough to be tossed and anxious about the matters which concern the present world. For it is the repose of faith, a trust in promises, a sense of a Father's love, a Father's nearness, a Father's care—the hush of a little child leaning on His bosom.—J. Vaughan.

In many climes without avail,
Thou hast spent thy life for the Holy Grail;
Behold, it is here—this cup which thou
Didst fill at the streamlet for me but now;
This crust is my body broken for thee,
This water His blood that died on the tree;
The Holy Supper is kept, indeed,
In whatso we share with another's need;
Not what we give, but what we share—
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three—
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me.

—J. R. Lowell.

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special
at $7.25
Send us your size
Woodall & Quarles
7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer
AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE
Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.
Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000
Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company
Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent
E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend
PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN
Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.
With an Introduction by
THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,
Richmond, Va.

Dietz Two-Pocket Envelopes

FOR CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL
COST LESS NO DELAYS

Will double the offerings at once. A new Treasurer's Record Book. Loose Leaf form. A set of samples FREE. Orders filled within a week.

WM. H. DIETZ, 20 E. Randolph St., Chicago

Sow D. & B.'s Tested SEEDS

Successful farming and gardening depends on sowing the right seeds. Those who sow our seeds know how good they are.

Ask for our catalogue, which gives full cultural directions and many helpful suggestions for gardening, and price list of our Farm Seeds.

Diggs & Beadles, Inc.

Seed Merchants

RICHMOND, VA.

Headquarters for Superior Seeds for the Farm and Garden

THE FEBRUARY ISSUE

Moody Bible Institute Monthly

Includes along with its usual bounty of editorials, Exposition on S. S. Lesson, Young People's Topics, etc,

1. "Modern Problems in Science and Religion," by George McCready Price, M. A., Prof. of Geology. Pacific Union College.

2. "A Cluster of Stories, Old and New, About D. L. Moody." Wonderfully inspiring.

3. 'Abraham Lincoln's Religion." A timely and beautifully written article on the religious life and convictions of This great man

4. "The Work of D. L. Moody." An inspiration to every Christian.

Send NOW—20 cents for the copy or 3 months' trial subscription for 50 cents.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE MONTHLY
145 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

DIETZ Bulletin Boards

New Bronze Frame and Steel Letters with Interchangeable Letters Four Inches High. 15 Panels with a 10-Line Board. Letters Readable 150 Feet Away

Grace M. E. Church, New York City, 1917. "We have now used your Bulletin Board for several weeks and are delighted with it, for I believe yours is the best sign of the kind I have seen."—Christian F. Reisner, Pastor.

"The Sunday School and Church Supply Man'
WILLIAM H. DIETZ 20 E. Randolph St., CHICAGO

Leake Printing Co.

ENGRAVING, PRINTING, EMBOSSING.
Special attention to out-of-town orders
Samples sent upon request.
815 East Main Street. Richmond, Va

CARDS FOR SPREADING SCRIPTURE INFLUENCE

Prepared by Amos R. WELLS.

Exquisite in Design. Printed on Excellent Stock. Put up in packets of six, all different designs and subjects, at 20c per pack. Separate numbers sold at $2.00 per 100.

BIBLE PRESCRIPTIONS
These suggest pertinent Bible portions for persons suffering from such maladies as:

TROUBLE SORROW WORRY
FAILURE DOUBTS ANGER

THE CHRISTIAN'S FELLOWSHIP GREETINGS
Well-selected Bible Texts and friendly sentiments, expressed in appropriate verses, make these cards helpful in extending Christian fellowship.

BIBLE MEMORY HELPERS
These present a method of familiarizing oneself with the great passages of the Bible, resulting in a considerable amount of Bible knowledge and a taste for still more of that fascinating pursuit.

It is easily conceived that the free distribution of these effective agents of good cheer among friends and relatives, business, Sunday school and church associates, neighbors and even strangers will accomplish much good.

GOODENOUGH & WOGLOM CO.
CHURCH & SUNDAY SCHOOL SPECIALTIES
14 VESEY STREET NEW YORK CITY

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

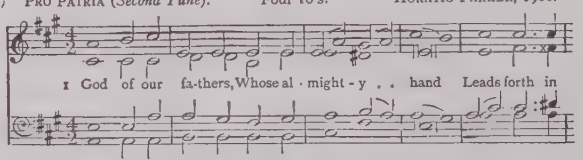
First National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.



Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

430 National Days.

PRO PATRIA (Second Tune). Four 10's. HORATIO PARKER, 1900.

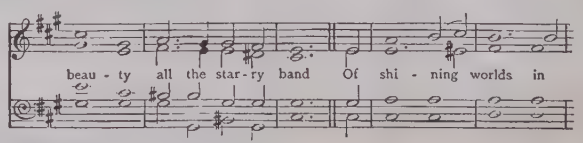
THE NEW HYMNAL

With Both Words and Music



Single copies.....$1.20 per copy
In lots of 100 or more..... 1.05 extended payment
In lots of 100 or more..... 1.00 cash

Carriage Charges Extra

PUBLISHED BY

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

14 WALL STREET, -:- NEW YORK CITY

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 19, 1921. No. 8

A Prayer

Lord, make me kind!
The world is full enough of needless tears,
And hungry hearts are full of nameless fears.
To these no vision of Thy humanness appears.
Lord, make me kind!

Lord, make me think!
For thoughtlessness has caused so much of needless woe.
That thoughtless word of mine may grow and grow
Until like torrents mad, no thing can stay its flow.

Lord, make me love!
And place love's sign upon the face of me,
That loveless men may pause and turn and see
A little of that love that comes from Thee.
Lord, make me love!

—F. W. Hoyt in Christian Observer.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary

Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-third year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to
REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector

Virginia, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten-acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. Tucker, D. D., President; Rev. C. O. Pruden, D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B., Sweet Briar, A. M., Columbia, Prin.

ST. MARY'S, An Episcopal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years' advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector, Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D..Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 30 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Truth is the beginning of all good.

God stores the hills with marble, but He never built a Parthenon.

"You will never 'find' time for anything. If you want time, you must take it."

Cease to lament for that thou canst not help
And study help for that which thou lamentest.
—Shakespeare.

Prayer is like opening a sluice between the great ocean and our little channels, when the sea gathers itself together, and flows in at full tide.—Tennyson.

"God loves thee; in that love confide;
Unchanging, faithful, true and tried;
And through whatever might betide,
Believe good things of God."

"A man with an ideal and a shovel may put his shovel at the service of his ideal and clear the walk."

Nothing we ever dreamed of good for any man or for the race has touched the garment's hem of the good which Christ purposes and toward which He works.—Fosdick.

God can and will bear with weakness if it be but acknowledged, and if we creep again to the cross, and pray to God for grace, and amend ourselves. —Martin Luther.

What we want to do is to make the heart pure. Don't do as the man did who imagined he could purify the water in the well by painting the pump white. Purify the heart, my friend; that is all that needs to be done.—Moody.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,
REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Girls, Under the Auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia
Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Music and Art. Intermediate and Primary. Session begins September 22, 1920. For particulars, address
MISS EMMA S. YERBY, Principal

ST. CATHERINE'S SCHOOL

Founded by
VIRGINIA RANDOLPH ELLETT
Westhampton - - Richmond, Va.
A country day school for girls under the direction of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia. College preparatory. Boarding department 503 W. Franklin Street. Eight-acre playground. Emphasis on health; out-door life.
MISS ROSALIE H. NOLAND, Principal

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLESTOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

To live in Christ is the peace of justification; for Christ to live in us is the peace of sanctification.—C. H. Spurgeon.

To be a strong hand in the dark to another in the time of need; to be a cup of strength to a human soul in a certain crisis of weakness, is to know the glory of life.—Hugh Black.

It is our chief difficulty about the formation of Christian character, that we do not give enough time to it. We do not make it sufficiently one continual work through our whole life. . . . We never outgrow the need of watchfulness till we come to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 19, 1921. No. 8

WHAT ABOUT SUNDAY?

Who is behind the agitation which is being stirred up in the press of the country against the alleged effort for a "Blue Law Sunday"? We have received from the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Washington a letter which throws a curious light upon this question.

The message of the letter is this: that the "Blue Law" scare (to mix colors, if not metaphors!) is nothing but a red herring drawn across the trail by those who want to commercialize Sunday for their own ends. "The Lord's Day Alliance," which has been the target of much ridicule and misrepresentation, has—says the Washington Commission—no such aim of a puritanical Sabbath as has been pretended. What it does aim at is the defense of America from the "European idea" of Sunday, with wide-open license for money-making enterprises of any sort to run as they choose. Says the Commission further: the interests which want to secularize Sunday are trying adroitly to poison the public opinion against the defenders of the day by diverting attention from the real purpose to a caricature which they are loudly parading in its place. Is the powerful organization of moving picture interests back of this movement to make the public mind see the facts crooked? Are the interests that want to legalize prize-fights and to stage them on Sunday back of it? The Washington Commission says that it is time to stop and look and listen.

The Master said that His disciples should need to be "as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves." Often they are sufficiently harmless, but very insufficiently wise. In this present matter, there are many good people who shrug their shoulders in pity at what they hear are the efforts of fanatics to enact some sort of ridiculously drastic Sabbath code; and because they know they do not approve of that, they turn and catch the smiling eye of interests that call themselves liberal, and shake hands as with a long-lost friend. Which is all very well, provided Friend Liberal is only somebody who is genuinely trying to be judicious—and not a confidence man who winks his weather eye.

MORE ABOUT THE NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN.

The letter which we publish in this issue of the Southern Churchman from the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., constitutes a most striking comment upon a cause that underlay the relative success or failure of the Nation-Wide Campaign in various parts of the Church. He points out that almost without exception those Dioceses which reached great achievement in the campaign were those in which there had been held in former years missionary conferences followed by an Every-Member Canvass intended to carry to all the people the missionary appeal. Dioceses and churches which thus had learned through experience the value of an organized appeal to all the people, the inspiring stimulus of an intensive campaign of education, and the immediate results which can flow from an enterprise which rouses a general enthusiasm, were ready to believe in and to dare the unexampled challenge of the Nation-Wide Campaign. Their faith was bold because in similar, though lesser, ventures they had seen how faith is vindicated.

Herein also there is food for reflection, not only with reference to such a definite effort as the appeal of the Nation-Wide Campaign for the people's gifts, but with reference to the whole spiritual life of our Church. What is the reason why other Christian bodies succeeded in raising huge sums for their advance programs while this Church of ours has the lame record of a fractional success? Why could the Methodists carry through triumphantly their appeal for the Centenary Fund? Why could the Baptists and other Christian bodies reach a mark in gifts far higher and bolder than that which our Church set for itself? Is it because they are richer? So far to the contrary that the very question is foolish. Is it because they possess more real devotion to the kingdom of God than we do? That we shall not acknowledge. Where, then, lies the explanation of their success and the contrast of our none too glorious effort? Some will answer that the trouble was in the way our campaign was conducted. They say that neither the men, nor the methods back of it, were wise. We do not believe that explanation is tenable. It is a pleasant soap-bubble blown by those who are glad to have the pretty toy of a thin excuse to divert attention from their own failure. It bursts into nothing before the thrust of the solid fact that wherever the leadership of these men and the help of their methods were truly accepted, there the campaign unfailingly made good. The trouble with those parts of the Church which would not venture was that they failed to trust in new possibilities which they had not the faith to estimate.

But why was there this lack of faith? As we said just now, we shall not believe that it is due to any fundamental absence of loyalty on the part of the people of the Church to the cause of the kingdom of God. Rather, it lies in this: that we have not yet in this Church sufficiently taught our people to know the power of corporate enthusiasm, corporate emotions, and a certain frank spirituality which makes men and women lay aside their self-consciousness and meet to think and pray about a common task.

In our Church life we have too much lived as individualists. There is a reason why this has been so. A considerable degree of culture usually accentuates individuality. It makes men and women through their own richly stored lives sufficient for themselves, and therefore less hungry for the companionship of the group But in this fact there is a genuine religious danger. No one can taste the fulness of Christian experience who does not know that God's communication of Himself is often given most not to the individual, but to the fellowship. The leaders of the Nation-Wide Campaign understood that. They plead that the supreme emphasis should be given to those gatherings of the people together—perhaps in the Church, better still in homes scattered through the parish—where men and women might have a chance to be told the facts about the Church's enterprise, to ask questions and to have them answered, to offer up prayers and to listen to prayers, and to have the whole thought of the Church's work linked with a sense of human friendliness. Many people could not see the value of these gatherings. They smiled a little at the suggestion. What was the use of such things as these? What was needed, after all, was to go and get the money, and when the time came they would try to go and get it; but they did not have time for all these preliminaries. It was a case over again of the supposed wisdom of this world not understanding the wisdom of God. The people who did come together to think, to consider, to pray, to lose their shyness and their self-absorption in the comradeship of a genuine enthusiasm, were the ones who did give greatly and who in their service made the campaign a success. And the ones who thought they had no time for these supposedly unimportant preliminaries were the ones who had neither time nor spirit for the final sacrifice.

The leaders of the Nation-Wide Campaign were right. Part of the Church knows it already, and the rest of the Church will know it eventually. What we need is a sweeter simplicity of religious experience, less of the sophisticated individualism which makes us slow to understand the power of the group appeal, and a more practiced readiness to think, to pray and to plan together.

THE NEED OF CHRISTIANIZING RICHES.

There is another point about the Nation-Wide Campaign which has a moral, too.

As a rule, what group of people made the significant gifts to the campaign? Ask that question of any rector or committee chairman in a church where the campaign succeeded, and see what his answer will be.

We venture to say that in the overwhelming majority of cases they will tell that the gifts which made the Church's advance possible came chiefly from people of moderate means. They did not come from the very rich. Many rich men held utterly aloof. Many others gave, but not many gave with the sort of imaginative loyalty which made scores of people of smaller means—many of them working hard for a living, some of them pressed almost to the edge of need—give with a generosity that thrilled the recognition of those who knew it.

Was the reason not simply the accentuation of the fact that we have considered in the editorial that goes before? Rich people are often the extreme individualists. They are freed in large part from ordinary responsibilities. They do not have in their daily work a sense of accountability to the group. The perilous freedom of wealth sometimes breeds an almost arrogant impatience of any opinions other than their own. They lose the capacity for spiritual counsel, for the give and take of an equal consideration, for the identification of themselves with the spiritual democracy out of which alone the great fires of wide purpose and enthusiasm may be lighted.

This is no homily against the rich. The Church needs the power which they, if they are faithful stewards, can add to her work. But the Master Himself said that it was as easy for a camel to go through the eye of a needle as it was for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God. And perhaps a true modern interpretation of His words would be to say that the rich man certainly will not get into the kingdom of God unless he can so strip himself of his overgrown individualism as to pass through the lowly gate of fellowship with all his Christian brethren.

It is interesting to note that out of the eight provinces of the Church the two which made through the Nation-Wide Campaign the least proportionate increase in their giving to the Church were the two provinces where the greatest wealth of the country is accumulated. In them, so far as money went, there was the chance for vast increase. One of these is the province which includes Boston and all New England, and the other the one which includes New York. Of the other six provinces, the one which made the least percentage of increase, advanced very nearly twice as much as either of these. Does it not grow plain that what we need for the true progress of the Church is that which the Nation-Wide Campaign stood for, and shall stand for henceforth as a standard planted in the Church—a new and humbling religious consciousness that makes our giving flow from a chastened Christian experience?

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION FOR RECRUITING.

More than once of late we have spoken of the grave need of more effective recruiting for the ministry.

It is good to know that this need is rousing action. A letter mailed this week to all the clergy in the Diocese of Virginia is an illustration of one manner of effort to meet the situation.

To quote the letter itself is the best way of conveying its message.

In part it runs:

"The Bishop of a Middle Western Diocese has recently said that unless the number of candidates is rapidly increased, one-third of the parishes in his section of the country will be vacant within five years. We have received at the Virginia Seminary this year over twice as many requests for recommendations as during the same period last year.

"The facts are undisputed; they point to a gradual subsidence of the aggressive work and life of the Church; the only problem is the problem of changing the facts.

"Accordingly, with the authorization of the Bishop, the Diocesan Board of Religious Education has undertakken to make the enlistment of candidates for the ministry a definite objective in the Diocese during this Lent. A special committee was instructed tc initiate an energetic campaign to that end, under the guidance of the Bishop. It is, however, the parochial clergy who must really do whatever is usefully done, and it is for this reason that this letter is addressed to you. The committee at most can only cooperate with you in such ways as you may desire.

"A first step, in your committee's judgment, is that the clergy should have exact information as to the present canonical requirements for admission to the ministry. We are, therefore, sending you under separate cover a 'Guide for Candidates,' summarizing clearly that information. You will observe that the canons indicate three classes of men that we might keep in mind during this Lent.

"Class 1. Graduates or students in a college or university. A member of this class could come from your parish to the Seminary next year or upon graduation.

"Class 2. Non-graduates. A member of this class might—

(a) If wholly untrained and sufficiently young, enter upon a course in college;

(b) If sufficiently trained, prepare for the academic examinations, under your guidance, pass them in the coming summer, and enter the Seminary next session. Beginners' Greek may now be taken at the Seminary. Hebrew is, under the canons, elective, and may be taken or substituted for as the candidate may elect and the Bishop direct.

"Class 3. Men over thirty, who have had business or professional experience. For these men the academic requirements are much reduced, and a special two-year course is provided at the Seminary.

"Financial resources are available or can be secured to carry through college and the Seminary any candidates from your parish who are in need of assistance. No man need stay out of the ministry for lack of funds.

"A survey of your parish, not forgetting boys in the high schools, may disclose to you some possible and promising material for the ministry. Perhaps you will then confer with them either in person, or—in the case of men away at college—by letter. And we shall ask you a little later on to designate those with whom you may desire the committee to get in touch.

"In the back of the 'Guide' will be found the forms prescribed by the canon.

"This letter is primarily designed to bring the Lenten campaign to your attention and to ask your co-operation. Further details of the campaign will be sent to you within two weeks."

The plan of this committee carries its own commendation. Here is a well-conceived effort to get all the clergy in a Diocese working intelligently to recruit the ministry. The authorities of other Dioceses may find the plan a stimulus to their own ideas and purposes.

THE MORALE OF THE RURAL CONGREGATION.

By An Archdeacon.

Intimately connected with the topic of my last article on "The Morale of the Rural Clergy" is the subject we propose to discuss in this. Of course the term "rural" is not entirely comprehensive.

I shall never forget the haggard and pained expression of one of our most lovable Bishops as I entered his office for my weekly consultation one morning. On inquiry he explained: "Positively, Archdeacon, there is not a parish or mission in this whole Diocese, big or little, in which there is not marked friction or trouble of some kind! I did not get to sleep until five o'clock this morning!" I have no doubt that many of the able and big-hearted band who constitute our House of Bishops will read this paragraph with quick, strong sympathy. They know that could this discord and its results be eliminated in their dioceses, their "yoke would be easy and their burden light!" Waiving all claim to any superior judgment or ability in viewpoint or administration, I will say that I offer this article simply as the careful and prayerful result of my experience of cause and effect, experiment and result, over twenty years of official administration in many towns and in a number of States.

There is much friction of which the Bishop does not even hear. It reaches the Archdeacon more easily and he should protect the Bishop. The clergy do not, as a rule, "air" these matters. They know that dominant opinion requires that the clergyman who values his standing in the Church must so administer his mission that friction will not occur; or if it occurs, it must be carefully ignored. Hence the serious damage to his own morale and that of his people. For no "shepherd of the fold" of Christ can face the bar of God without a blush who makes popular opinion the guiding star of his life! There are a few such men scattered here and there. The Bishops gratefully say, "Oh, this Mr. A. never has any friction!" Not always, of course, but usually the Archdeacon who gets closer to the realm of cause and effect hears the remark with a smile. It reminds him of a man who bought a new razor. In the dim morning light he proceeded to shave. "Wonderful razor this!" he exclaimed as he speedily finished. "Such smooth shaving I have never enjoyed before!" Glancing at the mirror later when the sun was up, he found his razor had not cut a hair!

Most Bishops and clergy, if asked for a reason for defective morale in these missions, will venture a more or less conjectural answer. Very often the faithful "missionary in charge" is harnessed with 75 per cent. of the blame. The old experienced Bishop gradually learns to correct this opinion of cause and effect, however, and more and more with the passing years he at least gives the clergyman his sympathy.

I will now venture to give my own viewpoint, experimentally deduced, of the reason why.

The custom of this American Church has practically killed the most important spiritual law of the Church, namely, that involved in the Communion Rubric. The angel with the flaming sword at the gate of Eden would have been speedily removed by this Church sentiment of the twentieth century. This sentiment is the heritage of the troubled, clouded history of the seventeenth and eighteenth century. We dropped into the false grooves and our conservatism keeps us running therein. Our analysis does not go farther than "the custom of this Church"!

In my travels from town to towns remarks from Methodists and Baptists often came to me, i. e., "You do not have to be a Christian to join the Episcopal Church. Join there and you can do as you please"! Unfortunately, I have found outsiders who deliberately "joined" under this delusion! And yet there is no denomination in which the letter of actual spiritual law exceeds that of our Church in directness, purity, power and truth. All of the deep spiritual laws of the Church are framed upon fundamental law divine, and to fail to administer them "in spirit and truth" is a terrible and crying sin fraught with direful results to the morale of the people. Just a few illustrations (of many) known to me. But preparatory thereto let us approach the angel with the flaming sword standing at the gate of the sanctuary in the house of God and read the scroll in his hand. The sword is directed against those who are "open notorious evil livers or those who have done wrong to their neighbors, or betwixt whom the minister shall perceive malice and hatred to reign"—and so on to end (see page 221, Prayer Book).

The custom of the Church applies this only to open adultery, burglary, robbery or murder. Beyond this the flaming sword has long since ceased to flame. Yet who for one moment will dare to say that such a limitation was placed there by the lips of our merciful Saviour? No one knew as well as the Christ that such a limitation is not "mercy" to the people. The congregation is much more "offended" and demoralized by the lip teaching of a nullified seventh commandment than by brutal crimes punished by criminal law. Equally true is this of the crime of open and notorious slander, the destruction of the use and functions of the Church's ministers, and the many ways in which the interests of the kingdom of God are obviously damaged for reasons plainly criminal in spiritual intent. The custom of ignoring these perfectly obvious spiritual offenses is responsible for the sad morale —most conspicuous where the members are few in the rural towns.

The truly consecrated people of these communities mourn over such conditions. But the clergy cannot (apparently) act, and what can the people do?

Now let me quote experiences largely personal.

I attached the town F to the city of my residence for awhile. Arriving, I found the warden a regular attendant at church and Holy Communion—but neglecting no opportunity to loaf in the bar-rooms and become stupidly intoxicated. This was an old story known to all men, especially his growing sons. My discipline of the offender was not cordially received in certain quarters. It was "contrary to the custom, etc."

Again in another place I found two sisters and one brother in an old and mortal feud with two other sisters and another brother. They were all regular communicants and people of high social standing. A negro shot one brother and his two sisters furnished the money to defend the negro! My move toward discipline excited surprise. No other clergyman had noticed the situation.

Again in the town of M. a clergyman from the pulpit denounced the Louisiana lottery as a gambling and disreputable indulgence. A lady of social influence—one of those whose money came from the lottery—promptly strangled him spiritually and financially, killing his ministry. This sort of thing is one of the most common and demoralizing of spiritual crimes in a hundred different phases.

These are samples. Space forbids more illustrations. Had I been summoned to bury any one of these, and there are many such, as a stranger I should have found the aureola of the "faithful" resting on the coffin, and should have said over the open grave, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

The serious damage done to the morale of the people, especially the young, by this spineless spiritual policy of the Church, need not be described. And it has crowned many a Bishop's hair with snow and buried many a faithful minister of God.

What are you going to do about it? Let me give one or two illustrations:

The Bishop of ———— could not keep a clergyman at C. In despair at last he paid an extended visit. He called a meeting of the vestry, and in their presence singled out the culprit he had discovered. Administering a severe rebuke, the Bishop concluded: "I am going to send another clergyman to C. I propose to question him about your conduct. If he disapproves I will personally put you out of this communion so quickly and so far that you will have difficulty in getting back." The result of this was admirable not only upon the offender, but the morale of the entire congregation in the coming years.

In a certain town I found well known and impossible conditions. I discovered two influential men culprits in one and one influential woman with two subordinates in the other. I grasped the nettles in each case with a firm hand, removed them, and peace and prosperity followed. I omit many other illustrations. The above are exceptional. The reverse, the spineless policy, is the rule. The worst feature is, not that an unworthy soul is allowed to destroy itself, but that the loss of spiritual authority in the Church, the damage to the morale of the people by the sad object lesson, is beyond computation. Admirable results always follow proper discipline.

The relationship of authority between rector and people is usually exactly reversed. A wise Bishop drove home a telling truth when he said to a woman, "Madame, did it ever strike you that in the great day of final account, what your faithful rector thinks of you will be of infinitely more value to you than what you think of your rector?"

Strenuous means should be utilized to dispel the impression that the rector is a religious "hired man" in the kingdom of God. Until this is done there will be little peace and much friction and a low morale in the rural field.

The topic should be one of serious and prayerful consideration in the House of Bishops. The influence for uplift must begin there if at all.

Spiritual Adventure In Hard Times.

From the Council Address of Bishop Bratton, of Mississippi.

. . . And now the hard, difficult time is upon us, the very most difficult that any living man has ever known. There are many and varied ways in which people seek to account for the hard times. But there is one thing which stands out, which none now overlook, which high financiers and strong business men and Wall Street editors and expert statisticians and preachers and prophets all agree upon; that we have forgotten God, that we have lost our clear religious consciousness, that we have failed in that one thing that alone can restore confidence and settle and establish our social and business order. We need to restore our vivid sense of co-partnership with God, Who made us and gave us all things. We need to restore God to His rightful place as the Senior Partner. Without this all our schemes for rehabilitation will be worthless. And with this no task is difficult. This has been the Spirit of the Nation-Wide Campaign call, as it is always and at all times the spirit of the Church's call to duty to her children. Our Lord was no visionary dreamer when His voice rang out in command and in supplication, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you." Some used to say in war times that Christianity had been tried and had failed. We now know clearly that Christianity has not been tried. Who of us has really tried it? Who has taken the Master at His word and sought God's kingdom and righteousness first? Can we dare to put that to the test? Will you dare to do it? Will the Council of our dear Diocese dare to trust God and put Him to the test in this most difficult year that any of us has ever seen? Will we dare to obey His call and go forward? The coming of the kingdom of God into the hearts and lives of men and women is the balm of healing for our poor world's ills.

Rightly viewed and rightly attempted, there is no need to separate between our duty to God and His kingdom on the one hand and our duty to family and business on the other. We need the kingdom with its reign of love and truth and righteousness in both. Thank God we serve Him most truly in serving best our kinsfolk and our neighbors. We can serve neither aright until we serve both. So let us gather up again the broken strands of life, and let us knit together again our life with God's. Let us busy ourselves with the rounded duties to God and loved ones, and never fear that the tasks which God brings to us will want for the means and the power to fulfill them. "Bring ye the whole tithe into the store-house, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10).

I have perhaps given ground for the criticism that the material side of the Nation-Wide Campaign has been to the foreground in all that I have said. In real fact the material has been only the convenient mode of expressing spiritual values, just as life is manifested through matter and love through deeds, and God through Nature and through the Incarnate One. There is danger lest matter shall replace life in our thought, and lest Nature shall replace God. But though the danger is always present, there is no other way in which to express either life or God. And in this sense it is our loyal gifts that are at least one real and true means of the gift of self. I can never admit that money is only filthy lucre. It is possible that money may be that when it is wrongly made and wrongly used. But in every event money is an expression of self. Money is not a thing itself, it stands for the thing. It stands for a house or a lot or a yard of cloth. It stands also for a personality. If it is the measure of value of a house or a lot, it is equally the measure of value of a human personality—the value of his thought and time and labor and self which have been put into the making of it. Money is also the medium of exchange. And when money is given it is self-given—the self whose brain and brawn and sweat have been put into the making of it. Its character is just as spiritual and just as holy as the character of him who makes it and spends it. And for most of us money is the only medium through which we may give ourselves to God's service in near or remote lands. We cannot go ourselves in person; our persons may go in reality and power through the medium of exchange. This is the meaning and the motive of the call to give each week and thus to offer the fruits of personality for service, as we offer ourselves in prayers and communions in His holy presence. The manner of our giving becomes the test of our faith and love and loyalty.

The China Famine.

From the Presiding Bishop and Council comes this statement:

The United States Minister to China has cabled to the citizens of the United States that millions of people are in danger of starvation. The area covered is a section of the provinces of Shantung, Chihli, Shansi and Honan, near the Yellow River, where food supplies do not exist except as carried in by the agents of outside relief. The mere statement of the need of so many people carries with it no reality to most of us. Already it is authentically reported that fifteen thousand die every day. A returned traveler reports the death in Kalgan in one night of one thousand refugees. They had pawned or sold much of their clothing and journeyed this far seeking aid. A cold spell came on and men, women and children perished.

Our people ought to know, however, that the small supplies of food are woefully inadequate. People are subsisting for short periods on ground corn-cobs mixed with leaves of trees. Fuel and clothing are scarce. The conditions are indescribably pitiful. No pictures can portray the dire need of these people.

There exists a large committee, of which Mr. Thomas W. Lamont is chairman, appointed by the President of the United States to organize relief. The actual provision of sufficient relief funds for these masses of starving Chinese will be forthcoming only if the consciences of American and British Christians are sufficiently aroused. It must be understood that as the Christian enterprise has extended to the countries of the Orient and has stood as the spokesman for the mind of Christ, so now in such a time of terrible anguish the heart of Christendom must respond. The Great Assize pictured by our Lord centered about one principle of judgment, the rehearsal of which cannot but stimulate us to greater and greater deeds of love; that principle was disinterested and whole-hearted material giving to the hungry and the naked: "I was an hungered and ye gave me meat."

This winter will test our Christian love. America possesses enough wealth to answer all the appeals, the European and the Oriental, without feeling it. The problem is one of unlimited affection. If Christendom can possess the heart of its Lord it can meet this winter's cry from the regions of the Yellow River.

No slightest distraction must call us away from the appeals of the Near East and Central and Eastern Europe. We must complete these funds; and then give as much again for our Chinese brothers. No color line can be drawn according to the mind of Christ.

The different communions of America are forming hasty organizations to promote the quickest and largest possible amount of relief. It is proposed to ask for immediate action inasmuch as delay means a multiplied death. February and March will be the months of crisis. We should give generously and immediately.

This Church will forward to Bishop Graves at Shanghai, as our agent, all gifts marked "China Famine Relief," and sent to Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

It must be borne in mind that while response is being made continually to the appeals for this China relief that already have been published, the bulk of the work remains to be done according to well-thought-out, comprehensive plans. The execution of such an idea will ultimately lie in the hands of the clergy and leading laymen of the Church. If they respond not only through individual gifts, but in making a Church-wide answer to this extreme need, it will surely result that in parishes and regional groups there will be carefully organized giving; and sums of money commensurate with the dire conditions of China and fully representative of the love that lies within the Church for all humanity will be unstintedly poured out.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF LENT.

Lent is a time to think of God. What do we owe to Him? How truly are we doing our duty to Him?

It is a time to think of Jesus Christ. How fully do we believe in Him? Do we realize our relation to Him?

It is a time to think of the Church. Are we doing our part in it?

It is a time to think about prayer. What does it mean to us? Do we speak to Christ in prayer every morning as we begin the day and every night as we end it?

It is a time to think of our life in this world. To what use are we putting it?

It is a time to think of our life in the next world. How well are we preparing for it?—Trinity Record.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

THE SPIRIT AND GENIUS OF THE N.-W. C.

Mr. Editor: The editorial in the Southern Churchman of February 5, which I have just read, expresses so forcibly and simply the spirit and genius of the Nation-Wide Campaign, as it was originally conceived, that I cannot refrain from dropping you a line to express my appreciation. Professor Noah K. Davis used to say to his students, "Gentlemen, the man who can define a thing understands it." The Southern Churchman has defined the supremely essential fact and force on which we relied, and we still believe that when the Bishops, clergy and lay readers in those dioceses which have not made good understand and rely wholly upon that spirit and force, they will find the practical aims of the campaign easily within their reach.

The plans and methods of the campaign were equally simple and indispensable. No other methods are possible if every member of the Church is to be enlisted through the organized leadership of the clergy and the laity.

Neither the principles nor the mechanics of the Nation-Wide Campaign were experimental. It was merely the extension to the whole Church of principles and methods which had proved workable in parishes and groups of parishes in the South in particular, but also in one or more cities in every province east of the Mississippi. The most notable of these city-wide campaigns were those held in Wilmington, N. C., Richmond and Baltimore. In looking over the financial reports it is a striking fact that every Diocese in the United States reported as having paid its full quota was one in which the old campaigns had been conducted, and with one or two exceptions (only one, I believe), in every Diocese which has paid 70 per cent. or more, one or more of the old campaigns had been made. Three or four others which paid 60 per cent. or more are in the same class. In other dioceses, which did less, but where there are single parishes in which we had conducted one of the old campaigns, those particular parishes stand nearly always at the top of achievement for those dioceses.

The campaign never in our conception depended for its success primarily upon the ability of a small group of men with a temporary and necessarily hastily formed office and headquarters staff in New York to engineer its execution in the dioceses. This, had it been possible, would have defeated one of the chief objects, which was to develop the initiative and leadership of Churchmen within the dioceses—without which there could be no permanent progress in the Church.

I suppose I am one of the few men who has not been disappointed in the results. The campaign has accomplished so much more than I expected up to this date that I am filled with thanksgiving and complete faith in God, faith in the people of God, and faith that the average man in the Church is able and willing not only to meet his share of the Nation-Wide Campaign, but far more whenever his spiritual leaders have faith in him and take the trouble to make the need clear.

ROBERT W. PATTON.

281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

WANTED, NAMES OF GREEK PRIESTS.

Mr. Editor: There have been in the Church papers of late many reports of co-operation on the part of our Bishops and clergy in various parts of the country with clergy of the Greek Orthodox Church. Our Commission on the World Conference on Faith and Order published some time ago a short pamphlet in modern Greek, giving an account of the World Conference movement. I would be very glad to send it to any priests of the Greek Church whose names and addresses are sent to me.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. GARDINER.

174 Water Street, Gardiner, Me., Feb. 9, 1921.

The Great Commission.

WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY FOR CHURCH WORK ON ISOLATED ISLAND.

Fifty kilometers west of the city of Port au Prince, Haiti, and twenty kilometers from the nearest point of the mainland of the republic, lies the Island of Gonava. Probably nowhere in the whole wide world is there to be found an island that is less touched by civilization. More is being done on Formosa and Zanzibar, on the other side of the globe, than on this island, which is just outside our own doors.

So far as white men are concerned, it is to all intents and purposes an undiscovered land. A few miles back from the coast, it is in the same condition that it was before Columbus, save that the inhabitants are now descendants of African slaves instead of Carib Indians. It would even be impossible to say how many people live there.

The prevalent theory that Latin America is fully occupied by the Church of Rome is nowhere more perfectly contradicted than in the case of Gonava. So far as is known, no Roman priest, or other missionary of the Roman Church for that matter, has ever set foot on it.

But the American Church is at work there. From L'Arcahaie our clergyman makes frequent trips to this undiscovered land, and speaking of it recently, the Rev. Mr. Llwyd, of Port au Prince, stated that a thousand people come to the services.

This is merely an illustration of the startling opportunities that are opening up before us in the Haitian Republic.

The Japanese Church has eight dioceses or districts; four are mission districts of the Church of England, one of the Church in Canada, and three American Episcopal.

The third American district, Tohoku, has only recently been created, with the Bishop of Tokyo in charge for the present.

To make a complete round of all the mission stations in the District of Tokyo, one must travel a thousand miles.

Large Philippine Parish: The Sagada Mission for the Igorot people, in the Philippines, now has more than nine hundred persons on its communicant list.

Work on the much needed new church is progressing. The missionaries write that they stand looking at it, rejoicing and hardly able to believe that they see it nearing completion.

Larger Chinese Parish: Ten million people form the "parish" of Trinity Church, Changsha, which, with one out-station, faces the city of Changsha and the northern third of the famous province of Hunan.

No Soviets for China: "Will Sovietism ever gain a foothold in China?" This was one of the questions asked of President Pott, of St. John's University, Shanghai, after an address.

The answer was directed and concise. "No, because China has peasant ownership of land. Every peasant takes pride in his holding."

In Brazil the Woman's Auxiliary has nineteen branches, with over seven hundred members.

LENT: MY RESOLUTION.

I need Christ in my life. Yet I open the door to Him reluctantly. In my best moments God shows me what I may always measure up to, and more. It is then I desire to swing wide the door of my heart, that Christ may freely enter. I am resolved that these moments shall not remain fleeting, isolated fragments of my life; but that I shall let the Word of Christ dwell in me richly.

I resolve that the season of Lent shall be a period of personal heart-searching, consecration and constant companionship with the Unseen Guest. God helping me, my life shall be a continual communion with Christ.

I am persuaded that Christ is either Lord of all or He is not Lord at all. Therefore, my victory is already half won. I shall make Him Lord of all! During Lent I shall give myself to self-examination and self-denial, to prayer and meditation, and to a devout study of God's Word. I shall use the worship of my Church, the sacraments and the service to which I am called in my parish, for my own growth in grace, that through my weakness Christ may be glorified and the coming of His kingdom hastened.—St. Andrew's Cross.

Church Intelligence

The Rev. W. S. Slack Appointed Recorder.

The Presiding Bishop has appointed the Rev. William S. Slack, of Alexandria, La., to be the Recorder, in the place of the Rev. Herman Cope Duncan, D. D., deceased.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

February 10, 1921.

Jerusalem and the East Mission: Letter From Bishop Garland.

Church House, Philadelphia, Pa.,
St. Paul's Day, Jan. 25, 1921.

All friends of the work in Jerusalem and the East mourn the death of the Rev. John H. McKenzie, D. D., L. H. D., for many years the efficient Honorary Secretary and Treasurer for the United States, who entered into the rest of Paradise last summer.

A committee appointed by the Presiding Bishop and Council to investigate the work of the Church of England among the Jews had several conferences with the Bishop of Jerusalem last summer. Though there is no official connection between our Church and the Jerusalem and the East Mission, Bishop MacInnes requested Bishop Gailor to appoint a successor to Dr. McKenzie, and in response to his appeal, I have consented to act as treasurer for the Palestine Fund. I am sure that I may count on the hearty co-operation of the Provincial and Diocesan Secretaries who have served so faithfully in the past, and may also hope for an increase in the generous offerings throughout the Church for this great work.

In the providence of God a new era has opened for work in the Holy Land of Christendom. Since last summer the large jurisdiction of Bishop MacInnes has been divided, and the Jerusalem and the East Mission is now confined to Palestine, Syria and Cyprus. Bishop Gwynne, the former Bishop Suffragan, has been installed as Bishop of Egypt and the Sudan. This will enable the Bishop in Jerusalem to give a great deal more time to the development of work in Palestine and Syria. For the first time since the days of the Maccabees, there is a Jewish Governor in the Holy Land, Sir Herbert Samuel. Though much progress has been made since the armistice, yet at this critical time there is need of an awakening of missionary enthusiasm if the Christian Church is to do its share towards the rehabilitation of the Holy Land and minister to the needs of the saints in Jerusalem, as well as to the Moslems and others who come within the influence of our Christian civilization.

As our eyes are turned to the Holy City during Holy Week, let us pray that on Good Friday generous offerings from every church and mission may be given for the work of the Bishop in Jerusalem, and that God will hasten the appointed time when all Israel shall be saved.

THOMAS J. GARLAND,
Treasurer Jerusalem and the East Mission Fund.

The Up-State Association of St. Stephen's College Formed.

As the result of a preliminary meeting held in Utica, N. Y., in October, a meeting of the Up-State Alumni of St. Stephen's College, for the purpose of forming a definite organization, was held at the University Club in Syracuse on January 24, 1921.

At this meeting the Up-State Association of St. Stephen's College came into being in definite form. The following officers were elected: President, the Rev. C. S. Champlin, Baldwinsville; First Vice-President, the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Syracuse; Second Vice-President, the Rev. J. T. Rose, Cazenovia; Third Vice-President, the Rev. A. McGinnis, Montour Falls; Secretary and Treasurer, the Rev. J. A. Springsted, Utica.

It was decided that the Association shall meet four times a year, the annual meeting being in connection with commencement at college. The next meeting will be held at the University Club in Syracuse on April 11. All alumni and former students living in New York State west of Albany are to be included in the membership. The dues are 50 cents per year.

The Association has for its aims the promoting of effective interest in St. Stephen's College and fraternal intercourse among the members.

ALABAMA

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.

A Problem and One Solution.

The scattered rural work of the Church is a real concern to all who have her growth at heart. There is then cause for great thankfulness where difficulties of distance, bad roads, irregular travel by water, torrential rains for months together, disheartening isolation and discouragement, have been met and faced and the work carried strongly forward to success.

An example of this may be found in the missionary work of the Convocation of Mobile, Ala., whose report received warm praise at the Diocesan Council January 19. Two years ago the dean (the Rev. James F. Plummer) entered upon active care of the fifteen stations, after a year's interval of inactivity in all except three places. He took up this work in February, 1919, with the assistance of the Rev. J. T. McCaa, deacon, whose time was devoted to the three missions suburban to Mobile. Arranging to supply one service a month to each point, the dean was of course obliged to be content with week-day appointments for many of them.

These missions extend in their eastern dimensions from Atmore, a hundred miles south, to Bon Secours; and on the west side from Citronelle, fifty miles south, to Irvington. There are about as many communicants in this scattered territory as the average city church reports. Many are colonists accustomed to the prosperous and churchly conditions of city parishes—few of them at all wealthy, many earning a living by fruit and truck farming. Others are simple fisher folk.

The monthly services the dean has supplemented by holding Preaching Missions wherever practicable, and by remaining a day after the services whenever he found himself needed for visiting his flock and for seeking out newcomers, for care of the sick and any others in need of his ministrations.

A conspicuous feature of this development has been the provision of every-Sunday services at several of these missions by lay readers, ten of whom are now serving.

With this program and equipment, using everywhere the methods of the Nation-Wide Campaign, the following comparison of figures will serve practically to indicate the progress that has been had:

In 1917—Baptisms, 30; confirmations, 23; offerings for self-support, $755.25; offerings for general missions, $24.50; offerings for all purposes, $2,-579.24.

In 1919—Baptisms, 24; confirmations, 21; offerings for self-support, $2,-086.37; offerings for general missions, $423.68; offerings for all purposes, $3,-759.76.

In 1920—Baptisms, 45; confirmations, 42; offerings for self-support, $2,-601.66; offerings for general missions, $1,016.77; offerings for all purposes, $6,782.44.

A chapel has been built at Point Clear, another bought at Fairhope; and at Chickasaw, the two-year-old city of the United States Steel Corporation, there is, after many setbacks from the peculiarly shifting population and other unfavorable conditions, a hopeful prospect now of establishing the work on a good basis. A convict camp is now an additional monthly appointment.

In 1917 the net cost of this work to the Diocesan Board of Missions was approximately $2,000. In 1920 it was $491.34. It has become almost self-supporting. An additional missionary seems immediately in prospect. If he can be had, the field offers further and large prospects of development.

D. T. W.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Burning of St. Anne's Memorial Church, Nokesville.

St. Anne's Memorial Church, Nokesville, was burned to the ground on Saturday afternoon, February 12. The fire started in the space between the ceiling and the roof, and there was no fire protection in the village, so little could be done to save the building. Most of the furniture was saved, and the church was insured for $1,500, but the building cannot be replaced for less than $5,000. The congregation met on Sunday afternoon and decided to rebuild as soon as possible, and $740 was pledged on the spot.

St. Anne's was built about twenty years ago, and was one of the group of churches in Dettingen Parish, Prince William County, of which the Rev. A. Stuart Gibson is rector.

Monumental Church a Missionary Center.

An arrangement has been effected to associate the work of the Richmond City Missions with Monumental Church in this city.

Under this plan the Rev. R. Cary Montague, the City Missionary, will have his office at Monumental Church, and will be the night preacher there, and will occasionally look after parochial duties in the absence of the rector, the Rev. George P. Mayo, who will still keep in touch with the Mountain Mission work. In this way Monumental Church, with its historic background, will touch church activities from the slums of Richmond to the crests of the Blue Ridge.

NEVADA

Rt. Rev. G. C. Hunting, D. D., Bishop.

In Spite of Many Difficulties the Church Work Goes On.

"'No seem help white man much, maybe help Pah-Ute,' was the advice of one of the old wise men of the tribe in Southern Nevada, when the Indians stopped playing 'singing-stick,' their favorite gambling game, to discuss Christianity and going to church. So the school-room is filled at every service, more men attending than women."

This is a portion of one of the reports made at the fourteenth Annual Convocation of the District of Nevada, held in Trinity Church, Reno, January 23 to 25, by Archdeacon Percival S. Smithe, who traveled fifteen hundred miles in the round trip from his field in Southern Nevada. This amazing distance brings to mind the vastness of the work in the West. The six missionaries had to journey three thousand six hundred and eighteen miles in order to attend convocation. But they are accustomed to such work, for no place is too isolated to receive the ministrations of the Church either by the cheery missionary or the far traveling Bishop.

One can appreciate the probelms confronting Bishop Hunting when the statement is made that six of the eight men at work in Nevada have come in during the past year to fill vacancies. Despite immensity of territory and inexperience, the work goes on, and, perchance, the very vastness gives the worker a glimpse of the far-reaching vision of God. The reports at convocation spelled courage. Far down in the southern end of Nevada, near the painted desert, lies a town called Caliente, Spanish for a very hot place; in fact, extremely hot. Hear the report of Archdeacon Smithe: "We have a building fund. More are becoming interested. We had our first baptism and are preparing our first confirmation candidates. Yet, five years ago, when it was suggested that services be started, people laughed. Next report. God willing, will tell of a little church here." Five years in the face of ridicule! The policy of this seasoned soldier of the cross is this, "When people do not want me to come, there I go." Thank God for the courage bred in the Christian warfare of the desert land!

Owing to the number of new men in the convocation, there was little new legislation enacted. A canon providing for the Bishop and Council was adopted, thus centralizing the work of this wide field under one head. A canon was passed making the president of the Woman's Guild a member, ex-officio, of the Bishop's committee in organized missions. The report of the Building Committee showed many new buildings secured for the work of the church.

Those elected as delegates to the Synod of the Pacific were: The Rev. James MacLaughlin, the Rev. Henry A. Post, Hon. George S. Brown and Dr. George F. Pope. The Bishop appointed the Rev. John J. Cowan, Archdeacon of Reno, with headquarters at Yerington, and the Rev. Percival S. Smithe, Archdeacon of Las Vegas, with headquarters at Las Vegas.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. L. M. Burton, D. D., Bishop

The Diocese Has a Triple Celebration.

For the first time in its history the Diocese of Lexington passes from "the debtor to the creditor class," increasing its offering of $3,016 for the mission work of the Church in 1919 to $11,850 in 1920. The Diocese is now giving practically twice what it is getting. At the same time, twelve of the parishes increased the pledges for their own support from $23,000 to $38,000. This marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Diocese of Lexington.

In addition, the Triple Celebration, that of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Diocese, and of the consecration of its first and present Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D. D., and of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of Christ Church Parish, Lexington, was coincident with the welcome presence of women as lay delegates to the twenty-sixth Annual Council, a substantial increase to the Episcopate Endowment Fund of the Diocese, and the dedication of the Bishop Burton Community House, the first of the new buildings erected by the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington.

January 30 to February 1 were the gala days that marked the completion of twenty-five years of organized life and the beginning of a "new quarter of a century" of diocesan labor and service for the kingdom of God. The anniversary services were held on January 30, and the twenty-sixth Annual Council on January 31 and February 1, in Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, several services being held in the Church of the Good Shepherd also. Many clergymen of the Diocese attended the anniversary services on Sunday, January 30, at the Cathedral; and, where services were held throughout the Diocese, by clergy or lay reader, the short historical sketch of the Diocese, prepared for the occasion by Miss Kate Scudder, historiographer, was read in place of the sermon or address.

Appropriate services celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary on Sunday, January 30, in Lexington. Holy Communion was celebrated at the Church of the Good Shepherd, that city, and the Sunday school commemoration of the anniversary took place in the Cathedral, the address being made by the Rev. T. L. Settle, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The schools of the Lexington congregations and of near-by towns joined representatives from the schools throughout the Diocese in this service. The anniversary services proper were held in Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, the Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., dean, and consisted of the celebration of the Holy Communion at 11 A. M., and a special order of Evening Prayer at 7:45 o'clock, in both of which services many clergymen of the Diocese, vested, participated, the Cathedral choir rendering inspiring music. The Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, and one of Bishop Burton's consecrators, preached at the morning service. At the evening service the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Kentucky, at whose consecration Bishop Burton assisted as a consecrator, delivered the sermon. Bishop Woodcock bore to the Diocese of Lexington and its Bishop congratulations and praise upon this twenty-fifth anniversary occasion, from the "foster-mother" Diocese of Kentucky.

The offerings at all these services, amounting to practically $15,000, were for the increase of the Episcopate Endowment Fund of the Diocese. The Diocese, through its Endowment Commission, plans to increase its Endowment Fund by $20,000 in three years.

On Monday morning, January 31, in the Cathedral, Lexington, the twenty-sixth Annual Council of the Diocese convened, with the celebration of the Holy Communion, by the Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Senior Presbyter, the Rev. Alexander Patterson.

Council organized with the election of the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, Secretary, and the appointment of the Rev. H. P. Manning, Trinity Church, Danville, Assistant Secretary. Routine business occupied the Council both preceding and following the Bishop's address, in which warm welcome was accorded the women deputies, an appeal made for the completion of the Episcopate Endowment Fund, and the development of the Sunday school urged as the special aim and endeavor in the Diocesan Program for 1921. The full and detailed report of the Committee on Canons, as to Diocesan Canons revised so as to bring them into line with the General Canons, was adopted after proper deliberation.

The closing event of the anniversary celebration was the anniversary dinner held in the Cathedral Parish House. Covers were laid for some two hundred, practically all attending. Members of the Cathedral choir rendered a pleasing musical program, and the speakers of the evening, who held the attention of all with their humor and sound words, were the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, His Excellency, Edwin P. Morrow, Governor of Kentucky, and the Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton. Dean Massie, of the Cathedral, was a most pleasing and entertaining toastmaster.

Closing day of Council, February 1, completed elections and routine business. During the day business was interspersed with short addresses from two visitors. The Rev. Gardiner Tucker, of the Board of Religious Education of this province, gave a brief statement of the work of the Board. He spoke in the highest terms of the Program of Aim and Endeavor of this Diocese, adopted at the last Council as presented by Bishop Burton, emphasizing in particular the program for the development of the Sunday schools. Representing the Presiding Bishop and Council, the Rev. B. T. Kemerer, Field Secretary of the Nation-Wide Campaign, addressed the Council in the interest of the campaign, and was impressed by the showing of this Diocese.

The Council and anniversary exercises and services had a most fitting close in the dedication of the Bishop Burton Community House, the first of the new buildings erected by the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, the Rev. T. L. Settle in charge, the dedication taking place on the evening of February 1. A dinner preceded the services of dedication served by the congregation of the Good Shepherd to the Council in the basement of the new Community House. Covers were laid for over one hundred.

The dedication service was as impressive as the building was attractive. The Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., dean of the Cathedral, and the Bishop of the Diocese were in the chancel, in addition to the Rev. T. L. Settle, minister in charge of the Good Shepherd. The Bishop's address on this occasion was most appropriate.

Practically every parish and mission in the Diocese was represented on this anniversary occasion by either clerical or lay delegate.

The elections were as follows:

Standing Committee—Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., Ven. F. B. Wentworth, Rev. George H. Harris, Dr. W. B. McClure, Mr. W. D. Spalding and Mr. Henry Higgin.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod—The Rev. Messrs. Ira D. Lang, E. T. Jillson, T. L. Settle, W. B. Dern, Alexander Patterson, J. J. Clopton; and Messrs. T. J. Bell, C. K. Morrell, A. D. Cole, Henry Higgin, A. C. Hunter, J. A. Edge. Alternate Deputies—The Rev. Messrs. W. S. Cain, R. D. Baldwin, R. K. Massie, G. H. Harris, F. B. Wentworth, J. H. Gibbons; and Messrs. H. W. Shoup, F. E. Tuttle, J. A. Herring, D. M. Bowmar, W. W. Pettis, J. A. Murray.

H. P. M.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Services of Unusual Interest Being Held in Washington This Year.

Washington Church people will be indeed fortunate in the opportunities offered them at the Lenten services in Washington, if plans are carried out as begun. Visiting clergy are to be invited from time to time to speak at the mid-day services at Epiphany Church, and the speaker every day of the week beginning February 13 was Dr. Milo H. Gates, of the Church of the Intercession, New York. Dr. Gates is the oldest, in length of service, of any of the vicars of Trinity Parish, New York, and has declined the bishopric of Cuba and the appointment as dean of the Cathedral in Denver, Col.

At St. John's Church, Sixteenth and H Streets, Canon Douglas has inaugurated something of a departure in the way of Lenten services, and will have at different times preachers of other denominations. At the first of these services, which are to be every afternoon, the Rev. Leighton Parks, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York, was the speaker, and among others listed for these services are Bishop William F. McDowell, of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Charles A. Wood, of the Church of the Covenant; the Rev. J. J. Muir, of the Temple Baptist Church, and recently elected chaplain of the Senate; Bishop Murray, of Baltimore; Bishop Leonard, of Ohio; Senator Hoke Smith, a Presbyterian; Colonel W. C. Rivers, of Fort Myer; Charles H. Hamlin, of the Federal Reserve Bank; Senator Spencer, Admiral R. E. Coontz, chief of naval operations. U. S. N., and Dr. Howard Kelly, of Johns Hopkins University. Also, the services under the direction of the Laymen's Service Association, assisted by a committee from the Washington Federation of Churches, at Keith's Theatre daily at noon, except Saturday and Sunday, are attracting wide attention. At the first service Commissioner J. Thilman Hendrick was the speaker, giving the approval of the District government to the services. Mr. Hendrick was introduced by Bishop Harding, and Mr. Edward Stock, president of the Laymen's Service Association, presided. Among the speakers at these services will be the following: Secretary Daniels, Colonel J. T. Axton, chaplain-in-chief, U. S. A.; Commissioner Martin A. Morrison, Civil Service Commission; Livingstone Farrand, head of the American Red Cross; Judge William F. Norris, Department of Justice; Dr. William Miller Collier, president of George Washington University; Charles S. Mitchell, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, Superintendent of Schools; Oliver Hoyem, secretary of the Prison Reform Committee, and James T. Lloyd, former Missouri representative. It is planned that certain days are to be set aside for special organizations, including several of the government departments, the Masonic and other fraternal organizations. It is also planned to have a precentor present every day to lead in congregational singing, accompanied by the different organists of the city who have volunteered their services.

An important meeting of the leaders of the Church School Service League was held at Epiphany Parish Hall on Saturday afternoon, February 12. Leaders of what was formerly the Junior Auxiliary heard a report of the recent meeting of the children of all the branches at St. Margaret's, and received instructions about the work for the boxes. Only fourteen parishes have actively adopted the Church School Service League, but several others have expressed a desire to know more about it, and perhaps later take up the work definitely in connection with the Sunday school. Being really just a broadening out of the old Auxiliary, it has splendid opportunities for good and should serve as a means of enlisting all the children of the parish in the Church's work.

At the evening service at Christ Church, Georgetown, Sunday, February 13, reports of the recent Diocesan Convention were given in place of the sermon by the two lay delegates from that church, Mr. George A. King and Mr. J. Holdsworth Gordon. The custom of hearing from the laymen in the churches, now and then, is growing and seems a good one, drawing as it does the clergy and laity closer together and giving the lay people of the church a more vital interest in its affairs.

The regular monthly meeting of the Sunday School Institute was held at St. Margaret's Church, on Tuesday evening, February 15. Mrs. Edward Roome, of St. Stephen's Church, gave an address on "What the Church Can Do for Americanization and Patriotic Education," after which departmental conferences followed.

M. M. W.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

The Archdeaconry of Williamsport held its winter session in Trinity Church, Williamsport, on February 7, Archdeacon Lascelle presiding. The business was chiefly routine. The chief feature of the occasion was the laymen's annual banquet, which was held in the Williamsport Community House, formerly Trinity Church Parish House. Nearly five hundred and ninety-nine guests were present, and for the first time on these occasions women were admitted to the banquet.. The toastmaster was General C. M. Clement, of Sunbury, who is the Secretary of the Diocese. The guest of honor was Bishop Gailor, President of the Council. His subject was, "The Church at Work." He said that Christianity as an organized force had accomplished all the great things in the world. He made a strong plea for the foreign element in the country, mentioning the immigrants as in great need of help. He instanced the mountaineers in the South as requiring our attention in positive Christian ways.

Bishop Darlington spoke on "Our Relations With the Eastern Churches." He said that Church union is really possible if we only work and pray for it. He brought with him by request many presents given him by Orthodox Eastern prelates on his visit to them this last summer. These were exhibited and created much interest. Among them was a complete set of vestments worn by Eastern Bishops. These had been worn by Bishop Nicolai, of Serbia, in Trinity Church, New York, on Sunday, February 6, and in St. John's Cathedral, New York, on the same day, Bishop Nicolai being the preacher on both occasions.

The Archdeaconry adopted resolutions expressing a "deep sense of gratitude" for the work of Bishop Darlington in bringing closer together and to a more sympathetic attitude and clearer mutual understanding the Eastern and the American Episcopal Churches, and pledging to him their full and hearty accord in this endeavor.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

N.-W. C.: Meeting of Executive Committee.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Nation-Wide Campaign was held in Christ Church, Savannah, on February 10, the Bishop, as chairman, presiding. The Executive Secretary reported on the results of the campaign for 1921, giving the amount of the pledges to date as $36.559.91, with one more parish to hear from. This is only 73 per cent. of the quota raised against 92 per cent. last year. This decrease is attributed to the unsettled business conditions at the time of the canvass. The Diocesan Treasurer reported that 81 per cent. of the 1920 pledges had been paid in. Of the diocesan apportionment, the expenses of the campaign have been met, and the salaries of nearly all of the missionary clergy have been raised. The committee voted to disburse the balance on hand for the amount allowed in the budget for the University of the South, an allowance for the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, and the item in the budget for an Episcopal residence. This amount is to be sent to the treasurer of the corporation to be held in trust until such time as the Diocesan Convention decides that there are sufficient funds on hand to build or purchase a residence.

Social Service Work of Woman's Auxiliary.

Active interest in social service work has been aroused among the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta. The recently organized Section B was hostess to the parent branch on February 1, when the Rev. Mortimer Glover, of Graniteville, S. C., gave the two branches a talk on the problems of mill work. A large mill district near Augusta was the subject of another talk the next morning at a meeting of Section A, which has selected for its subject of study for the winter the mill districts of the Church. One of the social workers of the King Mill

District, near Augusta, told of the beginnings of the work from a small sewing class twenty years ago to the marvelous scope and accomplishment of the present time.

E. D. J.

COLORADO.

Rt. Rev. I. P. Johnson, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop-Coadjutor Elected.

At the meeting of the Diocesan Convention, held on February 2 in Denver, the Rev. Fred Ingley, rector of St. Mark's Church, Denver, was elected Bishop-Coadjutor on the fourth ballot.

The Rev. Fred Ingley was born in England November 20, 1878. He was graduated from the Philadelphia Divinity School in 1906, and the same year was ordained deacon. In the following year he was ordained priest by Bishop Whitehead. He was rector of St. Mary's Church, Braddock, Pa., 1906-1908, and of St. Matthew's Church, Kenosha, Wis., 1908-1917. Since 1917 he has been rector of St. Mark's Church, Denver.

NEWARK

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Bishop to Take Needed Rest.

On account of an acute affection of the eyes, Bishop Lines has been ordered by his physician to rest completely for a month. Although his eyes have been improving and the Bishop's general health is pronounced good, the doctors declare that the cessation from all work is absolutely necessary.

Bishop Stearly takes some of Bishop Lines' appointments, but other engagements have been cancelled.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Galilee Mission in Need of Funds.

Feeding several hundred men a day free of cost and housing many of them has almost exhausted the funds of the Galilee Mission.

Since the closing down of many similar missions, the Galilee Mission has been taxed to the limit. In view of the destitute condition of a large number of men who apply for aid, the mission lately has not charged its nominal rate for meals and lodging. Pending the arrival of hoped for funds, Bishop Rhinelander and the parishes of St. James, Holy Apostles, Holy Trinity and Christ Churches will arrange to finance the mission for one day each.

Service Men Honored in Old St. Peter's Church.

Special ceremonies marked the unveiling of a tablet in St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, on February 6, commemorating the heroism of the men of the parish who served in the world war. The tablet was unveiled by Rev. Edward M. Jefferys, rector of the church, who conducted the service, and made the address. The tablet is made of wood, and on the surface is the painted figure of St. Michael on one side and the names of the one hundred men who served in the war on the other. Under the picture are the names of the four men who made the supreme sacrifice.

Novel Plan Adopted.

There is a room for checking babies during Sunday services at the Church of St. John the Baptist, Germantown.

This plan, which was introduced recently in Chicago, is established by the rector, the Rev. Francis M. Wetherill.

Mothers are able to check their babies free of charge, to be cared for by a paid trained assistant during all the regular services. Any children under five years of age will be accepted.

Archdeacon E. L. Baskervill, of Charleston, S. C., made an appeal for funds for the mission schools of South Carolina at the monthly meeting of the Colored Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese.

"Why not give the same advantages to the colored people, who have been Americans for centuries, as you give the foreign population?" he asked.

He made an appeal for $10,000 to be used for salaries for industrial teachers and for extending industrial training in the fourteen mission schools in the Diocese of South Carolina.

R. R. W.

TENNESSEE

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Dean of St. Mary's Cathedral.

The Ven. F. Du M. Devall, dean of the Cathedral of St. Mary, Memphis, Tenn., died suddenly Thursday morning, February 10. He was much beloved, especially by children and young people. He was secretary of the Standing Committee, and held many other posts of honor in the Church. He is survived by a wife and family.

Bishop Beatty accompanied his remains to New Orleans, where interment took place.

B. C.

NEW YORK.

Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D.,
Bishop-Elect.

Organization of St. Mark's Improvement Corporation.

St. Mark's Church, in the Bowery, the historic one of the name in New York, the Rev. William Norman Guthrie, rector, announces a St. Mark's Improvement Corporation. Its capital is $25,000 authorized. Responsible laymen are officers and directors. There are to be issued ordinary and preferred stock, $10 per share. The latter is expected to return 7 per cent. interest. The announcement made states that the plan has been authorized by the vestry of the parish. A primary purpose is to operate successfully real estate owned by the parish, and after the interest on the stock holdings are paid, to turn the profits over to the parish support and work. A secondary aim, hardly less important than the first, is the reclaiming of properties in the neighborhood, preventing them falling into wrong hands, and their use for homes of people who may attend and work in St. Mark's Parish.

St. Mark's is in an extreme down town section of the lower East Side of Manhattan. It is possessed of some endowment, in part in real estate in its own neighborhood, and yet it has been able for years to carry on successfully one of the most unusual programs in any city. Officers and directors of the corporation, including the parish rector, are laymen of St. Mark's, familiar with the neighborhood, and experienced for the most part in real estate affairs.

Lenten Services Well Attended.

The Lenten season in New York began quite up to the average in the matter of public interest and number of noon-day services. Some periodicals of large circulation publish articles this month showing church attendance to have declined, but all are wholly misinformed so far as New York is concerned. Attendance on Sundays and at noon-day services were never larger than this winter and this Lent. Such statement is made only upon definite information, gained at first hands. The number of noon-day services, maintained by places of worship not Episcopal, steadily increases, and so does attendance upon those established some years ago. This Lent, for the first time, the Roman Catholic Cathedral in New York starts noon-day services for business people.

C.

CALIFORNIA.

Rt. Rev. Wm. F. Nichols, D. D., Bishop.

Unusual Lenten Services.

For the twenty-fourth season daily Lenten services are being held every day (Sunday expected) from 12:15 to 12:45 in the Merchants' Exchange Building, San Francisco. The unusual feature of these services is that among the speakers are clergymen from the Roman Catholic, Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist and Baptist Churches, as well as our own clergy, thus following the suggestions of the Lambeth Conference.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop.

Diocesan Consciousness and Advance Keynote of Convention.

The thirteenth annual convocation of the Missionary District of Wyoming held in St. Thomas' Church, Rawlins, Wyo., from January 21 to 24 inclusive, brought together nineteen clergy and seventy lay men and women. The keynote of the whole gathering was Diocesan Consciousness and Advance, as brought out by the Bishop's sermon The newly organized House of Church Laymen and the House of Church Women, which held its twelfth annual meeting, caught this note, and accepted several of the tasks laid before them by the Bishop.

Convocation itself passed a canon creating the Bishop and District Executive Council to be made up of ex-officio and elective members. The membership of the Council is now as follows:

The Rt. Rev. N. S. Thomas, Bishop of Wyoming; the Hon. T. S. Taliaferro, Jr., Lay Chancellor; W. W. Daley, President of the House of Church Laymen; Mrs. N. S. Thomas, President of the House of Church Women; the Rev. Charles A. Bennett, rector St. Mark's, Cheyenne; the Rev. Philip K. Edwards, rector St. Mark's, Casper; the Rev. Samuel E. West, rector St. Peter's, Sheridan; W. R. Coe, of Cody, three-year term; Barry Marshall, of Sheridan, two-year term; J. H. Walton, of Cheyenne, one-year term; Mrs. D. W. Thornberry, of Laramie, three-year term; Mrs. E. S. Brooks, of Rock Springs, two-year term; Mrs. F. S. Burrage, of Laramie, one-year term.

The House of Church Laymen organized on Saturday, January 22, in St. Thomas' Church. The meeting was called to order by T. S. Taliaferro, Jr., of Rock Springs, the Lay Chancellor of the district. The House organized by electing W. W. Daley, of Rawlins, as president. Ex-Governor B. B. Brooks, of Casper, was elected vice-president, and C. D. Williamson, of Hanna, secretary-treasurer.

After considering the various tasks presented by the Bishop in his sermon, the laymen undertook to raise the money necessary to move and equip a large frame house now on the Cathedral Square in Laramie, to a lot upon which it may be used as a combined home and school for the Church girls of the State who desire to take advantage of the educational advantages offered by Laramie, the University city. A committee on ways and means was appointed to bring about this institution, which will give to the ranch girls of Wyoming a chance to obtain their education at a moderate cost.

The House of Church Women undertook the raising of the money for a memorial cross to be erected upon the Cathedral Square in memory of the Churchmen of Wyoming who gave their lives in the service of the country during the world war. The women, under the leadership of Mrs. T. S. Taliaferro, hope to have in hand by the first of March the funds for the memorial. The memorial is a slender cross, seventeen feet in height, and of marvelous detail. There will be no more beautiful cross in America.

The United Thank offering service was held on Monday morning, the medication being given by the Rev. Elvon L. Tull, of Torrington. The offering given at this time amounted to $158.31.

The institutions of the district were brought before the people at a banquet, at which addresses were made by Mrs. D. W. Thornberry, president of the Board of Managers of the Cathedral Home for Children; the Rev. Lewis D. Smith, chaplain of the Bishop Randall Hospital; Mr. Frank L. Hoyt, for twelve years in the government Indian service, but now bursar of St. Michael's Mission, Ethete; the Ven. Ernest Dray, on the missions of the district, and Bishop Thomas, who exercised his happy faculty of summing up the points of the speakers.

Sunday morning services were held at 10:30 in the Masonic Temple, as the little church could not contain the worshippers, and a rousing rally was held at the Masonic Temple at 7:45 P. M. in the interests of Religious Education, at which the responsibility for the fact that only 12 per cent. of Wyoming's population is confessedly Christian, was laid first at the door of the home, and then the school. The discussion was led by Archdeacon Dray, and many gave their opinions of the present condition of the world and the causes theretor.

Elections resulted as follows:

Registrar: Professor Justus F. Soule, Laramie.

Council of Advice: The Rev. Messrs. D. W. Thornberry, George C. Rafter, Ernest Dray, and Messrs. A. E. Roedel and F. S. Burrage.

Delegates to the General Convention: The Very Rev. D. W. Thornberry, the Hon. T. S. Taliaferro, Jr. Alternates: The Rev. Guy E. Kagey, Herbert J. King.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Charles A. Bennett, Lewis D. Smith and Elvon L. Tull; Messrs. W. W. Daley, A. C. Jones and J. H. Walton. Alternates: The Rev. F. J. Chipp, the Rev. Samuel E. West, the Rev. Philip K. Edwards; Messrs. George E. Brimmer, A. H. Cordiner and C. D. Williamson.

Officers of the House of Churchwomen: President, Mrs. N. S. Thomas, Cheyenne; Vice-President, Mrs. T. S. Taliaferro, Jr., Rock Springs; Secretary-Treasurer, Mrs. George A. Campbell, Laramie.

L. M. T.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.

The winter session of the Archdeaconry of Scranton was held at Calvary Church, Wilkes-Barre (the Rev. Robert F. Kline, rector), on January 25 and 26. The Rev. E. G. N. Holmes, rector of Trinity Church, Carbondale, was elected Archdeacon of Scranton, to succeed the Ven. John Talbot Ward, who had resigned to become rector of St. Mary's Church, Burlington, N. J. The Rev. F. P. Houghton was elected secretary to succeed the Rev. E. G. N. Holmes. The clergy showed their regret at the departure of Archdeacon Ward by presenting him with a purse of gold. On the first afternoon the Rev. F. T. Henstridge read a paper on Religious Education, opening a conference on the subject. Bishop Talbot preached the sermon at the public service in the evening, and celebrated the Holy Communion on Wednesday morning. The Rev. S. U. Mitman made an address on "The Human Voice in Public Worship." The Rev. Oliver Kingman presented an exegesis. The Rev. E. J. Morris, of the Puritan Congregational Church, Wilkes-Barre, reviewed H. G. Wells' book on the history of the world. Professor Arthur W. Jenks conducted the Quiet Hour.

The Bishop and Executive Council have issued a report for the year 1920. Instead of the diocesan quota of $278,000 formerly used, the aggregate of the parish and mission quotas is recorded as $257,654.43. The Nation-Wide Campaign pledges of the parishes and missions amounted to $108,414.85. Of the amount pledged, $12,748.09 remained unpaid when the books were closed, but twenty-one parishes and missions had exceeded their pledges by $2,999.76, thus leaving a net balance due and unpaid in the Diocese of $9,748.09.

The Church of the Mediator, Allentown; St. Mark's Church, Dunmore; Grace Church, Dorranceton; St. John's Church, Glenburn, and All Saints' Church, Shenandoah, have surrendered the $2,000 aid heretofore given them by the Board of Missions and assumed the full burden of their own maintenance, thus releasing a considerable sum for other advance work.

Scranton: A fathers' and sons' banquet was held at St. Luke's Parish House (the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, rector) on Wednesday evening, February 2. Mr. Ralph E. Weeks, president of the International Correspondence Schools, was the principal speaker. Moving pictures were shown, and upon the raising of the curtain a modern athletic exhibition was staged. The number of subscribers to the Nation-Wide Campaign in this parish has been increased from 425 to 550, the amount pledged being $7,378.

St. Mary's Church, Reading (the Rev. W. R. Wood, rector), has been completely restored after the fire of December 16, 1919, at a cost of nearly $12,000. The remaining debt is only $900. During Christmastide St. Mary's Church School entertained the ninety-three children from the Church Home for Children, Jonestown, and gave them gifts as well as a thoroughly good time. The school supports three of the children at Jonestown.

W. M.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop.

A Good Example to Follow.

Many men start a project, but few have the sanctified common sense to provide for the continuance of the good work.

One of those whose affection for the Church and wise beneficence were equably notable was Mr. Harley E. Proctor, of New York. Mr. Proctor was one of the founders of the Church of Our Saviour, Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, O., of which the Rev. J. Hollister Lynch, D. D., is rector. He removed from Cincinnati some years ago, and died recently. His family are giving an endowment to the church in his memory, and his son, Mr. William Proctor, has already sent to the parish authorities securities worth $5,000, with a promise of more.

No money could be better expended, for the church is doing a very vital work in a suburb, the population of which is increasing and changing yearly. The endowment will give to the church a commanding position as a social center, and an open door for righteousness.

C. G. R.

IDAHO.

Rt. Rev. F. H. Touret, D. D., Bishop.

New Parish House Opened.

The rectory of St. Luke's Church, Weiser, the Rev. Thomas Ashworth, rector, has been transformed into a parish house. The formal opening was on Friday evening, January 14, at which time a congratulatory telegram from Bishop Touret was read. An excellent musical program was enjoyed by a large number of communicants and friends of the church. The whole community is taking considerable interest in the new parish house as a center of social activities.

Grace Church, Nampa: The Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church, Nampa, the Rev. Martin Damer, rector, has assumed a debt of $1,800 for repairs on the local church property. The sum will be raised by teas and public entertainments.

The Social Service Club of Grace Church, Nampa, recently had a very successful candy sale, the proceeds being used for a child's bed in St. Luke's Hospital, Boise. The club is composed of the boys and girls of the Sunday school.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

GOING FORWARD.

A picture in the illustrated supplement of the New York Times of Sunday, February 7, is significant of the advance of the consideration in which people of every class are held today.

The title under this photograph is more striking than the picture itself. The latter simply shows a group of people dressed in uniforms, and the usual frock coats and silk hats of European statesmen, but underneath we read:

"KING VICTOR EMMANUEL III. AND QUEEN HELEN Attending the Ceremony of the Laying of the First Stone of a Group of Houses in Rome for Working People."

It is a great thought that comes to us as we look at this scene when royalty is attending at the beginning of a building which is not for the commemorating of some great deed of arms or event of statesmanship, but an habitation for living, breathing people, and they, not of a privileged class, not a place where the making of laws will take place, or courts will sit in judgment, but just a place where working people will live, where will be built that most sacred of all human institutions, the home of the plain people.

Surely the world is moving to the great ideal of our Saviour, when we shall realize that we are all members of one body, when we can see such a picture as this.

There are many sad lapses in our progress, and times of bitterness and hatred and distress of nations, nevertheless the movement is sure though slow, and such a photograph as this comes to us like a gleam of brilliant sunshine on a dark and gloomy day.

May we not feel, too, that this incident is only the forerunner of many such, when the care and housing of living people will become as important in the minds of statesmen as will the erection of buildings to commemorate the deeds of the dead!

TWO OF GOD'S SERVANTS.

It is both interesting and helpful to draw analogies between Bible characters and our great men of modern times. In this way we can often fix facts and incidents about the lives of such men in our minds so that we draw nearer to both the ancient and the modern hero by having a clearer vision of him and the services that he rendered to God and man in our memories.

No doubt many of our readers are familiar with the often used comparison between the life of Moses and that of General Lee. They both secured their education and training from those whom they afterwards opposed. Each of them had to make a definite decision whether or no they would cast in their lot with their brethren to their own loss or accept emoluments and distinction from those who had trained them, but were not their own people. And neither of these leaders saw the successful conclusion of the task he had undertaken.

There is another couplet, however, who will be more timely for the coming week in which we shall commemorate the birthday of the founder of our country.

The lives of George Washington and the prophet Samuel follow each other in some striking ways.

The prophet's services to his country and his God were rendered during one of those periods of change in the life of his nation which always marks an epoch in human events. He was the last of the judges, and concluded that dispensation, when the history of the children of Israel presents a unique picture in world affairs, living as a pure theocracy being guided more than governed by leaders whom God raised up from every station of life, and of both sexes. In the perspective of history we sometimes lose sight of the fact that this stage of the Hebrew development lasted for three hundred years, or longer than twice the life of our country.

Samuel, however, was the last of these divinely selected judges, but he heard the clamorings of the people for a change and was sufficiently open-minded to recognize the necessity for it, having the integrity and ability to guide his people across the chasm from a theocratic form of government to that of a monarchy, at the same time maintaining his own leadership, and the honor and respect in which he was held.

So, too, the life of Washington fills just such a gap in the history of his people, for he also helped to form the bridge by which his countrymen marched from the system of a colonial dependence to that of an independent government. We sometimes forget that a great part of the life of this statesman was led as a British subject, a colonial gentleman, a soldier and a legislator for his subsequent opponents, and it was only with the utmost reluctance that he became first a rebel and then a patriot.

Samuel, again like Washington, has left us one of his greatest heritages in his retiring address (1 Sam., twelfth chapter), when he concludes with those words which we so sorely need to take into our own lives today, "Only fear the Lord and serve him in truth with all your heart, for consider how great things he hath done for you."

In the same way it is Washington's retiring address that is best known of all his utterances, and that has influenced the course of his country more than any of his other speeches.

In thus considering the lives of our Bible heroes, and of our countrymen, we appreciate that in each case we have before us men whom God loved and guided for the effecting of His purposes, and it gives us inspiration to feel that He has something for each of us to do for Him, and that He will give us also His strength and help in the doing of it if we will seek to serve Him through a life of usefulness to His children.

So upon February 22, besides enjoying the holiday which has been rightly given throughout the country, let us also make it profitable to our souls by meditating upon these great examples whom God has sent for our emulation.

GIDEONS.

The Society of the Gideons is one that is not so generally known as it should be. It is composed entirely of traveling men, all of whom are members of some church.

One of the chief objects of the Gideons is to place a Bible in every hotel guest room in this country. They have been working quietly but steadily with this end in view for a great many years, and have distributed for this purpose no less than 461,000 Bibles.

It is hard to realize what this means, and can be visualized better by saying that these Bibles would fill thirty-five box cars.

The Gideon Bible has a little notice in the front to guide men in using it, pointing out special scriptural passages for different states of mind.

No finer work is being done in this country than that being accomplished by the Gideons, and they deserve the hearty support and co-operation of our churches.

When the Gideons come to "Bible your town," give them all the help you can.

A program worth working for has been adopted by the Christian Church in Sendai, Japan. Each member is asked to win one member for the church each year; to make a money offering every day; and to read and memorize a portion of Scripture each day.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

FEBRUARY.

1. Tuesday.
2. Wednesday. Purification B. V. M.
6. Quinquagesima Sunday.
9. Ash Wednesday.
13. First Sunday in Lent.
16, 18, 19. Ember Days.
20. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Thursday. St. Matthias.
27. Third Sunday in Lent.
28. Monday.

Collect for the Second Sunday in Lent.

Almighty God, Who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves; keep us both outwardly in our bodies and inwardly from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from the evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Collect for St. Matthias' Day.

O Almighty God, Who into the place of the traitor Judas didst choose Thy faithful servant Matthias to be of the number of the twelve apostles; grant that Thy Church, being always preserved from false apostles, may be ordered and guided by faithful and true pastors, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

In Thy Holy Keeping.

When life's storms come thick and fast.
Wave on wave o'ersweeping,
Safe, O Lord, we rest in peace
In Thy holy keeping.

When life's sorrows rend our hearts,
Smiling turned to weeping;
Still we know that naught can wrest
From Thy holy keeping.

When our plans all seem to fail,
Sowing brings no reaping,
All our harvests we confide
To Thy holy keeping.

All our interests, those we love,
Waking hours or sleeping;
We can trust, as we abide
In Thy holy keeping.

—Rev. William Bryant, D. D.

Lent.

The dividing of the civil year into seasons of fast and festival brings to our minds the great truths connected with our religion. In no other way, perhaps, are we so well safeguarded against the over-emphasizing of any one fact connected with our Lord's life to the neglect of others, as we are by the regular observance of the Church's year. Beginning with Advent, our minds are carried back to the world's preparation for His first coming, and forward to our own preparation for the day when He will come to judge the results of the first Advent. The thoughts of the Advent season tune our minds for the joy of His birth at Christmas, when He came "in great humility" to win our love and to draw us away from self, and the world with its cares, sins and sorrows. The year really ends with the festival of All Saints (November 1) when the Church brings forth the jewels out of her treasury and gives thanks to God for all His saints—all the holy ones of every race and age who have grown in strength and holiness and have come to those unspeakable joys which God has prepared for them that unfeignedly love Him: the fruits of the first Advent.

Our services are now in a minor key. Our Lord is on His way to Calvary and calls to each of us, "Come, take up the cross and follow Me." Lent is a time of spiritual refreshment when we lament our condition as sinners with unforgiven sins, make an examination of our lives, lay our souls bare before God, resolve to give up those sins of which "our conscience is afraid," and humbly ask for God's pardon through the merits of the Saviour.

"Nor alms, nor deeds that I have done,
Can for a single sin atone;
To Calvary alone I flee:
O God, be merciful to me."

To aid us in this work the Church provides extra services during the Lenten season, preaching services of instruction and the Holy Communion wherein we see His love and our sins, our condition and His willingness to forgive. The picture we need to keep in our minds during these six weeks is that of Calvary, and daily ask ourselves, "Why does He hang on the cross?"

How different this is from what we usually hear about Lent and our duty! We talk of giving up sugar, tobacco or moving pictures, without any thought of coupling our little acts of self-denial with increased spiritual exercises. To deny ourselves only is to cheat God and make a mockery of the Lenten season. It may possibly be good for our health to eat less and to be more quiet in our social activities, but Lent is more than a good health endeavor. It means nothing unless it touches our spiritual life. The denying ourselves food and pleasure must be used for God's glory as well as for our own comfort. The time saved should be devoted to prayer, including attendance at the extra services and reading of books about the Church and her teaching. The money saved should be a part of our Easter offering. God does not expect us to be perfectly good, but to be growing better, a gradual advance in meeting temptation, in conflict with sin, in growing likeness to our Saviour. Each succeeding Lent therefore should find us doing greater things in a finer spirit, and not content with saying, "My rule in Lent is this or that." St. Paul tells us that when he was a child he spake and acted as a child, but when he came to adult life he put away childish things, Christian progression. May we all hearken to what the Lord God will say concerning us this Lenten season and by the more frequent use of prayer and sacraments grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Selected.

The Parables of Safed the Sage.

The Man From Jonesville.

Now there was among my neighbors a man whose name was Smith, and he was from Jonesville. And he told me often of Jonesville, what a lovely place it was, and how every one who lived there was happy and virtuous, and how sorry he was that he ever had left there, and how he wanted to go back to Jonesville. And when the men in the city where I lived failed to clean the snow off their sidewalks, or the City Council indulged in graft, or the children were rude, or there was an early frost, he told me that such things did not happen in Jonesville. And this continued for nigh unto twenty years; and the older he grew the more he talked about Jonesville. And I told him I hoped that when he died he would go to Jonesville.

Now it came to pass that he prospered, so that he retired from business. And he sold his house and lot in the city wherein I dwelt, and went back to Jonesville that he might spend his last years in peace, and die in Jonesville. And we all bade him farewell, with something of sorrow, and something of relief.

And it came to pass that at the end of six months he and his wife moved back again and bought back their old house for a thousand dollars more than they sold it for. And they were tenfold more happy to get back than they had been to go away.

And it came to pass on an evening that Keturah and I called on them. I said, Old fellow, tell me on the level, what was the matter with Jonesville?

And he said to me, Speak not to me of Jonesville, lest I do thee harm. It is the toughest joint this side of State's prison. The dear people we knew have all died or moved away, and they who are in their places are unneighborly and snobbish. We have come back to dwell in the place where we have spent twenty happy years, and we have but one favor to ask of our old neighbors, and that is, that they never speak to us of Jonesville.

And as Keturah and I walked home, I spake to her, and said, Keturah.

And Keturah answered, I know what thou art about to say; and I suspected all the time that it would be just so.

And I said, There are many men and women who sigh for some Jonesville or other, who might be decently happy where they are if they would make it their business.

And Keturah said, Our Jonesville is right here.

And I said, Amen.—Presbyterian Banner.

Out of the Deeps.

Out of the deeps, oh, God, out of the deeps,
Where all my broken purposes are laid,
The unburied hopes of good for which I prayed,
Where never tides are stilled, nor memory sleeps,
And over all black mist of misery creeps,
Where rest is mockery, and every shade
Is formless dread, betraying and betrayed,
Up through the depths to Thee my worn heart leaps.

I fail, I falter; Lord, uphold my hand,
Master, behold my scars! My wounds relieve,
The deeps close over; help Thou me to stand,
Hear me, and heal me; all that I conceive
Of punishment is in Thy reprimand,
Out of the deeps, dear God, my soul receive. —R. W. McKnight.

What a Boy Costs.

So you are twenty-one.

And you stand up, clear-eyed, clear-minded, to look all the world squarely in the face. You are a man!

Did you ever think, son, how much it has cost to make a man out of you?

Some one has figured up the cost in money of rearing a child. He says to bring up a young man to legal age, care for him and educate him, costs $25,000, which is a lot of money to put into flesh and blood.

But that isn't all.

You have cost your father many hard knocks and short dinners and gray streaks in his hair; and your mother—O boy, you will never know! You have cost her days and nights of anxiety, and wrinkles in her dear face, and heartaches and sacrifice.

It has been expensive to grow up.

If you are what we think you are, you are worth all your cost—and much, much more.

Be sure of this: While father does not say much but "Hello, son," 'way down deep in his tough, stanch heart he thinks you are the finest ever; and as for the little mother, she simply cannot keep her love and pride for you out of her eyes. You are a man now.

And some time you must step into your father's shoes. He wouldn't like you to call him old, but just the same he isn't as young as he used to be. You see, young man, he has been working pretty hard for more than twenty years to help you up, and already your mother is beginning to lean on you.

Doesn't that sober you, twenty-one?

Your father has done fairly well, but you can do better. You may not think so, but he does. He has given you a better chance than he had. In many ways you can begin where he left off. He expects a good deal from you, and that is why he has tried to make a man of you. Don't flinch, boy!

The world will try you out. It will put to test every fibre in you; but you are made of good stuff. Once the load is fairly strapped on your young shoulders you will carry it and scarcely feel it—if only there be the willing and cheerful mind. All hail you on the threshold!

It's high time you are beginning to pay the freight—and your back debts to your father and mother. You will pay them up, won't you?

How shall you pay them?

By being always and everywhere a man!—Selected.

It Took More Courage.

We do not always realize how much courage and strength of character it requires to refrain from "getting even" with those who have injured us. A gentleman who has made it his work to help men after their release from prison tells how one man came to see this. He says:

"One of the men who came to me was thirsting for revenge upon a policeman who had been instrumental in getting him into prison, and who, as the man declared, had 'persecuted' him ever since his release.

"'I'm waiting for him,' he said, 'and I'll get him yet. And if I do get my chance at him, he'll never torment another fellow the way he has me.'

"'I wouldn't do that,' I said. 'It seems to me that would be cowardly.'

"'Cowardly?' he repeated in surprise. 'I don't see how you can make that out.'

"'When any one feels as you do,' I said, 'it takes far more courage not to fight than it would to fight. There is nothing easier than to let go of your passions; any one can do that, and the weakest man is the one who is the quickest to let go his hold of them. It takes a brave man and a strong man to hold down his passion of anger and revenge. You would not call a lion tamer brave who allowed his lions to do as they chose and get the mastery of him. Let this policeman go his way, and I will try to help you to live such a life that he will have no reason for overshadowing you.'

"He went away grumbling, but with a different look upon his face. In three or four days he was back again.

"'I've been thinking over what you said,' he announced. 'And I believe you're right. It does take more courage sometimes to keep out of a fight than it does to go into it. I've made up my mind that I'm strong enough to keep a firm hold on myself, and I intend to do it. And it gives me a better feeling here.' He laid his hand on his breast. I helped him all I could after that, and the time came when there was no need for his old enemy, the policeman, to shadow him." Selected.

Washington's Waterloo.

"Pray tell me is my hat on straight?"
The stylish Martha cried.
"It's tilting slightly on the left,"
The truthful George replied.

"You mailed my urgent letter, dear?"
The anxious Martha cried.
"Why, say, you know I clean forgot,"
The truthful George replied.

"What time did you get home last night?"
The angry Martha cried.
Kind reader, draw the curtain here
And shield the nation's pride.

—Perrine Lambert.

Picking Her Company.

"I like to associate with pleasant people," declared Aunt Mary. "It's much more comfortable than being in company with grouchy or snappy or disagreeable folks of any sort. So I made up my mind on one point a long time ago. 'Mary,' said I to myself, 'you've got to be in your own company more than you'll ever be with any other one person. When it comes to other folks, if you don't like their ways you can steer clear of them most of the time. But you've got to live right with yourself as long as you do live. So it's your job to be a pleasant person to live with. You talk about picking your company. Now show other folks what kind of company you like by being that kind yourself.'" Aunt Mary recovered a dropped stitch in the soldier's sock on her needles.

"I leave it to other folks to say how much they enjoy my coming," she said with a twinkle. "One thing I do say, though, I've found out this much; the pleasanter I am myself, the pleasanter I find other folks are toward me. It's that much easier to pick my company when I try to give a sample of what I call a pleasant person. Maybe being pleasant is catching. I'm willing to do my part toward inoculating other folks, anyway."—Exchange.

Mohammedans in the United States.

Mohammedans are to be found in almost all the big industrial centers of the United States, particularly in Detroit, Mich., Chicago, Ill., Milwaukee, and in Racine, Kenosha and other cities of Wisconsin between Milwaukee and Chicago. No missionary effort of any kind is being made to give them the gospel. They are in touch with only the worst side of American life, and some of them have expressed the opinion that it was impossible to live a religious life in their environment.—Exchange.

William Cullen Bryant's Witness to the Christian Religion.

These are the words in which William Cullen Bryant gave his testimony to the truth of the Christian religion. They are found in Bigelow's Life of Bryant.

"I cannot but lament the tendency of the time, encouraged by some in the zealous prosecution of science, to turn its attention from the teachings of the gospel from the beautiful example of Christ's life, and the supremely excellent precepts which He gave to His disciples, and the people who resorted to hear Him. To those teachings and that example the world owes its recovery from the abominations of heathenism. The very men who in the pride of their investigations into the secrets of the material world turn a look of scorn upon the Christian system of belief are not aware how much of the peace and order of society, how much of the happiness of their households, and the purity of those who are dearest to them, are owing to the religion extending beyond their sphere. There is no character in the whole range of qualities which distinguish men from each other so fitted to engage our admiration and so pregnant with salutary influence on society as that which is formed on the Christian pattern by the precepts of the gospel, and a zealous imitation of the example of the Great Master.

"This character, of which Christ was the perfect model, is in itself so attractive, so 'altogether lovely,' that I cannot describe in language the admiration with which I regard it; nor can I express the gratitude I feel for the dispensation which bestowed that example on mankind, for the truth which He taught, and the sufferings He endured for our sakes. I tremble to think what the world would be without Him. Take away the blessing of the advent of His life and the blessings purchased by His death, in what an abyss of guilt would man have been left! tI would seem to be blotting the sun out of the heavens—to leave our system of worlds in chaos, frost and darkness."

"In my view of the life, the teachings, the labors, and the sufferings of the blessed Jesus, there can be no admiration too profound, no love of which the human heart is capable too warm, no gratitude too earnest and deep, of which He is justly the object. It is with sorrow that my love for Him is so cold, and my gratitude so inadequate. It is with sorrow that I see any attempt to put aside His teachings as a delusion, to turn men's eyes from His example, to meet with doubt and denial the story of His life."—Exchange.

We suppose there are people who thoughtlessly say the Creed as they thoughtlessly say their grace, but the service was not built for thoughtless people. Have you ever noticed the spring to alert attention on the part of ex-soldiers when the National Anthem is played? Well, that is what should happen, at least mentally, throughout the entire congregation when they recite the Creed.—Canadian Churchman.

For the Young Folks

Deeds, Not Words.

They do the least
Who talk the most,
Whose good designs
Are all their boast;
Let words be few.

They do the most
Whose lives possess
The sterling stamp
Of righteousness;
For deeds are true.

—Unknown.

Carrying Things to Carrie.

Belle Norton rushed into the house like a brisk west wind, ran upstairs to her room, and soon came stumbling down again, counting over some pieces. "Oh, mother!" she exclaimed, "isn't it lovely? I can do it just as well as not. Here is seventy-five cents, all from my own 'reserve.' "

Mrs. Norton, being used to Belle's sudden enthusiasms, kept steadily knitting while she asked, "What is it that you can do Belle?"

"Carry something to Carrie Stanley. You know she has been dreadfully sick, and now she is beginning to get better, and the girls are all thinking up things to take her. And I have thought of something just perfectly beautiful. My, but wouldn't I like it myself! Carnations are high, but seventy-five cents will buy half a dozen, and I have decided to get two dark-red, two white, and two of the lovely daybreaks. I shall arrange them for her myself. And then, mamma, I thought I would take a large tumblerful of currant jelly that you taught me how to make last summer. It came out so well, you know, and I want to tell Carrie that I made it myself. Don't you think that's a nice plan, Mrs. Knitley?"

Mrs. Norton hesitated a moment before she answered. "I don't know, Belle. Perhaps it is; but if I were in your place I would go over to Mrs. Stanley's and inquire what will be the best for Carrie."

"Oh, dear! I wanted it to be a sort of surprise. I just love surprises."

"You wouldn't want it to be a disappointing surprise, would you?"

"No-o," said Belle reluctantly.

"You see," Mrs. Norton went on, "they don't have any too much money to use at Mrs. Stanley's. I'm afraid they depend a good deal on old Mr. Norcross' pension. Of course, there has been a good deal of extra expense while Carrie has been ill; it may be that she needs some things that they don't feel able to buy."

"All right, mother." Belle's high spirits had all come back again. "I'll run right over to Carrie's, and perhaps I shall be the one to get a surprise."

And she certainly did get a surprise —several surprises. When Mrs. Stanley came to the door there was a worried look on her face, and she seemed sort of relieved when she saw Belle standing there with nothing in her hands.

"We heard that Carrie was beginning to get better," Belle began quickly, "and I thought perhaps there might be something I could bring her."

"Y-yes," Mrs. Stanley spoke nervously, "the girls are very thoughtful—very kind; some of them have brought in things to Carrie already."

"Oh, have they? What have they brought?"

Mrs. Stanley hesitated a moment. Then, as if it was an effort to speak each word, she said, "Step in and see."

Wondering what the mystery could mean, Belle followed Mrs. Stanley into the house. "Don't speak very loud," she said; "Carrie is not strong enough to see much company yet, and she would surely want to see you if she knew you were here. Right in this way."

"Oh!" cried Belle, "what beautiful lilies! And the room is full of their sweet perfume. Doesn't Carrie just love them? Who brought them?"

"Sh-h!" warned Mrs. Stanley, closing the door. "Lily Pembroke brought them. 'They will speak my name to Carrie,' she said, with her sweet smile, and they must have cost ever so much. But do you know"—Mrs. Stanley lowered her voice as if she was afraid some one was listening—"Carrie is so weak and sensitive that she can't bear to have the lilies in her room. The perfume makes her faint."

"Dear me," said Belle, "I never knew sickness could affect anybody like that."

Of course, Lily didn't understand it. And it was the same way with the girls that have brought these things for Carrie to eat. Here are three tumblers of nice jelly. But Carrie can't eat anything so acid as that yet. Nor these salads, nor this rich spiced cake; and oh, dear me, here is a thick mince pie that fairly makes your mouth water. That—well, I guess I won't mention any names. Father and I eat these good things, of course; but father says that every mouthful chokes him when he thinks of what Carrie ought to have, and his pension isn't due for two weeks, and—"

"What are the things that Carrie ought to have, Mrs. Stanley?" asked Belle quickly.

"Fresh eggs, the doctor says, and nourishing beef broth. And he did speak of lamb chop, broiled; but, of course, everything is so high."

"If you will excuse me—I have an errand down the street—I will be back later, and just say 'Hello!' to Carrie." Belle started down the steps and then ran back. "Mrs. Stanley, what—what would you ask for if you were going to get a piece of beef to make broth?"

"What they call a shin piece, just where they stop cutting the steak." Mrs. Stanley answered so quickly that it was evident she was thinking of that very piece of meat. "But, Belle, you mustn't."

But Belle was flying down the street and never stopped till she ran up the steps into Ryland's New Market. "Mr. Ryland," she began between her quick breaths, "how much are fresh eggs?"

"Maplewood Farm eggs are 72 cents a dozen."

Belle did a bit of mental arithmetic. "I'll take three."

"Three dozen?" stared Mr. Ryland.

"No; three eggs. They are for a girl that is just getting over a sickness, and she needs nourishing food. And now"—Belle was remembering carefully—"a shin piece, just where you stop cutting the steak—how much would that be a pound?"

"Twenty cents."

"Belle opened her hand and considered her money. "I'll take two pounds."

"Who is this girl?" asked the market man as he laid the meat on the cutting block.

"Carrie Stanley. She's been very sick. She and her mother live with Carrie's grandfather, old Sergeant Norcross."

"H'm." Mr. Ryland moved the knife farther along on the meat before he cut into it. He didn't put it on the scales, either, but he lifted it in his hand. "I guess there's two pounds," he said.

"My! it's a good, big piece and will make a lot of nice broth. And"—Belle looked at her money again—"could I get a lamb chop for twelve cents?"

"Two lamb chops go for twelve cents for this sale only," declared Mr. Ryland promptly.

"Oh, goody! That leaves five cents for an orange; perhaps Carrie could take a little of the juice. Oh, yes, Mr. Ryland, I can carry the bundle all right. Good-bye."

Belle ran up the street faster than ever. "Here they are," she cried; "just the things you spoke of, Mrs. Stanley. Hello!" she called gently to Carrie as Mrs. Stanley opened the door of her room. "Just a wave and a word. I'll come again when you are stronger."

Carrie's thin, pale face brightened into a faint smile as she "waved" to Belle, and as Belle started homeward she said to herself, "And to think that I was going to carry Carrie some carnations! My, my! but isn't my mother a sensible woman!"—Girls' World.

A Protector.

"There may be Indians in these woods right now," said Jack, as he and Beth were walking by a small patch of oaks. Beth was taking her family of dolls out for an airing, and Jack was pushing the cart.

Beth knew that there had been no Indians in the neighborhood for twenty years—her father had told her so; but Jack said that they might have come back again.

It was a cold, cloudy afternoon in early winter. No snow had fallen yet, but the ground was frozen.

"Let's walk to the end of the woods, and maybe we'll see an Indian," said Jack. He was ten, two years older than his little playmate, and he had read many stories about Indians.

"All right," replied Beth, not yet really afraid.

"They are apt to come creeping through the woods just at night," he continued, "hunting for children. And maybe they steal little girls, and carry them away to the big pine forest and never let them go home again—I don't know."

Beth began to feel that there might possibly be something in what Jack said.

"Indians might be hiding in these woods this minute," added Jack.

Beth longed to run home. The thought of Jack and her family in the cart alone restrained her.

"Don't you worry, Beth," said Jack, when he saw that she was becoming frightened. "The Indians won't get you while I'm along. I'll keep 'em off. I'm not afraid of anything. I'm your protector."

It was nearly dark when they reached the end of the woods and turned toward home. Beth took her smallest doll from the cart and carried it, for she felt that Angelina must be stiff with fear.

Jack was telling a long Indian story that he had been reading. Beth listened uneasily and pressed Angelina to her rapidly beating heart.

The dry oak leaves rustled, and suddenly there was a breaking of branches, and a dark form came bounding through the woods straight toward the children.

Beth, white with fear, grabbed Rose and Lillian, the twins, and Esther May from the cart, and held them, with Angelina, in her protecting arms.

Jack gave one look at the awful thing that was coming, then turned and ran for home as fast as he could.

"Jackie, O Jackie, come back!" cried Beth, but Jack did not stop.

Then brave little Beth put her family back in the doll-cart and went up to the awful thing; for it was only Dixie, Jack's old pony, that had got loose, and, hearing Jack's voice, had started toward him.

When the danger was over Jack came back, for his curiosity was great.

"I was only fooling about Indians, Beth," said Jack in a queer voice. It was hard for him to own up.

Then he pushed the doll-cart and let Beth ride the pony home, which was a great sacrifice on his part.

"Jackie is sorry that he frightened me, or he wouldn't let me ride Dixie," thought generous Beth.—New York Christian Advocate.

A Little Carpenter.

Close beside my bed at night
A little workman sleeps,
And, waiting for morn's early light,
His tools at hand he keeps.

So when the lids lift up each day,
And two brown eyes appear,
"Come, little carpenter," I say;
"Oh, see! The day is here!"

Then up my little workman springs,
And how the work does fly!
While merrily his gay voice rings—
"Who'll quicker build than I?"

Foundation posts he first puts down,
And fastens them with vim
In two small waiting shoes of brown;
He buttons sure and trim.

The sides he boards up in a rush,
With coat and trousers gray;
Nails down the roof with comb and brush—
The house is done, hooray!
—Isla M. Mullins.

Gardening in Frosty Weather.

There isn't any reason why the house need be bare of flowers and green just because frost flies outside. Almost any plant will be beautiful in your home if you only nurse it a little.

A window box for that southern window of the living-room will be company for you all winter. A long wooden box painted green, or white with green banding, will do. Have your brother make a drainage pan for it and fasten it on brackets to the sill. A layer of coarse gravel in the bottom of the box will help the drainage and the earth should be mixed with fertilizer.

Ordinary flower pots are better for growing plants than a fancy jar. These should always have saucers underneath and you can dress them up in green crepe paper for every day, orange at Thanksgiving and crimson at the holidays.

Put slips of red, white and pink geraniums in your window box, or shoots of lovely pink begonia. Set out small, hardy woods fern, myrtle, ivy, or inch plant from the florist for a border. These will need coddling at first, plenty of water, not too much sun until they are started, and trimming so that all the strength of the slips will not go into the leaves and prevent blossoming.

Seeds of such friendly flowers as pansies, nasturtiums, morning glories and petunias will blossom indoors in a box or pot. Give them plenty of water and sunshine, and force them at first by laying a glass over the box.

A long box of cement or terra-cotta that fits the mantelpiece will be beautiful filled with trailing ivy. Among the ivy roots stick branches of bayberry, bitter-sweet berries, mountain ash or black alder with its red berries. These will keep bright and fresh a long time.

Cherry, pear, apple and lilac twigs will burst into leaves and flowers in a vase of water in the house. Sprays of evergreen such as white pine, the creeping pine and hemlock with its tiny cones make lovely winter decorations if you keep them in a vase of fresh water.—Carolyn S. Baily.

Adding Up the Baby.

One mouth, one nose, and two blue eyes,
As blue as any summer skies;
Two ears so very pink and small,
One dimpled chin—and that's not all;

One head of curly golden hair,
Two cheeks so very pink and fair,
Eight teeth, and, well, almost a half
Whene'er she gives a hearty laugh;

Two arms, eight fingers, and a pair
Of thumbs that wander everywhere;
Two legs, and, last of all, ten toes,
That stand straight up whene'er she crows.

That makes just "forty-two," you say,
If added in the usual way.
But not to us—it makes, we think,
Just one good baby, plump and pink!
—Children's Magazine.

The Color of the Sky.

After astronomers and scientists of various kinds had puzzled over this apparently simple question, the blue of the sky, for many hundreds of years, Professor John Tyndall, a famous scholar of the last century, solved the mystery with the following explanation:

Sunlight is pure white light, made up of rays of the seven primary colors which are seen in the rainbow—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet. The sky, which is really the air which surrounds the earth, is filled with myriads of tiny specks of particles of matter, which absorb some of the colors in the rays of sunlight and reflect others—forming the combination which we have come to know as "sky blue."

The variations in shade of this blue are due to the fact that the atmosphere is filled with dust particles at different times and also to the varying angles at which the sunlight strikes upon them. After a rain, however, the air is washed comparatively clear and the sky then appears at its true blue which we are accustomed to associate with it. If one could penetrate outside the shell of air which surrounds the earth, the "sky," instead of being blue, would appear to be pure white, because there would be nothing to impede the direct days of the white sunlight.—Selected.

The South's Best Book Store
HUNTER & CO
105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

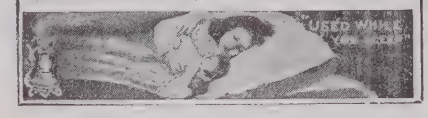
GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS
FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG
S. T. Beveridge & Co.
Office: 1217 East Cary Street
Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd
Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"The Store that Pleases"
FOR FURNITURE
Jones Bros. & Co.
Incorporated
1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

Jno. L. Williams & Sons
BANKERS and BROKERS
Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

Vapo Cresolene



(Established 1879)

Used for more than forty years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

FOR more than a generation we have been receiving grateful testimony to the virtues of this thoroughly tested and proven treatment. It stops violent coughing, and difficult breathing, assuring restful sleep because the antiseptic vapor carries healing with every breath. Booklet 48 tells why the diseases for which Cresolene is recommended yield to this simple and dependable treatment.

Vapo-Cresolene is sold by druggists

VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt Street, New York

R. Geissler, Inc.

56 West Eighth Street, New York

Memorials

FOR THE CHURCH

Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS

Highest grade instruments. In use in three thous. and churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is to be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.

M. P. MÖLLER

Hagerstown, Maryland

CHURCH VESTMENTS

Cassocks, Surplices, Stoles

EMBROIDERIES

Silks, Cloths, Fringes

CLERICAL SUITS

Rabats, Collars, Shirts

COX SONS & VINING

72 Madison Avenue . New York

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

Gold, Silver and Brass

Church and Chancel Furniture

Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches

W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.

178 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

O. Luetke's Art Works

Church Furnishings

IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.

Est. 1886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

Annie and Becky.

Annie is a little Jewish girl. Her face is as round as an apple, and a faint glow of red lightens up her olive complexion. Her eyes are black, black and deep, deep as Jacob's well. One day not long ago Annie came to the Sewing School of the East New York Neighborhood House, Brooklyn. She heard a wonderful story that afternoon. During the telling of it she never wriggled once. She forgot herself completely. It was one of the strangest stories that she had ever heard, about one named Jesus, Jewish, too. He was very good, and He loved His enemies.

All the time Annie recited the memory verse, "Jesus said, Love your enemies," the picture of Jesus was in front of her. The teacher said that he was kind. Annie was sure how His eyes must have looked. And He had enemies. Well, she had enemies, too; there was Becky Rothstein. Only that noon coming out of school Becky had stuck her tongue out at her. How could she love Becky?

When Annie was putting the last stitches in her apron hem that afternoon the "big idea" that her mind had been clawing for arrived. She could hardly wait until the sewing class was dismissed. She ran home as fast as her little feet could take her. There it was! On the kitchen table was her little pie; her mother promised to make it for Annie's lunch after school. She scooped up the pie still warm from the oven into a paper bag and hurried down the stairs of the tenement house.

Up the street Annie hurried towards the neighborhood of Becky's home. Where was Becky? There she was bounding down the stoop with a chunk of rye bread, half of it already in her mouth. Annie went straight up to her little enemy, and holding out the little brown pie so beautifully crusted she said, "Won't you be glad on me, Becky?" Becky did not see the depths of those big, brown, wishing eyes; all she saw was the pie, and she was hungry, and pie was far better than rye bread. The troublesome Becky capitulated at once, "Yus, Annie, sure, I'll be glad on you."

When to Sulk and Cry.

The other day I met a man older and wiser than any of the rest. He was very old and very wise, and he told me, "It is bad luck to cry on Monday. To cry on Tuesday makes red eyes. Crying on Wednesday is bad for children's heads and for the heads of other people. It is said that if a child begins to cry on Thursday, he will find it hard to stop. It is not best for children to cry on Friday; it makes them unhappy. Never cry on Saturday; it is too busy a day. Tears shed on Sunday are sad and bitter. Also children should on no account cry at night. The nights are for sleep. They may cry whenever else they please, but not on any of these times, unless it is for something serious!"—St. Nicholas.

THE IRISH HOME RULE QUESTION

Protestants of Ulster are opposed to "Home Rule" which is simply Rome Rule. This book is informing, awakening. Friends are contributing to send it to congressmen, governors and others. Are you a lover of the Bible, a Protestant? Read and circulate this book. Price 30c, 4 for $1. Order today.

PENTECOSTAL PUB. CO., LOUISVILLE, KY.

LONGER LIFE for SHOES

In all colors to meet requirements for all grades of leather, kid or canvas shoes.

1. Preserves the leather.
2. Gives a more lasting shine.
3. Keeps shoes looking new.

Because Whittemore's Shoe Polishes ARE SUPERIOR

To abort a cold and prevent complications take

Calotabs

The purified and refined calomel tablets that are nauseless, safe and sure.

Medicinal virtues retained and improved. Sold only in sealed packages. Price 35c.

FOR QUICK SERVICE CALL RANDOLPH 1978-W

We Clean One Small Rug Free as a Trial

Electric Carpet Cleaning Co.

W. F. POAT

16 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Carpets and Rugs Washed and Dried right on the floor!

Hamilton Beach method used exclusively—the nationally advertised way.

Called For and Delivered

BEVERLEY HEATING
Is the Best for
HOME, STORE, CHURCH, SCHOOL OR FACTORY
Whether New or Old
None too large None too small
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.
9 N. 7th Street, Richmond, Va.

Cuticura Talcum is Fragrant and Very Healthful
Sample free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass. 25c. everywhere.

NICK BULL'S MARKET,
Richmond's Leading Dealer in
FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME
312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.
Phone Randolph 1680
WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

Sow D. & B.'s Tested SEEDS
Successful farming and gardening depends on sowing the right seeds. Those who sow our seeds know how good they are.
Ask for our catalogue, which gives full cultural directions and many helpful suggestions for gardening, and price list of our Farm Seeds.
Diggs & Beadles, Inc.
Seed Merchants
RICHMOND, VA.
Headquarters for Superior Seeds for the Farm and Garden

RESERVATIONS FOR EUROPE
NEXT SPRING AND SUMMER
Should be made early in order to secure good space
Telephone Randolph 155, or Write
C. O. ALLEY
STEAMSHIP AND TOURIST AGENT
830 East Main Street Successor to The Richmond Transfer Co.

You Will
be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company
The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH
Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special
at $7.25
Send us your size
Woodall & Quarles
7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer
AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE
Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed
DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse
W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.
Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage
Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 845

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop
ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING
Mail Orders a Specialty
Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL
311 N. Second St. Phone Ran. 1286-W

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

FAMINE RELIEF.

For the convenience of our readers we publish the addresses of the treasurers of the various Relief Funds whose appeals for the starving, and especially for starving children, are so urgent and touching. The Southern Churchman will forward contributions to any of these, but to save time, postage and possibility of miscarriage, checks would better be sent directly to the treasurers as below:

Near East Relief (formerly "Armenian and Syrian Relief")—Cleaveland H. Dodge, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City.

European Relief (Central and Eastern Europe)—Franklin K. Lane, 42 Broadway, New York City; or locally for Virginia, DeSoto Fitzgerald, 218 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Chinese Famine Relief—Remit through Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I take this method of thanking my many clients for their past patronage, and assure them I am still selling Spirella corsets, and can be reached at the Wallerstein, Apartment 202, or by phone, Randolph 3694-W. MISS MYRTLE McDONNELL.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

ORDERS FOR HAND KNIT SWEATERS, Scarfs, Golf Socks. For information write M. C. Catlin, Sweet Springs, W. Va.

FOR SALE—WINESAP, ALBEMARLE Pippins, $6.00-$7.00 a barrel for the benefit of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, Green county, Va. Apply to Rev. George P. Mayo, 111 N. Fifth St., Richmond, Va.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

MISS M. M. TYLER

Invites you to inspect her line of GAGE Tailored HATS. Also the ADVANCE Showing of Spring Hats in the most attractive shapes.

209 N. FOUSHEE ST.

Better Music—Junior Choirs

An average organist or pianist can begin organization plans after reading my Manual.

ROBT. TREADWELL,
546 West 147th St., New York

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dveing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

NIAGARA METAL WEATHER STRIPS
Saves 25 per cent. Fuel, Prevents Rattling Windows, keeps out Dust, Dirt and Storm.
CINCINNATI REVERSIBLE METAL AND WOOD FRAME SCREENS.
L. F. HEROLD,
2 N. 11th St., Richmond, Va.
Phone Randolph 3550.

HELP WANTED

WANTED A WORKING HOUSEKEEPER for small family, no small children. Family located at Roland Park, Baltimore, Md. Apply to George A. Whiting, 1214 Continental Trust Building, Baltimore, Md.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER DESIRES A position to teach English, French and music. References given and required. Address Miss Randolph, Arrington, Va.

WANTED—A COMPETENT MIDDLE-aged woman, white or colored, to cook and take entire charge for a family of four adults. Laundry done out. In the mountains of Virginia. House has modern conveniences. Good wages and a permanent home to the right person. Reply A, care Southern Churchman.

WANTED—A TEACHER FOR A CHURCH institution. Address Institution, care of Southern Churchman.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER—AN experienced male organist and choirmaster for Protestant Episcopal Church in a Virginia city. State salary wanted and when could assume duties. J. D. R., care Southern Churchman.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

CHARLES JAMES KINSOLVING.

MR. CHARLES JAMES KINSOLVING, the son of the late Rev. Dr. O. A. and Julia H. Kinsolving, of Virginia, died at the Emergency Hospital in Washington on Thursday, December 9, 1920, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. Mr. Kinsolving was born in Bedford County, Va., spent his boyhood in Middleburg, where his father was rector for eighteen years, was educated at the Episcopal High School and the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington. Early in the War Between the States he left the V. M. I. and joined the Richmond Howitzers, and fought bravely until the close of the war. He never surrendered, but mustered himself out and went half-starved to the cabin of a colored woman near Appomattox, who provided well for the needs of the young soldier. After the war he made his home in Georgetown and entered the business house of the late William Busey. Some years afterwards he bought out the business and carried it on successfully for many years, then he removed to Muirkirk, Md.

While in Washington he was a member and a vestryman of Trinity Church under the late Dr. Addison. For many years he was a devoted lay reader of the church at Beltsville, Md., and never absent from his post. He superintended a mission Sunday school, and was a consecrated layman. When he came back to live in Washington some fifteen years ago he became identified with St. Andrew's Church.

Mr. Kinsolving married Rachel, youngest daughter of Thomas Claggett and Adeline Hodges, of "Weston," near Upper Marlboro, Md., who survives him. This old place had been granted by the English king to the first Thomas Claggett, and eight successors bearing the same name had owned it. There were seven children, four of whom are living, Miss Julia H., of Washington; Charles J., Jr., of Dallas, Tex.; Rachel, of Chicago; Mrs. C. J. Will, of Warrenton.

As a soldier, a Christian and a friend, Mr. Kinsolving was warm hearted, loyal and true. He met the discipline of life with courage and fortitude. In early manhood he learned to put his trust in the atonement of a loving and merciful Saviour, and now we doubt not he has entered into "the rest which remaineth for the people of God." "Make him to be numbered with Thy saints in glory everlasting."

A.

MAY WEBB CRANMER.

Early on Friday morning, January 28, MAY WEBB CRANMER, the twelve-year-old daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J R. Cranmer, of Wilmington, N. C., entered suddenly into Paradise.

On Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in the quiet church yard of St. Thomas' Church, Windsor, N. C., this beloved little girl was laid to rest.

The service in the church, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Lewis, was tender and beauitful. The white casket rested amid a profusion of exquisite flowers. The hymns, "Great Shepherd of the Sheep" and "There's a Home for Little Children," sung by the sweet, clear voices of her little girl friends, touched every heart.

As the casket was borne to its flower-strewn resting-place, the children followed, carrying the flowers in their arms. At the close of the service they covered the mound with fragrant blossoms.

Their purity and fragrance were significant of the character of May Webb Cranmer.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank
Richmond, Virginia

WANTED Commission Agents And Dealers

To sell Nursery Stock—all kinds of fruit trees, ornamentals and plants. Beautiful illustrations supplied with full information on growing trees and plants. Two propositions offered. Commission agreement and confidential terms to dealers. Big profits. Only TRUSTWORTHY men need apply. Write today.

THE HOWARD-HICKORY CO.,
Box 584, Hickory, N. C.

We are in need of help. The Bible recommends faith in God. We are not in position to know God. We cannot even by severe reason tell if He exist. We may guess at it from certain things we are sure of in nature and from the power of the human mind, but there is a hiatus between knowledge and the superior intuition known as faith: "trusting where we cannot prove," as Tennyson says. That gap can never be filled, seeing that we must have infinite intelligence ere we can know God. Hence we have got to trust, we must capture the sweet reliance on the gracious love of God that shone even in the Lord's face.—J. H. Dunham.

My Nest.

Some nights, when I lie down to rest,
I think about the bluebird's nest
That just outside my window pane
Is tossing in the wind and rain.

And then I cuddle snug and warm
To shut away the night and storm,
And make believe I'm in a nest
Against the mother bluebird's breast.

And presently, beneath her wing,
Into the dark I seem to swing
Far to and fro, until it seems
I swing into the land of dreams.

It is one of the most hopeful features of present-day Christianity that men are becoming sensible that they are not mere individuals, but are members of a society; and that they must bear the shame of the existing conditions of things in society. Intelligent Christian men now feel that the saving of their own souls is not enough, and that they cannot with complacency rest satisfied with their own happy condition and prospects if the society to which they belong is in a state of degradation and misery. It is by the growth of this sympathetic shame that reformation on a great scale will be brought about. It is by men learning to see in all misery and vice their own share of guilt that society will gradually be leavened. To those who cannot own their connection with their fellowmen in any such sense, to those who are quite satisfied if they themselves are comfortable, I do not know what can be said. They break themselves off from the social body, and accept the fate of the amputated limb.—Marcus Dods.

The Bible I have proved to be the very life of my life; because in it is enshrined my glorious Master and only Saviour Jesus Christ. "Whereas I was blind, now I see"—like that humble man of old, whose eyes were opened by the Good Physician. I would not exchange my experience for all the learning and honor in the world; and in the last analysis it is most solemnly true that experience is all.—Canon G. O. Troop.

JUST READY

More "FIVE-MINUTE TALKS"

By Walter R. Bowie, D.D.

SUNNY WINDOWS

Author of "The Children's Year"

AND OTHER SERMONS

Here is another volume of Dr. Bowie's talks to youngsters, all attractively suited to the child mind. The subjects are arresting themes, calculated to almost invariably catch the attention of boy or girl—while the treatment thereof is simplicity itself.

As the Record of Christian Work said: "Dr. Bowie's talks are capital—straight to the hearts of children, clever, interesting, helpful."

Cloth, $1.25 net

For Sale by

Southern Churchman Co., Richmond, Va.

Have You Made Your Will?

See G. Jeter Jones, Vice-President, about this now. All conferences confidential. Phone or write for appointment.

Merchants National Bank

11th and Main Streets, Richmond, Va.

"SAFEST FOR TRUSTS"

You Can Send Your Boy or Girl to Any College in This State

At but small sacrifice to yourself through our "COLLEGE PLAN"

Ask or write for booklet

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK

Tenth and Main

"The Bank with the Three Doors of Opportunity"

EASY, PLEASANT, PROFITABLE

Others Find It So, Why Not You?

Here is your chance. If you have an hour or two a week to spare you can turn every minute of it into money by taking orders for subscriptions to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, the oldest Episcopal church paper published in America; endorsed by Bishops and Clergy, and by churchmen everywhere. Every dollar raised by subscription to be devoted to the betterment of the paper.

Liberal commission paid on each order and a generous bonus on your production.

JUST CLIP AND MAIL THIS COUPON

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
815 E. Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen: Please send me full details about your offer to subscription representatives.

Name..... Town.....

Street, or R. F. D..... State.....

Personal Notes

All communications for the Standing Committee of the Diocese of West Texas should be addressed to the secretary, the Rev. Upton B. Bowden, 401 East Hugo Street, Yoakum, Tex.

The address of the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, Secretary of the Diocese of Lexington, is Frankfort, Ky., instead of Covington, Ky.

Owing to permanent ill health, the Rev. J. W. Ware has resigned as rector of Trinity Church, Shepherdstown, W. Va., and as president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, and retires from the active ministry.

The Rev. Eugene C. Prosser has become assistant to Dr. Nelson in Christ Church, Cincinnati, O., having resigned the rectorship of Trinity Church, Hartwell, O.

The Rev. Joseph Baker, rector of Overwharton Parish, Stafford County, Va., has sent to the vestry his resignation to take effect on April 1, 1921.

The Rev. John H. Brown, formerly rector of Christ Church, Pensacola, Fla., has entered upon his work as rector of St. Mark's Church, Louisville, Ky. On account of his departure from Florida, it is now necessary that communications for the Secretary of that Diocese be addressed to the Rev. Melville T. Johnston, at Jacksonville, Fla.; for the Board of Religious Education to Mr. Frank P. Dearing, St. James' Building, Jacksonville; and for the chairman of the Diocesan Nation-Wide Campaign Committee to the Rev. Charles W. Frazer, 2112 Laura Street, Jacksonville, Fla.

The Rev. Howard E. Thompson, Secretary and Registrar of the Diocese of New Jersey, has accepted election as honorary canon of the Pro-Cathedral of the Diocese, for missionary work under the Archdeacon. His present regular appointments are Trinity Parish, Hightstown, and St. James' Parish, Paulsboro. Residence in Woodbury uncharged. Office, 307 Hamilton Avenue, Trenton.

The vacancy in St. Matthew's Church, Homestead, Pa., has been filled by the election of the Rev. George A. Sutton, of Greenville, Diocese of Erie.

The Rev. Leslie F. Potter, for two years dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, Mich., has tendered his resignation. He will remain in office till July 1, and will then receive an honorarium of $2,400, with the use of the rectory during the summer.

For the fourth year the Rev. William Porkess, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., has been invited to write for the Pittsburgh Sun a thought for each day of Lent.

The Rev. W. K. Damuth has accepted a call to Cactoctin Parish, Frederick County, Md., and expects to take charge about March 1.

The Rev. Donald Millar, curate at the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, has received a unanimous call to become rector of St. John's Church, Columbia, S. C.

Ordinations.

In St. Philip's Church, Cleveland, O., on Tuesday, February 8, the Rt. Rev. William A. Leonard advanced to the priesthood the Rev. George A. Bailey. The presenter was the Rev. Wallace M. Gordon; preacher, Archdeacon Dodshon, of Southern Ohio. The above, with Archdeacon Webber, Rev. Messrs. F. B. Avery, D. D., F. G. Harkness, J. S. Banks, L. W. Shey and G. H. Trickett, assisted in the laying on of hands.

In Grace Church, Galesburg, Ill. (Diocese of Quincy), on January 19, the Bishop ordered to the diaconate Mr. Charles Alfred Parmiter, lately pastor of the Congregational Society in Moline; and to the priesthood the Rev. Rudolph Jacob Gunkel. The preacher was the Rev. H. L. Bowen; the Rev. Francis L. Carrington, LL. D., read the Litany; the Rev. George Long was master of ceremonies. Mr. Parmiter was presented by the Rev. A. G. Musson, Mr. Gunkel by Dean Long. The Rev. Dr. Carrington, the Rev. Messrs. Burgess, Musson and Long assisted in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Mr. Parmiter was appointed deacon in charge of St. John's Church, Kewanee; the Rev. Mr. Gunkel, priest in charge of St. Paul's Church, Warsaw; St. Cyprian's Church, Carthage, and Zion Church, Mendon.

On January 16, in St. Paul's Church, Atlanta, Ga., the Bishop ordained to the diaconate Mr. Theophilus Pollard and Mr. Alexander H. Roberts. The Rev. E. L. Braithwaite, Archdeacon of the colored work in the Diocese, presented the candidates and Bishop Mikell preached. The Rev. Mr. Pollard is in charge of St. Stephen's Church at Griffin, and the Rev. Mr. Roberts is in charge of St. Elizabeth's Mission at La Grange, Ga.

In Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark., on January 18, the Rev. Frank W. Gee, who has been assisting the rector of Christ Church, was ordained priest by Bishop Winchester and Suffragan Bishop Saphore. The Rev. Messrs. Boden, Templeton, Collins, Lyman-Wheaton, and Wallace assisted in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Messrs. Lyman-Wheaton and Wallace read Morning Prayer, Suffragan Bishop Saphore preached, and the Rev. John Boden was presenter. The Rev. Charles Collins read the Litany, and Bishop Winchester celebrated the Holy Communion, with the Rev. John Boden and the Rev. R. B. Templeton reading the Gospel and Epistle, respectively. The Rev. Mr. Gee was formerly a Methodist minister, having served important charges in that denomination in this State. He also was chaplain of the Second Arkansas during the late war, serving previously on the Mexican border in the same capacity. He has a wide acquaintance throughout the State. He will continue as assistant at Christ Church, Little Rock, during the Lenten season at least.

Deaths.

The Rev. G. W. G. Van Winkle, a retired priest of the Diocese of Montana, died in Columbus, in that Diocese, on January 3. Funeral services were held on January 5, Bishop Faber officiating, assisted by the Rev. F. B. Lewis, the Rev. C. P. Burnett and Archdeacon Hooker.

The Rev. Carlos E. Jones, late rector of Iron River and Crystal Falls, Mich., died at the home of his parents in Independence, Iowa, on January 13. Funeral services were held from St. James Church, Independence, on January 17.

The Rev. Richard Warne, curate of the Church of the Redeemer, Niagara Falls, and St. Stephen's, La Salle, N. Y., entered into rest on January 4, aged forty-five years.

The Rev. Charles W. Holmes, rector of St. Luke's Church, Vancouver, Wash., in the Diocese of Olympia, died on January 19.

The Rev. William Farrand Livingston, rector-emeritus of St. Matthew's Church, Hallowell, Me., entered into rest on January 10, 1921, at Hallowell, after an illness of over three years, in the fifty-eighth year of his age. The clergy present and taking part in the burial were the Bishop of Maine, Rev. Canon R. W. Plant, Rev. John H. Yates, Rev. Edward M. H. Knapp, Rev. Francis A. Foxcroft.

The Rev. Harry E. Robbins, formerly rector of the Church of St. Mary, at Salamanca, N. Y., and at one time widely known for his activities in the Diocese of Western New York, died Tuesday, December 21, in the Brooklyn Home for Consumptives, his death being the result of an attack of influenza, brought on while he was acting as chaplain at Camp Devens, Mass., during the world war. Funeral services were held December 23 at St. Bartholomew's Church, Brooklyn, the rector, the Rev. Frank M. Townley, officiating. The interment was in Evergreen Cemetery.

"The duty of the Church does not end with its endeavor to save the souls of men and women; it is both its right and duty to add to the sum of their happiness and health. The day for a long series of Don't has gone by."—Church Congress.

THE FEBRUARY ISSUE

Moody Bible Institute Monthly

Includes along with its usual bounty of editorials, Exposition on S. S. Lesson, Young People's Topics, etc,

1. "Modern Problems in Science and Religion," by George McCready Price, M. A., Prof. of Geology' Pacific Union College.

2. "A Cluster of Stories, Old and New, About D. L. Moody." Wonderfully inspiring.

3. 'Abraham Lincoln's Religion." A timely and beautifully written article on the religious life and convictions of This great man.

4. "The Work of D. L. Moody." An inspiration to every Christian.

Send NOW—20 cents for the copy and a trial subscription for 50 cents.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE MONTHLY
145 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

We live in two worlds—the physical and the spiritual. We are living two lives—the one putting us in contact with the material world and its daily duties and pleasures, the other charging us with duties and pleasures that are spiritual, which bind us to the world invisible. In the wilderness it was determined to which world man belongs, which is his true life. Character, virtue, integrity—moral elements—are definitions of manhood; these alone separate us from the beasts. And the more one lives in and among the invisible powers, so much the greater will be his lordship.

How are these results to be accomplished? Will any one reach them by going on in the same old round of occupations, by continuing in the same paths of pleasure, by thinking the same thoughts and doing the same thing? Never.

We must demand a halt, shake ourselves loose from our surroundings, look carefully about us, search more deeply our hearts, examine with greater scrutiny our lives, "take our bearings," and break each cursed habit that brings us regret or shame, and make a new start. Yes, we must keep Lent, every one of us, or signally fail in life. —Texas Churchman.

"If religion is to be brought home to the present generation, it must come in a form that fires the imagination. As a fact, nowadays, it presents itself as a sort of glorified policeman, bidding them keep off the grass, and not 'the strange Man upon the cross' calling men to the most weird of all knight-errantries. Here again it is clear that nothing but a supernatural and sacrificial faith will have any appeal. * * * It is to this we must appeal and show that when 'the Son of God goes forth to war 'the fight is keener, the blows may be harder, but the quest is more wonderful than any El Dorado quest on earth. The call to courage, the charm of risks, the loathsomeness of shirking are things which boys are told the world over, and it is this which attracts to Christ, for all our efforts after manliness lead us to the cross at last. * * * Intellectually, then, there is the romance of the supernatural, and practically there is the call of the cross, the friendship of Jesus, and the corporate appeal to the membership in a living society."—J. N. Figgis.

The highest achievement of charity is to love our enemies; but to bear cheerfully with our neighbor's failings is scarcely an inferior grace. It is easy enough to love those who are agreeable and obliging—what fly is not attracted by sugar and honey? But to love one who is cross, perverse, tiresome, is as unpleasant a process as chewing pills. Nevertheless, this is the real touchstone of brotherly love. The best way of practicing it is to put ourselves in the place of him who tries us, and to see how we would wish him to treat us if we had his defects.—Francis de Sales.

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address:

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

THE PATHFINDER, 4007 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.

Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent
E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend

PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN

Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.

With an Introduction by

THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,

Richmond, Va.

To Keep Every Family in Touch

The Church at Work

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, TOKYO, A DEMONSTRATION OF CHRISTIANITY

ISOLATED FOR TWO CENTURIES THEY NEED CHURCH'S TEACHING

HOW TO CUT THE LEAVES

The aim of The Church at Work is not only to give information of the work of the Church to everyone in the Church, but also to keep everyone in touch with the work.

It is the only medium through which the whole Church can be reached, and it would be hard to overestimate the value to the Church and the work of the Church if The Church at Work could be established as a universal medium in the Church.

If has failed so far to become a universal medium, it is because in some parishes the paper is not thoroughly distributed, being handed out at a service or left in a pile at the Church door or perhaps not distributed at all.

In order to avoid unnecessary waste, the Department of Publicity has been obliged to give notice that after the February issue shipments of the paper will not be made to those parishes in which the paper does not have thorough distribution.

The method of distribution in the parish is of course determined by the rector, but it is hoped that eventually every rector will decide that the best method of distribution is by adult visitors who deliver the papers personally to the homes of the parish. The reports from the field indicate that the great majority of parishes have adopted this method.

Two Questions

a. Why distribute The Church at Work thoroughly?

1. Because it is the official paper of the Presiding Bishop and Council.
2. Because it will carry the story of the work of the whole Church to all the people of the Church.
3. Because it will keep the indifferent and uninformed in touch with the work.
4. Because where the paper is not distributed, its underlying purpose is defeated.

b. Why distribute by adult visitors?

1. Because boys and girls cannot establish personal contact.
2. Because mailing cannot establish personal contact.
3. Because distribution at a service cannot establish personal contact with those who do not attend.
4. Because leaving the papers at the church door to be picked up does not establish personal contact with anybody.

Do you want The Church at Work to continue to come to your parish?
Have you asked the rector how you can help in this distribution?

Presiding Bishop and Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church
Publicity Department, 281 Fourth Avenue

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., AUGUST 13, 1921. No. 33.

A Prayer Unheard?

Unanswered yet? Nay, do not say ungranted;
Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done.
The work began when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what He has begun.
If you will keep the incense burning there,
His glory you will see sometime, somewhere.

Robert Browning

EDUCATIONAL

Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia, Inc.

RT. REV. WM. C. BROWN, D. D., President.

FOR BOYS:

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S SCHOOL
Westhampton, Richmond, Va.

A Country Boarding and Day School. Separate Lower School for smaller boys. 6 bldgs., 15 acres of grounds and athletic fields. Small classes. Staff of 10 college graduates. Boarding department limited to 22 boys for the present. Board and tuition in same $650. Eleventh session begins Sept. 21, 1921.

Catalogue from REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

CHRISTCHURCH SCHOOL
Middlesex County, Virginia

A Boarding and Day School in Tidewater Virginia. 3 bldgs., 100 acre farm. Supervised boating, bathing, fishing, Home influences. Ready accessibilty. Boarding department limited to 22 boys for the present. Board and tuition in same $400. First session begins Sept. 28, 1921. Catalogue from REV. F. E. WARREN, Rector, P. O., Marl, Va.

FOR GIRLS:

ST. CATHERINE'S SCHOOL
Westhampton, Richmond, Va.

A Country Day School (Boarding department planned for 1922). From Montessori through college preparatory courses, etc. 5 bldgs., 8 acre playground. Emphasis on healthy outdoor life. Catalogue from MISS ROSALIE HAXALL NOLAND, B. A., Principal.

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL
Charlottesville, Virginia

A Boarding and Day School in Piedmont Virginia. Location healthful and beautiful. From primary through college preparatory courses. Also music, art and general courses. Boarding department limited to 40 pupils for the present. Board and tuition in same $500. Twelfth session begins Sept. 21, 1921. Catalogue from MISS EMMA S. YERBY, Principal.

ST. MARGARET'S SCHOOL
Tappahannock, Essex County, Va.

A Boarding and Day School in Tidewater Virginia. Beautiful location on Rappahannock River. 6 acres, central building antebellum home remodeled, with 2 new wings. All modern conveniences. From primary, through college preparatory courses. Also music and general courses. Boarding department limited to 32 pupils for the present. Board and tuition in same $400. First session begins Sept. 28, 1921. Catalogue from MISS BERTHA A. LATANE, M. A., Principal.

Gifts and bequests for equipment, enlargement, scholarships, and endowment, requested. Address communications to REV E. L. WOODWARD, M. D. Dean, 400 O'd Dominion Trust Bldg., Richmond, Va.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-fourth year of this School for Boys opens September 21, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal.

FASSIFERN SCHOOL, FOR GIRLS
Hendersonville, N. C.

Situated in the beautiful mountain country. College preparatory and general high school courses. Lower school for grades below high school. Music, Art, Athletics, Home Economics. Riding lessons under trained teacher. MISS KATE C. SHIPP, Principal.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-fourth session opens September 21, 1921.

For catalogue and information, apply to

REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean,
Petersburg, Va.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D..Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 30 cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"The only way to keep some things is to give them away."

"There can be no permanent impression without expression."

The greatest men have been those who have cut their way through difficulties.

Nothing will ever be attempted if all possible objections must first be overcome.

There is only one real failure in life possible, and that is not to be true to the best one knows.—Farrar.

Those who make the most noise do the least work. An engine that expends all its steam in whistling has nothing left with which to turn wheels. —Charles Wagner.

"Love is the key of life and death,
Of hidden, heavenly mystery;
Of all Christ is, of all He saith,
Love is the key."

(U. S. Destroyer in distance)
R. O. T. C. and NAVAL UNITS

Established 1867. Prepares for college and business life. Military training by Army officers. 8 Naval cutters, high-powered launch for Naval unit. Sea trips on U. S. war vessels. $70,000 improvements last year. Mild climate permits outdoor sports the year round. Unique training in carefulness and the value of money. Broader training than public schools. Separate School for smaller boys. Catalog.

REV. WALTER MITCHELL, D. D., Rector
Box A Charleston, S. C.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLESTOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes. Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal.
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

HOBART COLLEGE For Men
William Smith College for Women

GENEVA, N. Y.

100th Year Opens September 20, 1921

Hobart offers a large number of scholarships to students preparing for Holy Orders.

RT. REV. CHARLES H. BRENT, D. D., LL D., CHANCELLOR

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., PRESIDENT

For information address the President

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The Ninety-ninth Session Open Wednesday, September 21, 1921

For catalogs and other information, address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Virginia.

Roanoke College

Salem, Va.

A standard college for men. In beautiful Valley of Virginia. Noble record for producing leaders for the Church and nation.

CHAS. J. SMITH President.

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector

EDUCATIONAL

MARY BALDWIN SEMINARY. For Young Ladies. Established 1842. Term begins Sept. 8th. In historic Shenandoah Valley. Students from 33 States. Courses: Collegiate (3 years), Preparatory (4 years). Music, Art, Expression and Domestic Science. Athletics, gymnasium. Catalog. Staunton, Va.

GUNSTON HALL

A Select Washington School for Girls.

Highest standards in general, college preparatory and graduate courses. Not a finishing school, but an educational institution founded on soundest principles. Its aim is to set high ideals, stimulate a desire for further knowledge and relate its students to their future life and its social contacts.

For Illustrated Catalogue address

MRS. BEVERLEY R. MASON, Principal.

1906 Florida Ave., Washington, D. C.

VIRGINIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE

(The State Agricultural and Mechanical College.)

All Courses Open Alike to Men and Women.

Four-year courses for high school graduates, leading to B. S. degree, in Agriculture, Engineering, Applied Science and Teacher-Training. Two-year courses in Pre-medical, Home Demonstration and Practical Agriculture. Short unit courses in agricultural branches and printing (linotype). For catalog and full information, address Dean of the College, V. P. I., Blacksburg, Va.

The Church Training and Deaconess House

OF PENNSYLVANIA

provides for resident students a two years' course of study and training in practical work, fitting them to be Church Workers or Deaconesses. For information, apply to

THE ADMISSION COMMITTEE

708 Spruce Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

We live by radiation, not by absorption.

The right kind of a Christian life is sure to make more than one sinner feel ashamed of himself.

No one can ask honestly or hopefully to be delivered from temptation unless he has himself honestly and firmly determined to do the best he can to keep out of it.—Ruskin.

The best furnishings of a house are happy faces; the best seasoning of daily bread is a smile; the best music to soothe weariness is laughter.

God sometimes gives a sensible answer to the prayers of His people, as they are praying, or immediately after, as Dan. 9:21; Acts 4:31.—J. Trapp.

Ordinary doings become honorable, if done in Christ's name. Most elaborate and spectacular service comes to shame if Christ be left out.

"There is an arm that never tires,
When human strength gives way;
There is a love that never fails,
When earthly loves decay.

Truly, at the day of judgment, we shall not be examined what we have read, but what we have done; not how well we have spoken, but how religiously we have lived.—Thomas a Kempis.

Blest are they who try to give their time to God
And shake them free from all the burden of the world.
—Thomas a Kempis.

All conversions are really the same. They mean personal contact with Christ, and the steps are four, followed by a fifth as the consequence:

1. Submit. Sin is independence and rebellion. We must lay aside opposi-
2. Admit. Christ must be allowed to come into our life as Saviour.
tion.

We link our weakness with omnipotence; our blindness with omniscience. This is the privilege of the destitute, the feeble, of those who are thwarted and cast down, who cannot save themselves. Behold, to them, too, it is given to save others.—James Hinton.

THE CATHEDRAL SCHOOL of Florida. Episcopal—a homelike school for girls. College preparatory and general course. Delightful winter climate. LILIAS S. BILL, Principal, Orlando, Florida.

Virginia, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten-acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. Tucker, D. D., President; Rev. C. O. Pruden, D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B., Sweet Briar, A. M., Columbia, Prin.

Collegiate School for Girls

Incorporated.

In the city of Richmond, Va.

A private day school for girls, with primary intermediate and high school departments. College preparatory and general courses. Seventh session opens September 22, 1921.

MARY ALICE BRADFORD,
Head of the School.

Stuyvesant School

WARRENTON, VA.

Foothills of the Blue Ridge
Fifty miles from Washington
Lower School for boys nine to thirteen.
Upper School for boys thirteen to college.
Small classes and individual attention.
Send for Catalogue

EDWIN B. KING, M. A.
Headmaster

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL FOR WOMEN

FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA

ESTABLISHED 1884. J. L. JARMAN, President

Thirty-eighth session opens September 14th, 1921. Two-year Professional courses, four-year College course. Moderate Expense.

For Catalogue, address The Registrar,

State Normal School for Women, Farmville, Virginia.

The Misses Eastman's School for Girls

1305 Seventeenth St.
Washington, - D. C.

FAUQUIER INSTITUTE

FOR GIRLS AND YOUNG LADIES WARRENTON, VA.

The 62nd session begins September 29, 1921. Situated in Piedmont region of Virginia, 55 miles from Washington. A limited and thorough home school. Modern buildings, 5-acre campus. Catalog.

MISS NELLIE V. BUTLER, PRINCIPAL, BOX 17

Sweet Briar College

SWEET BRIAR, VA. STANDARD FOUR-YEAR COLLEGE COURSES

Students received on certificate and by examination. Unexcelled climate, out-of-door sports all year.

For catalogue and views, address the Registrar, Box 19.

EMILIE WATTS McVEA, A. M., LITT. D., PRESIDENT

MCGUIRE'S UNIVERSITY SCHOOL

Opposite William Byrd Park.

A private preparatory day school for Richmond boys. Efficient and experienced faculty. Personal attention. Individual instruction. Small classes. Thorough preparation for college or business. Accredited by the leading universities, colleges, technical schools, and the U. S. Military and Naval Academies. Tuition and expenses reasonable.

Lower School for little boys. Apply for catalogue with college record.

JOHN P. MCGUIRE, Principal.
Richmond, Va.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

53rd year. In an ideal spot, heart of the Cumberland mountains, 2,000 feet elevation. College preparatory; also equips for citizenship. Military instruction secures regularity, neatness, respect, promptitude. Student body are boys of character who are developed into manly men of purpose. 40-acre campus and 8,000 acres added domain. Vigorous outdoor life; all athletics R. O. T. C. Episcopal. Early registration advisable. Catalog. Address The Principal, Sewanee, Tenn.

O. Luetke's Art Works

Church Furnishings

IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.

Est. 886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

The Norfolk Convention

Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States
The thirty-sixth annual national gathering of clergy and laity of the Church

NORFOLK, VA.

Wednesday to Sunday, October 12 to 16, 1921
The first convention in the South since 1914

The program and speakers will be announced later
For information, address

BROTHERHOOD OF ST ANDREW

CHURCH HOUSE, 202 SOUTH 19TH STREET
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Memorial and Mausoleum Windows

Grand Price Louisiana Purchase Exposition
Sent Free: Our 48-Page Book
Ecclesiastical Art in Memorial Windows

THE FLANAGAN & BIEDENWEG STUDIO
312-318 W. ILLINOIS STREET, -:- CHICAGO, ILL
Established 1883

Central National Bank

Cor. 3d and Broad Sts., Richmond, Va.
Banking Hours-
Monday to Friday. ...9 A. M. to 2 P. M.
Saturday..... 9 A. M. to 2 P. M.
6 P. M. to 8 P. M.

3% Allowed on Savings Accounts

Johnson's Foot Soap

(On market for over fifty years)

Made of Borax, Iodine amd Bran, is a sure and safe relief for those tired, aching, tender swollen, burning that have been causing you so much pain 25c, ALL DRUGGISTS. If unobtainable at your druggist, sent direct on receipt of price.

FEET

Thomas Gill Soap Co.

711-719 Kent Ave., Brooklyn, New York

Leake Printing Co.

ENGRAVING, PRINTING, EMBOSSING.

Special attention to out-of-town orders.
Samples sent upon request.

615 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

No One Need Buy Cuticura Before He Tries Free Samples

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. Samples free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

666 IS A PRESCRIPTION FOR COLDS, FEVER AND LA GRIPPE. IT'S THE MOST SPEEDY REMEDY WE KNOW.

In Matters Pertaining to

Banking, Trusts or Real Estate we cordially invite your business.
Interest allowed on daily balances of Savings and Dormant Accounts.
We have many customers who do their banking by mail.

RICHMOND TRUST CO.

Capital and Surplus $1,200.000.

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS, Chairman of the Board
E. L. BEMISS, President C. J. ANDERSON, Vice-President
J. D. CRUMP, Vice-President R. J. WILLINGHAM, Jr., Sec'y. and Treas
DEANE MAURY, Trust Officer.

IS IT COLLEGE FOR YOUR BOY OR GIRL WHEN THEY GROW UP?

Let us help you send them to any College in this State.
Write or ask for our College Plan booklet.

American National Bank

Richmond, Va.

THE PRAYER BOOK

of the Protestant Episcopal Church is not only a compendium of Religion, but also of sound common sense.

x x x

It gives this advice (page 285)—

x x x

"Men should often be put in remembrance to take order for the settling of their temporal estates whilst they are in health."

x x x

Remember: "Whilst YOU are in health."

x x x

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

The SAFE EXECUTOR,
821 E. Main St.

x x x

P. S.—Many times in the past we have been able to give helpful suggestions to men and women who were making their wills, and we cordially invite interviews on the subject, which, of course, are confidential.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., AUGUST 13, 1921. No. 33.

IS THE TIDE TURNING TO THE MINISTRY?

Many facts have been brought out in this and other Church papers of late concerning the disquieting shortage of candidates for the ministry. In nearly all the Christian communions there are far less men now studying in the seminaries than there were five years ago. If this condition should continue, it could mean nothing less than the closing of the doors of many churches.

But now there comes a news item of a happily different kind. An Associated Press dispatch to the daily papers a few days ago, under a date line from Chicago, carried this announcement:

"To offset reports that candidates for the ministry are seriously diminishing, the Methodist Committee on Conservation and Advance announced here today that 188 out of 1,000 young men graduates of twenty-nine Methodist Episcopal colleges this year were preparing to enter the ministry, and that Northwestern University, the largest Methodist institution, this year had the greatest number in its history preparing for Christian service.

"This information was obtained through a questionnaire sent out by the Methodist Board of Education to the forty-three colleges and universities under its sponsorship, of which twenty-nine replied," said the committee's announcement. Theological seminaries or institutes were included in the list.

"About 18 per cent. of the male graduates, or 12 per cent. of all graduates, will enter the ministry. Fifty-six other graduates, both men and women, plan to enter other fields of Christian activity, including that of Foreign Mission work.

"Northwestern University has on its rolls 153 persons preparing for Christian service, the largest number ever recorded there."

Is this an indication that the tide has turned, and that a new stream of men for the ministry will pour in to all the Christian churches?

It is too early yet to venture a general prediction. But this much can be said: Many people have believed that out of the confused legacies of the war there ought to come, and there must come, a new and high seriousness, and a capacity for an idealistic devotion to a life of service, on the part of the finest of the young men who had gone through that crucible of pain. If the Church could discover this spirit and could so confront it with the challenge of the ministry as to win its high response, then it would not lack for new volunteers to become the leaders in the army of Christ. It looks as though the Methodists had called to this idealism, had waked it, and had won it. What one Church has done, others can do, wherever there is the enthusiasm of an eager faith.

POSTERS FOR THE CHURCH

Last December we wrote an editorial as to a device which we believed would stimulate enlistments for the ministry. But, unfortunately, an error in printing so twisted the text that the point was largely obscured; and for this reason, coupled with the other and more important ones that—so far as we know—nothing has been done about the suggestion, and that we want to press the suggestion until something IS done, we print the editorial again today.

Why should not the Church call in the aid of the poster in its recruiting for the ministry?

During the war we all grew familiar with the use of posters as a powerful means of compelling attention to matters that claimed the mind and will of the people. On bill-boards, in the windows of stores, in the vestibules of banks, offices and factories, we faced the vivid proclamation of ideas in this pictorial form. These were the posters for the Liberty Loans, recruiting posters for the navy and the marines, posters of the Red Cross and the United War Work Campaign. It would be hard to exaggerate the part which the posters bore in enlisting the responsibility of the people. The spoken word at mass meetings might be forgotten, but no one could forget the omnipresent and colorful appeals which met the eye at every turn. Some of the posters in their dramatic force and appeal are etched upon the memory still, so that one recalls them vividly, even after they have disappeared from view; and in the accumulated effect of their constant succession, both those which were excellent and those more commonplace in artistic execution were a part of that great awakening of a people's energy which scarcely could have been accomplished without them.

Since the war not a few organizations have taken advantage of the lesson of the value of posters. The Salvation Army has used them; the Young Women's Christian Association has used some that have been very beautiful and winning for the purpose of their own work. The Church has made a few rather hesitating attempts here and there, but has never launched upon any vigorous and imaginative policy. Posters put out in connection with the Nation-Wide Campaign were useful in their way, but they were usually mere reading matter put in large type, not pictorial nor arresting. Of course, the production of good posters is an expensive matter, but the general experience throughout the country in recent years would show that the expense can bring abundant fruit.

We believe that no single experiment on the part of the Church's Publicity Committee can be of more value than the production of a really noble poster, carrying the appeal for recruits for the ministry. Ministers may preach sermons now and then, but the poster would preach a sermon every day. Suppose one were hung in the vestibule of the church. Mothers and fathers, passing by, could not escape its challenge. Suppose one were hung in the Sunday school. There it would be, to catch the eye of every boy, and to serve as a text for every teacher. Suppose that the churches in a community were bold enough to rent a space on a bill-board where thousands could see it, and put there the poster that should call the thought of the boys of the whole city to the meaning of the ministry. Who could tell what imaginations it might kindle and what lives it might enlist? A poster, to be worthy of such use, would have to be dignified, beautiful and artistic to the highest degree. But such a poster can be made, and the Church needs it.

A BASIS FOR DISCUSSION

From across the water comes to us the first note of thoughtful consideration of the Lambeth appeal for Church union. It should be profitable for us on this side to listen carefully to that discussion, for we may find in it much help in solving our own problems. There has been much talk of Church union in this country and abroad, but we have not up to now "come down to cases." The first definite statement and proposal emanated from the Lambeth Council of last year, and showed the point of view of the Episcopal churches. Probably no one believed that that point of view would be the last word, or even nearly so, and we are therefore very interested in reading the outcome of the thought and consideration of those who are not of our immediate communion.

We print almost in full in this issue the comment on the "Lambeth Appeal for Unity," issued by a committee of the Federal Council of Evangelical Free Churches of England and the National Free Church Council.

This body includes representatives from practically all Christian bodies in England except the Established Church and the Roman Catholics.

In its own efforts toward unity it has gone so far as to produce a catechism setting forth what it considers "a statement expressing the positive and fundamental agreement of all the Evangelical Free Churches on the essential doctrines of Christianity." Its local councils do what is possible to prevent overlapping and excessive competition between its churches. They also combine the forces of local churches for devotional work, open air services, efforts on behalf of Sunday observance and the prevention of gambling. Services are arranged in connection with public institutions, and social work of a varied character forms a large part of the operations of the local councils. It was organized as far back as 1892, and claims to represent 2,178,221 communicants.

In publishing this appeal, or, rather, response to an appeal, we feel that it will be enlightening to our people, and will give us a viewpoint which has not had sufficient weight in our considerations of Church unity.

We have assumed too readily that all that was necessary was for us to be willing to receive other ministers for ordination. It would seem from this document that we must make up our minds to give as well as to receive.

Our brethren are evidently going to expect us to give them two things:

First, recognition of their organizations as churches, "parts of the one Holy Catholic Church of Jesus Christ."

Second, acknowledgment of their method, whatever it may be, of ordination of ministers as valid in making a man a priest so that the subsequent Episcopal ordination is simply a license or authority to minister "Christ's Word and Sacraments" in our Church.

Unless we are ready to face these two propositions squarely, and in a conciliatory way further consideration of an agreement would seem to be hopeless for the present. No one can deny the candor and clarity with which the Free Churches set forth their position, and their statement will give us food for thought and a basis for discussion pending further developments.

This paper probably does not set forth an ultimatum or last word from the Free Churches, any more than the Lambeth proposal was an ultimate offer from the Anglicans, but the two documents represent tentative proposals, from each of which concessions may be made as discussions proceed unless the two taken together seem to be too far apart to make further interchange of opinion useless for the present.

Of course, all of this is transpiring across the Atlantic and has no binding authority upon the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, but it interests us to note that leaders are thinking along the lines of unity with sufficient earnestness to promulgate such statements. M.

Book Notices

"Standing Room Only." William L. Stidger, D. D. Illustrated. George H. Doran Company. $2.

Even if it had no other quality, the very boldness of this book would demand attention. It is announced by its publisher as "a book of ideas, a book of practical plans * * * plans that not only get crowds, but tell you what to do with them when you get them; plans of how to keep them coming when once you get them started." The book lives up to its advance notice. It is a frank personal description, by a Methodist minister now in Detroit, of the way in which he has built up and retained great congregations, particularly at the Sunday evening services, and how he has made the Church the center of the life of the people during the week. He discusses not only the manner of preaching which he has found successful, but also church advertising, the arrangement of services, the development of congregational singing, and, furthermore, and this is particularly striking, certain ingenious devices for illumination both within and without the church, to make the church attractive and beautiful. To churchmen of conservative ideas, some of his methods will seem extreme, but even for conservative men there is much in this book which is suggestive and stimulating. Furthermore, if any one does not approve the methods of this particular minister, he cannot avoid his responsibility to think out for himself what answer he can give to this challenge: "I hold in common with Bishop William A. Quayle, that the one unpardonable sin of a preacher is to be uninteresting when the means are always at hand to be interesting. When it is wholly possible to conduct a fascinating church service, which, without sacrificing its spiritual sacredness, may still crowd the church, then I think it is a high crime to do anything less."

B.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

INTERROGATORY.

Mr. Editor:

Of those who in one breath give thanks for the Church's Healing Mission, and in the next breath warn of portentous dangers connected therewith and criticize severely, and, as some of us feel, unsympathetically, the underlying principles thereof, may we ask a few questions?

1. How far should "danger" deter brave men, in view of the warning, "the danger is great," in coming to the Holy Communion?

2. Which significant movements of the Church's life were able to express themselves in language of such accuracy and exactness as to admit of no misunderstanding?

3. Is not "the will of God" capable of more than one meaning? May one say, "His active will is 'our sanctification' (1 Thess. 4:3), and also our health; but His passive will permits us to sin and also to be sick"? If not, how should we express it?

4. Why does not "death entered through sin" (Rom. 5:12) also imply "sickness entered through sin"? And hence "sickness is caused by sin"?

5. How would you state the truth about sickness and the will of God? When does God send sickness? To what cases would you apply the saying, "The Lord struck the child, etc." (2 Sam. 12:15)? What is the meaning of "It is not the will of your Father that one of these little ones should perish" (St. Matt. 18:14)? How far is the Office for the Visitation of the Sick correct in its teachings? If it is not correct, why not issue "warnings" against the use of the Prayer Book? Are the birth rate and infant mortality of a community God's work or man's? The Moslems ascribe it all to God.

6. When and where have the leaders of the Healing Mission refused to admit physicians fully into their confidence? Are they bound to beg physicians to make tests of the cures? Would it be scriptural to do so? Should we be equally bound to beg Psycho-Analysts to test conversions? What about Tyndall's "Prayer Tests"?

7. When a child is not healed, is there not "something wrong"? If so, is it lack of faith or wisdom, or skill, or what is it? Is it just as it should be? Is it God's direct act?

8. When did Jesus teach that the infirm are not "bound by Satan"?

9. Was St. Paul's "thorn" sent by God, or was it a messenger of Satan?

10. When did Jesus teach that sickness is a cross?

11. If a soul can rise to the height of faith to lay hold on God and get rid of sickness, why does such an one need the further "discipline" of the sickness?

PERCY FOSTER HALL.

St. Paul's Rectory, Alexandria, Va., July 26, 1921.

THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: It is a matter of anxious concern to nearly every Christian body that there is a serious falling off in the numbers of those offering themselves for the ministry. Contributors to Church papers deplore the fact and suggest reasons and remedies for it. Some of the reasons may partly explain the dearth of candidates; some do not really touch the case.

To the mind of this writer, one reason only goes to the root of the matter, thus correctly explaining it. It is simply a matter of piety and devotion, or the lack of them.

Lack of piety appears in parents who place secular success before spiritual. The writer has known of sons, actually discouraged and opposed, who thought of taking Holy Orders.

Again, lack of devotion is seen in many professedly Christian young men. Secular or worldly careers beckon them, and they follow, rather than Him Who calls down, "Follow Me."

If first things were really placed first by the whole Church, there would be more candidates for orders than needed.

There are those who assert that inadequate salaries deter men, or the treatment of some of the clergy by some of the laity. So may it be; but those so hindered in God's sight are not worth having in the sacred ministry. A man of high ideals and deep devotion is influenced by such consideration not at all. He trusts God and goes forward. Personal devotion to the service of God and for the service to men is the only motive that rules in the man of consecration.

Once more, lack of piety even too many clergymen manifest with reference to the ministry. They represent it, and so chose it, as a profession only. If only a profession, to choose it is no more a privilege or duty than the law. The Scripture, however, teaches that a man is "called of God" into the ministry and is His "ambassador."

Others affirm that the call to heroism is lacking in the clerical life. Properly speaking, there is a call to heroism in every career; but only those who are of heroic mould hear the call or see the vision.

There is then as much heroism in the career of a clergyman as he chooses to put into it, and as little. There are the drones and the self-indulgent among the clergy—too many of them—and there are these men of low and high ideals; but in the ministry live many men of lofty self-sacrifice. In the obscure village many an humble parson has played and is playing the veritable hero. There is no business like it for genuine heroism, if "the steward of the mysteries of God" is faithful to his trust.

Thus there seems to the writer to be but one remedy for this trouble, and that is whole-hearted consecration—a deeper piety in us clergy, in the individual man and in the family. We are to pray the "Lord of the harvest" to send forth laborers into His harvest. If He does not send, those who enter will not be laborers, but useless drones, who will simply be in the way, doing more harm than good by being there.

P. M. BOYDEN.

New Market, Md.

AN APPRECIATION.

Mr. Editor: Permit me to express my profound gratification upon reading your editorial of July 30 on "The Poison of Mob Lawlessness" and "A Postscript to What Goes Before."

Such editorials are demanded by the present situation in this country, and the men higher up ought to be exposed. The un-American element in the "American Legion" must be duly disciplined.

In this work of downing brutality, the religious press has a distinct mission.

Truly yours,

JAMES L. SMILEY.

PROGRESS TOWARD CHURCH UNION IN CANADA.

Despite the breakdown of the plans of the Inter-Church World Movement, remarks the New York Evening Post, the Protestant denominations are progressing toward unity. In the Philippines an "Evangelical Union" has "made it hard for some Filipinos to believe the Protestants are not a unit." Union theological training is growing stronger in this country, and in Canada Methodists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Anglicans "long ago united for theological education." And now actual Protestant Church union in Canada is a step nearer, and a new vista is thereby opened before the churches concerned, says the Evening Post, as it notes that, "by the decisive vote of 414 to 107, the Presbyterian General Assembly in Canada has decided to effect immediate organic union with the Methodist and Congregational Church of the Dominion." We are reminded that—

"Before the war a basis of union had been approved by high authorities of the three sects. The Methodists and Congregationalists declared themselves in favor of it; in 1915 the Presbyterians voted 140,000 to 90,000 for the principle, but their final decision was reserved till last week.

"The prairie provinces have long been vigorous advocates of union. There the neighborhood spirit is strong, and, moreover, it is easy to maintain one union Church in sparsely settled communities where three separate churches would be impossible. Manitoba reported last week that twenty Presbyterian congregations were eager to merge with other groups. All over the Dominion the war, depleting Church resources, has made union seem more desirable. After the Halifax explosion a trial of Church union in that city proved a marked success. The final vote, showing the West almost solid for union, showed the East strongly for it, too."—Literary Digest.

The work is Thine, not mine, O Lord;
It is Thy race we run;
Give light, and then shall all I do
Be well and truly done.

—Bonar.

If life is not to be impoverished and materialized, some in every age must make the choice between the inward and the outward wealth.—James Stalker.

THE ART OF PREACHING

By George Hodges

(Late Dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Mass.)

(Published by courtesy of "The Outlook.")

At the end of the Prayer Book service for the baptism of infants, the minister gives the parents and sponsors some advice as to the proper way of bringing up a child. Among other admirable counsels he says, "Ye are to call upon him to hear sermons." When at this point the child breaks out into sobs and cries of protest, the parents and sponsors look at one another and smile sympathetically.

One good Christian claimed, indeed, with some pride, that instead of becoming "uncontrollable and inconsolable" at the hearing of these words, he had been gifted with a special grace for the appreciation of preaching, but he hastened to add that this appreciation extended only to good preaching. Such a measure of baptismal grace is not, I suppose, uncommon. It permits, however, so free an exercise of private judgment that it does not contribute much to the solution of the problem of church attendance. At the same time it raises a question which is of vital interest to all preachers and to many hearers. What are the qualities which make a sermon good? What are the elements of the art of preaching? The preacher is often impeded in his endeavor to answer this question by the narrow limits of his own homiletical opportunity. For the most part, he hears nobody preach but himself. It has been my fortune, however, these many years to hear and read regularly a great number of sermons; always three, and sometimes five or six, a week. These, it is true, are quite young sermons, and are prepared in the course of the process which the students lightly describe as "going over to convert the dean." But I find them highly instructive. Here is the sermon in the making: first the plan, then the tentative manuscript, then the public delivery, then the criticism of the congregation. For one difference between the sermon in the pulpit of the school and the pulpit of the church is that the hearers of the school sermon are called upon, man by man, for their frank opinion. The hearers of the church sermon are often very patient and almost always very polite, and, unless their opinion is favorable, they will not express it to the preacher. These young preachers will never again be in a position to know so immediately and honestly what any of their hearers think about the sermon until they are happily married.

These outspoken criticisms and the necessity of the instructor to comment upon them, and to contribute his own criticism in his turn, compel a consideration of the whole matter of preaching. One comes thus into clear perception of a wide range of homiletical virtues and vices. Printed sermons do not convey so varied or valuable a lesson. One might suppose, without much reflection, that the art of preaching might be studied to the best advantage in the works of the masters. Here, for example, are the ten volumes which contain the printed sermons of Phillips Brooks. Here are order and insight and earnestness and eloquence, and most of the other effective qualities of preaching. Here is the selected work of a man who attracted great congregations and made an uncommon appeal to the intelligence, the emotion and the will of his hearers. But the trouble with these printed sermons is that they are all good. Most of them were selected by the preacher out of a considerable number of lesser sermons, on the ground of excellence. They confront the perplexed parson as the paintings of Raphael confront the ordinary artist. He knows that he can never accomplish work like that. He wonders if any of the sermons which were set aside in making this selection were dull sermons, disappointing to the congregation and depressing to the preacher.

For a dull sermon is mighty encouraging to a clerical auditor. He is assured thereby that the good preaching of even the best preachers is not so easy as it seems, but is dependent upon the theme and the occasion and the conditions of preparation, like his own. He remembers that when Savonarola preached outside Florence the congregation complained of the mildness and insipidity of his discourses, and said that he was a ladies' preacher. Often he discovers, on his way home from church, that the sermon which seemed to him a series of platitudes was profoundly helpful to unprofessional hearers. And he reflects that if he were to repeat to his own congregation the most eloquent utterances of Chrysostom, of Bernard, of Wesley, or of Brooks himself, the congregation would not endure it. They would prefer his own honest imperfection to the supreme excellencies of the masters. Thus he perceives that the sermon is only a detail in the mysterious art of preaching.

The truth is that the art of preaching is like the art of growing. Nobody can make a tree with a saw and a hammer and a box of nails. The tree must grow by its own inscrutable processes. So must the sermon. Nobody, by taking thought, can add a cubit unto his stature, and no taking of thought can transform a small preacher into a great one. Nevertheless, a small man may considerably improve his personal appearance by taking exercise, by giving heed to the proprieties of dress, and by standing up straight. He may thus be more than the equal of a taller man who is round-shouldered. This is the chief value of instruction in homiletics. The purpose of such instruction is to assist men to make the most of their natural selves. Any man, by taking thought, can make the congregation definitely aware of the subject of his sermon; he can divide his discourse into unmistakable divisions; and he can apply the lessons of it to the needs of his hearers. Also, he can preach in a natural and understandable voice. The least man can be trained to do these things, as he can be trained to stand erect.

The purpose of preaching is to persuade the people. The end of the sermon is either truth or action. The right intention is to teach a certain truth, or phase of truth, by which the hearers shall be spiritually enlightened, comforted, directed or strengthened; or to lead them to say, as John the Baptist's hearers said, "What shall we do, then?" and to provide them with a working answer to that question. When St. Bernard wrote on the wall over his desk, "Ad quid venisti, Bernarde?" he was endeavoring thereby to keep this essential matter plain before him in the composition of his sermons. What are you here for, Bernard? What are you here for, Peter or Andrew or James or John? Seated now at your table, with a Bible on one side and an ink bottle on the other, and a pile of blank paper laid between, what are you trying to do? What is the actual result which you desire to effect in the mind or in the will of your people? One of the curious facts about the writing of sermons is that, of all men engaged in the process of literary composition, the preacher is almost the only one who commonly begins without setting down his subject at the top of his paper. This is one reason why the congregation is so often at a loss to know what the subject really is. The teacher of homiletics who follows the preaching of a sermon by distributing the blank cards in the class, and asking each hearer to say what, in his judgment, the sermon was about, will sometimes get a large variety of very diverse statements. A like inquiry in many congregations would yield both amusing and amazing results.

But even more important than the subject is the object The hearers of Cicero knew very well the subject of his oration when they said, "How eloquent!" But the hearers of Demosthenes cried, "Up, let us march against Philip!" A part of the art of effective preaching—as, indeed, of all effective speech—is contained in what is called in the dialect of football the "attack." Any man will get attention who is intent on making his words accomplish definite results. It is true that the rules of the game deprive him of the advantage of the attack unless he gains a certain number of homiletical yards in each paragraph. But so long as he does that, so long as he has an evident object and is making continuous progress toward it, he will carry the attention of the congregation with him. President Tucker accounts for the failure of some able sermons on the ground that the preacher was more interested in the truth than he was in the people. The preacher had a definite subject and discussed it with much learning, but he paid no heed to his object. His proper object was to bring the gospel to his congregation, to teach them truth in its relation to their minds and lives. Neglecting this, he might as well have preached in Greek. Philips Brooks, in his sermons, is all the time beginning paragraphs with the formula, "Here is a man," under such and such conditions, exposed to such and such temptations, needing the lesson which has just been expounded. St. Paul, in his epistles, does the same. Thus the truth is kept in vital contact with the people; the subject is for the sake of the object.

In order to have good preaching, both the preacher and the people must be present.

Sometimes the preacher absents himself from the people. Busily engaged in reading his manuscript, or looking over the heads of the congregation, at a distant wall, he speaks as if he were alone in the church. This accounts for a singular ignorance which is sometimes found in parsons. The preacher is often the only person in the parish who does not know that his sermons weary the people. Out goes the sermon from the Jerusalem of the pulpit to the Jericho of the pews and falls among thieves—the brigands of restlessness and distraction and somnolence—and of this mishap the preacher is quite unaware. He thinks that the road is safe and smooth, and that his goods get to their destination. It is true that he receives no returns from Jericho, but this does not seriously trouble him, having little acquaintance with the ways of business. If he would once really look at the people and see what they do when he says, "And now, brethren, a few words in conclusion," he would enter into a disconcerting but instructive experience. He would learn the moral of the story of the sexton who slipped under the pulpit lamp a paper on which was written, "When you are through the sermon, please put out the lights and lock the church."

This absence of the preacher from the people may be effected by the remoteness not only of his eyes, but of his voice. The sermon is pronounced in our presence, but it does not seem to be addressed particularly to us. It is like a badly written letter, blurred and confused and hard to read, whose author seems not to have taken into account the convenience of his correspondent. We try for a little while to make out what the preacher says, but the sentences are like the boys who dive for pennies in the Bay of Naples; down they go out of sight and hearing, to come up presently, and repeat the same performance. We watch the preacher dive for periods, but after the first few paragraphs we satisfy ourselves that he will always swing his arms in the same way, dive in the same place, and come up safely, and we invite ourselves to the more attractive exhibition of our own mental processes.

Or the preacher's manner is that which is described as a stained-glass-window tone of voice; meaning that if the green and blue and crimson saints could talk they would probably express themselves that way. Of course, the layman who never speaks in public is not aware that naturalness under that condition is one of the most difficult and elusive of the qualities of the orator; it is painfully acquired by long experience. At the same time he has a right to ask in the spirit of serious grievance, Why does this man address me in this ridiculous manner? Why does he speak in a way which in my house would be grotesque? He is presumably endeavoring to bring religion close to life: why, then, does he discuss it in a voice which is never heard in any other company of sane people? The sermon, as Mark Twain said of classical music, is really a great deal better than it sounds: but it seems unnecessary to put so wide a separation between the sound and the sense.

Still more serious than the absence of the preacher is the absence of the people from the preacher, not in body, but in spirit. This may be without blame to the preacher. There are persons in most congregations who are honestly uninterested in religion. They belong, of course, to the defective classes, like a blind man in a gallery of pictures; but there they are. They are like the men who are taken to concerts by their wives. Their inattention and drowsiness are related to the sermon as they are related to the symphony. It is true that sleep is criticism, but in this case it indicates only the limitations of the sleepers.

Also, there are persons who are affected by the physical conditions. They are put to sleep, not by the sermon, but by the sexton. A sexton who is in secret league with Satan, as many sextons are, can spoil the best sermons that were ever preached faster than the best preachers can preach them. The air is drowsy, the temperature acts as an opiate, and people sleep in spite of themselves. The young man who fell asleep while St. Paul preached at Troas had the advantage of sitting in an open window, but the room was crowded and the hour was late, and we are told that there were many lights. These had a hypnotic effect upon him, and St. Paul himself could not keep him awake. Moody had to send ushers to open the windows, that the fresh air might arouse the congregations. Men slept while Spurgeon preached. I remember one warm summer Sunday in the Abbey, when Bishop Gore was in the pulpit, and the people slept by hundreds and by fifties. One time I saw seventeen bishops asleep in the chancel during the reading of a pastoral letter at the close of a long convention.

When the preacher is evidently to blame, and the people are absent in mind and spirit—and sometimes in body also—by his fault, the trouble is probably in the structure or in the substance of the sermon.

For one of the specifications of the art of preaching calls for definite construction. The sermon must begin, and proceed, and end. There is a homiletical suggestion in the fact that what we, on our railways, call "switches," in England they call "points." The good sermon makes its way by points. Here the preacher turns the thought of the people in a new direction, and by a series of such changes brings them steadily to the place where he would have them be. An indistinct transition is like an open switch: the parlor car and the day coaches are piled up in confusion. Somehow the engine goes on, but the train is left behind. The sermon proceeds as if nothing had happened, but the congregation does not follow.

The length of a sermon is not fairly measured by the hands of the clock. It is long only when it seems long, and it always seems long when it appears to make no progress. Monotony, conventionality, indefiniteness, provoke the most pious hearer to impatience. We are so made as to be restless and tired and dissatisfied when there is nothing doing, even on Sunday. The undivided sermon, which seems to have no points, and makes no progress, settles down upon our spirits like a damp fog; the other side of the road seems a mile off. The preacher is in error who imagines that he can make his sermon immortal by making it everlasting.

On the other hand, any plain sermon, whose theme is immediately evident, and which is made, by argument after argument and illustration after illustration, to prove its proposition, and which, when the proposition is proved and applied, stops, is a good sermon. We understand it while it is being preached and remember it afterwards. The preacher had something to say, and he said it like a man who knows the value both of truth and of time.

The supreme canons of the art of preaching concern not the structure, but the substance of the sermon. The preacher may set at naught all the accepted standards of his profession—he may never lift his eyes from his manuscript, like Newman; he may preach with the speed of the wind, like Brooks—and yet accomplish his great purpose. For the elements of preaching, as Brooks himself said, are truth and personality. Sometimes the man succeeds, in spite of serious defects, in face of hindering eccentricities of voice or manner, by the over-mastering force of his personality. The man is the heart of the sermon. His strong conviction, his profound earnestness, his deep sense of the importance of his message, his great desire to do us good, are better than all the conventional excellencies of the schools. When the Lord said of the casting out of evil spirits, "This kind cometh not forth but by prayer," He taught the preacher that his strength against the spirits of inattention and of indifference and of irreligion is in the sanctification of his own soul. This is why many thoughtful persons deplore the increasing occupation of the minister in the activities of the parish life. They fear that he is thus imperiling that sense of the values and proportion of things, that clear perception of the difference between right and wrong, when wrong looks right, that consciousness of the unseen, that recognition of the presence of God, which constitute his unique service to the community. They want him to have time to say his prayers in peace.

The calling of the preacher is to minister to the souls of the people. The truth with which he is particularly concerned, and for which we look to him, is religious truth. His business is with religion. As the purpose of the physician is to secure health, and the purpose of the lawyer is to secure justice, and the purpose of the merchant is to extend his business, his purpose is to exalt religion. There are plenty of people who can instruct us in current politics, in science, in literature, in philosophy, even in ethics. We look to the preacher for religion. Every page of his sermon which is not devoted to his specialty is a disappointment to the people. What we wish him to do is to take his splendid, divine panacea and apply it to our needs. We are tempted every day, and we need admonition and strength. We are in the midst of opportunities of effective service, and we need suggestion and direction. We are distressed with doubts, and we need to be taught; we need truth positively stated, commended to our reason, reconciled with our experience appealing to our honest conviction. We are in trouble, confronting the disappointment, the pain, the foreboding, the tragedy of life, and we need light and understanding and comfort and courage. We need the interpretation, the illumination, of religion. Whoever, in any measure or in any manner, meets these needs, is a master of the art of preaching.

The meaning of life lies in the acceptance of the duty God demands and acquiescence in the discipline he appoints, not as submission to the inevitable, but as the discovery that our blessedness is in God's purpose. So long as we can shun life's worst tasks and trials, we might be happy, but to be blesed is to know that there are none we ever need to shun, because, through our Father's unfailingly gracious relation to us in all things, there is nothing we may not face and turn to profit. . . . Only as we discover in them a purpose worthy of us as children of God are all things ours, Cephas and the world, things secular as well as things sacred, sorrows as well as joys, the weakness of decay as well as the buoyancy of youth, failure as well as success, loneliness as well as friendship, death as well as life.—Nathaniel Micklem.

THE FREE CHURCHES AND THE LAMBETH APPEAL

Being an Abbreviated Report of a Committtee Appointed by the Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and the National Free Church Council.

When the Spirit of the Lord moves a sister Church, occupying a great place in this country and extending into many parts of the world, to appeal to Christendom on the subject of reunion, and when the appeal is made with the sincerity and impressiveness of the recent declaration from Lambeth, such an approach is to be met not only with respect, but also with earnest and cordial welcome. The subject is a great one, and today it presses on the hearts and the consciences of Christian people as it has never pressed before. The Evangelical Free Churches of England share in the sense alike of its importance and of its urgency. Moreover, we recognize in the Lambeth appeal a deep and grave concern over the evils of disunion, which we also feel. As Free Churchmen, we acknowledge that our concern over these evils has often been too slight, and we would learn from others who have felt it more profoundly. In now approaching the consideration of the far-reaching issues raised by this communication, we desire to be freed from all prejudice, as also from any seeking of ends other than those which should be sought in Christ's Church and which may serve His kingdom. We pray that His Spirit, who is the Spirit at once of truth and of charity, may be our guide.

Before entering on this discussion, we would realize that the whole matter is more than one between our brethren of other branches of the Church and ourselves. It is a matter between all the Churches and their Lord. The Church being His Church, it is His mind and His will which we must set before us to be our rule and guide. We must consult with Him even more than confer with each other. We have our various thoughts and plans about unity: He Who loves His Church has his own thoughts of unity. If we all could learn of Him, we should be at one.

A movement towards union has, it seems to us, three stages; and these must be taken in order. There must be, first of all, the right spirit between Churches—the spirit that is brotherly and desires union, that is free alike from suspicion and from self-seeking, that is both penitent and prayerful. In recent years a large measure of this spirit has been attained between the conformist and non-conformist sections of English Christianity; and it has been increased by the whole tone of the Lambeth appeal and by the courtesy and friendliness of many Episcopalian brethren. The second stage is not a scheme of practical proposals. That comes third. Prior to that, there must be a real agreement on what we may call postulates—that is, vital principles regarding the Church, and, still more, regarding the gospel. This second stage is, it seems to us, passed over rather slightly in the Lambeth documents. It is of vital principles or postulates for which the Evangelical Free Churches stand that we must now speak. This is not done in any "denominational" spirit; the appeal itself recognizes that all the communions concerned inherit what constitutes for them a sacred trust. Moreover, that of which we shall chiefly speak is not denominational, but simply Christian.

Our very name implies the positions on which we stand. We are Churches—claiming to be, in our corporate capacity, parts of the one Holy Catholic Church of Jesus Christ. We claim this, and cannot do less than claim it, because of our relation with Christ, who is the Head of the Body and who has recognized us and used us, not merely individually, but corporately, for the ends of His Church. We are Free Churches—claiming liberty in all spiritual affairs that we may be free to listen to and obey Him Whom we all acknowledge as our only Head. And we are Evangelical Free Churches. We use the word in no party sense. But there is, we believe, a definite New Testament gospel, and this—which carries with it its conception of the Church—we cannot and dare not compromise for the sake even of union itself. This, indeed, is our supreme and, in a sense, sole principle, for it contains the others: the Church is the outcome of the gospel—hence the importance which has always been attached by Evangelical Churches to "the preaching of the Word"—and the Church thus made by the gospel must be free.

What, then, for us, is the gospel? And what is the bearing of that gospel on the conception of the Church? We desire to answer these questions simply and clearly.

In the gospel Christ is proclaimed as the power and the wisdom of God unto salvation. This salvation is essentially a personal relation of the soul to God—a relation which is immediate, and is constituted by grace on God's part and by faith on man's. Through this gospel the Holy Spirit is shed abroad in the hearts of those that believe; and this common possession of the Spirit creates a fellowship in which the humblest and loneliest Christian is a fellow-citizen with all the saints. This fellowship, which is the Church, gives visible expression to its corporate life in common faith, order and worship; and to it belongs the vocation of witnessing for Christ and of winning the world for Him and thus bringing in the kingdom of God.

The essentials of the Church are, therefore, in the gospel, not in organization. The former is that by which the Church is: the latter is something which the Church has—and, of course, the more perfectly she has it, the better. We value the organizations and institutions of the visible Church, and we seek a conception of the Church as large and lofty as the New Testament offers; but we cannot allow any Church order or rite, or even the idea of the Church taken by itself, to displace the gospel as the regulative and—under the divine Spirit—the creative principle of all ecclesiastical doctrine and practice.

The position above stated carries with it another. The Spirit being given of God to all who receive the gospel of Christ, so that all may thereby have personal, direct and immediate access to God, the primary priesthood in Christ's Church is "the priesthood of all believers." But within this priesthood there are diversities of functions, constituted by differences in the gifts of the Spirit. Some of these are personal: some are representative of the whole Church. Pre-eminently representative is the ministry of the Word and sacraments of the gospel.

In these ministries, as everywhere and in everything that concerns the Church, we lay continual emphasis on the immediate and personal agency and sufficiency of Jesus Christ. He is not merely the Founder of a society, or the Source of a succession, or the Institutor of ordinances; but it is He Himself who always brings pardon and newness of life and growth and perfecting to His people, and who still is to His Church her living Lord and present Head.

It is with this limited and non-controversial purpose that we now touch on what seem to us to be the three important elements in the Lambeth scheme which need to be examined with care in view of the general conceptions we have briefly indicated. The matters we shall look at are these:

(1) The Recognition of Churches.
(2) Episcopal Ordination, as proposed in the scheme.
(3) The Spiritual Freedom of the Church.

Other points might easily be suggested; but, for our present purpose, it will be sufficient if we refer to each of these three.

(1) Recognition of Churches.

The evangelical conception of the Church of Christ, involving the position that the essential of the Church (or of any branch thereof) is in its relation to the gospel and not in anything of outward organization, raises a question which concerns the relation of Anglicanism to ourselves and also our relation to others.

About the recognition or non-recognition on the part of Anglicanism of the Churches we represent as, in their corporate character, parts of the one Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, we have little to say merely on our own account. It is to their Master that Churches, as individuals, stand or fall. We shall only remark that, in our unanimous opinion, without the cordial and practical recognition of one another's Church standing, proposals for union cannot be carried out and, indeed, can hardly with propriety be suggested.

But it is in respect of our relations with others that this question has for us a vital interest. Our members are, it must be remembered, in a wider and larger Church fellowship than Anglicanism is. The true sign of Church fellowship is the communion of the Holy Table. A Congregationalist, for example, is in this fellowship not only with Congregationalists, but also (because there exists mutual recognition) with Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and others. An Anglican, for reasons we do not here discuss, is not countenanced in seeking this wider fellowship; and his fellow-communicants are limited to fellow-Anglicans. The result is that when a Congregationalist passes from his communion to Anglicanism, he passes into a smaller Church fellowship, if he were held to cut himself off from his former company of fellow-communicants.

This raises for us an issue which is a most practical one. Even on a sanguine view, it is hardly to be supposed that all, or the greater part, of non-Episcopal Christendom in, for example, Scotland or America—will enter at once within the Lambeth scheme of episcopacy. If we, in England, should accept it, would this mean we should no longer be in fullest sacramental communion with any of those whom we now welcome to our pulpits and with whom we join in the celebration of the Lord's Supper? If we should not continue to be in such fellowship with them, we should be committing schism—and a treacherous kind of schism—in the very act of union. If we should continue to be in such full communion, that would mean "recognition."

What our Churches will desire, therefore, to know is this—whether Anglicanism is prepared to recognize non-Episcopal communions (or any of them) as corporate parts of the Church of Christ, and their ministries as ministries of Christ's Word and Sacraments. As we read the Lambeth appeal, it logically implies—particularly by its recognition of our ministries as "effective ministries of grace," and its use of the words "all ministries of grace, theirs and ours"—that our communions, like Episcopal communions, are already parts of the visible Church of Christ. But, if this be the correct interpretation of the appeal, it should be made clear that it is so.

Essentially and ultimately, the question is one of what the living Lord, through His Spirit, says of the Churches. We, for our part, must recognize Churches and ministries which manifestly He recognizes; and recognize them not merely in a general way as blessed of Him, but as Churches and as ministries of the Word and Sacraments of the gospel if He does so. We find it quite compatible with this to adhere firmly to what we may believe to be true and Scriptural polity, and to decline to treat with indifference what may seem to us to be erroneous or defective in other systems. But the mind of Christ, expressed through the action of His Spirit, must be the Church's guiding rule in this question of recognition as in any other. For this reason, we must not be asked to take any step which would prevent or hamper our continued recognition of sister Churches with which we are at present in sacramental fellowship. We desire to say no word which would make agreement here difficult. But we are certain that the Churches which we represent will require a perfectly clear understanding on this most practical issue of recognition—alike of ourselves on the part of Anglicanism, and of others by a reunited Church—and we trust that the answer may be made unmistakable by being given in word and in act.

(2) Episcopal Ordination.

A second issue, which is raised for us in the Lambeth scheme. concerns episcopacy, especially in connection with ordination.

Of episcopacy as a form of ecclesiastical polity we need say only a word. We have indicated that our view of the gospel and of the Church keeps us from regarding any one form of polity as essential in the Church Catholic or in any true part of it. We hold—as leading Anglican scholars also hold—that no one form of polity for the Church has been prescribed by the Lord. For this very reason we are the more free to consider what form may be shown to us by the leading of the Spirit as expedient for a reunited Church, and we, therefore, have an open mind towards Episopal order as towards any other. To this, however, we must add that we cannot be expected to consider any form of polity which claims to be an exclusive channel of grace or which fails to recognize the place and the rights of the Christian people in the affairs of the Church.

These are points, however, into which we need not at present enter further. The question which calls for special examination arises over the proposal of "Episcopal ordination."

We venture to draw attention to one point. The proposal to make Episcopal ordination of ministers who have not received it a part of the scheme of union is in direct opposition to the considered decision of the resolutions of the Mansfield Conference of 1920.* That Conference definitely put aside the suggestion of Episcopal ordination (which was made to it by an Episcopal member), and substituted the declaration that any mutual authorization was to be "not re-ordination." We, of course, attach undue authority to this declaration: but it was signed by a number of representative Free Churchmen (as well as by many Anglicans), and there can be little question that it represents the practically unanimous Free Church view. We feel, therefore, that the obligation rests on those who set Episcopal ordination—particularly in its Anglican form, which is not accepted by the majority of Episcopalians—in the forefront of a scheme of union, to bring forward exceptionally cogent grounds for doing so, if they are to win the support of the Free Churches.

In the Lambeth scheme Episcopal ordination is introduced as an element in a scheme of mutual ministerial recognition. Its significance and purport in this connection are not quite clear to us. When it is proposed that Episcopalian clergy should be authorized to officiate in Free Churches through "a form of commission or recognition" which would "commend" their ministry to these congregations, and that Free Church ministers should be authorized to officiate in Anglican congregations by "a commission through Episcopal ordination," what is meant by this last crucial phrase? Is it meant that our ministers should be made "ministers in the Church of God," as the ordinal of the Book of Common Prayer phrases it? Or is it meant that, being already "ministers in the Church of God," they are to be formally admitted and authorized to minister within the Church of England? If the former be the meaning, we obviously are thrown back again on the question of recognition. We should not be asked to accept any form which carries, or which could be construed to carry, this interpretation. If, on the other hand, the latter meaning be what is proposed, then certainly ordination is not the requisite or appropriate ceremony or word. Ordination to minister Christ's Word and Sacraments is a general thing, to be given once for all; license to exercise it in any district or communion is a particular thing which may, of course, be extended. But the two things are different in idea. We are of opinion that the ambiguity here should be cleared up. It is possible, indeed, that we may be told it is better not to press for its being cleared up, and that the meaning may be left to various, even contrary, constructions. This does not commend itself to us either intellectually or ethically. To begin to build a union in the Church of Christ on a conscious ambiguity is not, it seems to us, to build in God's name and in God's way. Whether the Free Churches may find themselves able to accept this proposal of "commission through Episcopal ordination" or not, they can hardly be expected to accept it—and they certainly should not accept it—without knowing quite clearly what it means.

We do not think it necessary or expedient to pursue these issues further. We shall add that the whole question about episcopacy, especially about the indispensableness of Episcopal ordination, will never be settled by either side appealing merely to its ecclesiastical tradition. Nor, we must remark, can it be approached (as the Lambeth appeal at this point suggests) merely by "the way of mutual deference to one another's consciences." This may be the right and Christian course in many secondary matters; but it cannot be made a guiding principle for large issues in Christ's Church. If it had been so regarded at the Council of Jerusalem, then St. Paul should have deferred to the doubtless often conscientious demands of the Judaizers. Our appeal must be to the Lord of all our consciences, and to His Spirit whose mind is to be discerned from what He does. We declare our readiness alike to learn and—what is more difficult—to unlearn, according to what He manifests to be His will as His Spirit works among the Churches.

(3) Spiritual Freedom.

The third matter which seems to require mention as arising out of our principles concerning the gospel and the Church is the spiritual freedom of the Church of Christ.

In general terms, what we mean by the spiritual freedom of the Church is this: It is to the corporate life of the Christian Church what freedom of conscience is to the Christian man. The Christian man claims liberty of conscience in matters of religious faith and moral duty that he may learn of and obey his Lord. In the same way the Church must be free in matters of religious faith and moral duty to learn of and to obey the Lord, who is still living and present in her midst. This is the meaning of the spiritual freedom of the Church; and it arises directly out of the principles regarding the gospel and the Church which we have, in the previous section, laid down.

The Lambeth scheme suggests questions which concern this freedom in two main respects. One is the matter of the relation of the Church to the creeds; the other is the relation of the Church to the State.

With regard to the former, we believe that there need be little difficulty. We recognize that the reunited Church will require some common declaration of faith, not to be used as a test, but to be a testimony and witness to the Lord and the gospel. Here we fully realize the value of the ancient creeds. The Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Churches has, in its published Declaratory Statement of Common Faith and Practice, said that these Churches "claim and cherish their place as inheritors, along with others, of the historic faith of Christendom, which found expression in the oecumenical creeds of the early and undivided Church." We are convinced, therefore, that Free Churchmen generally would be able to give as "whole-hearted" an acceptance to the Christian faith underlying these creeds as do their Anglican brethren! while, as to the Nicene creed in particular, such Free Churchmen as are acquainted with the history of doctrinal development in the fourth century can recognize in it "a sufficient statement of the Christian faith" expressed in the terms of the thought of that age. While, however, recognizing all this, we are concerned also to maintain that truth is ever learning new language, so that terms and modes of thought grow old, and, when they have

(Continued on page 23)

*See the Christian Union Quarterly, January, 1920.

The Great Commission.

FELLOWSHIP THE KEYNOTE OF HOME MISSIONS.

The purpose of the field work of the Department of Missions and Church Extension is to carry into practice the results of careful study and investigation. These investigations have irresistibly forced the conclusion that the cause of unrest among the foreign-born is social, rather than economic. The economic condition of the foreign-born rapidly improves, but with this improvement is not always an increase in dependability. The conditions in American life have fostered the tendency towards racial segregation with the resulting detachment from American ideals. This is the logical outcome of the aloofness of the American public. Along with the disillusionment of the immigrant from his dreams of an America in which racial heritages blend in the formation of a higher and more vigorous civilization has come a distrust not only of the motives which inspire Americans, but of the principles on which the American idea of democracy is based.

This conviction has forced into the foreground as the primary objective of the field work a program of fellowship. "For Every Churchman a Foreign-born Friend" is the slogan. With this idea before us, we are trying to enlist the aid of diocesan and parochial leaders in having communicants of the Church seek out from among those with whom they could naturally associate at least one friend of foreign birth.

Correlated to this, and possibly antecedent, is the conclusion that any work in the interest of the foreign-born is not necessarily a "slum" problem. As such, it has been viewed impersonally as a sort of side issue in the application of what is properly called "so-called service." As a matter of fact, the industrial and economic opportunities in America are such that comparatively few foreign-born remain among the "submerged tenth." An increasing percentage is found among the small tradespeople, while many are seizing opportunities for educational advancement and political leadership. It is among this class that discontent growing out of social isolation engenders a real menace to American institutions. It is impossible to draw forth whole-hearted enthusiasm for national institutions from people who feel that they are excluded from real fellowship because their speech and customs betray a foreign origin.

It is for these reasons that we are convinced that the most important work of winning over the foreign-born must be through fraternization. It is a slow process involving the awakening of the national consciousness rather than an appeal to the missionary enthusiasm of the few. All authorities agree that the Christian Church is the only agency that can perform this task; and those most interested are convinced that the Episcopal Church is the logical leader in most phases of the work.

The field department has carried this message to many parts of the country and has met with much encouragement. Many have undertaken to push the program. It is unnatural, however, to expect too much from the inspiration of an address or the study of literature. There is need of one or more assistants who can train parochial the diocesan agents in the methods of approach to the foreign-born. Among the numerous places where this program has been accepted might be mentioned Galveston, Eagle Pass and El Paso, Tex.; Albequerque, N. M.; Phoenix, Ariz.; San Diego, Los Angeles, Sacramento, Salenas, San Francisco, Cal.; Tacoma and Spokane, Wash.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Cheyenne and Rawlins, Wyo.; Omaha, Neb.; Kenosho, Wis.; Chicago, Ill.; Gary, Ind.; Cleveland, O.; Philadelphia and Sharon, Pa., and New York City.

NEWS FROM HSIAKWAN, CHINA.

Most satisfactory progress has been made in Hsiakwan under the direction of the Rev. T. K. Shen. It is interesting to know that the entire work of our Church in Nanking was under the direction of our two Chinese clergy during the absence of Rev. J. M. B. Gill and Rev. J. G. Magee in America. Rev. K. T. Chung was in charge of the work inside the city, and Rev. T. K. Shen at Hsiakwan and Puchen. It certainly gives one hope for the church in China to see our clergy do such capable and devoted work as these gentlemen have done there.

At present there are in Hsiakwan seventy boys and forty girls in the day schools and about thirty students in the night school. The increase in attendance at the day schools is most encouraging, and there have been turned away a good many for lack of room.

The White Cross Society, our anti-vice society, keeps up its good work, and has been the means of gaining the respect of a good class of people for the church. One of the editors of the leading local papers has recently joined. The affairs of the society are frequently reported in the local and sometimes in the Shanghai papers. The members are to publish a periodical, the first issue to be in August, with Rev. T. K. Shen as editor-in-chief. Any of our clergy or others who might be interested in this kind of social work could find out what the local society is doing by subscribing to this paper.

The members of the White Cross Society of Hsiakwan are trying to secure the organization of like societies in all our parishes. In the circular letter they explain that aside from the main reason for the society, namely, the combating of vice, there are four reasons why our parishes ought to form such a society:

1. In order to furnish church members who are in business or in educational work an opportunity for service.
2. To show the foreign community of Shanghai that the Chinese are not indifferent to their "moral welfare" measures.
3. That this is a kind of work which the non-Christian community would respect.
4. That it would help prepare public opinion for the ultimate suppression of organized vice.

Four catechumens are soon to be admitted from the girls' day school, these being the first fruits from this school. Another recent catechumen was a member of the Li Men, a Buddhist Puritan sect. He will be the second man from this sect to join the church, as during the past year an old man who had been a leader in this sect was baptized. This old man, by the way, has certainly been a zealous Christian, being one of our open-air preachers.

"SERMONS IN STONES."

"During my recent visit in New York," writes a clergyman in Ohio, "I was paying my check in a cafeteria. The cashier, noticing my clerical garb, expressed curiosity as to my religious affiliation, and on being told that it was 'Episcopal,' appeared none the wiser. Perhaps this was not to be wondered at! Casting about for a more precise means of indicating my ecclesiastical status, I told her that I belonged to the Church that was building the big Cathedral up town, and asked her if she had seen it. 'Oh, yes!' she said, and her face became animated as she spoke. 'I pass it every morning. It is so big and strong and beautiful, it helps me all day!' "

EXTENSION SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN KOREA.

Sunday schools in Korea are aiming to reach the children of non-Christians through the establishing of what are called "Extension" Sunday schools. In that country they are not satisfied to have every member of the church in the Sunday school, but are eagerly going after those who are not now members of the church. Related to the Kwangju mission station are no less than twenty of these extension Sunday schools, with an attendance of about 1,500. It is stated that in three months after one of these schools was established, a mile from Kwangju, twenty of the children could recite the entire catechism. Through these twenty Sunday schools at least one-tenth of the population in that district is under Christian instruction.

At a Sunday School Institute in Kwangju a practical demonstration was given which contrasted the old and new style of teaching in a Sunday school. The teacher first had just a mixed lot of young and old in the class, as is often done in a country church. He read the printed lesson helps in a stammering way, skipping about and paying no attention to the class. While he was doing this, one old man was asleep, the boys were playing, others giggling and having a good time. They all acted their part well, and the Koreans are natural actors. Then the school was classified properly according to age, and the leader taught one class in a most attractive and up-to-date way, showing that he had prepared the lesson, leaving behind all books and papers.

MR. HICKSON AT NANKING.

Mr. J. M. Hickson held a two days' Healing Mission in Nanking, May 31 and June 1. There had been ten days of very careful preparation for his coming, a union prayer meeting every morning, and also afternoon prayer meetings in each of the churches in the city. At the mission over sixteen hundred came forward to receive help, and there have been many very remarkable cures. Blind had their sight restored, the deaf received their hearing again, the lame were made strong, and many diseases healed. But the best result was the real spiritual awakening which is reported to have come to the whole Christian community.

BEQUEST TO ST. JOHN'S UNIVERSITY.

Word has been received that St. John's University, Shanghai, is to receive a gift amounting approximately to $17,500 from the estate of the late J. F. Seeman, for many years a prominent business man of Shanghai. The gift is all the more significant because Mr. Seeman was not a member of our communion. His appreciation of St. John's and of our mission generally is a commentary upon the alleged "antipathy" of responsible business men to missionary work in the Orient.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

IS INTOLERANCE LOYALTY?

It was a large gathering and there was a good deal of quiet enthusiasm. The occasion was the laying of the cornerstone of a new Methodist Church.

The ceremonies had not yet begun and the crowd was chatting in subdued voices when a discordant note was sounded.

"We've got too many churches in this town now. I don't see what they want with any more," remarked a man on the outskirts of the group.

"What church do you go to?" asked his neighbor beside him.

"Well," was the reply, "I'm an Episcopalian, but I haven't been to church for two years."

"Naturally, you don't feel the need of another church in this town," replied the other as he began to move closer to the speaker's stand. "I'm an Episcopalian, too, but I am glad to see our Methodist brethren getting a nice building in which to meet God on Sundays. I attend services regularly and know the pleasure of having a beautiful church in which to worship God."

Such conversations are enlightening. They show a certain phase of church life, or rather, human nature. It would not be correct to call it "church life," for we are glad to say it is the exception and not the rule in the Church.

There are, however, a few people who think that they can show loyalty to their own church by spite towards others. If it is investigated this attitude will usually be found to be simply a method of covering up their own negligences.

It will almost always be found, as it should be, that the people who do the most for their own church, are the most loyal to its teachings and customs, are also those who show the greatest willingness to co-operate in the progressive efforts of their brethren of a different persuasion.

The love of God is a broad and beautiful thing that inspires one to a desire to help to bring happiness to all, as some one has so beautifully put it:

"God's love is broader than the measure of man's mind,
The heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind."

We think and believe that one of the many ways in which this kindness is shown is by a broad, sweet tolerance that recognizes that people are of many different views and dispositions, and where they carry their religious feelings are appealed to and touched in various ways through diverse channels.

After all, what is a church but a means of meeting God, and if I find Him in one of our beautiful Episcopal churches with its symbolic appointments, its vested choir and surpliced clergyman, is that any reason why my Methodist brother should not find Him in the informal, and perhaps emotional, service of the Methodist Church?

We have it on the best of authority that if we seek we shall find. Having sought God and found Him and taken Him into our hearts, we need not worry over the question being asked us, "Where did you seek?" Those are details that we can safely leave to Him. The thing for us to do is to go, and go regularly, to that church in which we find the most of God, with love and tolerance in our hearts for those who find Him in some other way and some other building than our own.

CONSTITUTION DAY, SEPTEMBER 17.

The signing of the Constitution of the United States on September 17, 1787, marked a very important event in the history of the world. Each community and each individual daily enjoys advantages which would not be his but for the wisdom of the pioneers who gave a Constitution to a united country. North and South, East and West—all are glad that we are one country under one flag.

New times bring new responsibilities and new duties. We would be untrue to those who have gone before if we stood for the Constitution as originally drafted, with no changes to keep pace with the world's advance.

In these days of Bolshevism and general lawlessness it is well to have a special day on which to commemorate so great an event as the signing of the document which became the organic law of our land.

It is well, too, that such an occasion should be made the opportunity to emphasize the fact that its amendments are an important part of that great document.

It should be remembered that almost the first thing that happened to our Constitution after its adoption was that it was amended at considerable length.

Respect for law is a definite part of a Christian's duty, and was so emphasized by our Saviour when He said, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." St. Paul also recognized the importance of law observance even when the laws were made by those who were avowedly anti-Christian.

Such respect for law and order is doubly a Christian duty today, when our State ordinances are made for the most part by persons who at least profess to be followers of the Master and to hold His standards in high esteem.

It is therefore thoroughly in keeping with the functions of the Church to recognize some specific day on which to bring their civic duties to the attention of its members, and certainly no day could be more fitting than the one which marks the anniversary of the signing of the Constitution.

SAVING A GOOD THING.

In a great many places the meetings of the Red Cross circles that were organized during the war have been greatly missed.

We are all glad that there is no longer any need to roll bandages or prepare things for our boys in the army, but in rural sections and small towns these gatherings had a social aspect that it is a pity to lose.

In order to preserve the good that was found by this drawing together, an organization has been formed with its headquarters at 1 Madison Avenue, New York.

We believe that this desire to get together is much stronger than many people suppose, and that it is an opportunity for great service, so we print here in full the prospectus of the organization above referred to, believing that it might be helpful in developing plans for such gatherings:

"Community service is a national organization incorporated in February, 1919, with headquarters at 1 Madison Avenue, New York. It exists to assist American communities in making the leisure time of their citizens more valuable and more expressive through community recreation.

It seeks to promote:

Citizenship—for both native and foreign-born, made vital through a common sharing in leisure time activities.

Neighborliness — made possible through the coming together of citizens to think, to plan and to act together for their mutual interests.

Community Spirit—growing in solidarity through the pooling of community resources and the creation of neighborhood groups who think in terms of the whole community.

Happiness—a more abundant life—because of new opportunity for self-expression for the individual and for a broader social life for the whole community.

Community service helps communities organize local community service committees which will develop their own locally governed and supported leisuret ime program.

Such committees, in assuming responsibility for the communitq's recreational needs, seek to bring about:

The maximum use of existing facilities such as playgrounds, gymnasiums, parks, church and club facilities.

The creation of such needed new facilities as neighborhood recreation centers, community centers, rest rooms, summer camps.

The organization of such activities as athletics and outdoor sports, vacant lot play, social activities, hospitality clubs.

The creation of opportunities for the expression of such cultural interests as community drama, pageantry, community music, art exhibits.

The provision of the educational and citizenship activities which may be developed through public discussions, forums, educational classes, study clubs.

The finding and training of volunteer leadership in games, dancing and social gatherings, dramatics, song leading.

To the end that the community as a whole may meet the needs of all and each may make his maximum contribution to the community.

How Does Community Service Work?

Community service undertakes work in a community only in response to a definite invitation from some responsible group of representative citizens.

Upon accepting an invitation national headquarters of community service loans to a city for a brief period a community organizer to help in the organization of a local community service committee representative of all community interests. This committee discovers neighborhood and community needs and assumes responsibility for meeting them through the planning of a program of activities and the raising of funds to carry on the work.

Where necessary, as far as funds and workers permit, national headquarters will provide organizers in games, community music, community drama and other activities to demonstrate the values which lie in a community-wide recreation program.

When the necessary promotion and organization work has been completed and funds raised, the national headquarters worker is withdrawn and a permanent executive is employed by the community."

Church Intelligence

Election of Bishop Lloyd.

The Presiding Bishop has received the canonical majority of written consents of the Bishops to the election of the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., to be a Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of New York. Therefore, he hereby gives notice that the said election is now complete.

England's War Losses.

The preacher last Sunday at St. James' Church, the Rev. Dr. F. W. Crowder, rector, was the Rev. Dr. J. Stuart Holden, of Loudoun, who is in America again this summer as Bible teacher at Northfield conferences. Speaking of conditions in England at the moment, Dr. Holden fears they are worse than they were one year ago. People are bewildered, and the Church has not found itself since the war. St. Paul's, Portman Square, of which he is rector, lost in the war every layman it had under forty years of age. He fears that many other churches in England suffered even worse than St. Paul's. The blow is so great, recovery is impossible without time.

He finds the China Inland Mission, supported in part by Church people, and of which he is an officer, to have fared well in income, but that many other missionary societies, those of Non-conformists in particular, are badly behind in receipts. There has no religious revival come since the war ended, and religion is at a low ebb. Many churches are half filled, or even less. Religious bodies are without programs in many cases, not due to lack of hope on the part of leaders, but lack of ability to move a stunned, tax-burdened and bereaved people. Dr. Holden feels that America knows little of what England has suffered, in company with France and the other Allies.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan-Elect.

An unusual number of distinguished clergy from abroad are neard in New York pulpits this summer. The head of all of them is the veteran, Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer, now well advanced in years, but still active, who used to be pastor of Christ Church; a Baptist who followed the late Rev. Dr. Newman Hall as pastor of a Congregational Church, and had built a baptistery in the chapel for his own use. He permitted his assistant minister to sprinkle such as did not insist upon immersion. For years he has been a world leader, and perhaps is nearer to the British Government than any other Non-conformist, and oftenest consulted. He is here as speaker at Northfield. Another is the Rev. W. C. Bitting, a Baptist leader of St. Louis, and a third the Rev. Dr. P. W. Thompson, of Bolton, Eng Bishops of the Church, preaching in New York this summer, include Bishop Whitehead, of Pittsburgh; Bishop McCormick, of Western Michigan, and Bishop Guerry, of South Carolina. In spite of great heat, attendance of worshippers in New York this summer has been above the average of some years past.

Cenotaph to Bishop Horatio Potter.

It has long been the purpose to place in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine a cenotaph to the late Bishop Horatio Potter, of New York, and to bring to the Cathedral the body of the Bishop, interred more than thirty years ago in a cemetery in Dutchess County. The Cathedral project was conceived of by Bishop Horatio Potter, who secured the charter. His death occurring soon after, Bishop Henry Codman Potter, his nephew, was head of the committee which purchased the present site.

The place of the cenotaph to the Cathedral founder will be immediately in the rear of the high altar, in the ambulatory and between the two great central pillars. It will be directly opposite the entrance to the middle chapel, that given by the Belmonts. The cost of the enrichment is being paid by persons who were confirmed by the Bishop. The chairman of the committee in charge is Bishop Manning, the secretary Mr. Robert C. Hone, who is secretary of the Cathedral trustees, and the architect Mr. S. Edward Nash, architect of Trinity Corporation and member of that parish's vestry. A recumbent figure of the Bishop will surmount the cenotaph, and the sarcophagus will bear the story of the Bishop as founder. The whole will be in white marble. Work on the placing of the memorial has begun.

Horatio Potter was a native of Dutchess County, as was also his brother, Alonzo Potter, of Pennsylvania, the one being Bishop of New York from 1852 to 1887, the other of Pennsylvania from 1845 to 1865. Bishop Henry Codman Potter is buried in the Potter Chapel in the Cathedral, Bishops Greer and Burch in the crypt, beneath the high altar.

Trinity Parish.

The newest of Trinity's chapels, the Intercession, the Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates, vicar, has reached the point of the largest communicant list. Its number, according to the Year Book just issued, is 3,436. The chapel coming next to it is St. Agnes, with 2,733. Trinity itself reports 1,181, and the entire parish has communicants to the number of 9,828. Trinity's grants of money to churches and local institutions not a part of the parish proper amounted last year to $33,665.

Apart from churches, chapels, burying grounds, all of enormous value but unproductive in matter of financial income, Trinity's pr eprties, it values at $14,432,000. The productive real estate is valued at almost exactly $13,000,000, and there is a little more than $1,000,000 in mortgages. Rents of real estate last year brought in $1,045,500, which is about $75,000 above the average for some years past. There were rents of steam power bringing in some $50,000 during the year. The incomes of some of the principal places of worship of the famous parish are interesting. For example, Trinity Church itself, at the head of Wall Street, received in contributions practically all from the people, only $1,487 being voted by the vestry in lieu of pew rents, the sum of $21,000, all of which was given away to causes quite beyond the parish, or, at any rate, not expended on any local support.

Historic St. Paul's Chapel, which does a wonderful work but makes small showing in finances, took in barely $2,000, but gave half of even that to missions. Trinity Chapel's income, in a downtown district near Madison Square, amounted to $12,000, general offerings being $6,500 and general missions $1,300. St Agnes' Chapel's income approaches $30,000 a year, of which $6,000 was for general missions, but beyond them item after item outside of the parish appears as recipients of help, as day schools, $6,000, and a round of splendid work supported in the sum of $7,544.

Old St. Luke's, away down in Hudson Street, makes the creditable showing of some $8,000, most of it given far and wide. The Intercession Chapel gives $30,000 a year, general missions getting $2,500.

Plans are making by Trinity Parish, carrying forward announcements in the Year Book, to erect a club-house in the far down-town district for boys and men, to enlarge the work of St. Augustine's Chapel on the lower East Side, and to erect a choir school of sufficient size to accommodate all Trinity choirs. The plan is to create a secondary school of first grade, exclusively for choristers. Bishop Manning will do what he can while remaining rector to carry forward these plans, especially that of the down-town club-house, located somewhere in the financial district.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland. D. D., Suffragan.

A beautiful memorial window, depicting "the Good Shepherd," erected in honor of Rev. Samuel Fitch Hotchkin, for many years rector of the Memorial Church of St. Luke the Beloved Physician, Bustleton, was dedicated Sunday morning, July 24, in the presence of a large congregation.

The impressive service was in charge of Rev. William McClelland, the present rector, and the sermon was preached by Rev. G. Woolsey Hodge, D. D., a life-long friend of the late rector.

Dr. Hotchkin came to Bustleton as rector of St. Luke's Church in 1877, and served until 1909, when he became rector-emeritus until 1912, when he died. In addition to serving as rector, he was Registrar of the Diocese of Pennsylvania for many years.

Open-air services in the orchard of the church farm of the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, at Broomall, Pa., are held on Sunday afternoons at 4 o'clock all through the summer.

August 7 being the first Sunday in the month, the Holy Communion was celebrated, with an adress by the rector, the Rev. David M. Steele, D. D. The church, on Thirteenth Street below Spruce, will be closed during the month of August for renovation and repairs.

Dr. G. Haslam, of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., has been appointed headmaster of the Episcopal Academy, one of Philadelphia's oldest private schools.

Trustees of the academy also announce the new buildings in Overbrook will be in readiness for the opening of the fall term, September 22. Grounds about the buildings will permit the carrying out of a program requiring pupils to spend at least a portion of the day in the open-air exercising. Motor busses will be provided for carrying small children to the new buildings, and the entire administration will be moved to Overbrook.

Ground was broken for a new church building Sunday morning, August 7, on the property of Emmanuel Church, Kensington. The present edifice was erected in 1838 and is one of the oldest in Kensington. It is almost useless from age. The Rev. Alfred Overton Tarrant, Ph. D., M. D., is the minister in charge, and also chairman of the Building Committee. A mission in Kensington was established by the Rev. Christian Wiltberger, Jr., in April, 1836, and Emmanuel Church was admitted into union with the Diocesan Convention in May, 1837.

Mr. George H. Randall, editor of St. Andrew's Cross and associate general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, conducted the services at Trinity Church, Guelph Station, Sunday morning and evening, July 24.

Exercises attending the breaking of ground for the new Zion Church, on the site adjoining the old edifice at Broad Street and Wyoming Avenue, Philadelphia, were held Sunday, July 24, in the presence of a large congregation. The program included an address of thanksgiving and blessing for the new undertaking by Bishop Thomas J. Garland and prayer by the rector, Rev. Charles H. Long.

Bishop Garland removed the first shovel of earth with the words, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, I break the ground for this church, and may the Lord bring our undertaking to a prosperous end. Amen."

Then the rector and church wardens each removed a shovel of earth, repeating the words, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

During the singing of the Te Deum, offerings for the building fund were received. The new church building will be of Chestnut Hill stone, with limestone trimmings, and will cost about $80,000. The plans were drafted by Frank Watson, architect, and H. John Homan & Co., are the contractors. Excavations for the building were begun the next day.

The Rev. S. W. Creasy, assistant to Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D. D., taught the Men's Drexel Biddle Bible Class of Holy Trinity Church Sunday morning. Mr. Creasy has done extensive work as missionary in Indian reservations, and his subject was "The Missionary Work Among the American Indians."

The Rev. Louis C. Washburn, D. D., rector of Old Christ Church, preached at the open-air service on the proposed site of the Cathedral on the Parkway, at Twenty-third Street, Sunday, July 21. Dr. Washburn discussed "The Pre-eminent Question in the Making of America." His sermon also dealt with important questions relating to the Susquicentennial of the Declaration of Independence and civic and community subjects. The service was the concluding one of the summer season.

Movies for Disarmament.

In connection with church services to win public approval of the disarmament movement, motion pictures were shown Sunday evening, August 7, in the Church of the Mediator, Fifty-first and Spruce Streets. The film was forwarded to Philadelphia by the Massachusetts Foreign Policy Association. Included in the pictures shown were special messages from Premier Hara, of Japan; General John J. Pershing and Herbert Hoover, voicing their commendation of the disarmament movement as a first step toward elimination of wars, and further providing relief from the already excessive tax burdens imposed upon the peoples of all nations.

The preacher, the Rev. William Oscar Roome, Jr., was formerly rector of Emmanuel Church, Anacostia, Washington, D. C., until he accepted a call as assistant to the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, vicar of the Chapel of the Mediator.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Preparations for the Provincial Synod, which will meet for the first time in the Diocese, October 25, 26 and 27, in Savannah, are being made by the Savannah parishes. A committee of members from the four parishes, with the Rev. William T. Dakin, rector of St. John's, as general chairman, is attending to the arrangements. A committee of women is attending to the placing of the delegates to the Synod and also to the Woman's Auxiliary and Church Service League meetings, which will be held at the same time. On Sunday, October 23d, it is planned to have some of the Bishops and priests preach sermons on Religious Education throughout the Diocese in many of the parishes and missions, and on Monday and Tuesday to have a conference on Religious Education in Savannah.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

The preacher at the open-air service, Washington Cathedral, on Sunday, August 7, was the Rev. W. J. Morton, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Alexandria.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity has recently been conferred upon the Rev. George W. Atkinson, Jr., by the University of Indiana. Dr. Atkinson is the rector of Grace Church, Georgetown, where he renders untiring services to a devoted congregation.

The Rev. William L. DeVries, D. D., Ph. D., has been elected to the position of dean of the Divinity School of Kenyon College. His decision in the matter of acceptance has not yet been announced. Dr. DeVries is now a canon of the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, Washington, and was, prior to that, rector for many years of St. Mark's Church, Washington.

MISSISSIPPI

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor.

St. Andrew's Parish.

St. Andrew's Church has recently received three very beautiful memorials, in memory of three of the church's most highly esteemed members, two of whom have but recently died. A memorial to the late John Withers Green, given by his widow, a stained glass window representing "Jesus preaching by the sea." The memorial to the late Judge Robert Burns Mayes, given by his widow, an exquisite chancel rail, with handsome brass gates; while a friend gave in memory of Miss Mary Barr Craft a very handsome brass hymn board. These memorials were blessed by the rector at the hour of morning service, Sunday, July 24.

In spite of the usual exodus from the South during the vacation season, the congregations throughout the summer have continued above the average for the year. The installation this summer of electric fans throughout the church is felt to be in large measure responsible for this increased attendance.

The St. Andrew's Brotherhood Chapter has been revived, and one feature of its work has been its co-operation with the rector in building up the rector's Bible class for men. The enrollment of business and professional men in this class is forty. Not having adequate room at the church for his class, the rector meets the men in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A., which is located just across the street from the church.

CENTRAL NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. C. T. Olmstead, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop Coadjutor, has been invested with Ecclesiastical authority by Bishop Olmstead, who has innued a letter to the Diocese, in which he says: "I have found it necessary and desirable to avail myself of the provisions of Canon 17, Section 5, and have requested the Bishop Coadjutor to act as the Ecclesiastical authority of the Diocese. Bishop Fiske has consulted the Standing Committee and both agree that this is the most feasible way to give me relief. The Bishop Coadjutor will therefore take over the administration of all Diocese business, and you will consult him accordingly. I shall be glad to aid him in any way I can, and I bespeak for him your cordial and brotherly assistance and co-operation."

PITTSBURGH

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

The churches of this Diocese will face an unusually difficult situation during the fall and winter on account of distressing industrial conditions which already exist by reason of the lack of employment of so many laborers throughout this section. According to a statement of a parish paper in this city, we do not need to look across the water to find harrowing scenes. The paper says:

"A sure indication of hard times is to be found in the fact that men and women apply to the pastor for work. This only happens in periods of depression. He has tried earnestly to find positions, but never has been so unsuccessful. Every one replies, 'We have no work,' or 'We are discharging people, not hiring them.' In one part of the city a young man told us that he saw daily groups of men, now out of work, devouring pieces of bread—it was all they had for a day. Not only in China and Armenia are people hungry—they are hungry in Pittsburgh."

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Gift of Confirmation Class.

A lantern has been placed over the main entrance of Trinity Church, Williamsport. It is gothic in design, all the metal work being of wrought iron and copper, the whole painted a deep black. It is three feet six inches over all, and eighteen inches in diameter. It is octagon in shape. From the circumference at the top are eight points curving outwardly, giving the effect of a crown; above these are eight more

(Continued on page 23)

Family Department

AUGUST.

1. Monday.
6. Saturday. Transfiguration.
7. Eleventh Sunday after Trinity.
14. Twelfth Sunday after Trinity.
21. Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.
24. Wednesday. St. Bartholomew.
28. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
31. Wednesday.

For perfect child-like confidence in Thee;
For child-like glimpses of the life to be;
For trust akin to child's trust in me;
For hearts at rest through confidence in Thee;
For hearts triumphant in perpetual hope;
For hope victorious through past hopes fulfilled;
For mightier hopes born of the things we know;
For faith born of the things we may not know;
For hope of powers increased ten thousand fold;
For that last hope of likenesss to Thyself,
When hope shall end in glorious certainty;
—With quickened hearts
That find Thee everywhere,
We thank Thee. Lord!
—John Oxenham.

Where Faith Is Impossible.

The Bible has a great deal to say about faith. It classifies men as believers and unbelievers. Old Testament heroes were not heroes because they had great will power, but because they had great faith. In all their victories from the time that Abel offered to God a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain, clear down through the Old Testament times, faith was the instrument of power for good. In the New Testament faith transforms impotence into omnipotence, and gives the victory that overcomes the world.

Our Lord says some remarkable things about faith. For example, he says that if man have faith, even as a mustard seed, he can remove mountains; He says everything is possible for one who believes. The inspired evangelist says that faith fixes limits of divine power, that there were places where Jesus could do no mighty works because of the unbelief of the people.

One of the most remarkable sayings of Jesus is in form of a question, when he says to Jewish rulers, "How can ye believe who receive glory one of another and the glory that cometh from the only God ye seek not?" What does this mean? What is it that renders faith impossible? In order to answer this question we must study the circumstances in which the words were spoken.

Our Lord said this when He was engaged in a controversy with Jewish rulers in Jerusalem. He had healed a blind man on the Sabbath, and, when the Jews accused Him of breaking the Sabbath, He said in His own defense, "My Father worketh even until now, and I work." This added to the rage of the Jews, and they sought the more to destroy Him because He not only broke the Sabbath, but because He called God His own Father, making Himself equal with God. Jesus then explained His relationship with the Father, and claimed that they should believe on Him as the Son and the Representative of the Father. He called attention to the evidence that should convince them, to the fact that He did the works of the Father. When this made no impression on them except to increase their enmity, He said, "I am come in My Father's name and ye receive Me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." Then He adds, "How can ye believe, who received glory one from another, and the glory that cometh from the only God ye seek not."

Taken in this connection, this was equivalent to saying, You profess to be religious and to be zealous for the law of the Sabbath, but you do this for your own glory and not for the glory of God. He saw clearly that they did not believe in the Father any more than they believed on Him. They made a show of being religious, but it was a hypocritical profession, and they cared more for the approval of each other than they did for God's approval. Their religion was only a form and a sham. God was not a reality to them, and in their hearts they cared more to have the applause of men, and be popular with men, than they did to have the approval of God. God was not more than a dim, far off shadow, not an omnipresent, personal Father whose favor had any practical value. While professing to be very religious, they were at heart atheists and did not believe in the only living and true God. They could not believe on Jesus Christ, whom God had sent, because they did not believe in God. They did not look beyond the temporal and sensual and could not recognize the eternal and the spiritual. The sensual and the present shut out the spiritual and eternal so that they could not believe.

Is not this the real obstacle in the way of Christian faith in these days? Do professing Christians and even leaders in the Christian Church care as much for God's approval as they do to be popular with their fellowmen? Do they, in their hearts, care as much for the glory that God gives as for the glory that men give? This is a question that no one can answer for another. We cannot read each other's hearts and should not judge one another; but it would be a good thing for every one to look into his own heart and see whether he is seeking the approval of God as much as he is seeking the approval of men. We should seek the approval of our fellows, but never at the sacrifice of our own intelligence and conscience, and we are persuaded that nothing is more fatal to Christian faith than love of the praise of men. It blinds the eyes and palsies the hands of Christian faith, making us time-servers and man-pleasers instead of true and faithful servants of Jesus Christ. "How can ye believe who receive glory one of another and the glory that comes from the only God ye seek not?"

The same philosophy is found in form in John 12:37-41 when the evangelist says, "But though he had done so many signs before them, yet they believed not on him that the word of Isaiah the prophet might be fulfilled which he spake—

"Lord, who hath believed our report,
And to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed."

For this cause they could not believe, for that Isaiah said again—

He hath blinded their eyes and hardened their heart,
Lest they should see with their eyes and perceive with their heart,
And should turn
And I should heal them.

For they loved the glory that is of men, more than the glory that is of God.—Presbyterian Banner.

Sunsets.

Eva Carrington Talcott.

Set round with glory of bright sunset cloud
The gates of heaven are seen;
For one short moment mortals are allowed
To pierce the veil between.

The shades of coming night are falling fast,
And men must from them shrink.
So feel they when, their days on earth all past,
They stand upon death's brink.

But God in mercy writes on evening skies
That heaven is very near;
He bids us to the sunset turn our eyes,
To trust and not to fear.

Trust the Pilot.

When the telegram came saying her mother was dangerously ill, Kathleen was in a small Southern town. The only train had gone. She would have to wait until the next morning. To go in an automobile was out of the question; rain had fallen for a week, and the country roads were impassable.

While she stood hesitating in the station a stranger spoke to her. "Madam," he said, "there's an aeroplane in town. That would get you home in a few hours. I know the pilot would take you."

"Oh, I wonder if I could!" cried Kathleen.

Taking her courage in both hands, she sought the aviator. He agreed to take her home in less than two hours. At the last moment she held back, looking at the frail craft that was to carry her through the clouds. "It seems so dangerous," she said; "I'm terribly afraid."

"You need not be," said the pilot. He seemed a mere boy, but his young face showed firmness and resolution. "I've been in the army in actual warfare," he continued; "I've taught many men to fly; since the war I have carried a thousand passengers safely. So far as human skill can go, you are safe."

Kathleen took her place in the aeroplane. The engine throbbed faster and faster; the plane was rushing across the field; then suddenly the trees began to drop below her, and they were off. At first so great was her anxiety and her fear that she could not look at the earth outspread beneath her. When the plane would drop a little or the wings sway she found herself clutching at the sides frantically. Presently she relaxed and even found courage to smile. "How foolish!" she said to herself. "Nothing I can do can possibly make any difference. I must trust the pilot."

Trust the pilot! It dawned on her that this was just the word she needed. She was like a child cast adrift in a world no longer stable and secure, but shifting and changing like the aeroplane that rushed her along through space. And she had done nothing except let fear and anxiety torment her—fear and anxiety over her future, over her profession, over her relation to others, and now over this last threatening blow that had called her home.

Trust the Pilot. He had carried to a safe landing an uncounted multitude that had faith in Him. The Pilot's hand was the only firm thing in the changing world. It was time to give up her tormenting fears, and to rest in the faith that is an assurance of things hoped for. She would trust the Pilot.

She leaned back in the seat now and looked down over the side at the rivers and woods beneath her, at the towns like neat toy villages, the roads like winding brown tape, the fields like squares in a checker-board. A drifting gray cloud shut out the sun and enveloped her in its ominous chill. The world was blotted out. Then the aeroplane came out into the sunlight above the cloud that lay below them, a floor of opal and pearl. She gazed down at it, fascinated. All her fear was gone. "Trust the Pilot," she whispered; "He knows the way through the clouds."

Before she thought her journey could be half done the aeroplane was settling down in a field at the edge of her home town. Her father, who had received a telephone message, was waiting with an automobile to take her home. "Mother is a little better. The doctor has hopes," were his first words.

But before Kathleen left she stopped to hold out her hand to the pilot. "Thank you for a wonderful trip," she said. "And I wanted to tell you I had time to think, and I've learned to trust the Pilot."

He saw the double significance of her words, and a smile lighted his boyish face. "I learned that long ago," he said.—Ex.

The Deeper Levels.

One of the very finest quotations that we ever ran across is the following, which came to our notice in a recent number of the Missionary News:

"Don't worry too much about the change of fashions in any field. Keep to the deeper levels where they don't prevail. Get your heart at leisure from the trifles, in order to put it on the things that count."

We should like to pass this on to all our readers, and ask them to memorize it and pass it on to others. We should like to burn it into the souls of our young people. These are pregnant sentences.

Fashions come and go. It is the fashion now to rage about the fashions. This fashion and its subject will both pass.

But there are levels where fashions do not prevail. Seek them, find them, cultivate them. Be not carried away with surface things. In railing on the fashions we often forget the soul that lies within the body covered according to the dicta of custom. The uncovering of the soul is more important than the covering of the body. There are no fads of fashion in the soul. It lies naked and open.

Life is a matter either of trifles or of big things. We may choose the lesser or the greater. There is a tendency with all to let the life become overburdened with trifles. No life can be free from them. There are always the annoying details. But we can be masters of our lives and not servants. There can be heart leisure from trifles. Even while engaged in vexing details we may rise superior to them and set our minds on the worth while things.

A noble-minded woman said, "No one can insult me." It is possible to have a soul too magnanimous for small things. One may have a heart at rest even in the midst of cares. One may be so full of love as that no one's unfriendliness shall spoil that love.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Christian Advocate.

Instinct and Intuition.

Instinct and intuition are worlds apart. Instinct is that momentary urge from the submerged and unconscious mind (that hidden sea of race experience, race habits, race memory), that escapes and emerges into the field of conscious attention, because of some careless inattention, some let-down of rational control, some flabby trance, or wearied dream.

Intuition comes when in a state of intensified awareness, all the faculties alert, but alert only to the higher harmonies of spiritual truth and beauty.

Instinct helps one to get something, to escape physical danger; intuition guides one into nobler conduct, more unselfish good-will, dearer affection, creation of the beautiful in art, thought and conduct. Instinct urges the maiden to be attractive, to be canny, but it is intuition that assures her of her lover's affection and worth.

The more one thinks the less he relies on either instinct or intuition. When one acts instinctively he ceases to think at all, and acts hastily; but when one acts intuitively he has thought deeply, meditated quietly, desired earnestly, and then shutting out all distracting thoughts and arguments, he acts quietly, purposely and persistently, full of expectant faith, in an effort to realize in expression and experience the goodness, truth and beauty that have been revealed to him.

Instinct relies on the proven results of experience in a physical world.

Intuition gives one access to the infinitude of the spiritual realm. They are worlds apart.—Good News.

Christ the Way.

If men were perfect, they could find their way through life perfectly. The fishes find their way through the sea and return to the rivers. The birds find their way over land and sea to their summer homes without a guide. The young bird that has never yet made the journey may have no conception of Southern lands; but the impulse of migration comes upon him, and he soars out into the unknown with confidence, for his instinct is a sufficient guide. But man trembles on the brink of the unknown. There may be pleasant fields and sunny skies beyond, and he may be confident that in God's presence there is fulness of joy; but how can he know the way? He is less fortunate than the bird. He is not without a Godward impulse, indeed, but it can only urge him onward; it cannot guide him. Is it because the race is still young and the highest instincts have not yet developed? Has man's perversity marred in himself the work that God has finished in every other creature? Certain it is that the soul does not often pass out with confidence on its great migration without a guide.

Even in this life we need a guide. Indeed, we know nothing of problems that have their beginnings on the other side. This is the life of beginnings. Here begins life's way, and he that has trodden it safely to the end may boldly take the last step in the dark.

Christ is the way by which we come to the Father, because He is the way by which we pass safely through this life.

Taking Up a Cross Without Following Christ.

"If any man will come after me, let him take up his cross and," in a word, "let him follow me." This seems to me to be complimentary to the other things. You may take up your cross without following Christ; you may take up a cross that you ought not to take up. There has been a great deal of needless martyrdom and suffering in the world. Suffer at the bidding of Christ; suffer after His finger has pointed to the suffering. "Let him follow me." Let him abandon himself to me utterly; let him carry his cross under my direction, and then he will not carry it in vain; he will never carry it in vain." My friends, following Christ means more than trying to imitate Him. That may be a weary business. It means more than trying to be like Him. It means going with Him and receiving of His fulness every day, and being in communication with Him constantly. And if that be the case, my brethren, if I am with Him and He is with me, if all my cross-bearing and self-denial are in the line with His will, and I know that His love encompasses my life, then all pain will go out of my life; it will be swallowed up in the bliss of fellowship with my redeeming Lord. And so the call comes to us today. I called it a rough and steep pathway. It was, from one point of view. But when a man is earnest and finds his Lord, it is the only truly blissful pathway that human feet can tread. It is eternally true that as you forget self, and lose it in a great and holy cause, and in an over-mastering passion, your life becomes richer, fuller, deeper, more glorious. It is eternally true; that he that loveth his life loseth it, and he that loseth his life for my sake, saveth it even unto life eternal."

I see the Power; I see the Love, once weak,
Resume the Power; and in this word "I see,"
Lo, there is recognized the Spirit of both,
That, moving o'er the spirit of man, unblinds
His eye, and bids him back.
—Browning.

I can think of nothing better for a crown of life than to have been, not intermittently, but continually, an encourager, by dint of one's own courage, unselfishness, goodwill in word and action, and the shining face of cheer which is at once the reward and the unconscious instrument of the encourager. It is the opportunity at all men's doors. And if we have to overcome our own disheartenment to choose and use this opportunity, by so much more will the joy and the reward be great in that great day which is to come. It is, indeed, the godly—that is, the God-like—quality. For God in real acquaintance with His children is always the encourager and never the discourager of men.—Selected.

Summer Vacation and Recreation: "Tomorrow to fresh woods and pastures new." A league up the road somewhere, then a bypath and a little lodge by a rushing mountain stream, or perhaps where the sea tumbles in—cool and sweet and salt. Let the act of going—leaving your place unoccupied—be the vacation part of it. The precious days of freedom are for recreation: new tasks, new thoughts, a regeneration of mind and body. It is not a matter of doing nothing, but rather of doing something different or differently or in a different place.—Youth's Companion.

For the Young Folks

The World's Bible.

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do His work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in His way;
He has no tongues but our tongues
To tell men how He died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to His side.

We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the sinner's gospel;
We are the scoffer's creed;
We are the Lord's last message,
Given in deed and word:
What if the type is crooked?
What if the print is blurred?

What if our hands are busy
With other work than His?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurement is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things His lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help Him
And hasten His return?

—Annie Johnson Flint, in Watchman-Examiner.

Her Best.

Anna and Bob walked home from Sunday school with serious faces. A missionary from China had told them how God blesses the pennies, and how useful even Christmas cards are to the missionaries in their work. They talked the matter over earnestly, and going to their pretty rooms, took out the cards they had been saving.

"I'm going to send the best cards that I have to those poor heathen children," said Anna.

"Pooh!" said Bob. "They don't know the difference. I am not going to send my best ones."

"But I am sorry for them," said Anna. "I feel as if Jesus would be pleased to have me give my best ones. I love these beautiful kitties and cute little dogs best of all, and I am just going to send them."

"Why, Anna Turner; you said that you were going to keep those just as long as you lived!"

"I know that I did, but I'm so sorry for the poor heathen children," and here something glistened in Anna's eyes.

"Well, you may be a goose, but I shall not," said Bob.

So they made up their packages and gave them to the missionary.

Five months rolled by. The little girl and boy had almost forgotten their cards when one day a missionary, opening her boxes in Peking, came across them again, and thought, "I must use them."

So she asked her teacher to write some verses in Chinese on the cards. The old Chinaman put on his big goggles, inked his brush and prepared to write. Anna's pretty kittens attracted his attention, and he wrote on the back: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Then, selecting the little dogs, he wrote, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

That very day old Mrs. Chang and her grandson called at the mission.

The missionary served tea and cakes and won the heart of the old lady, and then told her of Jesus and His love for the poor Chinese women. She showed the cards to the little boys, and when she told them to take their choice, Ting Ling quickly chose the kittens, and Cheng Fu the dogs. All went away pleased, and out into the heathen home went Anna's cards on their mission.

"See, grandpa! Look, see my kittens!" "And my dogs!" said the boys.

Grandpa was old and feeble, but Chinese are fond of pets, and the old man lay a long time looking at the wonderful cards. The boys, seeing his interest, stole away to eat their rice. After awhile grandpa discovered the verses. He read them over and over, and finally laid them down with a sigh.

He was an honest old Chinaman, and had tried to do right; but he had lost faith in his idols, and now, so near death, with no hope, his old heart was very troubled. He had heard of Jesus, but thought that He was the foreigners' God, and did not know that He died for Chinamen and loved them.

Through the long hours of the night, when he coughed so that he could not sleep, the verses kept coming to his heart, especially the words, "God so loved the world"—"the world"—whosoever."

The next day he was so weak that he could hardly speak. They thought that he said "kitty," and they brought him the old yellow cat; then they thought he said "dog," and they brought him the "Peking Pug," the pet of the household; but the old man shut his eyes and turned his head away.

All at once the boys thought of their pretty cards, and when they were brought the old man smiled and motioned to his son to read.

The son read slowly the precious words: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Again," whispered the old man.

Gradually the look of eager interest changed to a peaceful smile. The old Chinaman folded his hands and fell asleep, never to wake in this world.

His heathen son looked on in surprise and wondered that his father died so peacefully—not afraid!

I think that the old man caught a glimpse of the love of God, and so was not afraid, and I am glad that Anna gave her best cards.—S. S. Advocate.

A Little Errand for Whom?

Helen stood on the doorstep with a very tiny basket in her hand, when her father drove up to her and said: "I am glad you are ready to go out, dear. I came to take you to the park to see the new deer."

"Oh, thank you, papa; but I can't go just this time. I have a very particular errand to do now."

"What is it?" asked her father.

"Oh, it is to carry this somewhere," and she held up the small basket.

Her father smiled and asked: "Who is this errand for?"

"For my own self, papa, but—oh, no. I guess not—it's a little errand for God, papa."

"Well, I will not hinder you," said the good father, tenderly. "Can I help you any?"

"No, sir. I was going to carry my orange, that I saved from my dessert, to old Peter."

"Is old Peter sick?"

"No, I hope not, but he never has anything nice, and he's good and thankful. Big folks give him only meat and broken bread, and I thought an orange would look so beautiful and make him so happy! Don't you think that poor well folks ought to be comforted sometimes as well as poor sick folks, papa?"

"Yes; and I think we too often forget them until sickness or starvation comes. You are right; this is a little errand for God. Get into the buggy and I will drive you to Peter's and wait till you have done the errand, and then show you the deer. Have you a pin, Helen?"

"Yes, papa, here is one."

"Well, here is a five-dollar bill for you to fix on the skin of the orange. This will pay old Peter's rent for four weeks, and perhaps this will be a little errand for God, too," said the gentleman.

Little Helen, who had taught a wise man a wise lesson, looked very pleased as her fingers fixed the bill on the orange.

Three Rabbits.

Three little rabbits sat up in a row,
Three little long-eared rabbits, you know;
Such funny, wee rabbits you never did see,
And they said with their pink eyes turned toward me:
We like to have fun, we do, yes, we do;
We jump and we skip and we run fast, too,
But you, oh, you naughty, you cruel man,
You just try to shoot us whenever you can.
We never have done you the least bit of harm.
We bite off the woods on your big, broad farm;
We never have hurt you in any way,
So then do not shoot us, we pray, we pray.

The Meeting in the Woods.

Michael and Ralph were awake before the dawn. It was their last day at Willow Brook Lodge, the big vacation farm where they had spent the happiest nine days they had ever known.

As soon as breakfast was over they slipped away from the other two hundred and thirty children and ran to the woods. There were so many things they wanted to do that last day!

"Let's go over to the pasture and see the cows for the last time," said Michael.

"And let's swing for a whole hour in the grape-vine swing," said his brother.

"When I am a man," Michael went on, "and have lots of money, I shall come back here and build a house in these woods as big as the apple man's house."

Ralph nodded. "I wish we could bid the apple man good-by," he said, "and thank him for the big apples he brought us."

"That's so," Michael agreed. "I think you and I ate nearly a bushel of those apples ourselves."

The two little brothers walked slowly into the woods; their hearts were heavy. If only the ten days were not so nearly over! Did ever days roll round so fast before?

"Good-by!" Ralph called to a brown rabbit that went bounding along. "We have to go away tomorrow, rabbit. This is our last day here."

"Good-by! Good-by!" the boys kept saying to the wood creatures on every side.

"Good-by, green frogs!" they called as they crossed the brook. "We know you are hidden down in the mud, and when we hear you croak to-night it will be for the last time! Good-by, birds and squirrels! Good-by, good-by!"

They went over to the pasture fence at the edge of the woods and patted the nose of the red cow and the nose of the spotted cow. "Good-by, cows!" they said. "We shall never forget your good milk."

They turned back into the woods and started toward the big apple farm that lay beyond.

"Good-by, little calf!" Ralph called to a swift-footed, long-legged creature that came running from behind a clump of bushes. But his voice sounded a little uncertain.

"Calf?" echoed Michael with a laugh. "Good-by, goat! Don't you see its tiny hoofs and its short tail, Ralph?"

"Good-by, goat!" said Ralph. "I wish we had met you before our last day here. I think you are the prettiest thing I have seen in these woods."

Michael was silent. He wondered what a goat could be doing in these woods.

The boys expected every moment to see the little animal go bounding away on its long, slim legs and tiny hoofs. But instead, it followed them through the woods. "I don't think it likes to say good-by any better than we do," Ralph remarked.

The apple man was walking down the lane when he saw the two boys and the long-legged creature come up to the big gate. He stopped short.

"Hi, Selina!" he called. "Here's your Fairy Feet!"

A little girl came running out of the house; she was at the gate in a flash. The boys noticed that she had been crying.

"Oh, where did you find my Fairy Feet?" she asked. The little animal trotted up to her, and she threw her arms round its neck. "Uncle Mack, please give the boys something for finding Fairy Feet and bringing her home."

Michael shook his head. "It followed us out of the woods," he explained, "but we didn't come here just to bring it. We came to say good-by, because we have to go away tomorrow. I wondered what a goat was doing out in the woods all by itself."

"Goat!" gasped Selina. "It's my pet fawn. She's been lost a day and a night, and I've hunted for her everywhere. Oh, I'm so glad to get her back!"

"I shall be sorry to say good-by to you, boys," said the apple man.

"We are sorry, too," said Ralph. "But," he added wistfully, "there's nothing else to do."

Michael explained again. "The Bible class at the big church gave ten dollars to send us to Willow Brook Lodge for ten days; that's how we came. But now they've come to an end, you see, both the money and the time."

The apple man drummed on the gate-post and looked thoughtful while the boys stood and stared at the fawn, and the fawn stared back at them.

The little girl's eyes were fixed on her uncle. "I wish they didn't have to go back," she said.

The apple man stopped drumming and straightened his shoulders. "I need two more apple pickers," he began.

Michael and Ralph interrupted him. "Oh, let us be the two!" they cried. "Oh, let us, please!"

And Selina echoed, "Let them, please!"

"All right," said the man. "I shall need you for two weeks. Can you stay so long as that?"

Could they stay so long as that! Michael and Ralph tossed their caps into the air and cheered. Selina laughed aloud; and the little fawn, not to be outdone, kicked up its heels and danced a gay little dance then and there.—E. D. Masters.

The Ballad of the Three Bobs.

Little Bob Rabbit went bobbing along,
Bumpety-bump, wumpety-wump.
He was feeling so happy, so brisk and so strong
That could he have sung he'd have caroled a song,
This gay bob-tailed bunny so plump!

Little Bob White was close by, in the wheat,
Whistling away, whistling so gay.
The weather was fine, there was plenty to eat.
He had just had his fill, and it made his voice sweet,
So he felt he must whistle all day!

Little Bob Boy came humming that way,
Skippety-hop, just couldn't stop.
The day was just right to be happy and play—.
Such a bright happy, light happy, right happy day,
With the jolly big sun at the top!

Little Bob Rabbit stopped hopping to call,
"How-do-you-do? Glad-to-see-you!"
Little Bob White, from his perch on the wall,
Replied, "What a very fine day for us all—
And three is much better than two!"

"Whish!" 'Twas Bob Rabbit, so brisk and so trim,
Went in a wink, went in a twink!
The errand his mother had trusted to him
Must be done right away, and he did it with vim,
Not stopping one moment to prink.

"Whir-r-r-r-r-!" And Bob White was off over the wheat—
Such a gay flight, airy and bright!—
To tell his dear mother, so kind and so sweet,
His father, and brothers, and sisters so neat,
That Bob Boy was really all right.

And little Bob Boy called, "Good-by, then, good-by,
Namesakes so funny, brown bird and bunny!
You seem in a hurry—I cannot guess why,
I'm sure that next time you will not be so shy,
And we'll play in this field, wide and sunny!"

—M. L. Upton.

As Cross As a Bear.

"You're as cross as a bear," said Bess to Billy.

Uncle Jim whistled. "Bears aren't cross to members of their family," he said. "Now, I knew a bear once—"

Bess and Billy both ran to him and climbed on his lap.

"Did you really ever know a bear?" cried Billy, with wide open eyes.

"Well, not intimately," said Uncle Jim, "but I used to go hunting them when I was in Canada, and one day I was out with a hunting party, and we saw right straight in front of us—what do you suppose?"

"A real bear!" gasped the children in concert.

"Yes, a real mother bear and her little son. The dogs started after them, and the mother bear began to run, but the little baby son couldn't run as fast as she did, so what do you suppose the mother bear did? Leave her little son behind? No, sir-ee-ee. She picked the baby up on her tout nose and tossed him ahead; then she ran fast and caught him up and gave him another boost that sent him flying through the air. She kept this up for a mile and a half. Then she was too tired to go any farther, and the dogs surrounded her. Then she sat up on her haunches, took her baby in her hind paws and fought the dogs off with her fore paws. And how she did roar!"

Bess shuddered.

"You could hear her miles away. She never forgot her baby; kept guarding him all the time. When the mother was shot the baby cub jumped on her dead body and tried to fight the dogs with his little baby paws. That's the way the bears stand by each other. Sometimes I think they love each other better than brothers and sisters. Hey, Bess, what are you crying about? I guess I won't tell you any more bear stories if that is the way you feel."

"Billy," sobbed Bess, "you're as good—as good as a bear."

Then they all laughed together and forgot what they had been cross about. —New York Tribune.

Bert's Salt Water Cure.

Bert was sitting on the floor, looking over his pictures, and baby toddled up and tore one of the prettiest. Bert called out, "Oh, mother, see what baby has done!" and began to cry.

"Bert," said mother, as she took baby away; "did you know that tears are salt water?"

"No," he said; "are they? How did you find out, mother?"

"Oh, somebody told me so when I was a little girl, and I tasted a tear, and found it was true."

"Real salt water?" said Bert.

"Yes; try and see."

Bert would very gladly have tried if he could have found a tear. But by that time there was not one left. He looked at the torn picture, but it did not make him feel badly any more.

All he could think of was whether tears tasted like salt water.

"Next time I cry I will find out," he said.

That very afternoon, while climbing over the top of the rocking chair, he fell and got a great bump. It seemed too much for Bert, and he was just beginning to cry loudly when he happened to think what a good chance this was going to be to catch some tears. He put up his finger, too quickly, in fact, for there had not a tear come yet, and now that his thoughts had wandered from the bump, he could not cry about it any more. So, you see, that chance was lost.

"I can't get a single tear to taste, mother!" he said. Which was, perhaps, just what mother had expected.—Ex.

Wouldn't Give Up.

A large piece of cloth had been thrown on the grass to dry and had been forgotten. One morning Jimmy came running in, calling, "Oh, mother, just come out here and see how the grass wanted to grow!"

Sure enough the grass must have wanted to grow very much, for all over the cloth little green blades had made their way through and were nodding above it, as if to say, "We don't give up when things are hard."—The Myrtle.

Try, Try Again.

"Here's a chance to earn some money, Karl."

"Where, father? What is it? I'll do anything."

"Listen! 'A reward of two dollars is offered for the return of a parrot that escaped from its cage this morning at 98 South Broad Street.' Didn't I hear you say that somebody saw a parrot about here today?"

"Yes, sir; tell mother I'll be back soon," and Karl went off on a run down the street to Leon's home. "Where was that parrot you saw this morning?" he asked excitedly, when he met Leon.

"Over on Cottage Street, right at the corner, in a big apple tree. Some boys were throwing apples at it."

"Pshaw! that was too bad. Do you know that there's a reward of two dollars offered to the fellow who takes it home?"

"Do you mean it, Karl?" Come on, that's worth trying for." The boys were soon on the Cottage Street corner, and a little girl was just going in the gate. "Did you see a parrot up in your tree this morning?" asked Karl.

"Yes, there were some boys teasing it, and mother sent them away.

"Where did it go?"

"Down in the Collins' lot. It spoiled a lot of our seckel pears."

"That's too bad," said Leon; "we will make sure that it doesn't trouble you again." They ran down to the orchard and after a long search the bird was found on a high branch in an apple tree.

"How can we get at it?" asked Leon.

"Have to climb, of course."

"Well, what then?"

"Can't tell till I get there." Karl climbed the tree, talking pleasantly to the bird, "Pretty Poll, nice Polly." There was no response from Polly till he reached out toward her when she said, "Good-by," and swinging down to a lower limb, she took a short flight to the nearest tree. This was repeated several times, Leon taking his turn in climbing and succeeding once in reaching Polly, who gave him a sharp nip with her beak and flew off with a taunting, "He, he he!"

It was growing dark. "We must wait till morning," Karl said. "It's too bad."

"We never can catch it; it bites like everything," said Leon.

"I'm not going to give it up, yet."

"All right, let me know when you get it," and the boys went to their homes.

Next morning at 6 o'clock Karl went to the orchard and soon found Polly, who was more socially inclined, croaking an answer to his attempts at conversation.

"How are you, Polly?"

"Pretty well, thanks. Polly's hungry."

Karl had brought crackers and loaf sugar in his pockets; he was able to get near enough to offer a cracker, which she took graciously, but ate with her sharp eyes on the boy. Then a piece of sugar was held out. This, too, was accepted, but dropped, and a hasty flight made. Karl became angry, as this was several times repeated.

"I will get you," he exclaimed through his shut teeth, and his perseverance was rewarded, for at last Polly not only took the sugar, but began eating it, and Karl threw a bag over the bird and it was captured.

"Murder! Thieves!" Polly screamed, and before he reached the ground she took a piece of flesh out of the boy's hand with her cruel beak.

It was not a long run down Broad Street. Karl rang the bell at 98 and a lady came to the door.

"Good morning," she said, "have you brought my Polly?"

"Hello, mother! Let me out," called the bird in ruffled tones. Glad, indeed, was she to see her truant pet, who emerged with badly ruffled plumage.

Karl would not wait for her to dress her hand, though it was bleeding profusely, but ran home with a crisp two-dollar bill, Polly, screaming, "Come again; he, ha!"

He stopped a minute at Leon's home. "I wish I hadn't given up so soon," said his comrade.—Morning Star.

How Little Indian Girls Play.

Lucy Hawk is a little Indian girl who lives on a reservation in Dakota. Her grandfather is the loved and honored chief of his tribe, and Lucy is his favorite grandchild. She is a great little girl with willing hands and feet ready to do the bidding of the teachers at the mission school, where she lives for over eight months of the year. She speaks English with a pretty accent.

On cold or stormy days, after the school hours are over and household tasks are done, Lucy turns with a happy heart to the play-room, where she amuses herself by making moccasins for her funny babies, or making dresses for them from the bits of bright calico which perhaps some child in the far-away East put in the missionary barrel. When tired of the babies, she gets her pebble tops, of which she has a number hidden away in the pocket of her dress, tucked away in the corner of the pigeon-hole in the row of boxes in the play-room, or buried safely under the steps. It is only a common pebble, with smooth sides, and a little child would never call it a top; but Lucy drops it with a little whirl of the fingers, which sends it spinning away with a dizzy rush, and she follows it up with her whip, lashing it until she is tired and out of breath, the pebble whirling faster and faster the longer the lashing continues. Sometimes she pastes bits of bright paper to its sides, and then the spinning pebble seems to be covered with rings of color. It is a pretty play, and never loses its fascination for the little brown children.

When at her own home Lucy goes coasting sometimes, and what do you think she has for a sled? You would never guess, so I will tell you. A buffalo skin is spread on the snow at the top of the terrace which divides the prairie from the river bottom. Lucy and her sister find a nice warm seat on the soft fur, the child in front gathers the end over her feet and holds on tight and fast a sthose behind give a starting push, and away they go down the steep slopes and come to a quick stop at the foot, a screaming, laughing, squirming heap of tousled heads and twisted shawls.—The Outlook.

Thou knowest our bitterness—our joys are Thine;
No stranger Thou to all our wanderings wild:
Nor could we bear to think how every line
Of us, Thy darkened likeness and defiled.

Stands in full sunshine of Thy piercing eye—
But that Thou call'st us brethren: sweet repose
Is in that word! the Lord Who dwells on high
Knows all, yet loves us better than He knows.

—John Keble.

The South's Best Book Store
HUNTER & CO
105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen
Prompt and Reliable Service

666 CURES MALARIA, CHILLS AND FEVER, BILIOUS FEVER, COLDS AND LA GRIPPE, OR MONEY REFUNDED.

The next time you buy calomel ask for
Calotabs
The purified and refined calomel tablets that are nauseless, safe and sure.
Medicinal virtues retained and improved. Sold only in sealed packages. Price 35c.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed
DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse
W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.
Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage
Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 845

SAFES

L. N. COOKE SAFE & LOCK CO.

807 East Franklin St.
Richmond, Va.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health and, above all,

Provide yourself with Traveler Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

JOHN L. RATCLIFFE

Florist

209 W. Broad St. - - - Richmond, Va.

Flowers of Quality

R. L. Christian & Co.

514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.

Leading Fancy Grocers

AGENTS FOR
PAGET AND SHAW AND MIRROR CANDIES.

Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

Nick Bull's Market

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME.

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

XANTHINE!

Restores Gray Hair to Its Natural Color
REMOVES DANDRUFF AND SCURF
Invigorates and prevents the hair from falling out
MARVELOUS IN ITS EFFECTS
For Sale by Druggists, or Sent Direct by Mail
XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.
Price $1.25 per bottle, trial size 50c. Send for circular

Why Mother Was Proud.

By Emma C. Dowd.

Jerry and John were gazing through the shop window at the gorgeous display of fireworks; their eyes were eager and their tongues busy.

"Don't I wish I could have that big one—rocket. I guess 'tis!" and John's wisp of a finger pointed to the huge plaything that had such brilliance locked up inside of it.

"And I'd like that blue thing over there," said Jerry. "Looks as if 'twould make lots of noise."

The shop door opened, and two boys came out, boys somewhat older than the two at the window.

"My, I wonder if he's got that full of fire-crackers!" said John, eyeing the box under the taller boy's arm.

"Let's follow 'em, and see where they go," suggested Jerry; so the little ones plodded on behind.

The "following" led them a long march up a business street, but there were no stops.

"Say," whispered Jerry excitedly, "the cover's comin' off that box!—I see something red! They didn't half tie it!—oh, my!" for as the owner of the box of crackers gave it a hitch higher the cover slipped and a number of bunches fell to the sidewalk.

The boys picked them up and went on; but one bunch, being hidden by the sweeping skirt of a lady that was passing at the moment, escaped their notice. The next instant it was safe in Jerry's pocket.

"P'rhaps I ought to give it back."

"He'll never miss it; he's got piles of 'em, Jerry."

"Seems 's if it fell out purpose for us; doesn't it?"

"'Cause we couldn't have any," agreed John.

"Guess Mary'll open her eyes when she sees 'em."

"P'rhaps you hadn't better show it to her; she'll ask you where you got it." This from John.

"I needn't tell," Jerry answered.

"But, if mother found out—"

"That's so," Jerry began. The thought of mother stopped speech for a minute. "Say," he went on, "maybe I'd better give 'em back—they're 'way on ahead—I can see 'em."

Jerry's pronouns were rather mixed, but John understood, and his little breast rose in a deep sigh; those crackers meant so much to his fun-loving heart. But he was brave.

"I guess—we had," he said. "Come on!"

The little feet were fleet, and those ahead did not hasten. Jerry and John came up breathless. Jerry held out the crackers.

"You dropped 'em," he said.

"Oh, didn't I pick them all up?" was the careless answer. "Thank you."

John and Jerry walked soberly home. A forlorn hope had been uppermost in each heart. The big boy had so many, they had wondered if he wouldn't—but, no, he hadn't! Yet, with their disappointment, their hearts were light; they were not sorry they had given them up—oh, no!

That afternoon one of the Alley boys was arrested for stealing. Jerry and John saw him go past their window with the policeman.

"There is one thing, in all my poverty," said mother to a neighbor, "that makes me glad and thankful—my boys and girl are as honest as the day. I am always proud of them."

John and Jerry looked at each other with flushed faces. What if a certain bunch of fire-crackers had stayed in Jerry's pocket! But the pocket was joyfully empty, except for a stubby pencil and an old nail—and two pairs of clear eyes met mother's loving glance with smiles."—S. S. Times.

HOT WATER HEAT

For Small Homes, Churches, Stores, Etc., Without Cellars
ARCOLA SYSTEM

R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO.
9 N. 7th St. Inc. Richmond, Va

SERVICE

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE

CARPETS DRAPERIES

IT PAYS

In a five weeks' canvass among the church members in one city, a subscription representative of the Southern Churchman earned in commissions and bonuses $186.25.

A young woman in a small community, by putting in an hour or two a day taking subscriptions for this paper, realized in a week $11.25.

There is room on our subscription staff for more men and women who want more money. Right in your neighborhood there are many people who would gladly send orders for the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN through you, if you should ask them to. A liberal commission will be paid you on each order, and a generous bonus on your production.

For full information with complete equipment for immediate and profitable work, mail this coupon to-day to SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN CO., 815 E. Grace St., Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen.—Please send me full details about your offer to subscription representatives.

Name.....

Town.....State.....

Street.....

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID IN building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

MISS M. M. TYLER.

All summer hats reduced. $15.00 hats to $7.50; $10.00 hats to $5.00. Avail yourself of this opportunity and wear a pretty summer hat.

209 N. FOUSHEE ST.

HOME SCHOOL.

Retarded Children—An ideal suburban home, where a limited number of children of slightly retarded mentality can have individual instruction and care under teachers of twelve years' experience in this line of work. Address Miss Sue I. Schermerhorn, Colonial Place, Richmon, Va., R. F. D. 2.

Cathedral Studio.—English Church embroideries and materials. Stoles with crosses, $7; plain, $5.50; handsome gift stoles, $12 up; Burse and veil, $15, $20. Surplices and exquisite altar linens. L. V. Mackrille, Washington, D. C. Tel. Chev. 1915.

COMFORTS TO COVER.

WANTED—COMFORTS TO COVER, OR make new; also plain sewing. Mrs. Louise Yowell, Box 121, Somerset, Va.

HELP WANTED

NURSES—YOUNG WOMEN OF EDUCATION and refinement have an opportunity to acquire a profession. Requirements—one year high school or its equivalent. Maintenance, books and uniforms furnished; also a remuneration of $10 a month the first year, $12 second, $15 third. This is a registered school of high standing. Apply St. John's Hospital, Albany and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y.

WANTED—A TEACHER FOR THREE children. Usual English branches and music. Address Mrs. J. C. Saunders, Premier, W. Va.

WANTED — A REFINED, EDUCATED lady, with bright disposition, not over forty-five years of age, as companion. Must understand knitting and fancy work, and must be a good reader. Address Mrs. Haw, 816 Park Avenue, Richmond, Va.

WANTED—A COMPANION-HOUSEKEEPER in Washington, D. C. References exchanged. Address "C. M.," care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED—A WORKING HOUSEKEEPER for Loudoun County Hospital in Leesburg, Va. References required. Any one interested please write Mrs. Arthur Chichester, Secretary Lady Board of Managers, Leesburg, Va.

WANTED — WORKING HOUSEKEEPER for family of adults. Conveniently arranged home, modern improvements. No laundering. References required. Mrs. J .P. H. Mason, Accotink, Va.

SITUATION WANTED.

A LADY DESIRES POSITION TO TEACH English, French and Music. Have had several years' experience. References given and required. Address Miss J. Randolph, Arrington, Va.

WANTED—BY ELDERLY LADY, POSITION to teach small children, or be companion, or do Church work. References exchanged. Asks $25 and board per month. Address "Y.," care of Southern Churchman.

HIGH SCHOOL PUPIL SEEKS TO WORK through his course. Fourteen-year-old son of Episcopal missionary desires to do light work in a good home where there is a high school of good repute. Missionary's home is nineteen miles away from nearest school, and unless this boy finds the right home he will have to go out to work. Strong healthy, ambitious. Drives a Ford car. All he asks is reasonable opportunity for accurate work in his classes. Write to "A. X. M.," care Southern Churchman.

AN EXTENSIVELY TRAVELED, WELL-read woman desires position as traveling companion, chaperone or social secretary. The applicant was educated at an exclusive school and can refer to people of position. Address "G.," care of Southern Churchman.

MARRIED CLERGYMAN, ENERGETIC, vigorous, successful with children, wishes parish or other work with moderate salary. Address "Clergyman," care of Southern Churchman.

CULTURED, EXPERIENCED TEACHER wishes to teach in private family. Moderate salary. Prefer small children. Address Miss D., care Southern Churchman.

WANTED—SOCIAL OR LITERARY SECretaryship, preferably in Washington, D. C., by gentlewoman, cultured, experienced. Excellent business and social references. Box 246, Williamsburg, Va.

PEABODY

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Leading Endowed Musical Conservatory in the Country.

Scholarships, Operatic training. Tuition in all grades & Branches. Circulars mailed.

TAKE YOUR VACATION WHEN IT IS PLEASANT

and join a small party at Washington to visit Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, Quebec, Montreal, Saratoga Springs, New York, etc. Over 1,300 miles on the most beautiful waterways in America—Lakes Ontario, Champlain and George, and St. Lawrence, Saguenay and Hudson Rivers. September 1-14. Total cost, $245. Write immediately for itinerary. Mears Tours, Onley, Va., Drawer K3.

The Animals' Part in the Child's Day.

The Wood family was one of the nicest families that ever you could know. Children and animals all mixed up together. Celia Wood was the oldest little girl. She reminded you of Snow-White in the fairy tale. Sisterette was a snow-white mother cat, so dignified she made you think of a princess in disguise. Dan was a big Boy Scout and Don a big yellow dog. Wa-wa was a very dumpling of a lassie and We-we was a little fat black guinea-pig.

There were ever so many more children in the house and ever so many more animals, and they all loved each other very much. The children loved all the other animals in the world.

"You must love them," Mother Wood said, "because they are so good to you."

"Tell us about it, mother," Wa-wa asked one morning when the boys and girls were dressing around the big open fire.

Mother pulled a nice warm little sock onto baby's foot.

"The sheep gave their coats to make this sock for baby," said mother.

"And they gave their wool to keep me warm," added Dan, as his head came through the neck of a khaki-colored sweater.

"Your warm woolen underwear, too, came from the back of the sheep," mother added.

"And all these buttons—" Celia, kneeling in front of Wa-wa, popped the shiny buttons of her little dress into the gaping buttonholes asa she spoke—"all these buttons oysters gave us."

"O-o-o! Oysters!" Wa-wa gurgled with delight. "Oysters are soft, Celia; buttons hard?"

Just then Sisterette, as though she knew what they were talking about, pushed a rough, gray oyster shell (it was her favorite plaything) across the floor. Celia picked it up and showed Wa-wa the inside. It was shiny pink and blue pearl, just like the buttons on her clothes.

"That's where the buttons come from," she explained.

"Who made your hair-ribbon?" cried Wa-wa, as mother tied Celia's golden hair with a blue bow that was just the color of her eyes.

"A little caterpillar," mother said.

"Oh, I know!" shouted Lawty, who loved the crawling creatures. "I've seen a caterpillar spin silk. It comes out of his mouth, and he spins it 'round and 'round and 'round his body."

"Cocoons," crowed little Wa-wa, who often went to walk with Lawty.

"Over in China," mother said, "live move of the caterpillars that spin our silk for us. We call them silk-worms."

There was a funny noice. Mother, looking down, saw one of Sisterette's kittens playing with the hair-brush that had slipped to the floor. Mother picked up the hair-brush and told the children that every bristle in it had been taken from the backs of pigs.

"And the best bristles come from pigs that live in Russia."

"Tell us about it, mother."

But now it was breakfast time, so mother told another story. She told about the milk and butter that cows had given to make little children strong. About the old hen who laid eggs for them, and the bees who made the honey.

"Where are all the bees now, do you suppose?" asked Lawty, looking out of the window.

Snow was falling heavily in great white flakes, and, as far as he could see, the road and walks were buried deep in snow.

"I guess we can't go to school," said he.

Just then there came a "Tinkle, tinkle, tinkle!" through the air.

"It's the sleigh-bells on the snow-plow!" shouted Wa-wa.

Mother excused them all so that they could stand at the window and watch the snow-plow going by. 'Twas pulled by a big black horse, who nodded his head with every firm step.

"See him," said mother, "how determined he looks! He's saying, 'I must get this clean for the boys and the girls. I must get this clean for the boys and the girls.'"

When the horse passed by the Wood house, Dan, with Don at his heels, ran out and gave him two lumps of sugar, and the old horse wiggled his ears. That was his way of saying, "Thank you, my dear, for thinking of me!"—Louice Guyol, in Our Dumb Animals.

Every time we sin deliberately, we are trying to crucify the Lord Jesus Christ. Rembrandt painted his own portrait among the faces of those who were taking the Saviour down from the cross.—H. J. W. Buxton.

THE FREE CHURCHES AND THE LAMBETH APPEAL.

(Continued from page 11)

grown old, easily misinterpret and mislead. While reverencing the traditions of the past, we must keep our minds free to learn of the Holy Spirit, who continues to guide the Church in truth as in duty, and who, we believe, has yet more light to break forth from His Word.

The Lambeth appeal has set before us a "vision." It is that of "a Church, genuinely Catholic, loyal to all truth, and gathering into its fellowship all who profess and call themselves Christian, within whose vissible unity all the treasures of faith and order, bequeathed as a heritage of the past to the present, shall be possessed in common and made serviceable to the whole Body of Christ." In this great and lofty conception, we share with profound sympathy; and we recognize in the appeal to seek its realization the accents of our Lord's voice which we cannot disregard. In saying this, we, of course, are not to be held as committing ourselves to any particular form of corporate union. But that all who name the Name of Christ should be united—and that visibly—is a Christian ideal, which we would pursue with all who will seek with us to learn and carry out His will regarding it.

We ask: Is it not possible that God would have a wider measure of such intercourse in the Word and Sacrament of the gospel and in the work of the gospel in order to open the way to further unity and even to union, and to the more effectual service of His kingdom? May He not be calling us to stand together in these things at once, that we may learn together in the fellowship of His Spirit thus created, what may be His will as to questions regarding the character and constitution of a reunited Church? Our observation is that the manifest action of His Spirit sanctions these steps, and our experience is that His blessing accompanies them. We believe that if to the readiness for evangelical and sacramental fellowship which the Free Churches have shown were added the sense of the value of visible unity which the Lambeth appeal has so impressively presented, that would be a combination the possibilities of which for the cause of reunion, under God's blessing, are incalculable. Is this combination not attainable in England today?

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 14)

points the same in shape, only proportionally smaller. The glass in the panels is of mottled antique, each panel bearing a symbolic picture. Eight maltese crosses and cut into the circumferences of the base. The whole is in strict keeping with the general architecture of the church building, and is a fitting embellishment to the graceful exterior of the tower. The funds for the lantern were provided by the last three confirmation classes, largely augmented by the results of food sales last Lent.

IDAHO.

Rt. Rev. F. H. Touret, D. D., Bishop.

A ceremony of unusual interest was recently held at the Episcopal Indian School at Fort Hall. A brick of historic interest was placed in the portal foundation of the school building. The brick was donated to the late Bishop Funsten by the Church Historic Society of Virginia, and was formerly part of the First English Church erected in America on Jamestown Island, before 1607, in the days of the early colonists.

A new baptismal font of finest Vermont marble was blessed by the rector, the Rev. Charles Glenn Baird, in the Church of the Ascension, Twin Falls, on the Fifth Sunday after Trinity. The service of dedication was a feature of the regular children's service, which is held monthly at the hour preceding the regular morning service. Three children were baptised at the service. The font fund was raised almost entirely by the children of the Sunday school.

ERIE.

Rev. Jno. C. Ward, Bishop-Elect.

Plans for Consecration of Bishop-Elect Ward.

The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the ordination and consecration of the Rev. John Chamberlain Ward, Bishop-elect of the Diocese of Erie, as follows:

Time: Thursday, September 22, 1921.
Place: Grace Church, Buffalo, N. Y.
Consecrators: The Presiding Bishop; Bishop Whitehead, of Pittsburgh; Bishop Vincent, of Southern Ohio.
Preacher: Bishop Brent, of Western New York.
Presenters: Bishop Stearly, Coadjutor of Newark; Bishop Ferris, Suffragan of Western New York.
Attending Presbyters: Rev. Walter R. Lord, Rev. Martin Aigner, D. D.
Master of Ceremonies: Rev. Benjamin S. Sanderson.
Deputy Registrar: Rev. Walter North, L. H. D.

WEST TEXAS

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Bereavement.

The Diocese of West Texas is under a very great bereavement through the death of Anna Louise (McKenzie) Johnson, the lovely and accomplished daughter and only child of Archdeacon and Mrs. McKenzie. She died on Wednesday, the 13th of July, at a hospital in Kansas City en route from San Antonio to Rochester, Minn., where she was to have been placed under the skilful care of the Mayos. Her father was her devoted escort. Archdeacon McKenzie returned immediately to San Antonio with his sacred charge, where the funeral services were conducted at St. Mark's Church on Friday afternoon, the 15th, by the Bishop of the Diocese and Bishop Johnston. The deceased was married only a little over a month ago to Mr. William Mason Johnson, her father and Bishop Johnston officiating.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. J. P. Tyler, D. D., Bishop.

The clerical force of the Missionary District of North Dakota has been splendidly augmented of late by the coming of the Rev. D. Pierce-Jones to take charge of the work at Park River, Langdon and Lakota. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are housed in the comfortable rectory at Park River, and already the congregations under his charge are feeling the effects of his energetic and efficient work.

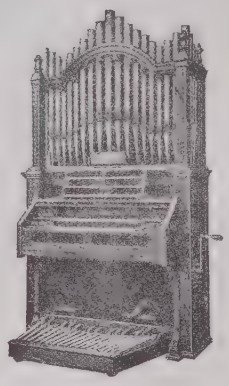
Archdeacon Martyr, after saving his vacations for several years, has gone to visit his family in his old home in England. The Archdeacon expects to be away until the first of October, when he will return to North Dakota and take up again the work in his vast field.

The Rev. Jonathan Watson, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Grand Forks, has gone to Scotland for his vacation, and will spend the time with the members of his family there.

The rector and congregation of All Saints' Church, Minot, are to be heartily congratulated upon the near completion of their beautiful and commodious new church. It was formally opened by a service of benediction by the Bishop May 1, in the presence of a large and interested congregation. Minot is one of the growing towns of North Dakota, and the congregation has looked forward, in the building of their church, with fine judgment.

Two field secretaries of the Nation-Wide Campaign, the Rev. Joseph A. Ten Broeck and the Rev. B. T. Kemerer, have done splendid work in the District in the last few months. The Nation-Wide Campaign is becoming better known, and more interest is being taken in it because of the efficient work and splendid instruction given by these two brethren.

A visit from the Rev. William E. Gardner, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Department of Religious Education, has been a source of pleasure and profit to the District. Dr. Gardner awakened great interest in the cause of Religious Education, and charmed all who heard him with his fine personality and enlightening addresses.



Personal Notes

The Rev. Frank T. Cady, the rector of Trinity Parish, Tyrone, Diocese of Harrisburg, with his family, is spending the month of August at Ocean City, N. J. His address is No. 4901 Central Avenue.

In the absence of the rector, the Rev. John Durham Wing, D. D., on his vacation, the Rev. W. H. Higgins, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Thomasville, has charge of the parish of Christ Church, Savannah, Ga.

The Rev. A. M. Rich, rector of St. Jude's Church, Walterboro, S. C., is supplying for the Rev. William T. Dakin, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, Ga., during his vacation.

The Rev. Charles H. Holmead, curate of St. John's Church, Wilmington, Del., has resigned and accepted a call to rectorship of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., to take effect September 15.

For Church and Home

Organs

A beautifully illustrated catalog, showing styles and prices, of the famous Estey, Packard and Corley Organs will be sent on request.

The Corley Company stock is the most complete in the entire South.

Easy payment terms will be arranged.

The Corley Company

The South's Great Musical Dept. Store

213 E. Broad Street, RICHMOND, VA.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent
E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

JOHN L. WILLIAMS & SONS

BANKERS and BROKERS

Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds

The Evangelical Education Society

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church

Office: The Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia

AIDS STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY AND DISTRIBUTES EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

President: WILLIAM S. HARVEY, ESQ.

Active Vice-President: The Rt. Rev. THOMAS J. GARLAND, D D.

General Counsel HAROLD GOODWIN, Esq. Treasurer ALFRED LEE, Esq. General Secretary Rev. S. LORD GILBERSON, M A

FORM OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to "THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH," incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the first Monday in November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, ———— dollars, or ———— real estate, to be used for the general purpose of the Society.

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
NEW YORK
56 W. 8. STREET.
CHURCH
FURNISHINGS
WINDOWS — TABLETS
FABRICS — EMBROIDERIES
MEMORIALS

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street

Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd

Richmond, Va.

School Desks

Opera Chairs,
Folding Chairs,
Church Pews,
Kindergarten Chairs,
School Supplies,
Blackboards.

SOUTHERN DESK CO., Hickory, N. C.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South
We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival

The Couper Marble Works
(Established 65 years)
264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

To Mothers

And all Friends of Children:

What will you read to your boys and girls this summer to give them a religious message they will love?

Thousands have found the answer in

Sunny Windows

By W. Russell Bowie, D. D.

Author of "The Children's Year."

The first edition is already exhausted, and the second is on the press.

CLOTH, $1.25 NET

For Sale by

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Richmond, Virginia

"The Store That Pleases"

FOR FURNITURE

JONES BROS. & CO.

INCORPORATED

1418 East Main St. :-: Richmond, Va

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 26, 1921. No. 9

University of Virginia Number

The Rotunda, University of Virginia

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-third year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to
REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector

Virginia, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten-acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. Tucker, D. D., President; Rev. C. O. Pruden, D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B., Sweet Briar, A. M., Columbia, Prin.

ST. MARY'S, An Episcopal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years' advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector, Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D..Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 3) cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Make him a Christian, and make him a missionary."—Daily prayer of Dr. John Scudder for his son.

Private devotion is the most needed preparation for a church service.

Trust God in your sorrows as well as in your joys, and you will see the glory of God in both.—Bonar.

Death yielded more readily to Christ than did man's unfaith.—Benzel.

The worst pit of misfortune into which a man can fall is the one he digs himself.—Ram's Horn.

I have got past calling my church my field. It is not my field; it is my force.—C. H. Parkhurst.

Nobody wants to keep a runaway horse, but many keep a runaway temper and think nothing of it.—E. J. Brown.

"Hardly was Christ out of the water of baptism than He was in the fire of temptation; whence we learn that great manifestations of the love of God are usually followed with great temptations from Satan."

In hidden deep accord
The servant may be like his Lord,
And Thy love, our love shining through,
May tell the world that Thou art true,
Till those who see us, see Thee too.
—A. L. Waring.

What we need is not so much a keen, strong intellect that can fight its way through perplexities and falsehoods, that can cross-question witnesses, that can balance evidence—not this half so much as the spirit of a little child. This is heaven's law throughout the economy of grace—he that believeth shall see.—Selected.

Under all speech that is good for anything there lies a silence that is better. Silence is deep as eternity; speech is shallow as time.—Carlyle.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,
REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

ST. CATHERINE'S SCHOOL

Founded by
VIRGINIA RANDOLPH ELLETT
Westhampton - - Richmond, Va.

A country day school for girls under the direction of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia. College preparatory. Boarding department 503 W. Franklin Street. Eight-acre playground. Emphasis on health; out-door life.
MISS ROSALIE H. NOLAND, Principal

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLESTOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Founded by Bishop Alonzo Potter in 1862.

Special students admitted. Privilege of attending course of special study at the University of Pennsylvania.

For information address the Rev. George G. Bartlett, S. T. D., Dean, 5000 Woodland Avenue.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

SUMMER QUARTER

First term, June 20 to July 30; second term, Aug. 2 to Sept. 3. Faculty, over 100; courses, over 300; attendance last year, 1856. Courses for teachers and college students. College credit. Degrees conferred on men and women. Most beautiful campus in America. Cost very reasonable. For catalogue and full information, write to
CHAS. G. MAPHIS, Dean, University, Va.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., FEBRUARY 26, 1921. No. 9

STAND WITH THE LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE.

In this column last week we sounded a warning against the adroit and unscrupulous methods by which certain interests that seek to commercialize Sunday are trying to caricature and discredit the purpose of those who want to hallow the day. We made it plain that as between the Lord's Day Alliance and the manufactured hue and cry in the newspapers against the Blue Law Sunday which it is pretended that the Lord's Day Alliance stands for, we take our stand squarely with the Lord's Day Alliance.

This Alliance was organized in 1888 by representatives of six Christian bodies, and now represents not only these original Church groups, but ten others also as "the accredited agency of Evangelical Christianity in America to preserve the American Christian Sabbath and conserve its benefits for all the people."

We stand for the Alliance because we agree completely with its principles, which have been thus laid down:

"The Alliance does not seek to impose a Puritan, Sectarian or any narrow program as to Sunday observance. It recognizes that there are sincere differences of opinion in respect to the details of this matter. It does, however, hold this to be fundamental—that one day of each week should be free from labor and business, and the people free, if they so choose, to devote the day to rest, religious education, worship and deeds of charity.

"The Alliance emphatically protests against the loose thinking of some who so misinterpret Christ's protest against the Sabbath of His day as to assert that Jesus would, if He were now on earth, permit people incapable of amusing themselves, to employ others to amuse them on the Sabbath.

"The Alliance believes that the commercial superiority of America and Great Britain, as well as our free political institutions, are largely due to the fact that for the last three hundred years these countries have rejected the Continental manner of observing Sunday as a holiday, and have kept it as a holy day.

"The Alliance believes that while our churches must be the chief teachers of those great abiding principles of the Sabbath, it at the same time believes that the rights of the people in a Christian Sabbath can only be adequately protected and permanently secured by proper legislation. It is, therefore, in favor of laws for every State and territory that will prohibit on Sunday all ordinary work except work of necessity and charity, and will work for legislation that will limit worldly business occupation to that degree which 'the good order, health or comfort of the community' will permit, such as is the law in most of the States of the Union.

"In the interest of those laborers whose occupations make work on Sunday unavoidable, the Alliance plans for legislation securing a rest day on some other day of the week—witness, the Rest Day Statutes in the States of New York, Massachusetts and Wisconsin—and insists that a due proportion of these weekly rest days shall be Sunday."

THE CHRISTIAN INTERPRETATION OF SUNDAY.

Underlying all matters of details as to the keeping of Sunday, what are the fundamental principles on which for Christians the whole consideration rests? We propose to face that question and to try to answer it today.

We want to shape our thinking along constructive lines, and we want it to be able to meet the test of the mind of Jesus.

Now the greatest influence which the thought of Jesus brings to our conception of the right way to keep the Lord's Day holy is that it changes the whole matter from a negative to a positive thing. With Him the important question never was what must not be done on the Sabbath. The important question was what ought to be done on the Sabbath. The negations, the avoidances, would take care of themselves if the positive purpose once was made sufficiently appealing and inclusive.

To Jesus the Sabbath day was the day of spiritual opportunity. It was the day hallowed by beautiful memories of all the devoted generations that had gone before. It was the day made holy by all the continuing witness of devotion and fellowship in living persons. It is a revealing and beautiful fact that in the gospel of Luke just twice there is used of Jesus the phrase, "as His custom was," and once it is said that He went out into the Garden of Gethsemane to pray, "as His custom was," and the other time that "as His custom was" He went into the synagogue at Nazareth on the Sabbath day. He who was in supreme sense the Son of God, He who had within Himself as no other human personality has ever had, the fountain of strength, found it His joy and privilege to go His way to the synagogue on the Sabbath. He loved the reading of the glorious record of the prophecy and history of God's children in ancient years. He loved the hymns and prayers, fragrant with all the aspirations of immemorial years. He loved to meet there others who, like Himself, were seeking the presence of the most high God. And what He found of help for His supremely furnished life, shall we, poor, shallow, frivolous, ill-furnished souls, say that we can do without for the sake of the lazy idleness, or the whim of self-indulgence that leads us to what we call recreation, when what we ought to want is the re-creation of the grace and power of God?

Back of everything that Jesus did on the Sabbath was this positive purpose of laying hold of His Father's grace and expressing it in a world of men that needed God more than they could ever need anything else. He healed the man with the withered hand on the Sabbath day. His eager spirit went winging above the fences of the Pharisees' prohibitions as an eagle, flashing through the heavens, passes above the little fences that men have built upon their earth. Whatever helped express His Father's spirit, whatever truly helped to set men free in body, mind or spirit, and to bring them more close to God than they were before—this was fitting use for the Sabbath day, and no Sabbath was fittingly used that did not somehow help the individual himself to get closer to God and to help others feel God's nearness.

We all remember the fact that in the very early days of the Christian Church the seventh day, which had been the Sabbath for Israel, gave way to the first day of the week as the Lord's day of worship for Christians. With this change the whole beautiful positiveness of our Christian day of worship is greatly emphasized. Our Sunday is not the Sabbath of the Pharisees. It takes into itself all that is of lasting spiritual value in the ideal Sabbath of Israel. But it transcends all the later deformities of that Sabbath, and it exceeds even its highest suggestion. For we keep it as a weekly memorial of the resurrection of Christ. We keep it to remind us, first of all, of the day on which life in its glorious positiveness triumphed over all the limits of flesh and time and death. And if we would seek for a single phrase that would sum up more than any other could what it means to keep our Lord's Day holy it would be this: that we should so keep it that increasingly there should come to pass in us the resurrection of the spirit of Jesus out of the tomb of ignorance and carelessness and sin.

If the positive conception of our Lord's Day becomes appealing and inclusive enough, all the little questions of avoidances and negations would take care of themselves. Does this conception of the Sabbath Day lead to license? Does it lead to a kind of amiable and spineless tolerance of all things that men may want to do on that day because we do not emphasize some long list of inflexible laws? Try it sincerely and see. Is there a single spirit which has been careless and frivolous, is there a single one who has grown indifferent to Sunday worship and makes a jest of that indifference, who dares to face the reality of this ideal to let Sunday so be used that the spirit of Christ shall rise into life in you? Is there anything more free and glad and wonderful, and yet in noblest sense more clearly stern than that?

If now we accept that principle as the right guide to the holiness of the Lord's Day, there are certain other things which we can say to make the bearing of the principle more plain.

---

1. In the first place, we are to remember that we are not isolated individuals, but are a part of a social group. There are many things which an individual might plausibly say that he could do without injuring his own spiritual sensitiveness. He might go to some Sunday afternoon concert and hear beautiful music. He might think that it would not hurt him to go to a proper moving picture show on Sunday, and that perhaps it would be a good thing if the law permitted these to be opened. It may seem to him not unreasonable that he should go on one of the much advertised excursions to the seashore, or to some other such place on Sunday. Whether or not these things might be defended on the ground simply of individual interest, and whether or not it might be concluded that when a person had gone to church in the morning certain harmless recreations might justly be a part of his Sunday afternoon, there still remains the question as to whether we as Christian individuals have a right to sanction the needless multiplication of things which require groups of our fellowmen to turn Sunday into a work-day with the same burdens and strain of the other days of the week. There is nothing surer in the physiological science of our time than that it would be a disastrous thing for the human race, both in its physical vigor and its mental and spiritual resiliency, if the old, old custom of the weekly rest day were seriously abridged. Men who are not at all religious and approach the question of the weekly rest with no ecclesiastical bias whatever, see this as truly as others. And if that be so, then it behooves those who to the commonsense recognition of the human value of Sunday add the higher consciousness of its immortal worth as a day of opportunity for the souls of men, to ask their conscience when they think of things that might be permitted individually whether what they are lending their influence to create is fair and kind to their fellowmen.

---

2. In the second place, if we are to apply truly the positive principles which can best control our keeping of the Lord's Day, we must remember that among the three levels on which life can move there is an ascending scale of importance. We live in the body. We live in the mind. And then we live in the soul. Henry Drummond, that prince of preachers to young men, had an address which he often delivered in colleges which he called "Life on the Top Floor." And his point was that whereas physical activity was a fine, desirable thing, and knowledge was an even more desirable thing, yet no man had really fully lived who had not understood what it was to dwell habitually in the highest story of the house of life—to live on the level of his soul, and from its windows see the real spaciousness and beauty of God's life in His world. This same remembrance will help us to interpret rightly our purpose of making the best of Sunday. Men say that they are kept at work all week and need exercise on their only free day. It is possible for that statement to be true and reasonable. In the Master's eyes there may be no dishallowing of the Sabbath when boys and men who have worked in shops and foundries all week go out on a vacant lot somewhere and play ball on Sunday afternoon. There are times when it may be legitimate for a man, kept against his choice in the narrow confinement of office responsibilities, to play golf or tennis on Sundays after he has been to church. But for most people under ordinary conditions, the right message to emphasize is another one. Among the class of people who are apt to be reading this paper, there are very few who, if they deliberately set about it to order the values of their life aright, would not have time in the week for their athletic recreation and for all the secular work that needs to be done. The measure for us is the measure of the supremacy of the soul. God's will for us is the fully proportioned life, clean and sound in body, virile and well furnished in mind, sensitive and strong of soul. If we truly need the building up of the body, or the finishing of some intellectual task on Sunday, and can set about it in God's name, then in God's name do it. But, above all, let us remember that the supreme thing is to see to it that the soul is growing in the knowledge and grace of God, and that Sunday is the one great opportunity to help the soul thus to grow. Short-sighted and foolish is he who makes the excuse of his right to the lesser things rob him of the highest things. Bitter will be his ultimate disillusionment, as was the disillusionment of the rich man in the parable, who, though his barns were full and his body well nourished, yet faced the awful moment of his life's accounting with a starved and empty self.

---

3. In the third place, we would say simply this: No one can explain all the applications of a principle. If this were so, the principle would cease to be a principle and would become a mere rule with all its life and flexibility gone. The glory of the right conception of the Lord's Day is that our perception of its positive meaning is a living and sensitive intuition by which the conscience can measure all the complex facts of our changing world. And for that application the ideal is this: if we err, let us err on the side of earnestness. In these days which have drifted far away from the stern rigidity, but have drifted perhaps also from the brave and clear-cut yea-and-nay of what we call Puritanic days, the call to Christian people is for a kind of influence that shall lift up its positive and prevailing witness to the immortal value of spiritual things. If between two ways of keeping Sunday we are hesitant which to choose, let us rather choose the one that makes it different from the other days. At the end these words stand true: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." And he most keeps it holy who in his clear choice shall make it plain that above all other things which he might seek, the one thing he does seek is that through his keeping of the day the Christ may rise into larger life in him.

THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE CHURCH,

By the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., D. D.

The centennial celebration of the founding of the University of Virginia, to be held next June, is bringing into review the many ways in which the University has been the servant of the State. The contributions, which she has made through her alumni to the political life of the nation; the great names, which she has furnished in educational leadership—these are subjects of common knowledge. There has been, however, too great diffidence in recognizing the positive service she has rendered to the Church.

The diffidence or reserve, in this respect, goes back to the very days of her founding. Dr. Philip A. Bruce has recently described at length the extreme caution which Jefferson observed in eliminating every trace of denominational influence in the formative period of the University's life. (History of the University of Virginia, Vol. II.) So scrupulous was he to enforce his fundamental principle that "education and sectarianism must be divorced," that in his original plan for the University, states Dr. Bruce, he made no real concession to religious feeling beyond providing a room in the rotunda for religious worship.

As religion, however, is an irrepressible factor in human life, the demand that the University should be other than neutral in religious expression soon made itself felt. The first proposal to make good this deficiency was put forward by Jefferson himself, though the suggestion was made to him, as he confesses, by "some pious individual." The proposal was that each of the principal denominations should establish its own theological school just without the confines of the institution. Thereby would have been established a natural liason between the secular education of the State and the religious education of the Christian communions. One can only voice the regret that the leaders of the Church in that day had not the vision to carry out the proposal. Through such an arrangement mutual confidence and respect might have been the resulting relationship between the religious and educational forces of the State rather than the suspicion and misunderstanding that has too frequently characterized their mutual attitude.

Birds-Eye View, University of Virginia.

While this opportunity for co-operation between the University and the Church on a large scale was not taken, yet the demand for some religious expression in the life of the faculty and the students soon received a modified provision. As early as 1829 a system of engaging the services of a chaplain was adopted by those interested. The support was arranged by voluntary subscriptions, and the chaplain elected, in rotation from the leading denominations of the State. At first the term of service was limited to a single session; but in the course of time it was extended to two sessions. For a portion of this period regular religious services were held in one of the University halls set apart for that purpose; later, a chapel was built on the grounds, the funds for the purpose being contributed, not by the State, but by friends and alumni of the institution.

Among the chaplains were men who became distinguished leaders in their respective communions. The Rev. N. H. Cobbs and the Rev. J. P. B. Wilmer became Bishops of the Episcopal Church; Rev. D. L. Doggett, a Bishop in the Methodist Church; the Rev. Robert Ryland, President of Richmond College; the Rev. W. S. White, a Presbyterian, and the Rev. W. M. Jackson, an Episcopalian, were well known and beloved as pastors in Staunton and Norfolk respectively. Two of the chaplains later became public servants of the State without relinquishing their spiritual calling, the Rev. Mr. Hammet being elected to a seat in the National House of Representatives, and the Rev. Otis A. Glazebrook, who was the United States consul at Jerusalem during the trying years of the world war. The Rev. J. William Jones, chaplain of the Army of Northern Virginia, is well remembered as one of the University chaplains.

This system, however, experienced an increasing difficulty in securing representative men for so short a term of office, and was finally discontinued about 1896. From this latter date until 1917 religious services were conducted in the University chapel by visiting clergymen, invited in turn from the various denominations. The Young Men's Christian Association, through its General Secretary, supplied the initiative in religious life, organizing Bible Study groups and fostering opportunities for social service. It should be noted, in this connection, that the University of Virginia is the home of the first college organization of the Y. M. C. A.

In recent years the several communions have been gradually assuming, through their local parishes and pastors, a larger sense of responsibility for their adherents in the University. In a different manner this represents a belated response, on the part of the Church, to Mr. Jefferson's earlier proposal that the theological schools be placed near the University. The Diocese of Virginia of the Episcopal Church, for example, has organized a parish, with its own pastor, in the University community, for the avowed purpose of ministering to its adherents among the students and faculty. Furthermore, by the bequest of the late Colonel James Skinner, eight or more scholarships are available at the University, to furnish collegiate training to men, who intend to enter the Virginia Theological Seminary. Thus though this Seminary did not establish itself at the University (and this is not strange, for its first session antedates by three years the first of the University), yet definite provision has been made for certain of its prospective matriculates to have their collegiate education at the University.

In the same direction is the proposal of the Methodist Church to rebuild its local plant in Charlottesville on a scale that will enable it the more adequately to minister to its membership at the University. It is particularly interesting to note that the new building is being planned as a memorial to Gessner Harrison, formerly Professor of Ancient Languages. To the local pastorate, moreover, it is proposed to add a student pastor, who will serve the University community and foster the affiliation of the students with the Charlottesville church.

These two undertakings are but instances of a systematic movement, on the part of the Christian Church, to follow up her sons and daughters during the years, when they are making the difficult transition from the restraints of the home and the school to the larger and freer intellectual and social life of the University. It is evidence that the Church is beginning to recognize, in the present, what she saw unmistakably in the past, that the colleges and universities are "strategic points in the world's conquest."

This brief review will serve to indicate that, while officially there was only limited provision made for the religious life of the students of the University of Virginia during the first century of its history, yet the religious life was never without its witnesses. Furthermore, if the final test of the Christian religion is Christ's own criterion, "By their fruits ye shall know them," then there is substantial evidence for the quiet working of the religious leaven in the life of the University of Virginia, to a far greater extent than is generally recognized.

Complete statistics are not available nor would they, in any event, furnish other than a small portion of the story, but surely the following list of religious leaders, which the University of Virginia has helped train for the Church, is a significant record:

Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church:

Thomas U. Dudley (deceased), Bishop of Kentucky.
James B. Funsten (deceased), Bishop of Idaho.
John N. Galleher (deceased), Bishop of Louisiana.
Junius M. Horner, Bishop of Asheville.
James A. Ingle (deceased), Bishop of Hankow.
James S. Johnston, Bishop of West Texas.
George H. Kinsolving, Bishop of Texas.
Lucien L. Kinsolving, Bishop of Southern Brazil.
Henry C. Lay (deceased), Bishop of Arkansas and Easton.
William Cabell Brown, Bishop of Virginia.
Arthur S. Lloyd, Bishop-Coadjutor of Virginia.
George W. Peterkin (deceased), Bishop of West Virginia.
Frederick F. Reese, Bishop of Georgia.
Davis Sessums, Bishop of Louisiana.
Henry St. George Tucker, Bishop of Kyoto.

Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

Collins Denny.
David S. Doggett (deceased).

Bishops of the Reformed Episcopal Church:

James A. Latane (deceased).

Other distinguished alumni in the service of the Church:
(Living and Dead.)

Episcopal:

Charles A. Briggs (deceased), professor at Union Theological Seminary, New York; editor of International Critical Commentary.
William P. DuBose (deceased), dean of the Divinity School of the University of the South; author of many theological works.
John S. Lindsay (deceased), elected Bishop of Easton and Alabama.
Randolph H. McKim (deceased), president of House of Deputies of General Convention.

Baptist:

John A. Broadus (deceased), principal of the Louisville Baptist Seminary; well known author.
Alfred E. Dickenson (deceased).
Poindexter Henson (deceased).
Crawford H. Toy (deceased), author of Commentary on Proverbs in International Critical Commentary.
H. Allen Tupper.
William H. Whitsitt (deceased), principal of Louisville Seminary.

Presbyterian:

Charles H. Hemphill.
Richard McIlwaine (deceased).
Theron H. Rice.

Methodist:

William W. Bennett (deceased).
John J. Lafferty (deceased).
William K. Pendleton (deceased).

Hebrew:

Edward N. Calisch.

What a truly representative company of theological scholars is suggested by the names of William P. DuBose, Charles A. Briggs, John A. Broadus and Crawford H. Toy. What catholicity of spiritual leadership is suggested by such alumni in the city of Richmond as Bishop Brown, of the Episcopal Church; Bishop Collins Denny, of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Dr. Theron H. Rice, of the Presbyterian Union Theological Seminary; and Rabbi Edward N. Calisch.

Not less significant than the list of prominent clergymen would be the roll call of graduates of the University of Virginia Medical School, who have gone out, under the Church, as medical missionaries to the foreign field. Three of the missionary hospitals of the Episcopal Church in China are under the direction of University of Virginia alumni, namely, St. James' Hospital, Anking, under Dr. H. B. Taylor; St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai, under Dr. A. W. Tucker; St. Andrew's, Wusih, under Dr. C. M. Lee and Dr. W. H. A. Pott. It is interesting to note that three daughters of Dr. F. P. Dunnington, Professor Emeritus in the School of Chemistry, married graduates of the Medical School, who went as missionaries, under the Presbyterian Church, to Korea, China and Brazil respectively, namely, Dr. T. H. Daniel, Dr. Sloan and Dr. Emerson Smith.

It would be an inviting task, too, to examine the record which the University alumni have made and are making today as leaders in the ranks of the laity of the various communions. But perhaps sufficient evidence has been produced to indicate that, though the University of Virginia had been traditionally reserved and diffident about its religious life, yet her sons have, by their subsequent service in the Church, manifested that their moral and spiritual faculties have received a quickening from their Alma Mater.

If we ask the secret of her quiet forces that make for righteousness and spiritual idealism, there are two, at least, that immediately suggest themselves. First of all, the University has been fortunate in having on her faculty, from early days, certain great personalities who have consciously and unconsciously been a positive influence in the religious life of the students. One recalls the Sunday Bible classes, led by Professor John B. Minor, Professor Noah K. Davis, Dr. Charles W. Kent and Dr. James C. Metcalf, which successive generations of students have attended to their spiritual edification.

But even more one recalls the personality of one like Professor Francis H. Smith, whose very scholarship radiates an unconscious saintliness. At the good old age of ninety-two, he still lives, as professor emeritus, at the University in his old home on the lawn. His presence is a benediction to the under-graduates of the new generation. As one meets him, coming up the long walk, and receives his greeting, with its winning smile of love, one instinctively thinks of the olden days in Ephesus. In Church affiliation Mr. Smith is a Methodist, but when one knows him after the spirit, the problem of Christian unity is solved.

In addition to this personal piety in certain of its greatest teachers, the second positive influence in the University's life is its corporate spirit of honor. At the University of Virginia, in 1842, was first introduced the so-called honor system, which is now a marked feature of many of our universities and colleges. The honor system of the University is not something that can be defined, and yet it is something that is felt as the dominant and most distinctive factor in the student life. As a written code the honor system guarantees honorable and fair play in the examination room; but as an unwritten spirit it pervades all the relationships of students and faculty, creating an atmosphere of mutual trust and respect, which makes for freedom in the corporate service of truth. This honor spirit does not profess to be a cure-all for the follies of youth, but it does develop a society in which truthfulness is instinctive; in which there is a ready trustfulness one of another, and a happy absence of the spirit of censoriousness. These are cardinal virtues, which flourish, as it were, naturally at the University, and while, in and by themselves, they do not constitute religion; they are not far from the Kingdom of God, and may prove forerunners, preparing the way for the greater than they.

Thus it is, that though Jefferson made no plan for religion within the University's original walls, yet when, in latter years, there was built the central academic hall, the motto that was inscribed above its classic portico, to guide the youth who entered there, was the saying of Jesus Christ:

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

No love is so high as that which prefers the real interests of its object before his present comfort, which aims at permanent good rather than momentary satisfaction. We often seek to gratify another's feelings rather than to promote his good. But Christ is not a parent Who gives His children everything they cry for, but everything that is best for them. He withholds a lower mercy that He may impart a greater. Instead of raising Lazarus from a bed of sickness He raised him from the grave.—A. Roberts.

Satan will seldom come to a Christian with a gross temptation; a green log and a candle may be safely left together; but bring a few shavings, then some small sticks, and then larger, and you may soon bring the green log to ashes.—A. and A. Pulpit Library.

A YEAR'S ACCOMPLISHMENT.

A Statement From the Presiding Bishop and Council.

The Presiding Bishop and Council makes the following statement with reference to its administration, since January 1, 1920, of the work committed to it by the last General Convention:

1. The Presiding Bishop and Council is itself an agency created by canonical action of the General Convention to carry on the work of the Church in missions, religious education and social service.

2. The Nation-Wide Campaign is a movement adopted and launched by General Convention. It was not a project which originated with the Presiding Bishop and Council. It was a responsibility laid upon it by the most general Council of the Church.

3. The Nation-Wide Campaign does not involve any change in the conception of the mission of the Church or in the character of the work done in fulfillment of that mission.

4. The purpose of the Nation-Wide Campaign is to bring home to as many individuals as possible their personal responsibility for that work.

5. The movement is accordingly a "campaign" only in the sense that it is an intensive and therefore a temporary effort to quicken this sense of individual responsibility; but the thing for which the responsibility exists is the permanent work of the Church, and consequently the present effort must be succeeded by other organized efforts, or else the work will fail.

6. The Presiding Bishop and Council recognizes its continuing responsibility to organize such efforts, and therefore either the Nation-Wide Campaign or a substitute for it will be before the Church as long as the Presiding Bishop and Council is in existence or until the General Convention otherwise directs.

7. The practical question before the Presiding Bishop and Council at the present time is this: which, if any, of the measures employed in the course of the Nation-Wide Campaign have justified themselves and should be continued and what measures should be substituted for such as ought to be discarded?

In order to answer this question intelligently, a distinction must be made between measures which conform to fundamental principle and those which are experimental in their nature.

The things deemed to be fundamental and permanent are the following:

(1) The administration of all the activities of the whole Church through a single agency as a substitute for unrelated and competitive appeals by independent agencies.

(2) The association, in diocesan quotas, of activities of the whole Church and of extra-parochial diocesan activities, with resulting emphasis on the essential similarity of all work which the people of many parishes are asked to unite in supporting.

(3) The use of a sliding scale in determining the size of diocesan quotas as distinguished from a flat rate distribution of responsibility.

(4) The expenditure of very considerable sums of money in making the work of the Church as widely known as possible, on the principle that the money thus spent is not an "overhead charge" for collecting dollars, but is rather the cost of a necessary part of the education of every Churchman.

The principle here referred to is often overlooked. It is occasionally suggested that making known the work of the Church is not an end in itself, but is a mere means to a money-raising end. Hence, the contention that expenditures for this purpose must bear to the total receipts the proportion usually borne by the cost of mechanical overhead. But upon such a theory the rector's salary would be charged as an overhead expense of collecting parochial income. Such a theory of the work of the Church can be entertained only by those who do not or cannot think. The determination by General Convention that a Department of Publicity should be organized by the Presiding Bishop and Council was a wise and statesmanlike decision. The matter was not left optional with the Presiding Bishop and Council. It was enjoined as a positive duty.

A distinction is to be noted between the foregoing matters of principle and things regarded by the Presiding Bishop and Council as in their nature experimental.

Thus while money spent for what is somewhat loosely styled "publicity" is in no proper sense "overhead," yet any particular expenditure in the field of publicity is in the nature of an experiment.

The publication of "The Church at Work" was inaugurated admittedly for the purpose of reaching the indifferent and uninstructed and, consequently, to accomplish the purpose, its circulation at least at the start could not be limited to those who wanted to receive it. The prescribed method of distribution, namely, by personal calls, was designed to promote fellowship and to insure the reading of the paper.

Now that the intensive period of the 1920 campaign has passed, the distribution of the paper as already announced will be limited to such parishes as signify their desire for it and which pledge a thorough distribution.

Another experimental matter is the present method of allotting quotas to parishes.

It is undeniable that during the course of the Nation-Wide Campaign there has been a notable quickening of the life of the Church.

This renewed life is shown not alone in the financial support, but in personal service and devotion. A diocesan Bishop in the Middle West reports that baptisms and confirmations have nearly doubled, and parishes in all parts of the country tell of the largest confirmation classes in their history.

One of our seminaries reports an unheard of number of applicants for the class entering September 1, 1921, while a diocese says that "The sense of responsibility to the Kingdom of God has been changed in hundreds of individuals from a potentiality to a reality. The diocese has been invigorated with new hopes and a growing consciousness of Emmanuel, God with us."

Another says, "We doubt whether you could find a diocese where the spiritual life has received greater benefit through the Nation-Wide Campaign."

The financial results show that the income of the Presiding Bishop and Council for the year 1920 from Nation-Wide Campaign and Church School Offerings was $3,027,518.28, against $1,424,997.27 in 1919, an increase of $1,602,521.01, or over 112 per cent. This increase in one year is more than the combined increases of the past ninety-nine years.

Diocesan revenues were increased in almost every instance, and in the case of one large diocese, the increase amounted to $156,584.90, or 633 per cent.

That the revenues of the parishes did not suffer by the outpouring of money for the missionary work of the Church is shown by the reports from 1,175 parishes (all that are available out of 9,031), to the effect that pledges for parish support for 1919 were $2,120,555,35, and for 1920 $3,408,703.04, an increase of $1,288,147.69, or 61 per cent.

While, therefore, the measures actually taken have been followed by most remarkable results, it is not only possible, but probable, that ways will be found greatly to improve them. In particular there is much to be desired in the direction of closer and more direct contact between the Presiding Bishop and Council and the individual Churchman. Whether parish organizations should continue to be used as the agencies for securing support for extra-parochial work is a question which is likely to receive increasing attention. Where the parish is a compact social group, the problem is very different from the case in which parishioners are widely scattered and have few opportunities for contact. It may be that in such cases organizations should be effected independently of parish lines; but this is a matter for local determination. Meanwhile, the Presiding Bishop and Council will welcome constructive suggestions respecting ways in which the mandates of the General Convention may more effectually be carried out.

THE CITADEL OF THE HOME.

From a sermon by the Rev. George W. Lay, on "The Manners and Customs of the Present Day," we take these extracts:

The core of the trouble is in the home life. That is the citadel of our society. Parental laxity is the bane of our time. If fathers and mothers will not protect their children, who will? It requires sense, religion and grit to stand against the foolish and dangerous demands of our modern social life, but it is worth the price. We need more "Puritan" parents. The rules of the home that are regarded as hard and cruel need to be re-established and rigidly enforced. What seems grievous to a boy or girl now will in the years to come bring him the highest joy and gratitude. * * *

The family fireside has too largely disappeared, figuratively as well as literally. Too seldom do we gather together, and for amusement one must always "go somewhere."

The family altar is too often unknown. Family prayers and grace at meals have lost out. Private prayers at night are not universal, and in the morning seem to be very largely omitted.

Religious instruction, choosing the easy way, has been largely neglected by the parents and handed over to the inadequate attention of others a few minutes on Sunday.

Parents have too often forgotten their responsibility and resigned their parental authority, while the children have gayly mounted to the empty throne and rule, not only themselves, but their elders too.

So we must try to bring back more of the old family life. Changed conditions make it impossible to hope to restore it in all its simplicity. But at least we can entertain simply at home instead of extravagantly in public places, we can encourage more amusement at home and provide for it, and we older ones can know better those who know our young people. Then we must put definite daily religious practice into our organic home life. The parent who has no family prayers and no grace at meals, or neglects his own private prayers and those of his children, who does not take them with him to church on Sunday and perhaps does not go himself, must mend his ways or else not be surprised, if those whom it is his duty to bring up in the way in which they should go, fail to walk in it, because they have never learned to travel on it.

Lastly and most important of all. Parents must assume full responsibility for their own children, and establish parental authority and youthful obedience.

Let us not try to abolish everything that is misused. But let us control them and not be controlled helplessly by them.

Much can be done by regulation: but we must not stop there. It is a fundamental weakness of our times that we are full of zeal to pass laws to keep others straight, or to put on others the task of keeping us straight, instead of facing squarely the responsibility of keeping ourselves straight.

I am pleading for our young people and for the nobility of the next generation. I am pleading more especially to the women on behalf of our young men, as well as our young women. On behalf of men I plead to women not to shock their highest reverence for women and to do their part to make it easier for men to live as we would wish to have them.

I plead to women specially as the ones who make the standards of conduct for men, and who are largely responsible for maintaining them.

Our women have been what our men demanded that they should be. Our men are largely what our women make them to be.

The Southern man has put woman on a lofty pedestal. May she ever stay there. If she steps off and in the future is content to stand on a lower plane than in the past, the man will cease to look upward, aspiring to the highest ideals, and with diminished respect for womanhood, will have less respect for his own best manhood, until he ceases to deserve it.

Let us then try to reserve the blessings that come to a nation only when they, from oldest to youngest, obey the first commandment with promise.

Let us teach our children to really honor their fathers and mothers, and let the fathers and mothers leave nothing undone to deserve that honor.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

WORK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Mr Editor: Forty years ago the Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clarke started a work in Maine which has now spread all over the world. His plan was to interest the young people spiritually and gain their help in the work of the Church. He called it "The Christian Endeavor Society." There are now something like five million young people in all parts of the world who are "trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, and trying to do whatever He would have them do." Weekly religious services are held by these young people, and specified subjects for thought and prayer are put forth. The centre of the work is in Boston, in a modest but beautiful building, and the central office is practically self-supporting, there being no dues from any society.

The work is eminently fitted for the Episcopal Church, for the following reasons:

First. It deepens the spiritual life by teaching the young people informally, in their little meetings, how to express themselves, and to take part in the worship.

Second. It brings the young people together spiritually, and at the same time interests them in work for others, and also in that social fellowship whereby one young person may influence another.

Third. It brings the boys and girls, or young men and young women, together, thus helping that normal social life which is such an important part of the Christian life, and yet is so frequently neglected.

Fourth. Through various committees it interests the young people in (1) the Quiet Hour; (2) Systematic Giving; (3) Patriotism; (4) Missionary Work; and (5) Hospital and Prison Work.

There are a number of societies in the Episcopal Church in the United States, and in England there are a large number united in what is called the English Church Union. Might it not be helpful for the life of our Church if Christian Endeavor Societies were started and carried on in some of our parishes? There is nothing which quite takes its place now. Our ordinary societies, like the Girls' Friendly Society and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, do not bring young people, boys and girls, together, and they do not have the privilege of religious or spiritual services held by the young folks themselves. Here we have something which serves as a post-confirmation influence, and also provides a working force upon which the minister can rely. On this Fortieth Anniversary year it would be a fine thing if our churches took up the work and thus brought the young people nearer to the young people in the sister churches, besides leading them to a deeper spiritual earnestness, under the guidance of the rector. There are several tracts which have been written, showing the adaptability of the Society to the Episcopal Church and her system. These can be obtained at the home of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Joy and Mt. Vernon Streets, Boston. A great convention is to be held in July in New York of these young people from all over the United States and Canada. If some of our good Episcopalians could attend the sessions, or some of them, they would see the practical working of this movement, which was begun and has been continued in the name of the Master.

FLOYD W. TOMKINS.

Philadelphia, Pa., February 14, 1921.

THE HOME FOR HOMELESS BOYS.

Mr. Editor: Moved by many responses to Bishop Jett's very kind and very urgent appeal, in the last Southern Churchman, for help for this Home for Boys, recently in the grip of an epidemic of whooping cough and measles, I write to ask that you let this letter be my assurance to the friends of "the Home" that conditions here are not now alarming, and that, unless there should be a very improbable renewal of the epidemic, we shall not need other help than that of money to meet the expenses already incurred for medicines and for care of the sick. All our boys are now out of bed and most of them are out of doors, thanks to the splendid care given them by Dr. Wallace and by our faithful house-mothers and other assistants. God's mercy has been upon His children and He has heard the prayers for their recovery. In His wisdom one little man of seven years passed from us to the home that knows no sorrow; but even here we can discern the infinite wisdom that saved from years of certain suffering an invalid little body.

Through your columns I would thank those of your readers, our friends, who came to our aid after reading our good Bishop's letter; and I would thank you also for your good service done for the help of our little brothers in the Home.

E. REINHOLD ROGERS,
Superintendent the Home for Boys.

Covington, Va., February 16, 1921.

RECRUITING FOR THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: Following up Mr. Randall's letter to you of some weeks ago, relative to the effort which the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was then about to make, in the interest of Recruiting for the Church's Ministry, I should like to tell you now that definite arrangements for the holding of meetings in the following Dioceses have been made:

Connecticut, Erie (2), Southern Virginia (2), New York, Newark, New Jersey, Los Angeles, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Atlanta, Missouri, West Missouri, Long Island, Central New York, Louisiana, Albany, Western New York, Tennessee, Washington (2), Asheville, Ohio, Maine, Kentucky, Southern Ohio, North Carolina, Chicago, Olympia, Oregon, Pittsburgh.

F. H. SPENCER, Executive Secretary.

Philadelphia, Pa., February 17, 1921.

EVENING PRAYER.

O! Eternal Father, Who art the Guide and Friend of all those who put their trust in Thee, support us all the day long of this earthly life, until the shadows lengthen, and the evening falls, and the busy world is hushed, and the fever of life is over, and our work is done. Then of Thy mercy grant us a safe lodging and a holy rest, and peace at last; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Great Commission.

"OUR CHANCE."

By Mrs. Mallory Taylor, Honorary Custodian U. T. O., Diocese of Atlanta.

We are all familiar with the phenomenal growth of the United Thank Offering. The increase in the number of workers keeps up with it. If I were to ask you what you thought of the Offering you would answer, "I am very much interested." How much are you really interested? How much have you really helped? How many people have you tried to interest in it? If you nad all discussed it as frequently and with as much ardor as you have the H. C. L. or the abbreviated dresses, the Offering at the last triennial would easily have reached its $600,000 goal. If we do not give a great deal more for 1922 we shall fall behind. A very few additional missionaries can be placed in the field, and the women and children to whom they could tell the glad tidings must still live in ignorance. Can you not see that the little blue box is not the despised mite box, but it stands for souls? "'Tis thine to save from peril of perdition the souls for whom the Lord His life laid down." To make up the sum we should have at the next triennial we must go without things that we almost deem necessities. We speak of self-denial, but is not that a mistake? Do we really feel what we put in our boxes? Is it not generally the odds and ends that we are sure we will not miss?

One lady remarks, "When my groceries come to an uneven amount as say ninety-eight cents, I always put the change in the box." Another says, "I give $2 a year; I can't be bothered with a box." So she gives less than two postage stamps a week, and we will all agree that she was not bothered much with God's work. "It is not what we have nor what we do, but what we do with what we have."

We struggled for years against parochial selfishness, that built parish houses in place of giving to missions. Then came the war and Red Cross work, and now very hard times are with us. And we realize how little we did "in all times of our prosperity." Alas, how small must our offering look from the other end of the line, to the dear Saviour and the helpless heathen woman.

"And must I be giving again and again. Oh, no, said the angel, looking me through. Just stop when the Master stops giving to you." Not only do we not give, but we refrain from telling about the Offering. There is no estimating how many women we could have enlisted in the Offering during the last eighteen months. Is not that neglect one of the "left undone" sins we repent of and still leave "undone"?

One-half of our journey to the next triennial lies behind us, forever behind. No chance for us even to do the undone things. Only thank God in repentance we can "forget those things that are behind" and press forward to do the things that we ought to have done.

English While You Wait: At Camp Dix, N. J., is the Recruit Educational Centre, where there is a regiment of 23,000 men of sixty-two different races, who are being taught in quick time, under army discipline, the English language and Americanism. The entrance qualifications for this remarkable school is inability to read or write the English language.

This school was started by, and it still has as its backbone, Chaplain Fell, one of our clergy; other like schools now exist in other camps. Chaplain Fell recently asked the Secretary for Foreign-Born Americans to obtain for him Russian and Greek clergy to come occasionally and minister to their own people at the camp.

Thirty Thousand Chinese in Manila: St. Stephen's Mission, established by Bishop Brent in 1903 for the Chinese of Manila, is the only mission of any communion among more than thirty thousand Chinese. There are two Chinese races, differing in language, so that we should have separate congregations for them. A large majority are from Southern Fukien and speak the Amoy language. St. Stephen's services have always been held in this language. We have over 170 communicants, and a girls' school with more than 200 pupils.

The remaining Chinese in Manila are almost all Cantonese. There is no Christian work being done for them by any communion. A few of them have come into St. Stephen's congregation, but it has proved impossible to attract them in any number to a service in which their own language is not used. For our Manila Cantonese, services and sermons and instruction in their own language are essential.

The Church is looking for young clergymen for this work.

A LENTEN MEDITATION.

According to the teaching of our Lord, the best preparation for life in the kingdom of God is imitation of the child. We are to repent and become as little children; we are to humble ourselves as a little child; we are to beware of offending these little ones if we would become worthy citizens of that divine commonwealth. Teaching such as this is pertinent to the life of every age. More of the genuine simplicity of childhood, and less of the devious complexity of present day adult life, would be wholesome for us just now. The child's open-eyed attitude of wonder in the presence of that which it cannot fathom, the child's innocence and lack of guile, are attributes of soul which all would do well to cultivate.

That childlike humility commended to us by the Master is an absolute antagonism to certain well-defined modern tendencies. First, there is the intellectual pride which unduly glorifies the human reason. It is easy in these days of scientific discovery and achievement, of mental growth and expansion, to assume that no proposition or fact has a right to human credit that cannot be comprehended within the compass of the human mind's intellectual apparatus. If the inspiration of the Bible and the divinity of Jesus Christ defy the tabulated laws of logic and human speculation, so much the worse for these beliefs! This is to Prussianize the intellectual powers. Its cure is the childlike humility preached and practiced by Jesus! more of reverent wonder in the face of mystery, more of distrust of the infallibility of the human reason, more of admission that we know nothing, and that God knows all. And this without denying or hampering the lawful range of the mind's activities.

Then, again, there is social pride. It is difficult to keep away from the subtle, persistent heresy that external conditions make a difference in men's and women's internal worth. Although we would probably deny the thought with our lips, yet too many of us act upon it constantly in our social relations. That possessions or position, birth or external condition should make any one "better" than any one else, more valuable inherently, or more worthy of disinterested service is a monstrous proposition, a violation both of the spirit of human democracy and of the laws of God's eternal kingdom. All souls are created equal. Even the worst sinner alive is worth saving. Nobody is unworthy of the best service another can render if such service be needed. The noblest monument ever reared to the essential worth of man, without respect to fortune or condition, is the cross of Jesus Christ. The "humility of the little child" enables us to recognize this transcendent truth.

And, lastly, there is moral pride. There are many, many sorts of sin, to which have become attached various adjectives of degree. We are prone, therefore, to palliate certain sins because they are not as bad as certain others, especially when these "lesser" sins have a place within our own lives. But such a system of notation often leads to self-righteous moral pride. To know that we have never committed those acts popularly catalogued "mortal" or "heinous" is not to say that we are not sinners. Envy, greed, jealousy, inhumanity, selfishness, worldliness and irreligion are more common, and far more insinuating than murder, theft and the grosser moral sins. No one is free from sin, and there is no place in the human breast for moral pride or feeling of moral superiority. "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone" is the bitter test before which none can stand. O, for the child's humility and honesty to see ourselves as we are: no better than our fellows, all sinners, and all in need of God's salvation!

What better Lenten exercise, then, than the cultivation of that same childlike quality which will send us to God's footstool in repentance, and to God's table in faith, where in the humble spirit that banishes false intellectual, social and moral pride, we may become the recipients of God's grace? Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same shall be greatest in the kingdom of heaven!—The Church News, West Virginia.

Nothing but an aroused public opinion will ever obtain proper reforms, the rights of the people and the enforcement of law. The open violation of the prohibition law, the prevalence of gambling and prostitution, all of which are often connived at by public officials, the laxness of divorce procedure, are against the rights of the people to live in decent communities and to bring up their families under proper conditions, to say nothing of the peace and dignity of the State. Jesus Christ is the greatest radical of history, and if His second coming is soon I think He will find few with which to fraternize. He not only denounced divorce, but such other social sins as the oppression of labor, profiteering, usury and such individual sins as adultery, lying, hypocrisy and weak knees.—Bishop Hunting, of Nevada.

Church Intelligence

Prayer for the Country.

We are moved to suggest to all our clergy the use of special prayers for our country and our government on the Sunday (February 27th) preceding the inauguration of the new administration.

No thoughtful person can peruse the annals of our national history, from the beginnings at Jamestown and Plymouth Rock down to this day, without reverently recognizing in them God's hand of guidance stretched out and God's help of grace poured forth.

With faith strengthened, we want to say our thanks to Him. With hope brightened, we want to renew our vows before Him. With love deepened, we want to offer and present ourselves to Him to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice. Hitherto hath the merciful Lord indeed helped us. Let us supplicate Him to continue the help.

O Saviour of the world, King of Kings and Lord of Lords and Prince of Peace, grant, we pray Thee, to the Church purity, to the nation righteousness, and to the world peace; and to Thee, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be the thanks and the promise of the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.
THOMAS F. GAILOR,
Chairman of the House of Bishops.

Bishop Brewster, of Maine, Holds Conferences On Reunion.

In compliance with the request of the Commission on the World Conference on Faith and Order, Bishop Brewster held a conference of local ministers of Bangor and Old Town, on the occasion of his visitation to St. John's Church, Bangor, Monday, January 31. He had distributed among the ministers beforehand the four topics pertaining to the faith of the reunited Church, which had been set forth by the Subjects Committee of the Geneva Conference.

The conference at Bangor showed a very excellent spirit. After the presentation of the subject by the Bishop, who read extracts from the report of the Geneva Conference, on the subject of Faith, remarks were made by several of the ministers, including three profsors of the Bangor Theological Seminary (Congregational), voicing deep convictions regarding faith, and a sympathetic attitude towards the whole problem of reunion. The conference was felt distinctly to have promoted mutual respect and an appreciation of the critical importance of the questions involved, and of the need of constant prayer. Several expressed their thanks to the Bishop for having brought them together for this purpose.

Similar conferences, though attended by fewer clergy, but showing an equally gratifying temper and good will, have been held by the Bishop at Waterville, Rumford, Newcastle and Wiscasset. And the Bishop proposes to hold these local conferences at his visitations at other places, such as Augusta, Camden and so forth.

Summer Schools of Second Province.

Princeton: The second annual session of the Princeton school will be held from June 27 to July 8. The Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., will be acting president, and the Rev. G. Ashton Oldham will be the pastor. The Rev. W. L. DeVries, Ph. D., D. D., canon of Washington, will conduct the General Bible Hour, and Mrs. George Biller the Life Work Class. The three departments of Religious Education, Missions and Christian Social Service offer courses in subject matter and in method, junior and senior teaching, missionary problems, Christian fundamentals, social service literature and methods, the survey, the problem of the foreign born, training classes for associates and members of the Girls' Friendly Society and for workers in the Church Mission of Help, a class on Personal Religion for juniors, conducted by President Bell, of St. Stephen's College, and a week-end conference for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, July 2-4. One can see from this outline that the program is varied and comprehensive; there is something of vital importance to every one in any way interested in the work of the Church.

Geneva: The ninth annual session of the Geneva school will be held at Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., from July 11 to 22. The Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearly, D. D., will be president and pastor; the Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, D. D., will conduct the General Bible Hour; and Mrs. George Biller the Life Work Class. The program is similar to that for the Princeton school, but not identical. Besides President Bell's class on Personal Religion for juniors, the Rev. William A. R. Goodwin, D. D., will conduct a similar class for seniors; the Rev. Paul Micou will teach Church Life and Policy, and there will be a week-end conference for men on the Problems of the Church, conducted by Mr. Lewis Franklin.

At both schools there will be leaders for boys and girls, a mystery play, and an efficient recreation committee to help in preserving the healthful balance of work and play which is a distinctive feature of the summer schools of Province II.

The growth of the schools has made it necessary this year to divide students into two classes, regular and special; regular students are those who attend the entire session of the school, and these will be given first choice in accommodations on the campus; special students are those attending only part time, and these may have to room off the campus. Full information regarding courses, fees, etc., may be obtained from the Secretary, Mrs. Gerald H. Lewis, St. Andrew's Rectory, Beacon, N. Y.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop.

The Huguenot Evangelical Society, which is interdenominational, will hold its winter meeting at St. James' Episcopal Church, Richmond, on Monday evening, February 28. The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, will deliver the address. He is a leader in evangelistic work and is much in demand as a speaker in large conventions all over the United States. The aim of the Huguenot Society is the support of a pastor in the Central Evangelical Society of the Protestant Church of France. All who feel an interest in this work are invited to attend.

The Richmond Clericus, at its meeting on Monday, February 14, adopted resolutions pledging support to all officials who are enforcing State and national prohibition laws. The resolutions approve the use of the ouster law to remove from office any official who for any cause has neglected his sworn duty. A committee was named to present the resolutions to the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs and similar organizations, and to the State Prohibition Commssioner.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Aid for Prisoners.

The annual meeting of the Prisoners' Aid Association was held at Trinity Community House on Tuesday afternoon, February 15, with a record-breaking attendance. Invitations to the meeting had been previously sent out by the Bishop of Washington. In the Bishop's absence Mr. George A. King presided. Miss Mabel Boardman, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, gave a short talk advocating the formation of a committee of representative business men of the Church to whom discharged prisoners might go for help in securing work. The problem of finding employment for these men is great, and that the endorsement of a well known business man of the Church might go far to help solve the problem was Miss Boardman's opinion.

The annual report of the Association, made by Mrs. David Ransom Covell, was full of interest and encouragement, and contained an item which made all who heard it glad to go forward with this good work. Of all the money which had been given to prisoners to help them in emergencies, to send them home, etc., in the year, this fund amounting to about $150, all had been returned except about ten dollars. Such an understanding by the prisoners of the spirit of the Association is a tribute in itself.

Motion pictures of prison work were shown by Mr. Oliver Hoyem, of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor, and the Association was especially fortunate in having as the principal speaker of the occasion the Hon. Thomas Mott Osborne, formerly warden of Sing Sing. Mr. Osborne stirred his hearers with tales of incidents in his own experience with prisoners, and perhaps that which impressed them most was his human attitude toward and interpretation of a prisoner's needs.

The Prisoners' Aid Association, under the direct charge of the Diocese of Washington, is the only organization of its kind connected with any church in Washington, and according to testimonials from those in positions to know, it is of real vital help in the courts, prisons and on the streets every day by its very constructive work.

The annual church service of the Sons of the Revolution, which for many years has been held on the Sunday nearest Washington's birthday anniversary, was held this year at old St. John's Church on Sunday, February 20, in the afternoon. Special music was provided and the sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. William A. Leonard, Bishop of Ohio, and former rector of the church. At this service members of the District of Columbia Chapter of the Society of Colonial Wars were present as the special guests of the Sons of the Revolution.

Work in the Blue Ridge Mountains: An illustrated lecture on the work of the missions of the Episcopal Church in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia was given on Friday, February 25, at Epiphany Parish Hall, at 8 o'clock, by the Rev. Frank S. Persons, in charge of one of these mountain missions. The pictures illustrating the work have been recently made for the use of the Missionary Department of the Church's Council, and the lecture here was arranged by the Washington Auxiliary Committee of the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, under Archdeacon Neve.

Remarkable Record of Episcopal Home for Children: Effective business management and widespread co-operation of the churches were the outstanding features of the report of the treasurer of the Board of Lady Managers of the Episcopal Home for Children, read at the February meeting of the Board, held recently at Epiphany Parish Hall. Only a few years ago this Home, with its splendid work, was living from "hand to mouth," as the saying goes, so that the financial success of the Board is all the more gratifying. Over $15,000 had been received during the year, according to this report, of which $500 (a legacy) has been reserved for the building fund and $1,200 has been invested in Liberty Bonds. All expenses have been paid and a balance of over $400 remains in the treasury. Without an endowment, and entirely dependent upon the people of the Church from month to month, this record was considered remarkable by those who heard the report at the meeting of the Board, as well as by those to whom it was read at a meeting of the incorporators of the Home. This body consists of good business men of the Church, who paid great tribute to the efficiency in the handling of the funds of the Home.

In addition to maintaining the present high standard of regular support, the board is endeavoring to add to the building fund sufficiently to build quarters for children under five years of age and keep a regular trained nurse to be in charge of them. A good nucleus for this project is already in hand, and it is hoped that in the present year sufficient will be contributed to begin work on the new building.

M. M. W.

At St. John's Church, the Rev. Canon Douglas in charge in the absence of the Rev. Roland Cotton Smith, a series of afternoon services are being held during the week days of Lent in the interest of Church unity, and are attracting large congregations. In regard to these, Canon Douglas says:

"The spirit of Christian unity must be cultivated between the different churches before formal reunion can be effected; and for five weeks this Lent there is being held a series of services on week-day afternoons to promote and express the spirit of Christian unity. There are three bishops of the Episcopal Church and Bishop McDowell, of the Methodist Church, along with other clergymen and laymen of the Episcopal and other churches, who will follow one another in the same pulpit, each with his own message as a Christian man to men. All of this with the hearty approval and co-operation of Bishop Harding, of this Diocese."

E. H. C.

In Grace Church on Thursday evening, February 3, a service was held for the Washington Guild of Servers and Lay Readers. The choir of the church was assisted by that of Grace Church, Alexandria. About fifty men and boys, vested, were also in the procession. The Rev. Edgar Carpenter, of the latter church, preached, and a number of clergymen took part in the service, at the close of which a festival Te Deum was sung. The Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde, rector of the parish, entertained the guild and visiting clergy at dinner in the parish hall before the service.

EAST CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

St. Mary's Church, Kinston, has made a remarkable financial record during the year 1920, as was brought out at the annual parish meeting. During the year $4,200 was expended on parish support, and over $5,600 given to purposes outside the parish. Before the Nation-Wide Campaign began the pledged income of the parish was $2,000. Not many parishes can show a larger expenditure for purposes outside the parish boundaries than within, and considering the past condition of this parish, the present achievement is really remarkable.

The rector, the Rev. Francis J. H. Coffin, is considering a call to the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rocky Mount, Diocese of North Carolina.

NEW JERSEY

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop.

St. Augustine's Church, Atlantic City: The Rev. James N. Deaver, rector of St. Augustine's Church, completes twenty years of service on March 1. Seventeen of teh twenty years have been used to develop a congregation of colored people along the lines of self-help and self-respect. The people have always paid all of their current obligations, and members of St. Augustine's congregation can be found in positions of confidence and trust in nearly every hotel in Atlantic City.

The past three years the congregation has been trying to extend the church's influence by the erection of a new church building. It is now under roof, but $10,000 is urgently needed to complete the church, and it is hoped this sum may be in hand by March 1, in time for the twentieth anniversary of the rector.

WEST VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.

Zion Church, Charles Town, the Rev. C. H. Goodwin, rector, has voluntarily requetsed that its quota for the year 1921 to the Nation-Wide Campaign Fund be increased $700, feeling that the King's business demands haste, and that the Church generally has been content with too petty an energy and vision of stewardship. There is also an increase of $500 for parish missions.

Just before Lent a man's supper was held at Zion Parish House, with ninety men present. Dr. Glazebrook, of Washington, gave an inspiring address on the opportunity of laymen in the Church today.

IDAHO.

Rt. Rev. F. H. Touret, D. D., Bishop.

St. Luke's Hospital, Boise.

St. Luke's Hospital, Boise, is taking on new life. The Board of Directors has been strengthened by the addition to its membership of the Hon. Frederick S. Randall, Lewiston, Idaho; the Hon. Charles P. McCarthy, judge of the Supreme Court, Bose; Mr. Craig Coffin, president of the Boise City National Bank, and Mr. Frank T. Wyman, one of the ablest lawyers in Boise. These four men, with the present membership of the Board, all prominent men in the community, make a very strong Hospital Board.

To meet the standards of the American College of Surgeons, a medical staff, composed of the foremost physicians of Boise, has been organized. Also to meet the standards of the American College of Surgeons, a new labatory is about to be installed. Under the constructive leadership of Miss Pine, our new superintendent, conditions are extremely hopeful at St. Luke's Hospital. Having a new building is imperative to meet the demand, and it is hoped that in the near future money for such building may be secured. St. Luke's Hospital could spend to advantage for immediate needs of expansion at least $200,000.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Union Lenten Held at Roanoke Theatre.

Under the auspices of the Ministerial Union of Roanoke, and through the courtesy of Mr. Elmore Heins, the Lenten services for men are being held in the Roanoke Theatre. It is the purpose of the committee in charge to draw from the different communions the best men available. For the Episcopal Church the committee has been exceedingly fortunate in obtaining Bishop Thomas C. Darst, D. D., of Wilmington, N. C., and the Rev. George H. Toop, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, Pa.

Lenten services are also being held on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at St. John's Church and on Tuesdays and Thursdays at Christ Church. On Friday mornings there is a Bible class for women conducted by the rector of St. John's Church.

Christ Church, Marion: On Sunday morning, January 30, Bishop Jett visited Christ Church and confirmed a class of four, presented by the Rev. Claudius F. Smith. This parish is one of the mission points ministered to by Mr. Smith, the Diocesan Missioner, and the well filled pews attested the popularity and good work which has been done in so short a time by Mr. Smith.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Laying of Cornerstone of Greek Orthodox Church.

Members of the Greek Orthodox Church, who since 1916 have been worshipping in the parish house of the Church of the Atonement, Augusta, every Monday and Thursday evening, will soon have a church of their own, just one block from the Church of the Atonement. Recently the cornerstone was laid, with the exercises of the Orthodox Church conducted by the rector, the Rev. Thomas Papageorge, assisted by the Rev. F. W. B. Dorsett, rector of the Church of the Atonement. The cornerstone bears the inscription, "Holy Trinity Church, February 13, 1921." According to an old custom, contributions were given to be used for the building fund, and $650 was donated. Practically every Greek in the city was present, and scores of Augustans attended the ceremonies.

Augusta: A newly organized branch of the Woman's Auxiliary at the Church of the Atonement, Augusta, is very active. A Minstrel Club, formed of the young men of the parish, meets twice a week, and is proving a great source of pleasure to the members. Crowds are attending the Sunday evening service, when the rector, the Rev. F. W. B. Dorsett, is preaching on the subject, "Masonry and the Church."

E. D. J.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop McCormick Tendered a Dinner On Fifteenth Anniversary of His Consecration.

The laymen of the Diocese entertained at dinner on February 14 in the Pantlind Hotel, Grand Rapids, in honor of the fifteenth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., as Bishop of the iocese of Western Michigan. At this dinner, which was attended by four hundred people, clergy and representatives from nearly every parish in the Diocese, telegrams and messages of congratulations were read from many friends of the Bishop, among them being Governor Alex. J. Groesbeck, General John J. Pershing, Robert H. Shields, Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle, Thomas J. O'Brien, Dean Francis S. White, members of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, of which Bishop McCormick is chairman, and bishops from many of the surrounding and even distant dioceses.

Expressions of respect, of love and of allegiance to Bishop McCormick were the keynote of each address.

A call to a Christian solution of the problems facing the present world was sounded by Bishop C. P. Anderson, of Chicago, who preached the sermon at the consecration of Bishop McCormick, and who was the principal speaker of the evening

"It is a characteristic of the American people," he said, "that we change quickly from a plane of lofty idealism to the depths of sordid materialism. During the war we showed the best that was in us. But today, instead of reaping the fruits of victory, we have dropped to the most common and vulgar kind of political squabbles. And this change has been reflected in the moral life of the people. War has left behind for us a moral and physical wreckage which must be cleared away.

"The modern Christian is one who merely applies the principles of Christianity to the everyday life. It merely means that the plumber must 'wipe his joints clean,' that the carpenter must measure his work surely, that the mason must spread his mortar honestly, that the banker must deal squarely with all, that the scrub woman must give a full day's work, and that the employer must give an honest wage for work honestly done."

Personal Notes

The Rev. Roland C. Ormsbee, for four years rector of St. Margaret's Parish, Bronx, and rector of St. Paul's Parish, Newark, when the war came, has become curate at the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, the Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet, rector. He resigned the Newark Parish to enter upon war service, and served with the Y. in France.

The Rev. Austin B. Mitchell, rector for some eight years past of Nelson Parish, Jefferson County, W. Va., has accepted the call of the rector of Zion Church, Charles Town, W. Va., to become assistant minister, and to have charge under the rector of the work at Harper's Ferry, Rippon and St. Andrew's on the Blue Ridge. Mr. Mitchell will live in Charles Town, and enters upon his new work March 1.

The Rev. J. R. Ellis, of Yancey, Va., left on February 14 for the Staunton (Va.) Hospital, where he undergoes a minor operation. He hopes to be able to return to his home at Yancey in two weeks.

The address of the Rev. John E. Shea is now Wymore, Neb., where he has charge of St. Luke's Church.

The Rev. Basil M. Walton, of Wadesboro, N. C., will shortly take charge of St. James' Church, Lenoir, N. C.

Bishop Burleson, of South Dakota, is assisting the Diocese of New York by taking appointments made for the late Bishop Burch. Bishop Lloyd has returned to his parish at White Plains.

The Rev. Walter B. Clark is minister in charge of the Church of the Advent, Williamston, and St. Martin's Church, Hamilton, N. C.

The Rev. Peter Edwards, until recently a Presbyterian clergyman, has been accepted as a postulant for orders, and has been placed in charge of work at Lisbon, N. D.

The Rev. Chester Wood, of Lansing, Mich., is supplying at St. Andrew's Church, Emporia, Kan., pending the call of a rector.

The Standing Committee of the Diocese of Oregon has organized by electing the Rev. Thomas Jenkins, 140 East Twelfth Street, Portland, as president, and Mr. C. N. Huggins, 705 Northwest Bank Building, Portland, as secretary.

Ordinations.

On February 2, in Trinity Church, Cyracuse. N. Y., Bishop Fiske, at the request of the Bishop of Atlanta, ordained Mr. Edgar Legare Pennington to the diaconate. The candidate was presented by the Rev. George D. Ashley, the Rev. E. J. Gates read the Litany, the Rev. A. A. Jaynes preached. the Rev. Dr. William M. Beauchamp and the Ven. H. W. Foreman also assisted in the service. Mr. Pennington, a native of Georgia, has been living in Camden, N. Y., for some months, winning back health impaired by war experience. He was received as a postulant by Bishop Nelson, of Atlanta, in 1916.

On February 6 Mr. James Colletti, teacher in the Central High School, Davenport, Iowa, was ordered deacon by Bishop Morrison. Mr. Colletti came from Italy when three years old. He is a graduate of Columbia and studied theology in the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Mass. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Rudd. Mr. Colletti will continue teaching, and will have charge of Young People's Work in the Cathedral Parish, as assistant to Dean Hare.

Deaths.

The Rev. John Cyril France, rector of St. James' Church, Fair Haven, Conn., died on the afternoon of January 31, in his sixty-fifth year. Funeral services were held in St. James' Church on Thursday afternoon, February 3, his brother clergy of the city acting as honorary pall-bearers.

The Rev. J. L. S. Foster, rector of St. John's Church, Oakland, Cal., died on Thursday, January 13. The funeral services were conducted by Bishop Nichols and Bishop Parsons, assisted by Dean Gee and the Rev. A. L. Mitchell.

The Rev. Augustus A. Joss died early in January at Minneapolis, Minn., after a long and very painful illness. The Bishop and Dr. Freeman, of St. Mark's Church, conducted the burial services from Lakewood Chapel.

Lent.

Every effective man has to be first a strong and intelligent man. The man behind the gun has had to have discipline and drill. Every man to be useful as an engineer or in any calling has to have training. First, what sort of man is the man doing the work? Then, what insight, what aptitude, what power has the worker?

Many a good work fails because the man who is trying to do it is an unwise, a weak, a selfish man, or a man without inspiration and sense of communion with God.

The world of business and of society is made up of individuals. The future depends upon the good sense, the good will, the patient and wise effort of individuals.

You must reach men one by one. You have to change the thoughts of men one by one, develop the corporate character by teaching and training the individuals who make the whole.

The Church has a decisive question to ask: What sort of a man or woman are you? You talk big, great swelling words of love for man, and you are apparently very busy, but are you sincere? When it comes to a personal loss for a better humanity, will you face loss and die that men may live?

A devout Lent will reinforce all spiritual energies. You need not fear that the great cause of human welfare is going to suffer because you take forty days for seeking an interior life of conscious communion with God. If you are a better man you will do better work. Reform yourself before you go out to reform or better the world.

Perhaps, too, it might be as well to remember that sin and virtue, while affecting others as well as ourselves, no man liveth to himself, is our personal sin and our personal virtue. We have to live with ourselves; we have to find in ourselves sense of uplift and power or a miserable sense of weakness and futility. In a large degree we must live alone, within ourselves. We need God, conviction of the reality of things, of a spiritual interpretation of life, of a life which has fulness, is big, satisfying. Have we found the abundant life? Lent might be the dawn of a new day if we would use it intelligently, devoutly.

And we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Each one must answer to God for the deeds done in the body. The Church asks you to face the fact and repenting of past neglect and wrong-doing and start out a new and a better life.

There has been no change in life, no new knowledge, no new opportunity which has changed the great realities. The world needs today a season of retirement, meditation prayer rather more than Lent was needed yesterday. We might get more light if we prayed more.—Bishop Morrison, in Iowa Churchman.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

TO WHOM DOES THIS APPLY?

The following has been sent to us for publication, and in printing it we ask your careful consideration for the comment:

Could This Happen in Your Church?

Excerpts From a Possible Obituary Notice.

"For five years he and his family were communicants of ————.

Seldom was he absent from his pew. His wife belonged to and took part in the church societies. They enjoyed the inspiring sermons, the well rendered service and the beautiful music.

He died and his wife mourns his loss without their rector ever having known them. He nor either of his several assistants ever crossed their threshold. The departed was of a forgiving nature, and just before he died said he hoped to meet his unknown rector in heaven. It is right to give the treasurer of this church credit for being consistent and regularly sending our deceased friend notice of his dues."

We sympathize deeply with the writer of the foregoing, and we feel sure that he had good reason to write as he did.

It is said that once a very successful rector who always built up large, strong congregations wherever he went, and yet who seemed to have no very brilliant attainments, was asked how he accomplished it.

"Well," he replied, "I visit. Then I visit again. Then I visit some more, and I keep on visiting."

That was the whole secret, and that will bring the answer, too.

Of course there are visits and visits. People don't want the rector to come and sit a whole afternoon, and keep them wondering what in the world they will say to him next to keep the conversation from dying a natural death from lack of animation. Nor do they always want to discuss nothing but their soul's welfare.

Visits are somewhat like sermons. It is a good plan to leave a little to be said the next time. But even a long visit is better than none. (We doubt if this is equally true of sermons unless they are very unusual ones.) Above all things, however, make the visits friendly and not formal nor professional.

We would not have our lay people get too cheerful over this article, however, for there is something to be said for the clergy, too.

Nothing is more difficult in looking over a congregation than to tell who is in it. It is very hard to "spot" a stranger, and if you attend a church a few times and the clergyman doesn't pay any particular attention to you, then go up to him and tell who you are, and where you live, and that you would appreciate a call from him. People have been known to do wonders with obdurate ministers by means of a little friendly cordiality. Try it! Try it more than once, too.

Another thing lay people must remember, and that they very often seem to forget, and that is that preachers are not mind-readers. They can't tell by the look on your face that your husband is sick, or that you have moved across town, or that you have friends visiting you whom you would like to have called on.

In other words, you must be just as outspoken with your rector as you are with any one else, and tell him what you would like him to do sometimes, and it will help all around.

PREVENTION.

Long years ago our Saviour said, "There must needs be evil, but woe to him by whom evil cometh."

Would not this condemnation apply, too, to those persons who know of a method of the preventing of evil and do not use it?

Before now we have pointed out the uses and advantages of the probation system. We publish herewith a splendid tribute to what it is accomplishing in New York, made by one who knows whereof he speaks:

It is becoming increasingly difficult for boys to be bad in New York. Trivial cases no longer get into the Children's Court, and the creation of "institutionalized" youths, which in many cases has spelled a life of crime, is at a minimum, due to the probation system.

"There is nothing sensational in the work," declared Presiding Judge Franklin Chase Hoyt, of the Children's Court. "The same ratio of waywardness among children exists today as did ten years ago. But the agents for corrective purposes have increased tremendously, leaving the court practically free to deal with the big matters. We are now able to go into them as we wish.

"The big improvement is the result of the civic and social effort to eliminate the causes which have been responsible for much delinquency and neglect in the past.

"The work of prevention which has been engaging the attention of so many agencies and organizations—the awakening public conscience and intelligence, as evidenced by the activities of the settlements, community centers, clubs, parents' associations and the like—the development of the probation system—the intensive efforts of the court itself—these are some of the things which have improved the conditions surrounding the children of our community.

"When one reflects that in 1917 approximately 17,000 children were arraigned before the courts, which was at a ratio of 40.93 to each 10,000 of population, and that they have gradually, but steadily, decreased to 11,582 in 1920, which is at the ratio of 20.6 to each 10,000, it must serve to encourage even the most pessimistic.

"Indeed, had the ratio of arraignments to population in 1920 remained the same as in 1907, the arraignments in 1920 would have reached the huge total of 23,002, or 11,420 more than what they actually were.

"Now, it is the more difficult problems that we are called upon to solve, and to that end the court is devoting greater effort and deeper study year by year. The Children's Court is not a cure-all for the evils that afflict the children of the community.

"By its very nature it must deal with the cases which come before it one by one, specifically and individually. It is, as it should be, a tribunal of last resort, and if the faults of the children can be cured without bringing them before it, so much the better both for the children and the court.

"Perhaps the most significant feature of the year's work is to be found in the great decrease in the number of children committed to institutions. In 1920 such commitments fell to 1,992, the smallest number ever recorded. This means a tremendous saving to the city—in fact, the saving is considerably in excess of all the court work, and it avoids the evils of institutionalism."

Justice Hoyt exploded the theory that any one race is responsible for increasing the figures for juvenile lawbreaking. The ratios, he declared, are exactly in keeping with the various racial elements in the city, no more and no less. Furthermore, there was no big increase of child-crime during the war years, and the Eighteenth Amendment has not affected the situation to any noticeable degree.

"The one big improvement," the justice emphasized, "is in the corrective influences. More attention is being devoted to the rising generation by various civic agencies, and this is a wonderful sign. The progress can be reckoned from just a little fact. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals antedated the similar society for children. An agent of the former found a child in distress and figured that the child, in the last analysis, was an animal, and should be protected.

"That and the figures I have given show the progress."

There is no reason why the same sort of thing that is being done in New York should not be carried out all over the country, and it is certainly the duty of the churches to be leaders in such efforts.

Every clergyman can be a probation officer if he will give it a little time, and he can and should organize "big brother" movements in his church.

It is a disgrace to our churches that so much of this kind of work has been left unchurchly, if not unchristian, organizations, that many of our young people of today have the impression that there are more opportunities for real service outside of the churches than in them.

There is no community so good that it cannot be made better by a community effort, and our clergy should be the leaders of such efforts.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

FEBRUARY.

1. Tuesday.
2. Wednesday. Purification B. V. M.
6. Quinquagesima Sunday.
9. Ash Wednesday.
13. First Sunday in Lent.
16, 18, 19. Ember Days.
20. Second Sunday in Lent.
24. Thursday. St. Matthias.
27. Third Sunday in Lent.
28. Monday.

Collect for Third Sunday in Lent.

We beseech Thee, Almighty God, look upon the hearty desires of Thy humble servants, and stretch forth the right hand of Thy Master, to be our defense against all our enemies, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Seeker.

O Lord ,the most fair, the most tender,
My heart is adrift and alone;
My heart is a-weary and thirsty,
Athirst for a joy unknown.
From a child I followed it, chased it,
By wilderness, wold and hill;
I never have reached it or seen it,
Yet must I follow it still.

In those olden years did I seek it,
In the sweet, fair things around;
But the more I sought and thirsted,
The less, O my Lord, have I found.
When nearest it seemed to my grasping,
It fled like a wandering thought;
I never have known what it is, Lord,
Too well know I what it is not.

"It is I, it is I, the Eternal,
Who chose thee Mine own to be—
Who chose thee before the ages,
Who chose thee eternally.
I stood in the way before thee,
In the ways thou wouldest have gone;
For this is the mark of My chosen,
That they shall be mine alone.

— Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

At Marbles for the Master.

W. H. Morse, M. D.

Every year, just after winter has commenced to linger in the lap of spring, and before the ground is settled and the wintry winds are at rest, the boys are at marbles. There are seasons for tops, shinny, kites, ball and football, but among the number marbles is second to none; the game always has been, and always will be. It was in vogue when I was a boy, and my grand-uncle used to give me points on it, based on his experience when he was a lad. Perhaps it was for that reason that I was quite an accomplished player. Yes, I have played at marbles many and many a time in my boyhood, and once more lately, since my fiftieth birthday. That was a game for the Master.

I am interested in the Bible mission work among the Indians, and one spring, not many years ago, I was endeavoring to have an interview in that interest with an eminent Italian gentleman who was in this country. He was the Duke of the Abruzzi, a brother of the King of Italy, and I had learned from some of my friends in his country that he was supposed to be favorable to our endeavors. So of course I had to see if I could talk with him on the matter. He was in New York, and I did not manage to catch him there. He went to Washington, and there I sought him again, but unsuccessfully, as he was busy with social functions. While I waited for my chance, I found that he was to pay a visit on a certain Monday to the Hon. Henry G. Davis, at Elkins, W. Va. So on the Saturday morning preceding I went out into West Virginia, there to lay in wait for him when he should arrive. At Elkins I met a school friend who lived in a small town only a short distance away, and he invited me to spend Sunday with him.

"And say, doctor," he went on with his invitation, "I tell you what you must do! You must conduct services for us on Sunday morning."

He explained that there was at one time a little Episcopal Church in his village, which had been quite flourishing, and was the only place of worship, but that in recent years it had not prospered, and services were held but once a month by an elderly rector, who, if I remember rightly, came out from Wheeling. There was a movement on foot to have him come fortnightly, or to have a minister from some other denomination hold a meeting on the mid-Sunday.

"So our folks will be only too glad to have you come," my friend said, "as it will be two weeks before the rector comes."

I consented, and went out with him to his place, where he caused it to be known that on the following morning there would be a "preacher from Connecticut" who would hold services. I took dinner with him and his family. He had already spread the news to some extent, and was to do the same during the afternoon and evening. While we were at table his nephew came in, and from what he said I noticed at once that my friend was perturbed. He bit his lips, and then with manifest impatience explained.

A young fellow from the mountains, who was known as Plump Parshall, had come down, and was to be the inspiration of a big time on Sunday. He and several of his mountain people were expert at marbles, and his coming was the signal for a sort of gala day in the village. Marbles would be played from early morning, and in honor of the occasion the women would provide a picnic dinner; and there would be liquid refreshment with it, after Parshall had taught the game and beaten all hands.

This was what disquieted my host. The marbles would interfere with the worship. He was plainly blue, and although he went out to give his notices of the meeting, he showed his vexation. I left the house with the nephew, a boy of fifteen, who undertook to show me about. There was not much to be seen. The one little church, one general store, a carpenter shop, three or four other business buildings, and perhaps twenty houses, made up the village. But there was something else, more than these sights, that the boy was anxious for me to see, and he soon gave me the opportunity. This was the redoubtable Plump, a long, lean mountaineer, who, surrounded by a crowd of boys and young men, in front of the carpenter's shop, was demonstrating marbles and bragging of his prowess.

When we stopped to watch what was going on Plump caught sight of me, the only stranger in the place, and shouted a "defi" at me.

"Be 'round tomorrer," he said, "an' I dare ye, or any un else, to play me!"

I made no reply, but walked on with the boy. An idea advanced itself. The boy had incidentally told me that he had a brother who managed the general store, and he introduced me to him. Drawing him into conversation, I found that he was religiously inclined, and also that he furnished the marbles for the Sunday games. He declared that he would not sell on Sunday, and that those who bought would have to do so before he closed that night. He and I had a little confidential conversation, and then the boy and I resumed our sight-seeing.

When again we reached the group at the shop Plump came to my side and asked if I would like to "try on" in the morning?

"Not on Sunday," I replied, "but I have no objection to playing now."

At once he was tickled. But he craftily put forward some of his mountain friends, to let me "practice" on them, reserving his dignity. Before I began to play I remarked that I always played "for keeps." That was "all right." In five minutes I was in the game. It did not take long to show my skill. One after another player was defeated by me. Then Plump pushed all aside and played. He also was beaten, game after game, and my gains filled the nephew's bag. When darkness put a stop to the playing Plump announced that he "hadn't ruther played 't all, an' in the mornin' he 'd unbrace an' show me." I thanked him, and then quietly invited him and his friends to church, again reminding him that I did not play on Sunday. My invitation was hooted.

"Bettah give up readin' prayers, an' play!" Plump replied.

"Say, you cleaned out the whole gang," the boy said to me as we walked away.

Practically I had done so. After I left, Plump and the others went to the store to replenish their stock, and there to learn that every marble in the store had been sold—to me. When Sunday came I had a large audience, and in it was Plump and his friends. There were no marble games that day, and the picnic dinner was in honor of the meeting, and not the marbles. After it was finished nothing would do but I must hold an afternoon meeting, which I did, and again the marble expert was there, and after meeting warmly shook hands with me.

Can You Live On Forty Cents a Day?

Is the cost of living bothering you? Moy Ling, King Mai and Yim Mai live on forty cents a day when they are at home. They are now in New York to participate in the International Silk Show, and are the first Chinese women who ever set foot out of China on such a mission. In spite of this low cost of living, they are fat, jolly and strong, so expert at their work of reeling the raw silk from the cocoon that out of thousands of other filature hands, they have been chosen to demonstrate the first step in the styles of 1921.

In Southern China, where they live and work, their diet is chiefly rice and tea. Their buxom appearance is proof positive that any one short of funds can live and flourish on rice. Beginners at their work are paid thirty cents a day. Being expert, they receive the munificent sum of forty cents, and even sixty cents at times, and are putting money by for hard times.

At the International Institute of the Young Women's Christian Association in Gramercy Park, where they are staying under the official chaperonage of the Y. W. C. A., they cling to their Chinese rice diet. Not even fried chicken a la Maryland and hot cakes from the famous Mandy cook can tempt them.

Speaking not a word of English, yet by their quick responsive traits and affection these quaintly be-trousered little creatures have already endeared themselves to the household. Only when displaying her locket with the picture of a man and two "childee" do the eyes of Yim Mai grow wistful. For Yim Mai is an emancipated woman, keeping up to the honors of her profession, although married, with a family back in China awaiting her return.

Quick-witted, exquisitely groomed and neat, with eyes alert at the wonders about them, these Chinese maidens convey an eloquence of wonder and appreciation by quick signs and nods.

"Only in recent years have Chinese women been allowed the full privileges of educatioon, that is, women of the lower classes," says Mr. Chiu, secretary for the delegation, and their spokesman. "Even today the expense of the most elementary schooling is beyond the working women. A free education is something unknown. Until she learns the art of catching the elusive threads of silk cocoons and unwinding the ends of fine fiber, a girl must enter a factory as an apprentice at an infinitesimal wage. Yet every woman, although she may not read and write, knows how to cook rice to a perfection unknown here." Which may explain in part why her better half never grows tired of the same meal.

To reach out a helping hand to these women the Y. W. C. A. is constantly enlarging its foreign work for Chinese women and girls. A staff of one hundred and twenty-eight secretaries, of whom thirty-two are native Chinese, trained by the Association for their work, are carrying on educational and health activities.

For the Southern Churchman.

And Such Are We.

Gene Scott Wright.

The children played upon the strand,
(How sweet their laughter came to me!)
The tide, far out, left bare the sand,
And calm and friendly was the sea.
I lay at ease beneath the shade
Of one small, stunted, leafy tree,
And watched the little ones that played
And built sand-houses merrily.

Ere long I slept, and wandered far
Where sea and skies are ever bright;
Then waked to see, within the bar,
The flowing tide and falling night.
The surf, whipped high by sudden wind,
Dashed ever and anon its spray
Across the lessening isle of sand,
Where huddled children knelt to pray!

Absorbed in play, they'd spared no glance
To rising tide and sinking sun,
Nor saw the storm-cloud's swift advance
To end forever life and fun.
No swimmer I, no help was nigh,
Both beach and children strange to me;
I could but kneel, and call to Him
Who calmed the storm on Galilee.

Beyond the sand-bar, white with foam,
A mighty roller reared its crest.
It seemed to bear the seal of doom,
It caught the lightning on its breast.
It swept the children from their knees,
and bore them, struggling, to the land,
Out of the reach of clutching seas,
It left them high upon the sand.

Dear God, Who heard the children's prayer,
And snatched them from their peril dire,
In later days when, free from care,
They give no heed while higher, higher,
Comes mounting up the tide of years,
When storm-clouds thicken, and the night
Is falling, falling; when with tears
They cry to Thee from woeful plight—

Oh, when the engulfing waters rave,
Let them not sweep far out to sea
Thy careless children—save, oh, save,
And let their sorrows bring to Thee
Each thoughtless soul, safe home at last,
Beyond Temptation's subtle power,
Into the lap of Mercy cast,
Ere yet shall close their evening hour.

For Granted.

"It must be a great comfort to Elsie to have her mother with her," said the grandmother, always interested in the good fortunes of others. "With her two little children to care for, the help and company of such a mother must make her life much easier and happier."

"Yes," assented the visitor. "Last year she couldn't talk enough of what a help and relief it was, how much safer she felt about the children when she had to leave them for a little while This year"—the speaker paused with a little laugh. "Oh, well, mother is just as much a dependence and help, of course, but Elsie has reached the take-it-for-granted stage. You know how that goes. What she couldn't be sufficiently thankful for at first, is now only the usual and expected. There are more demands and less appreciation."

"I see," said the grandmother with her grave little smile that ended in the faintest breath of a sigh. "It's a way we have of treating our blessings."

Louise, sitting at the table with her book, felt a warm flush creeping over her face. She suddenly remembered how much it had meant to her when she first came to spend this winter with grandmother, to find the dish of fruit, the bowl of popcorn, or some little treat awaiting her each afternoon when she came from school; and now she looked for them as a matter of course. Tonight she was so busy thinking of the theme she had to write that she had even forgotten to say, "Thank you!" Then she thought of home and of mother's constant love and service there, and how the whole family depended upon her to keep all the wheels running and the loose ends gathered up. They were so used to the orderly rooms, the comfortable meals promptly served, to mother's remembering all that ought to be remembered, and knowing all that ought to be known, that they were naturally taking her for granted. Suppose some dark day she should find her not there? A lump rose in the girl's throat, and a swift resolution in her heart. Never again would she be so carelessly ungrateful.

Will she remember as the days go on? When God was leading Israel on their long journey they feared and complained as the food grew short. Then, one day, there came the bread from heaven to supply their need, and they gathered it in wondering gratitude morning after morning, all their fear of hunger banished. But as the months went on it grew to be a common thing, accepted carelessly. Manna, of course there would be manna, but one would like a change, and after a time they announced that they "loathed" this light bread. Yet their story is only the story that might in some way be told of us all. Our blessings are so many, our safety and comfort are so expected, the love that blesses our lives and fills our homes is such a familiar thing, that our sense of appreciation dulls, and we forget to thank God for the mercies that are new every morning. Let us learn a new prayer, "Help me to have a grateful heart, and not take all my life's blessings for granted."—Queens' Gardens.

Mary.

I think so often of Mary—
Mary the mother glad,
Who lived in the Nazareth cottage
When Christ was a little Lad.

I think of her in the morning
As she put on His little frock,
And brushed the curls from His forehead,
Smoothing each shining lock,
And heard Him speak with reverence
A little sunrise prayer,
With a look of child-like wonder
Upon His face so fair.

When Joseph had gone to the workshop,
The cottage made trim and neat,
And Jesus played with the children
Who lived across the street;
I think like the sound of music
Was the echo of His voice,
Which sent her pulses thrilling
And made her heart rejoice.

And when He brought His bruises
For her to touch and kiss,
And she smiled away His troubles
With all a mother's bliss,
I think that over her spirit
Stole a promise of endless rest,
As she "magnified the Father"
Who had given her His best.

Then, when the shadows deepened
And the Child, now tired of play,
Rested His head on her bosom
At the close of a weary day,
As she taught Him a psalm of praises,
And mused on prophecies dear,
I think that the song of angels
Fell on her listening ear.

So I often think of Mary,
Mary the mother glad,
Who lived in the Nazareth cottage
When Christ was a little Lad.
—Selected.

The ministry of the Word is also our power against the worldliness of the Church and congregation. Let the standard of the Word be uplifted and pressed on heart and conscience, and the worldly devices and elements in our Church life will fall away and die. The message of the Word for holiness of heart and life will soon settle questionable methods of Church finance, Church life and Church work. And all this will be so because of its power to "edify" the believer. More and better Bible classes, more expository teaching in our sermons, more individual meditation and study and teaching of the Word will soon have its blessed effects in the individual and congregational life.—W. H. Griffith Thomas.

Christian schools in Japan have religious freedom to a greater extent than is usually believed in this country, according to a teacher in one of the largest mission colleges. In his school and in others attendance at daily chapel is compulsory, and the Bible is used as a regular text book. Yet these schools receive full government recognition.

For the Young Folks

A New Version of an Old Rhyme.

"Sing a song of sixpence;
A pocket full of dimes;
Shall I spend them on myself,
To help me have good times?

I think I'll give for missions
At least one dime in ten:
Then if for funds you're lacking,
Just call on me again."

—Selected.

When Jerry Filled the Church.

Snow lay in deep drifts all over the country and filled in the paths of the village homes. Grandfather looked up the street and shook his head.

"Small congregation today. Folks aren't going to plow through drifts to church," he said to grandmother.

Jerry opened the front door and looked out hard. He caught a glimpse of Mr. Saunders, the minister, standing on his doorstep.

"He doesn't like empty seats, and Mr. Saunders is the jolly kind, too. He was just like one of us boys at the picnic at Blue Beach. Wish I could fill up a pew or two for him," mused Jerry.

Then he turned and bounded into the kitchen, hunting for his rubber boots.

"Sonny, why do you leave the door open on such a wintry day?" questioned grandmother, shivering.

"Going right out again, granny," laughed Jerry. "I'm going to dig some paths so folks can go to church."

"Well, I guess it won't be breakin' Sunday to dig paths if it gets folks out to church. If it wasn't for my rheumatism I'd go and help you. Better take the short-handled spade," advised grandfather.

How the snow did fly as Jerry's spade tossed it high on top of the dirt! Puffing, he worked a path through grandfather's gate across the track that village snow-plow had made in the road.

Next door lived the Widow Spear, who had no boys to dig paths for her. Jerry remembered that she didn't get out to church very often on winter days, but he decided to dig her a path.

When the Widow Spear's path had been dug he turned back to the sidewalk and ran down to the church corner, his spade leveling the drifted snow that lay heaped in gateways.

Right across the street lived dear old Aunty Frail. Jerry didn't believe that her girls, who took such good care of her, would let her go out of doors this cold day, but he was going to dig her a path just the same.

He looked up and saw the sexton widening the path through the churchyard. He wanted to dig one more path, so he bent over his spade and sent the snow flying out of Aunty Frail's path, then sped down the street to Lame Peter's gate.

Soon Jerry was back at his own home path, and the bells were ringing for church. He had barely had time to hurry into his Sunday clothes, held ready in grandmother's hands.

"Grandfather says that we ought to be the first to go to church today, seeing the path is clear," she explained.

As they entered grandfather's pew Jerry noticed that the church was already half filled, and as the last bell rang out more folks filed into the church. The minister walked to the pulpit, his eyes shiny as he looked down at the people.

Then after the sermon and when the last prayer had been said and all the people stood at the front door shaking hands with the minister, Jerry heard him say: "I can't tell you how glad I am that you all got out this morning."

"I'm glad I came," laughed the Widow Spear. "I woke up this morning and saw it was so snowy that I said, 'I can't go to church today.' But after that Jerry dug a path for me, and I couldn't stay at home."

"And I want to thank Jerry for digging such a nice, clean path so I could get out this morning," called out Aunty Frail, her face all sunshine.

"Well, when I saw Aunty Frail walking off to church this snowy morning, I said, 'If it's fit for her to be out, I guess I can go as well,'" laughed a neighbor.

"Aye, aye, when I saw the churchyard filling up this wintry morning, I decided that I ought to be in church, so I came also," spoke up a stranger.

"So you see, Jerry, how you filled the church today," exclaimed the minister, slapping Jerry on the back.

Jerry's freckled cheeks crimsoned as he stammered: "I—I—why, I didn't do anything but shovel two or three paths; that's all."—Exchange.

A Present for Ann.

The parcel post wagon came rattling along the street and stopped in front of Grace Holmes' house. Grace ran to the door and held out her hands for the package the postman brought. Then she flew back to the kitchen, where mother was shelling peas.

"Oh, mother, mother," she cried; "I know it's a present!"

"Let me see," said Mrs. Holmes, as she looked at the address. "Why, it has Ann's name on it."

"Ann's name," said Grace in surprise. "Why, Ann is too little to have packages."

"Well, Ann would like to have you open it, Grace," said mother.

Hurriedly Grace cut the string and opened the box. There was a lovely blue sweater of the softest wool.

"A slip-on," cried Grace. "It's just like Harriet's. She has to pull hers on over her head."

Mother read the card which was tucked in it—"For Little Ann, who is six months old today, from Aunt Alice."

My, how Grace did wish for that sweater! It was just the kind she had wanted for a long, long time. It was blue, trimmed with narrow gray stripes; the very colors she wanted, too. If only Aunt Alice had made it too big for the baby, perhaps it would fit her.

She watched as mother slipped the sweater over Ann's head and put her little hands through the sleeves. How pretty she loooked! The blue in the sweater just matched her blue eyes. Then she smiled at mother and laughed right out loud for Grace.

But Grace did not smile back. She kept saying to herself, "If Aunt Alice only had known how much I wanted that sweater she would have made it for me. She could have sent Ann something else. Ann's too little to know the difference, anyway."

All morning long she kept saying it over and over to herself. Her lips were drawn down at the corners and her forehead was puckered up. At last she took a pad and pencil and sat down on the porch steps. She was there a long time, and this is what she wrote: "Dear Aunt Alice:

"Next time you have a sweater to give away I wish you would send it to me. A rattle would do just as well for Ann. She is too little to know the difference.

"Your loving niece,
"Grace."

She folded the letter and put it in her pocket. Then mother brought Ann out in her carriage.

"Grace," she said, "I would like you to wheel Ann up and down on the walk in front of the house until she goes to sleep."

Grace did not look pleased as she generally did when she had Ann in her care. Back and forth she wheeled the carriage. A lady passing said, "What a pretty baby!" but Grace did not pay any attention.

Then Harriet came along. "Oh, look at Ann's new sweater! Grace, let me wheel her—just once."

Grace willingly surrendered the carriage and went and sat down on the steps. She watched Harriet, who was having such a good time with the baby. Ann smiled and smiled. Soon her eyes began to droop and in a moment she was asleep.

"Grace, come look at her," whispered Harriet. "Isn't she just lovely? If I had a little sister I'd want her to have a blue sweater just like Ann's."

Grace looked and she couldn't help but be proud of Ann. Then she thought of the letter in her pocket. She took it out and tore it into very small pieces.

"Why, what's that?" asked Harriet.

"It's a horrid old letter I wrote," answered Grace. "If Ann belonged to you wouldn't you rather have her get a new sweater than for you to have one?"

Harriet said of course she would.

"So would I," said Grace. Then the puckers left her forehead and the corners of her lips turned the right way once more.—Lurana R. Wilson, in The Child's Gem.

Going Calling.

My dolly is so dear,
I take her every day
To call upon our neighbors,
Fine folk they are, I play.

The nearest one is Tabby,
She has four kittens new.
I say, "Good morning, Mrs. Puss,"
And she replies, "Miew, Miew."

I ask her, "How are your babies?
They're looking well today,
Especially the smallest,
Her coat's so soft and gray."

"They're very well," says Tabby;
"But take a seat, I pray."
She doesn't really say it,
I make believe in play.

But soon we must be going,
We've other calls to make.
And so I bow to Tabby,
Her right paw p'litely shake.

Then up I put my sun-shade,
It's pink and ruffled, too.
And dolly dear and I
Make another call or two.

—Selected.

And a Carpenter He Would Be.

Guglielmo Sgagna hated pigs above all things! And that was queer, too, because Guglielmo's father was a swineherd. The happiest hours of Guglielmo's life were those he spent whittling rude toys from blocks of wood far away from the feeding grounds of the pigs. At these rare intervals he was as happy as a lark, all his troubles forgotten.

One day the call came summoning all the brave men of the hills and valleys to the defense of Italy. Guglielmo's father marched away in response to the summons.

"This," thought Guglielmo solemnly to himself, "is the time for me to escape from the pigs. No longer will I herd them. A carpenter I shall be instead."

But woe to the boast of Guglielmo. No one wished so young a boy for a carpenter. As a swineherd only did he seem able to qualify. And so down went his "castles in the air," and amidst their ruins he found the hated pigs once more.

The news of the death of his father reached Guglielmo and filled him with great grief.

"Nothing binds me to my home valley now," he said desolately. "Goodbye, you grunting, despicable pigs. I am off to seek my fortune in fairer ways."

So forth he set to see the world. Through a hundred wild adventures he came safely until at last he reached Messina and found his way to the war orphans' colony of the Junior Red Cross at Citta di Castello. Within half an hour after his arrival he had made the acquaintance of a new suit of clothes and the first good meal in many days. How he thanked the Red Cross! Potatoes and meat! What luxury! He crammed his mouth with both. "Cospetto!" (Plague on it!) The meat was pork! Fate in the shape of a pig was still pursuing him.

And worse was yet to come! Citta di Castello is run on a co-operative self-government plan. The children divide the chores; make their own laws, and elect their officers. The president of this society interviewed Guglielmo.

"What did you do at home?" he asked.

"I tended pigs, but I hate the evil occupation and would fain try my skill at carpentry."

"Time enough for that," said the older boy. "For the time being you shall herd pigs."

"Was there ever a boy more unlucky?" groaned Guglielmo to himself as the older boy walked away.

One sunshiny day when he was seated on the top rail of the pigsty, swinging his feet, he received a wonderful inspiration. Strange to say, its source was no other than a big fat mother pig and her following of squealy little ones.

"When these little beasts begin to grow," thought Guglielmo, "the pen will not be big enough to hold them and they will have to be sold. They will fetch in this case only half the value of a full-grown porker. To grow them full size involves no extra expense, for they live and wax fat on the forest acorns and the scraps from the kitchen. Therefore, if the sty is enlarged it will add to the profit of the school. Yes, and who could enlarge it better than I?" Guglielmo sat up straight and puffed out his chest at the thought. "I shall go to the president at once and tell him my idea and beg his permission to execute it."

Overcome by the splendor of the thought, Guglielmo tumbled off the fence, picked himself up bravely, and set off at a brisk run to make known his request. The long and short of it was that Guglielmo, after much pleading, was permitted to build the sty.

When the last nail was driven there was a stampede of all the boys in the school to see the sty. Rumors of its style and magnificence had already reached their ears. The real sty was even more wonderful than the boys had anticipated. Their admiration transported Guglielmo to a land where no pigs existed. "Guglielmo," said the oldest, "you are a born carpenter!"

As the boys walked away, Guglielmo looked into space conjuring up visions of all the things he would do now that his dream had come true. Through many disappointments he had stuck manfully to his single purpose to become a carpenter and his steadfastness has brought its reward.

A Beautiful Winter Plant.

When buttercups and violets are sleeping under the snow, and we say that all Nature has gone to rest, we forget the lichens. Of course, we know that Nature really never sleeps, and trees and plants and flowers of spring are only part of her family. Mother Nature's way with the lichens is to let them sleep all summer and grow in the winter. During the summer they are brown, but when the cold winds of autumn begin to blow, and Jack Frost returns to his own, the lichens begin to change colors and to grow more beautiful in gray and green than ever they were in summer. The green of lichens is not like the green of trees or grass, but it is a beautiful tint that belongs exclusively to their family.

Next time you take a walk in winter, look for lichens on trees, fallen logs and old fences, and see for yourself how full of life and beauty they appear in the time of year when flowers are gone.

They tell us that artists understand that lichens are a great addition to the beauty of winter landscapes, and so they put it in their winter pictures, although they sometimes call it moss.

Botanists say that the beautiful Iceland moss is really lichen.

Mother Nature, though, did not intend lichens simply for ornaments. In the barren spots of earth which Mother Nature always seeks to cover, she first sends lichens because they live on air and need no earth from which to gather nourishment. In time, as the lichen covers rocks and then grows old and decays, a kind of soil is formed in which other plant life can grow and thrive, until, after awhile, the barren place is covered with vegetation and blooming flowers, which never could have made a start without the help of the little lichen plants.—Frances Margaret Fox, in Exchange.

There are many substitutes for the bread of Christ—morality, education, art; but in these things is no abiding satisfaction. There are those who speak as though there were two breads—a manly, undogmatic, free-speaking religion for the strong man; and Christianity for the weak man. But the time comes to the strongest when he feels that he has a woman's heart within him, and when in his anguish he cries to God for bread, what will it profit him to find a stone, though it be the whitest intellectual marble. The bread for the woman and the child was the same as for the strong man.—Bishop Alexander.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street

Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen

Prompt and Reliable Service

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street

Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd

Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South

We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival

The Couper Marble Works

(Established 65 years)

264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"The Store that Pleases"

FOR FURNITURE

Jones Bros. & Co.

Incorporated

1418-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

Jno. L. Williams & Sons

BANKERS and BROKERS

Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

Grandma's Welcome.

The postman had just left, and Milton could hardly control his impatience.

"Is there anything for me, mother, dear?" he cried, jumping up and down with excitement when he saw that mother held several letters in her hand.

"One, Milton," she replied, handing him a letter.

Milton tore it open, read it hastily, and then exclaimed, "It is from grandma. She says that she is coming to pay us a long visit in a couple of months. Won't that be fine, mother?"

"It certainly will," agreed mother, smiling at Milton's delight. "You must do everything to make her visit pleasant."

"I certainly will."

When Milton recovered from the excitement of his surprise, he hurried out to consult with old John, the gardener, who had been with the family for many years.

"I want to give grandma a big surprise, John. What is the best and nicest way to do it?"

John scratched his head a minute thoughtfully. "I remember your grandmother likes apples a whole lot, Master Milton. Why not give her some of them when she comes?"

"Apples!" almost snorted Milton, disdainfully. "Why, John, she can get apples any old time. Try again."

"Not the kind of apples I'm thinking of, Master Milton. You say she'll be here in about two months. Suppose you leave it to me, and I'll promise you I'll surprise both you and your grandmother a whole lot."

Finally the day came when grandma arrived. How glad Milton was to see her, and she him.

When they went in to dinner every one was surprised and pleased to see on the center of the table a semi-circle of big red apples. On each apple, outlined in green, was a letter, and all spelled, "Welcome, Dear Grandma."

Grandma was too surprised and happy to speak, so she just leaned over and gave Milton a big, loving hug.

When Milton saw old John the next day he explained that before the apples ripened he had pasted a letter on each apple. When the apples turned red the part on which the letter was pasted remained green, thus giving a very pleasing effect.—Christian Advocate.

The Foolish Little Frog.

A foolish little Frog,
Who was sitting on a log,
  Said, "What's for dinner today?"
His mother said, "Stew!"
The Frog said, "Pooh!"
  So he sailed and he sailed away.

He came to the Cur,
And he said, "Dear Sir,
  Pray, what's your dinner today?"
The Cur said, "Bone;
You leave it alone."
  So he sailed and he sailed away.

He came to the Horse,
And he said, "Of course,
  You've a very nice dinner today."
The Horse said, "Hay!"
The Frog said, "Nay."
  So he sailed and he sailed away.

Then he came to the Goose
With a flag of truce,
  Crying, "What's for dinner today?"
The Goose said, "You,
I think might do."
  But he sailed and he sailed away.

He came to the Cow,
And he said, "What now
  Have you for dinner today?"
The Cow said, "Grass!"
The Frog said, "Alas!"
  And he sailed and he sailed away.

He came to the Crow,
And he said, "D'you know,
  I'd like some dinner today."
Said the Crow, "Try a worm,"
But the Frog gave a squirm,
  And he sailed and he sailed away.

He came to the Goat,
  And he said, "Please note,
  I've had no dinner today."
Said the Goat, "Begin
With a prickly whin."
  But he sailed and sailed away.

He came to the Owl,
And he said, "Kind fowl,
  Pray, what's your dinner today?"
The Owl said, "Mice!
Can I offer you a slice?"
  But he sailed and he sailed away.

And he felt so sad,
For he had not had
  A dinner at all that day.
And he cried, "Boo-hoo!
I could finish that stew!"
  So he sailed and he sailed away.

He came to the nest,
And there he confessed
  He'd had no dinner that day.
Said his mother, "Dear me!
You must wait till tea,
  For I gave your share away!"

And the moral for you
Is, don't say, "Pooh!"
  Whatever your "dinner" be;
To the silly little sinner,
Who hasn't had his dinner,
  It's a long, long time, till tea!

—Percy French.

WANTED Commission Agents And Dealers

To sell Nursery Stock—all kinds of fruit trees, ornamentals and plants. Beautiful illustrations supplied with full information on growing trees and plants. Two propositions offered. Commission agreement and confidential terms to dealers. Big profits. Only TRUSTWORTHY men need apply. Write today.

THE HOWARD-HICKORY CO.,
Box 584, Hickory, N. C.

The Scofield Reference New Testament and Psalms

With the same helpful features as contained in the Scofield Reference Bible. TO WHICH ARE ADDED Synoptic introductions to the four Gospels, the Epistles, and the Poetical Books

EDITED BY REV. C. I. SCOFIELD, D.D.

ASSISTED BY EMINENT SCHOLARS

Helps on the Page where needed

The text is practically fac-simile, page for page, with the New Testament portion of the Scofield Reference Bible.

Specimen of Type

6 There was a *m*an sent from God, whose name was John.
7 The same came for a *h*witness, n Faith. John 3.15,16,18,36. (Mt.8.10;

Nonpareil 16mo, black-faced type, size, 6¾x4⅛ inches.

White paper editions from $1.50.
Oxford India paper edition from $4.00

At all Booksellers or the Publishers

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
American Branch
35 West 32d Street New York

Sacramental Wine

Absolutely Pure Grape Wine

Made expressly for use at the Communion Table

Established 1857

Phone, Write or Call Tel. Cortlandt 3001

H.T. Dewey & Sons Co.

Address Either

138 Fulton Street, New York City
or Cellars, Egg Harbor, New Jersey

Cuticura Soap IS IDEAL For the Hands

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. 7, Malden, Mass.

R. Geissler, Inc.

56 West Eighth Street, New York

Memorials

FOR THE CHURCH

Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

First Step in Treatment Is a Brisk Purgative With Calotabs, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets that are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for colds and influenza can be depended upon for full effectiveness until the liver is made thoroughly active. That is why the first step in the treatment is the new, nausealess colomel tablets called Calotabs, which are free from the sickening and weakening effects of the old style calomel. Doctors also point out the fact that an active liver may go a long way towards preventing influenza and is one of the most important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and ward off pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasure or work. Next morning your cold has vanished, your liver is active, your system is purified, and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Druggists sell Calotabs only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you do not find them delightful.—(Adv.)

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address: THE PATHFINDER, 4007 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

Sow D. & B.'s Tested SEEDS

Successful farming and gardening depends on sowing the right seeds. Those who sow our seeds know how good they are.

Ask for our catalogue, which gives full cultural directions and many helpful suggestions for gardening, and price list of our Farm Seeds.

Diggs & Beadles, Inc.

Seed Merchants

RICHMOND, VA.

Headquarters for Superior Seeds for the Farm and Garden

RESERVATIONS FOR EUROPE

NEXT SPRING AND SUMMER

Should be made early in order to secure good space

Telephone Randolph 155, or Write

C. O. ALLEY

STEAMSHIP AND TOURIST AGENT

830 East Main Street Successor to The Richmond Transfer Co.

You Will

be interested in reading a message entitled, "The Business Side of Happy New Year," published in January's Scribner's, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Century, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Cosmopolitan, System, and Outlook.

This Company is participating in the national magazine advertising campaign and has available for distribution copies of the booklet entitled, "Safeguarding Your Family's Future," mentioned in the magazine advertisements.

Virginia Trust Company

The Safe Executor

Richmond, Va.

The Emerson Shoe

HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes

THE CORRECTOR

And

EMERSON LASTS

A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special

at $7.25

Send us your size

Woodall & Quarles

7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson

Security Storage Company, Inc.

Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage

Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 845

R. L. Christian & Company

514-16 E. Broad St.

Richmond, Va.

Leading Fancy Grocer

AGENTS FOR

HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE

Special attention given to out-of-town orders.

Catalogue mailed on application.

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop

ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING

Mail Orders a Specialty

Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL

311 N. Second St. Phone Ran. 1286 W

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

FAMINE RELIEF.

For the convenience of our readers we publish the addresses of the treasurers of the various Relief Funds whose appeals for the starving, and especially for starving children, are so urgent and touching. The Southern Churchman will forward contributions to any of these, but to save time, postage and possibility of miscarriage, checks would better be sent directly to the treasurers as below:

Near East Relief (formerly "Armenian and Syrian Relief")—Cleaveland H. Dodge, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City.

European Relief (Central and Eastern Europe)—Franklin K. Lane, 42 Broadway, New York City; or locally for Virginia, DeSoto Fitzgerald, 218 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Chinese Famine Relief—Remit through Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

We acknowledge the following additional contributions to the fund for the relief of the sufferers from famine in China:

E. P.	$ 1.00
In memoriam, L. G. J.	10.00
Wickliffe Church, Clarke County, Va.	5.00
Clifton Chapel, Overwharton Parish, Va.	15.00
Thos A. Lee, Washington, D. C.	20.00
Mrs. B.	10.00

To Near East relief fund:

Members of Grace Church, Berryville, Va.	$ 3.00

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

MISS M. M. TYLER

Invites you to inspect her line of GAGE Tailored HATS. Also the ADVANCE Showing of Spring Hats in the most attractive shapes.

209 N. FOUSHEE ST.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

CATHEDRAL STUDIO, ENGLISH Church embroideries and materials. Stoles with crosses, $7; plain, $5.50; handsome gift stoles, $12 up; burse and veil, $15, $20. Surplices and exquisite altar linens. L. V. Mackrille, 2604 Thirty-sixth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Tel. Chev. 1915.

NIAGARA METAL WEATHER STRIPS Saves 25 per cent. Fuel, Prevents Rattling Windows, keeps out Dust, Dirt and Storm.

CINCINNATI REVERSIBLE METAL AND WOOD FRAME SCREENS.

L. F. HEROLD,
2 N. 11th St., Richmond, Va.
Phone Randolph 3550.

SEEDS AND CARDS

25 POST CARDS, and FIVE 10-cent Packages Garden Seeeds, 25 cents, postpaid; 100 Post Cards, twenty 10-cent Packages Garden Seeds, Atlas New Europe, $1.00, postpaid. Address HOWARD SEED HOUSE, Windfall, Indiana.

HELP WANTED

WANTED—A COMPETENT MIDDLE-aged woman, white or colored, to cook and take entire charge for a family of four adults. Laundry done out. In the mountains of Virginia. House has modern conveniences. Good wages and a permanent home to the right person. Reply A, care Southern Churchman.

YOUNG WOMEN OF EDUCATION AND refinement wanted to enter the St. John's Hospital Training School for Nurses (Episcopal), Brooklyn, N. Y. Applicants required to have one year of high school or its equivalent. Course three years. A registered school of high standing. Nurses receive remuneration. Many social privileges. Home life pleasant. Graduates are now receiving $6.00 per day. Apply to St. John's Hospital, Albany and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y.

MOTHER'S HELPER WANTED TO assist in care of infant and two-year-old girl. Mrs. W. C. Noland, Monroe Terrace, Richmond, Va.

WANTED MATRON FOR INSTITUtional work. Address "T," care Southern Churchman.

WANTED FOR 1921-22 AS MASTER IN the Grammer Department of a Church school, an unmarried man with teaching and playground experience. Apply St Albans School, Washington, D. C.

WANTED PUPIL NURSES FOR A SPEcial course for one year in eye, ear and throat work, also post graduate nurses for a course of from four to six months. Certificates given at end of course. For further information apply to Superintendent.

WANTED—A COMPETENT LADY AS companion. Must be well educated, a good reader; also understand knitting. Age between 35 and 40; Episcopalian preferred. Address, stating full particulars, with references. Mrs. J. C. H., Buck Hill, South Richmond, Va.

LADY OF REFINEMENT DESIRES position in Church school as House-Mother; Experienced hostess. Address "Hostess" care Southern Churchman, Richmond, Va.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Bolton: On Wednesday, February 16, 1921, at 10:30 A. M. at the residence of her nephew, the Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde, MARIA LAWSON, daughter of the late Dr. James Bolton, of Richmond, Va. Funeral service Grace Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C. Interment Holywood, Richmond, Va.

Baskervill: MRS. WILLIE ANN W. BASKERVILL, mother of Archdeacon E. L. Baskervill, of Charleston, S. C., died on February 16, at Baskerville, Va. The funeral service was conducted on February 18th from Christ Church, Baskerville, by the Rev. Joseph W. Carroll, interment being made in the church yard.

A Thought for Lent.

I want you to ask yourselves whether you make it fruitful in your lives, as you must answer to God at the judgment day. If you joy in an inward peace; if your private prayers are more a delight and less a task; if your communions are far more frequent, with a better preparation for each and a real thanksgiving after; if your family find you more loving, and your business associates note your work done more faithfully, if God is in all your thoughts, and you rejoice in being a fellow-citizen with the saints; if you are readier to offer services and dues of every sort to God's holy Church; if your Bible is growing more familiar, your speech kinder, your smile brighter; then praise God for the good seed sown, which is springing up in the garden of your heart, and resolve to tend that garden carefully. If not—then God grant you a fresh opportunity for receiving His Word aright. May He have mercy on us all, and bless us, not as we deserve, but out of the abundance of His grace. —William H. Van Allen.

They That Are Christ's.

They do not want to shine in the world, or to be rich or popular, or to have their own way and assert themselves, or to enjoy the relish of success. . . . With all simplicity their hearts are bent on moving, doing, suffering, as the spirit of Christ in them may will. They have done with worldliness; they have done with self-seeking; they do not look for an easy life in the world where Christ was crucified. . . . Their faces are set towards God, and the light that glows in them comes from Him.—From Bishop Paget's "Christ the Way."

SILK HOSE
DIRECT TO YOU

Saves you 25c to 60c a pair. Our leader—Ladies' full-fashioned, highest grade pure silk stockings, five-thread linen spliced heel and toe: $2.60 a pair, three pairs $6.00. Strongest and best wearing hosiery on the market. Money back if not satisfied.

Free Samples showing colors and quality of silk.

Write for these today with new descriptive Price List of our full line of Silk, Silk Lisle, Fibre Silk and Cotton hosiery for women, misses, men and children—all at our direct-to-you money-saving prices.

HARTLEY HOSIERY CO., Louisville, Ky.

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel

Take the best care of your health, and, above all,

Provide yourself with Travelers Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank
Richmond, Virginia

The Disciplined Life—Thoughts for Lent.

The days of Lent are devoted by traditional usage to a life more sharply disciplined than at other times. The soul is called to turn toward the wilderness where its Lord fasted, and was tempted, and emerged spent with the conflict, but victorious. It is bidden to breathe again the bracing air of the desert. Discipline and hardness are known there. The life of self-denial is understood by all the world to be a difficult life. But the joy of it may be missed; indeed, it is only learned in experience.

In His teaching, our Lord set the seal of His authority upon a truth, which the experience of mankind has verified. Man must die, if he is to live; he must deny himself to win himself; he must live above the world if he is to enjoy the world. "Hate pleasure," said Patmore, "if only because this is the only way of obtaining it. Reject the foul smoke, and it will be forced back on you as pure flame. But this you cannot believe until you shall have rejected it without thought of reward." This is the truth which Nature has confirmed for all who are willing to hear; satiety is the denial of delight; excess of pleasure is only misery; greed is always left unsatisfied.

> She, good cateress,
> Means her provision only to the good
> That live according to her sober laws.

It seems as though in this, as in all His counsels, our Lord has allies on every side. The very workings of Nature confirm His word, when He bids men to die, if they would live, and promises the kingdom to the poor in spirit, and tells His followers to deny themselves, if they are to win their souls. For all who have eyes to see it is the plainest truth, that only an ordered and disciplined being can enjoy this world. Till a man has known the clean, pure air of the desert, he has not known this world at all.

The call for this ordered life is not less urgent this year than in the years of war. The stern discipline of those days has come to an end. There is a reaction in many lives; they say "the world owes me my time of times." Freedom has returned, and the enforced order has come to an end. The lean years are over, and now there is a chance to capture the pleasures foregone, but only for a season. Such a mood cannot be met by hot denunciation. It can be best answered by those who prove in experience the joy and strength of a disciplined life; they, too, seek for a rich and abundant life; they, too, are free; but they have learned the secret that such a life can only be won at a price; pleasure can only come in full measure to those who do not seek it; peace can be theirs alone who are forever ready for battle; and he that saveth his life shall lose it.—London Times.

"None can be crowned unless he conquer, nor conquer unless he fight, nor fight unless he have temptations and enemies."

Memorials or gifts to be in place for this great Festival should be considered promptly so designs may be prepared for criticism and accepted and the work executed and erected in ample time for dedication.

J. & R. LAMB

Studios 23-25-27 Sixth Avenue, New York

JUST READY

More "FIVE-MINUTE TALKS"

By Walter R. Bowie, D.D.

SUNNY WINDOWS

Author of "The Children's Year"

AND OTHER SERMONS

¶ Here is another volume of Dr. Bowie's talks to youngsters, all attractively suited to the child mind. The subjects are arresting themes, calculated to almost invariably catch the attention of boy or girl—while the treatment thereof is simplicity itself.

As the Record of Christian Work said: "Dr. Bowie's talks are capital—straight to the hearts of children, clever, interesting, helpful."

Cloth, $1.25 net

For Sale by

Southern Churchman Co., Richmond, Va.

You Can Send Your Boy or Girl to Any College in This State

At but small sacrifice to yourself through our "COLLEGE PLAN"

Ask or write for booklet

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK

Tenth and Main

"The Bank with the Three Doors of Opportunity"

The Evangelical Education Society

Of the Protestant Episcopal Church

Office: The Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia

AIDS STUDENTS FOR THE MINISTRY AND DISTRIBUTES EVANGELICAL LITERATURE

President: WILLIAM S. HARVEY, ESQ.

Active Vice-President: The Rt. Rev. THOMAS J. GARLAND, D. D.

General Counsel	Treasurer	General Secretary
HAROLD GOODWIN, Esq.	ALFRED LEE, Esq.	Rev. S. LORD GILBERSON, M. A.

FORM OF BEQUEST

I give and bequeath to "THE EVANGELICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH," incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the first Monday in November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, ———— dollars, or ———— real estate, to be used for the general purpose of the Society.

LAY WORKERS NEEDED IN THE MISSION FIELD

GENERAL

Fifteen women for general evangelistic work, China.

Two women for social service work in connection with hospitals, China.

Two men and women trained for social service to do special work, China.

Ten women for general evangelistic and social service work, Japan.

Five women for general evangelistic and social service work, Philippine Islands.

Two women for evangelistic and social service work, Hawaiian Islands.

Eleven women for evangelistic work among white people of the coast and Indians of the interior, Alaska.

EDUCATIONAL

Eleven men as instructors in St. John's University two each in the following departments: History, English Literature; one each in the following: Engineering, Education, Chemistry, Political Science, Physics, Commerce, Physical Culture, Shanghai, China.

One librarian for St. John's University, Shanghai, China.

Eight men as instructors in Boone University, for the following departments: English Literature, Modern Languages, General History, Stenography and Bookkeeping, English Language, Science, Physical Culture, Military Drill, Wuchang, China.

Twelve men teachers in Preparatory Schools, China.

Three women for St. Hilda's School, one to specialize in normal work and one for music, Wuchang, China.

Ten women teachers for lower and higher primary schools, China.

One woman as Diocesan Supervisor and director of primary schools, China.

One man or woman to train organist and choir leaders and to train congregations in singing, Japan.

Two men teachers of English subjects in St. Paul's College, Tokyo, Japan.

Two women teachers, one for general English subjects and one for music for St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, Japan.

One women teacher of general English subjects for St. Agnes' School, Kyoto, Japan.

One woman assistant teacher in the Chinese School, St. Stephen's Mission, Manila, Philippine Islands.

Two women teachers of elementary subjects, one as superintendent, in the House of the Holy Child, Manila, Philippine Islands.

Three men, one headmaster and two masters, for the Baguio School for Boys, Philippine Islands.

Two men teachers for general English subjects in Iolani School for Boys, Hawaiian Islands.

One man as assistant teacher, especially mathematics, boys' school, Havana, Cuba.

One woman to assist principal in girls' school, Mexico City, Mexico.

MEDICAL

Five men physicians, China.

Three women physicians, China.

Ten nurses, China.

One pharmacist, China.

Two technicians for important hospitals, China.

Three physicians for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Japan.

Two physicians, St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, Philippine Islands.

Three nurses for St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, Philippine Islands.

One physician, Sagada, Philippine Islands.

One physician for the Moro Hospital, Zamboanga, Philippine Islands.

Two physicians, Alaska.

Three nurses, Alaska.

BUSINESS

One man to take charge of business office, China.

One woman secretary and accountant, China.

One stenographic assistant, Shanghai, China.

One secretary to the Bishop, Anking China.

One man to take charge of business office and assist Bishop, Hankow, China.

One man, treasurer of the Mission office, Tokyo, Japan.

One man, treasurer of the Mission office, Manila, Philippine Islands.

One secretary to the Bishop, Philippine Islands.

HOSTEL WORKERS

Two men for work with students in Church hostels on the west coast of Japan.

Here are imperative needs pressing to be filled.

Here are splendid opportunities for service.

Who will volunteer?

To go to the mission field is a high adventure of faith. It is at the same time a very serious undertaking, not lightly to be entered upon. It is a form of service which especially demands adequate qualifications.

Those who feel called to go should write to Mr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary, Department of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City. It is rarely possible to accept a volunteer who is over thirty-five. As a rule, it is desirable that men should be unmarried.

Who has gone to the field from your parish?

Presiding Bishop and Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church
Publicity Department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City

Two Neighbors.

Kish Pawel looked like a crouching angel when he glanced up at me from the dust pile in front of his home. Seven years old, with yellow hair, blue eyes and a perfect smile; but when he got up and ran away on his two legs, his two legs made an almost perfect O, and he looked like a little crab.

How many times did the parson use all his English, German and sign-language and blandishments upon Kish Pawel's Magyar mother and Slav father to plead that the capital O be made over into two capital I's? Many times, dear friend. Many times and many smiles and a parson's collar and a fair "foreign" reputation turned the trick. So one day in a motor car, with Mrs. Parson in the party, for womanly assurance, we all whirled off to the Episcopal Hospital for Children and away again almost in time for Mrs. Kish to escape the cries of Pawel as he was being treated to his first porcelain tub bath.

In thirteen weeks came back Paul Little with two handsome straight legs and a new digestion—and refusing to speak anything but English.

What smiles, what grateful smiles on the face of Mother Kish. What kisses for the embarrassed hand of the parson, and what a big round silver dollar that kept presenting itself for acceptance!

They all moved away to the celery fields of Michigan, and the parson will see them no more—more's the pity; but one thing is sure, none of the Kish tribe will mutter: "America no damn good." They know better. Ah, well, it's great fun to straighten out a little boy's crooked legs.—Selected.

The ministry of the Word is also our power against the worldliness of the Church and congregation. Let the standard of the Word be uplifted and pressed on heart and conscience, and the worldly devices and elements in our Church life will fall away and die. The message of the Word for holiness of heart and life will soon settle questionable methods of Church finance, Church life and Church work. And all this will be so because of its power to "edify" the believer. More and better Bible classes, more expository teaching in our sermons, more individual meditation and study and teaching of the Word will soon have its blessed effects in the individual and congregational life.—W. H. Griffith Thomas.

The spiritual leadership of the Church is still in the hands of Jesus. The right hand of God is the place of authority and power. From that exalted throne our Lord controls the destinies of His saints upon earth. His great designs are spread upon the man of the ages and His purposes are slowly but surely coming to a perfect fruition. From the excellent glory He watches the fight between right and wrong, and sends His angel messengers to help in the fight. God has committed judgment to Him and we are fast hastening to the time when from His throne He shall offer the final judgment upon the living and upon the dead. If we love Him we need not fear, for He is our Comrade in life, death and the great hereafter.—Rev. C. E. Coles, Ph. D.

When the picture of your dear Lord, despised, rejected, mocked, crucified, casts its impress on your heart, that moment you will learn to love Christ more, and you will be ready to give Him the allegiance of your life. This picture Lent impresses.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.

Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000 — Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President — E. B. Addison, Vice-President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend

PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN

Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.

With an Introduction by

THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis, D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,

Richmond, Va.

O. Luetke's Art Works

Church Furnishings

IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.
Est. 1886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

Dietz Two-Pocket Envelopes

FOR CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL
COST LESS NO DELAYS
Will double the offerings at once. A new Treasurer's Record Book. Loose Leaf form. A set of samples FREE. Orders filled within a week.
WM. H. DIETZ, 20 E. Randolph St., Chicago

Leake Printing Co.

ENGRAVING, PRINTING, EMBOSSING.
Special attention to out-of-town orders
Samples sent upon request.
615 East Main Street, Richmond, Va

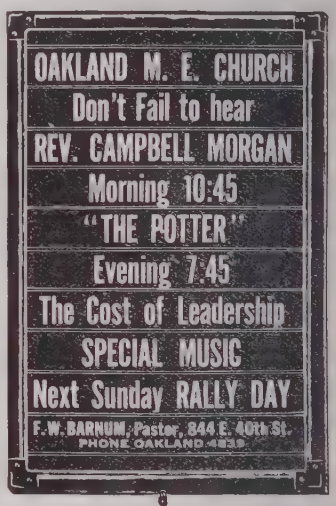
Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley



FURNITURE
CARPETS DRAPERIES

HOT WATER HEAT

For Small Homes, Churches, Stores, Etc., Without Cellars
ARCOLA SYSTEM

R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO.
9 N. 7th St. Inc. Richmond, Va

DIETZ Bulletin Boards

New Bronze Frame and Steel Letters with Interchangeable Letters Four Inches High. 15 Panels with a 10-Line Board. Letters Readable 150 Feet Away

Grace M. E. Church, New York City, 1917. "We have now used your Bulletin Board for several weeks and are delighted with it, for I believe yours is the best sign of the kind I have seen."—Christian F. Reisner, Pastor.

"The Sunday School and Church Supply Man"

WILLIAM H. DIETZ, 20 E. Randolph St., CHICAGO

In Service

for the citizens of Richmond are the officers and employees of this Bank.

May we have the opportunity of proving this to you?

The Union Bank of Richmond

1104 East Main Street

What the Rector of Trinity Church, Galveston, Texas, Says About the New Hymnal

Rev. Raimundo de Ovies writes regarding the New Hymnal as follows:

"Our object was, mainly, to put the music of the hymns in the hands of the congregation, that they might join in the singing. For a month, perhaps, we noticed little difference further than interest enough to follow the music with the eye; but presently some began to sing. Others took courage and sang also. Then singing became pretty general—and hearty.

"We sent a second order for more copies at considerable expense, considering the rejection of our old hymnals; but that second order is proof of our satisfaction over the initial experiment; and the New Hymnal is certainly used in Trinity Church. We have 'our money's worth!'

"With best wishes and many thanks for the New Hymnal's contribution toward a live and 'common worship.' "

The New Hymnal is published by the Church Pension Fund and sold direct to the churches. Write for full particulars on special quantity prices and extended payment privileges.

THE NEW HYMNAL, Published by THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

14 Wall Street, New York

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 5, 1921. No. 10

Lenten Hymn

Now are the days of humblest prayer
When consciences to God lie bare,
And mercy most delights to spare.
Oh hearken when we cry.

Now is the season wisely long,
Of sadder thought and graver song,
When ailing souls grow well and strong.
Oh hearken when we cry.

The feast of pennance! Oh so bright,
With true conversion's heavenly light,
Like sunrise after stormy night!
Oh hearken when we cry.

Oh happy time of blessed tears,
Of surer hopes, of chast'ning fears,
Undoing all our evil years.
Oh hearken when we cry.

—F. W. Faber, D. D.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary
Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to
REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-third year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to
REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D.,
Rector

CHATHAM Episcopal Institute

FOR GIRLS CHATHAM, VA.

Rt. Rev. A. M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Episcopal Visitor
Rev. C. Orlando Pruden, Rector. Beautiful and healthful location. 10-acre campus. Modern equipment. Athletics, Gym. College Preparatory. Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Catalog.
Mrs. Elizabeth May Willis, B.P., Principal, Box 13

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D.....Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 3) cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

A little too late is a lot too late.—Spurgeon.

Pure doctrine is the life-blood of the Church.

Character is determined by what we emphasize.

If there were no valley there would be no aspiration for the heights.

They alone are able to enjoy this world who begin with the world unseen.—J. H. Newman.

Patient waiting for an answer to prayer is a clear proof of faith in our Lord.

The portraits of Christians in the Bible are faithful likenesses. They show us saints just as they are.—Bishop Ryle.

Contentment, unalloyed happiness and perfect peace is in the end the never-failing legacy of a strict obedience to the voice of conscience.

When thou a fast wouldst keep,
Make not thy homage cheap
By publishing its signs to every eye;
But let it be between
Thyself and the Unseen,
So shall it gain acceptance from on high.

—Bernard Barton.

No man thinks the better of a religious teacher for being worldly. This is a great though a common error. The last man whom worldly men, princes or peasants will seek in their soul's extremity is the physician who is half of this world; no cottage and no hovel is too mean for them, if they may but find in it a man who lives only for eternity.—C. J. Vaughan.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,
REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

ST. CATHERINE'S SCHOOL

Founded by
VIRGINIA RANDOLPH ELLETT
Westhampton - - Richmond, Va.

A country day school for girls under the direction of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia. College preparatory. Boarding department 503 W. Franklin Street. Eight-acre playground. Emphasis on health; out-door life.
MISS ROSALIE H. NOLAND, Principal

ST. ANNE'S SCHOOL

Boarding and Day School for Girls, Under the Auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia
Charlottesville, Virginia

Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Music and Art. Intermediate and Primary. Session begins September 22, 1920. For particulars, address
MISS EMMA S. YERBY, Principal

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLESTOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

National Cathedral School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof buildings in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College Preparatory. Advanced and Special Courses. Music and Art.
The Bishop of Washington,
President of the Board of Trustees.
Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal.
Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head
Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Holderness School for Boys

Five buildings. 20 acres. Prepares for Colleges and Technical Schools. Ranks with highest grade schools of New England, yet by reason of endowment the tuition is moderate. Modern gymnasium. Skating. All winter sports. 41st year.

Rev. Lorin Webster, L. H. D., Rector,
Plymouth, N. H.

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 5, 1921. No. 10

SOME EXPERIENCES WITH THE OPEN PULPIT

Of late it has been increasingly common among the Dioceses for Bishops to sanction, and for committees to extend, invitations to ministers of other Christian bodies to preach in our churches at the services in Lent. In some cities these half-hour Lenten services, held at some downtown point at noon, have become a central feature of community attention. They present an opportunity for busy men to listen to the message of the gospel brought into immediate contact with their daily needs. The time, of course, is short. The sermon is the supreme feature of the service. The result depends, therefore, upon the ability of the minister to carry in a few moments a real message to the hearts and minds of his hearers. It takes the unusual man—a real man—to do it.

For this reason the committees in charge of the Lenten services have seen that there is something more important than stickling at the barriers of our own Church fellowship. They want the best preachers that can be secured. They are interested in what a man can do, and not in his label. If the preachers who can carry to men a sense of the glory and greatness of the meaning of Christ are to be found in sufficient number in our own Church, so much the better. But when there exist great Christian leaders and prophets who belong to other communions, the fact that they bear a different name from us is no reason why we do not need to seek their message.

In those communities where almost every year the daily Lenten services have included among their preachers one or more men of other affiliations—Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregationalist, or whatever else—what have been the results?

In the first place, the attention of the whole Christian community has been immediately arrested. The services have at once taken on the larger dignity of an inclusive appeal. People have said, "These services are evidently not merely meant for Episcopalians. They are something in which Christian people seem generally to be joining, and in which perhaps all of us can find a part." The congregations have increased. Members of the particular communion to which the visiting preacher belongs have been drawn to the services because of their interest in him and their instinct to welcome him. Thereby more or less unconsciously there is born in them a certain sense of possession in the whole enterprise which continues after their particular spokesman has gone away.

This fact of the mingling of people of different church affiliations in the same hour of worship brings to all who have part in it a happy sense of Christian comradeship. Men touch elbows with other men with whom they have never had any contact before in the matter of worship. Differences of opinions are submerged in the fact that all are interested in the same message. People realize in warmer fashion what some time they know only theoretically, that there is a wideness of Christian loyalty which is a bigger thing than their particular subdivision.

Finally, these services exercise a distinct influence upon the message of the men who preach. Whether they be men of our own Church, or of others, they know that they are facing not a group of people of one denominational cast of mind, but a great body of people to whom they must appeal on the basis of the fundamental facts of Christianity. Before that challenge men must think and men must speak in essential terms, and the congregation, listening to that sort of preaching, is helped themselves to think with wholesome understanding.

The influence of all this upon the hope of Christian unity is a larger thing than may immediately appear. As Professor Rauschenbusch has said in one of his vivid metaphors, there are certain metals which will fuse only at very high temperatures. Christian unity cannot be brought about by the hammering together of different elements through arguments and persuasion. It will come best when the different groups of Christian people are so aglow with a love for the essential things that their desires and their wills begin to coalesce. The spiritual warmth created in the fellowship of the Lenten services may go farther toward this than we know.

THE PASSING OF PARTISANSHIP

As one looks out upon the Protestant world in general, one can find multiplied evidences that the old denominational hostilities are breaking down. Only in some ignorant and backward churches is there the bitter note of partisanship in men's preaching. And in an increasing number of conspicuous instances, partisanship and prejudice are disappearing altogether before a larger recognition of that common Christianity upon the basis of which men can stand together.

Consider, for example, the University Place Presbyterian Church, in New York. It has been one of the old strongholds of Presbyterianism. Yet today the minister of that church is Harry E. Fosdick, widely known through his many books, formerly the minister of a Baptist Church in Montclair, N. J., and not reordained into the Presbyterian Church. He is making the pulpit of that old church one of the important influences in New York. Men and women of every name are going to hear him, and the congregation of that Presbyterian Church is not less devoted to their own loyalties because the man who preaches happens to have been called a Baptist.

In another church in New York City the assistant ministers have been frequently drawn from the students of Union Seminary. Sometimes they are men who belong already to the denomination which that particular church represents. Almost as often, however, they are men whose affiliations have been and may be different, yet who serve in the work of that congregation without embarrassment or discomfort.

In a Baptist Church, closely linked both in its situation and in its membership with the University of Chicago, including nearly all the faculty of the Theological School in its membership, the old rigidity of Baptist separation has so far been transcended that this Church has what is called an associate membership for which it is not necessary for persons to have been immersed. It receives into its membership any Christian persons who bring evidence that they have been regularly affiliated with some other Christian communion and desire to enroll in the worship and service of this particular church. It is a vital force in its community in thought, in life, and in unselfish ministry.

Some people have no better name for all this tendency than "the disintegration of Protestantism." If it be a disintegration, the thing that is disintegrating is a sort of spiritual Chinese wall, and that is a very good thing to let disintegrate. A better interpretation of it is that the tide of a deeper Christian consciousness is rising, and the old shoals of prejudice which bound our energies into shallow places are being submerged by the coming in of influences from the deeper ocean of the thoughts of God.

THE RELATIONSHIP OF PRAYER TO WORK

From a recent sermon preached by a visiting minister in a Lenten service we take the text for a further editorial. He was preaching on the words from the gospel of St. John, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest."

"The harvest is plenteous and the laborers are few. Pray"—That, the preacher remarked, is a very un-American conclusion. It is not the way our minds would have run. We should have said there must be an organization to attend to this thing. Let us get an office and appoint a secretary. Let us launch a movement, or, at the very least, call a mass meeting and pass resolutions and appoint a committee. We must have some sort of a drive and get this thing put across.

But that is not the way the Master concludes. The first thing to do is not to "get busy," but to pray. This spiritual harvesting has its spiritual principles which cannot be forgotten if we would win success. First of all, we must bring our spirits into tune with Him Who is the Lord of the harvest. We must understand what He would have us do. We must appreciate the quiet power of His inward moving.

We must pray. How seldom we realize that in our activities. We rush here and there with fret and bustle and noise. We devise all sorts of expedients to get the Lord's work done, and often the expedients are wrong because we have not stopped, first of all, to make sure that we have understood His mind. We have plunged promiscuously into the harvest field, very likely getting into each other's way and sadly on each other's tempers, because we have not all been still to understand the way the Lord of the harvest wants us to work.

The same thing is true with our desire for Church unity. The reason some of us do not believe in it more, and distrust the efforts that are put forth to accomplish it, is because we have not prayed enough. We have not entered into communion with the Master's prayer that we might all be one. We have not yet the fire of His desire because we have not entered into the eagernss of His soul.

First then, pray. Yet the thought would be misleading if we indicated that prayer should end the matter. Prayer is that communion with God which fills us so with His Spirit that we do not then sit down inactive, but work with Him and let Him work through us. "Pray ye that the Lord of the harvest will send forth (or to use again the emphasis of the preacher), thrust forth laborers into His harvest." It is the power of God, laid hold upon through prayer, which leads to the most effective service. The abiding work of Christianity will not be done by people who simply assent to some work because the rector asks them or some committee honors them with its choice. These will lose their hasty enthusiasm. They will flag when the work grows hard. But those who have come into touch with the Lord of the harvest will have His strength to do His work, and to kindle the contagion of His will in others.

OUR BENEVOLENCES AND BENEFICIENCES.

Our benevolences and beneficiences stand steady and work hard. Count them up a bit and see if you are not proud of them.

St. Luke's Hospital, St. Andrew's Brotherhood, the Orphans' Home, the Arthur Brittain Hall, the Convalescent Home, the Girls' Friendly, the Church Club and the Churchwoman's Club, the United Thank Offering, the Missionary Host, the Women's Auxiliary, the Church Periodical Club, the Guild for Nurses, the Church School Service League, the Lay Readers' League, with, I dare say, not a few other agencies which my crowded brain will not take in for enumeration. And all this besides the general missionary activities and the Social Service helpfulness which each parish or mission station by itself constantly sets up and continually carries on.

There are three things that make national life strong and keep human life sweet. They are homes, and churches, and social good will. And it is the little, every-day things of life in homes and churches and neighborly association that contribute to the strength and sweetness.

I know how loudly is sounded out that ignorance is the mother of sin, and that education is the cure for crime, and that science more than religion makes for good to the human race. But is it so? Test it by your own experience. Take the automobile for an example: Science has given it to us. Science perfects it for us. If that perfecting make all to the good, how is it that there is such a riot of hold-ups, robberies and burglaries since its advent? It gives help to us in many ways. That is true. But it also gives such facility of escape to the workers of evil that we hesitate to rate it as an all-around benefit or blessing. Knowledge is power. Education is help. And science does outwork good. But it outworks evil also; and it is only the little things of training in the home and teaching in the Church, and the kindnesses of neighborly association that keep the evil from out-balancing the good, many times over.

It is quite in order for us, then, to keep at it in the little things of home training and Church teaching and neighborly kindnesses and Diocesan Convention observances, that make for love and obedience to God and for love and service to men.—Bishop Tuttle, Convention Address.

"LIBERAL."

Few things are more noticeable in much current writing and discussion than the twisting of well-known terms from their accustomed meanings. This twisting is quite often done consciously and for purposes of propaganda. Perhaps no word in the English language has suffered more from this ill-treatment than the fine word liberal. The historic and familiar significance of this term is that which is worthy of a free man, of one who is open-minded and candid, of one who is open to the reception of new ideas. In this sense the thought which lies behind the word liberal has dominated every really progressive theory of education from the time of Plato to the present day. Just now, however, the word liberal is widely used as though it were synonymous with queer, odd, unconventional, otherwise-minded, in perpetual opposition. There was a time when in the neighborhood of Boston the test of liberalism was the rejection of the Andover Creed, and possibly the rejection of the Apostles' Creed itself. Many would include among liberals those who favor all sorts of social, industrial and governmental tyranny, which are by their very nature incompatible with liberty. An enemy of the family and an experimenter with what is called trial marriage is now called a liberal. The person who would destroy government and substitute for the political state of free men a close-working combination of industrial autocracies, is called a liberal. One who sneers at the religious faith or the political convictions of others, and takes care that his attitude is publicly advertised, is called a liberal. Under such circumstances it is plainly necessary to look to one's definitions.—Nicholas Murray Butler.

The Story of a Hungry Land.

A picture of a great land that is hungry, but not as yet literally starving; where few have died, but where all are soon to die; a land across whose plains the chill of winter is settling, with not even the light of fires to mark at night the location of whole towns and villages; where, within a corner of big, formerly comfortable houses, or hidden in the mud walls of a poor man's shanty, there is a little store of rice, broken corncobs, chaff, roots, leaves or bark that means life for another two or three weeks at the longest—this is the "favorable" condition, not "serious," reported from a trip of several hundred miles across one of the Chinese famine provinces.

By day the people come forth from their houses, and by instinct—farmers from birth, as were their fathers, grandfathers and ancestors from time immemorial—wander off into the fields, searching for roots or weeds overlooked in previous hunts. Near walls and alongside buildings little groups and rows of women with children and bundled babies quietly gather and sit in the thinning winter sunlight. The calls of the cattle and donkeys in the stables that were formerly so piteous are still. The stables themselves are gone, turned into firewood as the cold increases. Every building that can be spared has disappeared. To go off on the roads that lead away to the east or south across the barrens means an earlier death than will come at home, where there are still one's family and friends. One should die among his friends, the people think.

This was the condition sixty days ago—not "serious," and even "favorable" in comparison with many other districts—in one of the great provinces of Northern China. The people had "something to eat." In that country of treeless plains the cold was increasing, making desperate very rapidly the problem of fuel. Huts and houses were coming down and vanishing in smoke. There was not much sickness, the report says. The people were weak, especially the little children and the aged, but not ill. They were merely cold, hungry and without lights or fires at night.

That was sixty days ago. Winter has now set in there. What has happened on those plains since then?

No one has been back to see. The area has not been investigated, for it was one of the favorable areas two months ago. It was one of the few districts in a tremendous tract of more than 100,000 square miles where conditions were not acute two months ago. The panic that comes later, with madness, murder and suicide had not yet arrived. Perhaps it did not arrive, and the people died quietly.

Crops that formerly grew in this section were much like those in southern sections of the United States. There had been wheat, corn, cotton, sweet potatoes and peanuts, with millet and kia'liang, a sort of cane seed. The plain being utterly devoid of woods, these crops had to provide fuel as well as food for the farm animals. Every shred of plants, including the root, was carefully garnered. Even the leaves of the few locust and willow trees which grew about the villages were used to help cook the people's food.

In this section the "harvest" had just ended. The wheat fields, having produced nothing, had been turned under to get at the roots. The other grains had produced about 5 per cent. of their ordinary yield, giving the people enough food to keep them alive a few weeks. Other sections were not so fortunate, but here the frost was two weeks late, allowing the vegetation an additional growing period.

In the villages all the workers were idle. There was no work to do. There was no cotton for the spinners. The hot water seller had closed up his business for lack of fuel. On the farms the people were existing on one or two meals a day of adulterated food.

So long as the sun shone and people moved about in the daylight, there was no complaint. There was even a stoic cheerfulness to be observed, especially among the men. But with the fading of daylight the spirits of the people, notably in the villages, sank.

Children cried weakly as darkness came on. The men became uneasy and wandered about outside the houses, or sat in pitchy corners shielded from the night wind and its ever-present dust. Within the houses the mothers crept into the warmest places, cuddling and shielding the babies as much as possible from the growing cold. The only sign of mental disturbance was a phenomenon noted among the menfolks both in the villages and on the farms. On moonlight nights they wandered out on the roads and into the dry fields, peering and looking about. When asked why they did this, one or two would usually say, "Some one may come. Some one might come to help us."

Most of the inhabitants of this "favorable" area prolonged the time for eating their daily meal—or their last daily meal, if there were two—till night. The food made the children quieter, and eased the strain of the darkness and the cold with its driving wind and sand. In districts where conditions are acute the people are said to be uniformly quiet at night, their vitality so lowered by weakness and despair that they are satisfied to lie down in any place where they will be undisturbed. But in those few places where there were "favorable" areas—a little food and the hope kept alive by this food that "some one might come to help"—there was to be observed this continuous uneasiness.

A dying people, in a dead land! A population benumbed, mind and body, by a year and a half of misery! All this was two months ago. Snow had not fallen, and the cold had not become severe. Now, with all the food eaten, more houses torn down for fuel, more people huddled together in the towns and villages from the abandoned farm districts, what has happened there?

Nowhere were there signs of panic, but that begins, investigators for the Famine Fund report, when the last food is gone. The sight of dying children and mothers breaks the nerves of the men, and soon disorders begin. Some go by suicide. Others in temporary madness, or at the pleading of the women, kill the mothers and children.

Deaths in the famine area are estimated at the present time at somewhere between 10,000 and 15,000 a day. Five provinces are affected, with a population of 45,000,000. Of this vast total of men, women and children, 30,000,000 are hungry. Half of this number must die before spring unless help comes soon.

All over this area the tradition of American friendship persists, which shows itself in every attitude of the people. Persons in the "favorable area" described even sought to entertain investigators and to share their dwindling food at their one or two daily meals. Nowhere, however, was there a question whether the Americans would not help them. Nothing was asked for, or hinted for.

But without this help a population as great as that of all Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Switzerland will, in the year 1921, be allowed to die of hunger.

A PRAYER.

O blessed Saviour, Who for our sakes willingly ascended the cross, teach us to serve as Thou hast served, to give as Thou hast given, to fight and not to heed the wounds, to toil and not to seek for rest, to labor and not to ask for any reward, save that of knowing that we are doing Thy will, and are in the embrace of Thy love. Amen.

An Appeal

To the Women in the Church to Help Raise the Present-Day Moral Standards.

"Show me your women and I will tell you what you are," said a wise man in judging a nation—a remark which recognizes the fact that the standards and habits of women largely shape the destiny of mankind.

We believe that the position and character of American women has been a great asset in the life of this nation, and that, through increasing opportunities to express her ideals, the American woman has a still greater contribution to make.

At this moment of our history, however, partly as a result of the world upheaval, we are facing a condition which is not only deplorable, but one which reflects unpleasantly on the general character of our womanhood and calls for denouncement and correction by all right-thinking women.

Reality, we are told, is the note of this post-war period, and apparently the emphasis is on the reality of all the forces conducive to the breakdown of high moral standards, for the most obvious aspects of our existence reflect, not the wholesome and the noble, but the things which are neither fit to be seen nor heard.

This is manifested in every circle of society, and in every phase of life, but particularly in the habits of our women, young and old, as shown in insidious conversation, profane language, indecent dress, improper dancing, excessive drinking, gambling and a general indifference to reasonable safeguards of proper conduct.

Reports of hysterical gossip, which is principally heresay, should be ignored, but accurate testimony from all over the country makes an appalling picture, some of which at least has a counterpart in every community.

To these distressing conditions the serious attention of every woman in the Church is called, for certainly there never was a time when Christian women were more needed to help emphasize Christian standards.

The most effective thing we can do now is to take concerted action to prove that, as Christians, we "hate the evil and love the good" and believe that life should be a clean and joyous thing, reflecting our recognition of God our Father and loving leadership of Christ our Saviour.

Then we ought to recognize that it is a waste of time to shift responsibility for the present state of affairs. As women we are all in a measure to blame, either through ignorance, indifference or silent acquiescence, if not by actual positive count.

Moreover, as American Christian women we are responsible for certain ideals and conduct, making for "the righteousness that exalteth a nation."

There is no virtue in prudery, and the surest way to dispose of insidious evil is to counteract it with "whatsoever is true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report."

For this task the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, representing the oldest and largest body of women organized for service in the Church, seeks the co-operation of all our women, and suggests that the Christian women of this nation join in an endeavor definitely to express the standards of Christian womanhood through what they say and do and the things they countenance. Surely the religion we profess makes each of us peculiarly responsible to act as "an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."

This Board further recommends to all women's organizations in the Church that they take immediate action to help place the social side of our life on a saner basis.

For which the following suggestions are made:

First. That the approval of Bishops and clergy be sought in our attempt to bring this whole subject before our people.

Second. The formation of committees in every community to arrange—

(a) Plans to arouse parents to the necessity for strengthening and safeguarding the ideals of American homes by maintaining Christian standards of life and training for the the children of this generation.

(b) For meetings with mothers and other thinking women for the consideration of the things which are tolerated today in society, with a view to eliminating the obnoxious features, such as indecent dress, the painting of faces, excessive drinking, improper dancing, joy-riding, vulgar conversation, swearing, etc., etc.

(c) For meetings with girls where the influence and conduct of women may be discussed in a sympathetic and intelligent manner.

(d) For presentation of the evils of vulgar and suggestive moving pictures, promiscuous dance halls, immoral plays and literature, either in book or magazine form—for the purpose of forming sufficient public opinion to guard against these things, and to provide wholesome and attractive recreation and amusement.

(e) For the formation of influential groups of women and girls in every community who refuse to sanction those things, which, according to Christian teaching, lower the standards of life and thought.

Finally, we recommend that wherever there are organizations already considering this matter, the above committees act as far as possible in co-operation with them.

The following resolution was adopted by the Presiding Bishop and Council on February 17, 1921:

Resolved, That the Presiding Bishop and Council sanction and endorse most earnestly the appeal to the women in the Church to help raise the present-day moral standards and express our sense of obligation to do our utmost to the extent that our help is needed and that the attention of the Bishops and clergy of the Church be called to this matter.

LENT.

If this be any one's first Lent, I would give some simple rules which may smoothe some difficulties. Let it be an act of obedience. A sacred poet of our own says, "The Scripture bids us fast, the Church says now." "Thus shall we do it more simply, not as any great thing; not as of our own will, but as an act of obedience; so will the remarks of others (if such there be) less disturb us, as knowing that we are doing but little, and that, not of our own mind. But little in itself, it is connected with high things, with very height of heaven and the depths of hell; our blessed Saviour and our sins. We fast with our Lord, and for our sins. The Church brings us nigh to our Lord, whose fasting and the merits of whose fasting and passion we partake of. We have to "humble our own souls with fasting" for our own sins. Remember we both. Review we our past lives; recall to our remembrance what chief sins we can; confess them habitually in sorrow, with the use of penitential Psalms, and especially that daily medicine of the penitent soul, the fifty-first. Fast we in token that we are unworthy of God's creatures which we have misused. Take we thankfully weariness or discomfort, as we before sinned through ease and lightness of heart. And thus, owning ourselves unworthy of all, think we on Him, who for us bore all; so shall those precious sufferings sanctify thy discomfort, the irksomeness shall be gladsome to thee which brings thee nearer to thy Lord. —E. B. Pusey.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION FOR RECRUITING.

Mr. Editor: In the interest of accuracy, I would explain that the "practical suggestion for recruiting," to which your editorial in the issue of February 19 makes reference, originated in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. The Rev. Dr. W. Cosby Bell, of the Virginia Seminary, as chairman of a Committee on the Increase of Candidates for the Ministry, proposed the plan at the recent meeting of the Council of Southern Virginia, to which he canonically belongs. The plan was unanimously endorsed by the members of the Council and referred to Dr. Bell's committee for execution during this present Lent. Dr. Bell then suggested that I should secure authorization for prosecuting the same policy in the Diocese of Virginia, which I did by submitting the plan to the Bishop and the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. Accordingly the Rev. Dr. Bell and I, with headquarters at the Seminary, are acting in the capacity of a joint committee for the two dioceses in directing this Lenten campaign of enlisting recruits for the ministry. We are sending out similar letters and suggestions to the clergy of the two dioceses, united in a common task. But I would make it clear that the initiative in the matter has come from the Diocese of Southern Virginia, and that to Dr. Bell is due the credit for conceiving the plan and formulating the letters to the clergy.

BEVERLEY D. TUCKER, JR.
Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., Feb. 19, 1921.

"CHOOSING MEN FOR THE MINISTRY."

Mr. Editor: The above caption has just come to my notice as I read the "Exchange of Methods" sent out by the Publicity Department in New York. In no spirit of controversy would I approach this burning question. I am only anxious to get at the heart of the matter, and help find a solution of a problem now before the national Church. Let me, therefore, come directly to my point. Dean Green thinks that we should imitate the method adopted by the Church in the early centuries. No doubt he is right, but I am inclined to question the logic of his argument when he says that Timothy, and Augustine, and Ambrose were enlisted in the ministry of the Church simply because they were picked out arbitrarily by lay authority. I grant you they were picked out, and I am profoundly impressed with the outstanding fact that the Church was immensely justified in so doing. But why were these particular men picked out in the first and fourth centuries? (Mind you, there were about three hundred years between Timothy and Ambrose.) Why were they picked out? For no other reason than that they were known to be men of marked Christian integrity, especially Timothy and Augustine. I am aware of the fact that when Ambrose was chosen in 374 to be Bishop of Milan he had not even been baptized, but he was reputed to be a conspicuous public example of justice, morality and ability. As governor of the province he was universally respected and beloved at a time when heresy was rife, and ambition abroad even in the ranks of the hierarchy of the Church. However, I am not emphasizing this fact. I am trying to show why these three men were chosen for the ministry, and I think it is perfectly evident that they were chosen because they were recognized to be men of spiritual calibre and moral integrity. They were men of tested worth, and when we find them afterwards gracing the annals of the Church we are not surprised.

Now, Mr. Editor, it is one thing to pick out men for the sacred ministry and another thing to know that the men you have selected will measure up to those sublime qualifications that have to do with success. In other words, if we ministers (and I think we all have our hearts in this matter) are doing the very best we can to meet this question of candidates for Holy Orders in a wise and successful way, we are going to keep our eyes on the young men in our various parishes who stand for loyalty and ability in the work of the Church. We make ministers out of laymen, and there is no other material. What, then, are we going to do about it when our young men do not show that kind of Christian character which produced a Timothy or an Ambrose? We can watch them, pray for them, instruct them (if they give us the chance), ask the parents in sermons and private conversation to use their influence in this direction, but what will be the result? If I could find a Timothy or an Augustine, not to mention Ambrose, think you we would not move heaven and earth to enlist their services for leadership in the Church? By all means! I think we might well remember, in this connection, that Timothy had a godly, devoted grandmother whose name was Lois, and that St. Augustine's mother has long ago become a potent example of self-sacrificing love. She not only loved her son, but took his name to the Mercy Seat each day, as did Hannah of old with Samuel. Are there many mothers like Monica? If so, we can lay our hands on "likely young men" who will heed and grace the "Great Call." Otherwise, no!

HUNTER DAVIDSON.

Kent Island, Md.

IN THE MATTER OF GIVING.

Mr. Editor: I agree with much you say in your editorial of the Nation-Wide Campaign in your issue of February 19. I have seen for myself. I think it to be little short of miraculous what this scheme has worked out. Those who started it and gave it life deserve the thanks of this Church. I have yet to find one rector who carried out the plan, honestly backing it up, who does not testify to what it has accomplished. It has increased the salaries of the clergy; it has built churches; it has remade the laity; it has pulled up the Sunday school and church attendance; it has inspired ministers with faith; it has increased missionary giving and interest. In other words, it has done exactly what it was said it would do by those who conceived it. I was a convert to it myself. I am naturally an individualist, prone to repel direction, but I hope I have sense enough to throw myself into what reveals itself under my eyes as worth while, and the Nation-Wide Campaign has done this.

The Nation-Wide Campaign scheme is not perfect. Few great programmes are born perfect. It needs paring here and emphasis yonder. But these things will, no doubt, be brought about. Those who fostered it, I find, are open to suggestion. They will welcome aid. I see that already Mr. George Wharton Pepper proposes a new plan to supersede the Nation-Wide Campaign. He has a justly influential place with us, and what he says is worthy of consideration. But I think it would be fatal to smother the Nation-Wide Campaign. Those who have gone in on it like it, find it an instrument suiting their needs, have gotten it going well and have aroused enthusiasm for it. Why, then, give it up at the instance of others who have not so much as given it an honest trial?

Up to this point I am with you. Here is where we diverge. You believe the Methodists, the Baptists and other Christian bodies exceed us in giving, and in the ease with which they raise money. To this I do not agree. I have heard it often and over again, but upon every comparison of the facts I have ever made, I have seen that the reverse was true. A Methodist minister, having the largest church of that body known to me, said to me recently: "You Episcopalians certainly know how to raise money. If we only had the wisdom and the generosity of your people!" Take any Methodist or Baptist Church of the same size as the Episcopal Church of the same place, and compare the gross giving. Occasionally, but it will be a rare case, they may exceed us, but generally not.

I attended a great Baptist gathering in our auditorium here recently. Dr. Truett addressed it, and he is one of the most wonderful speakers I have ever heard. He praised the virtues of his hearers and left it to others to find out their short-comings, if there are such. I do not know that we should emulate this if we could. But I do feel that we ought to give our people their due, and that we can make a reasonable claim so far as giving is concerned. I have never forgotten F. W. Robertson's sermon on "The Triumph of Zacchaeus." It taught that men are apt to be what others take them to be. I stick to my text; we can compare favorably with our fellow-Christians in giving, and not be ashamed.

I usually find nothing to dissent from in your paper. It has made no small contribution to the Nation-Wide Campaign and our Church life generally. I trust I may be pardoned for this disagreement.

C. A. ASHBY.

Raleigh, N. C.

When they laughed at St. Theresa when she wanted to build a a great orphanage and had but three shillings to begin with, she answered: "With three shillings Theresa can do nothing, but with God and her three shillings, there is nothing which Theresa cannot do."

He forced Him not; He touched Him not; only said, "Cast Thyself down"; that we may know, whosoever obeyeth the devil, casteth himself down; for the devil may suggest; compel, he cannot.—Selected.

The Great Commission.

NOTES FROM THE MISSION HOUSE.

At its meeting on February 15, the Department of Missions heard with pleasure that an anonymous donor had agreed to give $20,000 for necessary land and buildings for the recently re-established Theological School in Porto Allegra, Brazil. The school is making steady progress under the leadership of the Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., who, with Bishop Kinsolving, was a pioneer of the Brazil Mission. Several years ago he was obliged to return to this country on account of illness in his family. More than a year ago he went back to Brazil to re-establish the work of theological education.

A report was made that the price of silver in the Orient has fallen in the last few months to a point where an American gold dollar will purchase approximately two silver dollars. This rate, if continued, will mean not only a saving of more than $200,000 in the expenditures on behalf of the mission in China, but will make it possible to proceed with some building enterprises that have been delayed because of the high rate of exchange.

The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society recently received $408,000 from the estates of the late George Platt and Miss Emily Platt, of Philadelphia. This amount is to be held in trust and the income applied for Domestic Missions in the States of Oregon, Montana, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

The Nurses' Training School at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, has been substantially enlarged. The entire expense has been provided from money earned by Dr. Ellen C. Fullerton in her practice among well-to-do Chinese outside of the hospital. The department expressed its gratitude to Dr. Fullerton for her successful and generous work.

The endeavor to secure $200,000 for the building and endowment for All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., has made remarkable progress. Bishop Burleson reported that so far $162,000 has been secured in cash or pledges. Less than $10,000 has come from outside the State.

With great satisfaction the department arranged, at the request of Bishop Morris, for the appointment of Rev. W. S. Claiborne, long a missionary in East Tennessee, to be Archdeacon of Northern Haiti with headquarters at Cape Haitien.

The Southern Methodists, having decided to give up their mission in Guantanamo, Cuba, Bishop Hulse was authorized to purchase land and buildings, by the use of funds already in his hands. $5,000 of the amount was set aside by the Woman's Auxiliary from the United Offering of 1919.

The Department heard with interest of the plan for the organization of the International Missionary Committee to succeed to the functions of the Continuation Committee appointed by the World Missionary Conference in Edinburgh in 1910. The Executive Secretary of the Department, Dr. John W. Wood, having been elected a member of the committee to represent the United States, the Department expressed its judgment that it is desirable that an officer of the Department should serve upon the committee.

On account of the exacting conditions of life in Alaska, it has been decided to reduce the term of service for women to three years and for men to three years for the first term and four years for subsequent terms.

The Rev. L. R. Craighill was authorized to secure funds in the amount of $25,000 for church, parish hall, schools and residences for the equipment of our mission in Nanchang. This station is the most poorly equipped of any in our China mission. The city is one of the most important in Central China, with a population of 500,000 people, and is likely to become a great railroad center.

The Bishops in China reported by cable that famine conditions are appalling and appealed for further relief funds. The Department decided to make this fact known to the Church in the confidence that our people will respond to this need generously as in the past to all similar needs. So far, about $40,000 has been forwarded by cable to the Bishop of Shanghai.

Church Intelligence

Army and Navy Commission.

I enclose the statement of distribution of the Army and Navy Commission for the month of January, 1921. The item for allowances and expenses covers a discretionary fund for all chaplains in the army and navy who need the $25 a month offered by the Commission. The money is spent in care of invalids, in communicating with the parents of soldiers and sailors, in necessary temporary loans, and in other ways which might in general be considered as a proper disposition of what the ordinary rector would call communion alms. The chaplains throughout the army and navy have expressed their deep gratitude for this assistance on the part of the Church.

It may not be generally known that Mr. Charles F. Schibener is now acting as treasurer of the Army and Navy Commission; and that the Rev. Clayton E. Wheat, now chaplain at West Point, has accepted the position of secretary.

The Army and Navy Commission will meet in the middle of April. It is of the utmost importance that any matters to be laid before the Commission should be in the secretary's hands in good season before that date.

HENRY B. WASHBURN,
Secretary.

Statement.

Account of voluntary and commissioned chaplains: Allowances and expenses	$494.50
Expenses of administration: Salaries	40.00
Traveling expenses	90.63
	$625.13

Sunday in the United States Navy.

The Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. Josephus Daniels, has reissued a previous order directing that all unnecessary labor on board ships in the United States Navy shall be suspended on Sunday, and that every facility shall be afforded for holding divine services on ships. Where it is impossible to secure the services of a regular navy chaplain, it is directed that commanding officers, when practicable, invite competent clergymen from ashore to come aboard and conduct religious services.

The Rev. Cameron F. McRae, of the China Mission, is at home on furlough, and until the first of June his headquarters will be Forty-second Street, Forest Hill, Richmond, Va. Mr. McRae will address the congregations on missionary work in China, for which appointments may be made for him through Dr. John W. Wood, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

NEW YORK.

Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D.,
Bishop-Elect.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Holds Service on Washington's Birthday.

Just before the Cathedral of St. John the Divine opened its choir and crossing for public worship, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew started a Washington's Birthday service, doing so upon the invitation of Bishop Greer, and uniting the local assemblies, four of them, in a common Holy Communion, followed by conferences. This year the Bishop of Long Island was the celebrant, and following a service in the Cathedral, the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning gave an address in Synod Hall.

The burden of Dr. Manning's counsel was that Christianity is held today in higher esteem than ever before; that men are more willing to listen to presentation of Christ's gospel; and that more often than formerly gatherings of men are opened with prayer, where perhaps religion is not to be the main theme. He expressed confidence in Brotherhood plans and men, and bade them remain loyal to the spiritual ideal, which is the principal ideal of the world, not the world of the Church alone, but of business and of social aspirations. He urged men to remember that struggles are the rule, and bade them not to be dismayed at recital of difficulties. He recalled that Washington was a Church layman, and said that to be such in his time took more fortitude than to be one today.

Other speakers included the new rector of St. Andrew's, Harlem, Dean Robbins, of the Cathedral, and the Rev. Dr. White, of Montclair. Encouraging progress was made by the Brotherhood this year in drawing laymen to the service, and not confining the Washington Birthday meeting to Brotherhood men.

New York Churches Lose Many Prominent Members.

The Church in New York suffers keenly from recent deaths. In one case within the year three members of one famous firm, all Church laymen of prominence, have passed away. Mrs. James Speyer was buried from the Cathedral, her death following overwork from the war. One of the first women of the city to enter upon war relief, giving her own house, she was almost the last to stop, and did so only that she might go on with the great numbers of charitable enterprises she had long fostered. Especially solicitous was she of the welfare of animals, and was a main support of societies for their welfare. Not less was she concerned over the welfare of children of the poor, and Children's Aid, St. Mary's Hospital for Children, Working Girls' Vacation League and a tuberculosis work for children among the Jersey pines were her special care.

Within a few months F. B. Jennings, of one law firm, died, only to be followed by his partner, Francis Lynde Stetson, famous throughout the Church. Now the third member, Charles Howland Russell, a son-in-law of the late Bishop Potter and senior warden of the Church of the Epiphany, ends the principal figures in a great firm. Mr. Russell was president of the Board of Trustees of St. Luke's Hospital. The Rev. Drs. Manning, Nelson, Clover and Crocker took part in the service. Among the pall-bearers was Mr. Elihu Root.

Presbyterian men, in particular laymen, are being rapidly organized, and institutes are being held in many cities. An institute just held in Washington is to be followed by one in Brooklyn early in March and one in Baltimore later in the month. The chief speaker at most of these institutes is the Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, of Chicago. Institutes have been held in Chicago, Cincinnai, New York and some other cities, and following them local churches in numbers of instances have organized to put their business affairs upon a substantial basis. The claim is made by the Men's Movement that ministers are wholly relieved of financial worries immediately these laymen take hold. Special attention is being given to Presbyterian men formerly in war service.

This Men's Movement was authorized by the last General Assembly, and it has formulated its work under the heads of evangelism, Bible study, boys, the social life, a bureau that looks after the sick and anybody in trouble, community service, and finance. A further purpose of these Presbyterians, as just announced, is reaching out to organizations of laymen in other religious bodies, and the interchange with them of scientific management methods, looking to better business methods in all forms of Christian service.

Historic Bible for Presidential Oath: St. John's Lodge, which is No. 1 Ancient York Masons of New York, owns the Bible which President Harding will kiss upon taking the oath on March 4. It is the King James version and was printed in England. That President Washington kissed this Bible on April 30, 1789, was due to forgetfulness on the part of a man charged with arrangement details for the first inauguration. When the company was about to start for the Federal Building in Wall Street, where Washington took the oath, Chancellor Livingston discovered that nobody had provided a Bible, and of course there was none in the Federal Building.

Livingston was Grand Master of this, the oldest of Blue Lodges, and knowing there were Bibles there to be borrowed, he sent hastily for one. The messenger selected one out of many, and brought it hastily to Wall Street, just in time to be used. The messenger was Levi Morton, Master of the Lodge. The Bible has long been carefully guarded. President Harding will be the fourth to kiss this volume after taking the oath as President of the United States. St. John's Lodge brought its charter from England, and among some of its first members were men who assisted the S. P. G. to establish Trinity Church.

C.

COLORADO.

Rt. Rev. I. P. Johnson, D. D., Bishop.
Rev. Fred Ingley, Coadjutor-elect.

Accepts Election.

The Rev. Fred Ingley, rector of St. Mark's Church, Denver, has accepted his election as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Colorado.

Rector Enters Thirteenth Year.

The second Sunday in Lent the Rev. B. W. Bonell, of Trinity Parish, Greeley, Col., entered his thirteenth year as rector. Trinity Parish is about three times the size of Rhode Island. Twelve years ago there was only one clergyman in Weld County. In the twelve years Dean Bonell has started missions at Windsor, Eaton and Brighton, and also founded St. John's College, a theological school, which now has twelve men enrolled. With the missions Trinity is one of the largest parishes in Colorado. Dean Bonell has built a church, parish hall and rectory at Greeley and a church and guild hall at Windsor. Trinity Church has grown from forty members to nearly three hundred, and the Sunday school from twelve to one hundred and twenty-five, and Greeley has become the missionary center in Northern Colorado, the faculty and students caring for eight and ten places every Sunday.

NEWARK

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Plan for Divinity Scholarships.

St. James' Parish, Upper Montclair, the Rev. Robert W. Trenbath, rector, announces a Robert W. Trenbath Divinity Scholarship, on a plan that is believed to be quite new in the Church. The plan originated with the Men's Guild, and its chief promoter was a layman, Mr. Frederick Hoadley, who is secretary of the American Insurance Company of Newark. Carried to the vestry, that body accepted it, and incorporated it under the laws of the State. The parish has a Committee on General and Diocesan Work and the Divinity Scholarship is a part of that committee's effort. The aims are: To cause St. James' Parish always to have candidate or candidates for the ministry of the Church, and so meet its quota, or more; to provide for the adequate support of candidates, not alone in seminary, but also in college; and to keep the members of the parish, if possible of some other parishes, alive to the importance of the Christian ministry as an agency to spread Christ's gospel.

Provision is made that if income from the Scholarship Fund be sufficient, candidates other than those from St. James' Parish shall be assisted. Provision is made for the permanency of the scholarship, with the passing of present officers. The vestry and Men's Guild inaugurated the fund with somewhat more than $1,000.

C.

NORTH CAROLINA

Rt. Rev. Jos. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.

Convocation of Charlotte Largely Attended.

The convocation, which met in All Saints' Church, Concord, was opened on Tuesday evening, February 1, with Evening Prayer, conducted by the Bishop of the Diocese; the Ven. William H. Hardin, Archdeacon of the convocation, and Rev. William J. Gordon, of Spray. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Jr., from the text, "The Church, which is His body."

There was celebration of the Holy Communion each morning at 7:30, and Morning Prayer at 9:30. The usual business session, with its organization; reports of officers, and election of officers took place on Wednesday morning. The Archdeacon was re-elected, and Rev. Mark H. Milne, rector of St. Luke's, Salisbury, was re-elected secretary.

Thanks to the Nation-Wide Campaign, the convocation finds itself in the best financial condition it has ever experienced, according to the report of Archdeacon William H. Hardin.

Every mission is supplied with a clergyman, or arrangements completed whereby it is shortly to be supplied.

One of the interesting incidents of the gathering was the practically spontaneous contribution of the amount necessary to put the Diocese of North Carolina in the 100 per cent. column for full quota paid in to General Missions. During the Conference on Nation-Wide Campaign, led by the Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Jr., rector of St. Peter's, Charlotte, Mr. J. Renwicke Wilkes, of Charlotte, Diocesan Treasurer for the Nation-Wide Campaign Fund, in making his report for the year 1920, showed that the Diocese had paid in about 99 per cent. of its apportionment to General Missions, and that it would take about four hundred dollars to bring it up to 100 per cent. In a few minutes special contributions were made, covering the needed amount.

Interesting reports and addresses were made by the Rev. Walter J. Smith, of the Thompson Orphanage; Bishop Cheshire, for St. Mary's School; the Rev. William J. Gordon, of Spray; the Rev. Thomas L. Trott, of High Point; the Rev. Sanford L. Rotter, of Monroe, and the Rev. E. A. Penick, Jr., of Charlotte.

At the Conference on Church Activities on Wednesday evening, following a brief service, Mr. Frank M. Shannonhouse, of Charlotte, spoke on the relation of the Sunday school to the community. Mr. Francis H. Ball described the layman's privilege of participating in the work of the Church. Mr. Henry M. Johnson, of Greensboro, told what the layman could do to promote the efficiency of the Sunday school.

The closing session was a Conference on Sunday School Work, under the auspices of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, led by Rev. Robert E Roe, of Greensboro, chairman of the Diocesan Board. Many of those present—clergy, laymen and women—took part in the discussions, and considerable interesting matter was brought out.

In spite of the bad weather for the opening of the convocation, the attendance was large, and the delegates expressed their appreciation of the warmhearted hospitality of the people of Concord.

SACRAMENTO.

Rt. Rev. Wm. H. Moreland, D D., Bishop.

Annual Convention Held in Santa Rosa.

The annual convention of the Diocese was held February 1 and 2 at the Church of the Incarnation, Santa Rosa.

At the end of the opening service convention met in the church for their business session, Bishop Moreland in the chair.

After the transaction of routine business, the Bishop read his annual address, in which favorable progress was reported for the past year. The Bishop also recommended the adoption of the following departments of the Church work:

Department of Social Service, Department of Publicity, Department of Missions, Department of Finance, Department of the Nation-Wide Campaign, Department of Religious Education, Department of Church Pensions.

The convention, later on in its session, adopted the recommendation of the Bishop in this regard.

The Secretary of the Nation-Wide Campaign reported increasing interest in the work of the campaign as the purpose and meaning of the movement are more thoroughly understood by Church people.

The Finance Committee reported a more favorable condition of the finances of the Diocese than for several years past.

The salary of the Bishop was increased to $3,600 per year, with $500 additional for traveling expenses.

The Secretary of the Diocese, Rev. Clarence H. Lake, was re-elected by a rising vote.

Mr. F. A. Sanford Foale was re-elected Treasurer.

Other elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. W. S. Short, W. H. Hermitage, J. T. MacGovern, E. S. Bartlam, Colonel W. W. Lyman, Hon. W. B. Lardner; Messrs. C. A. Worden and Kenneth I. Jones.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Barr G. Lee, W. S. Short, E. S. Bartlam, John Barrett; Messrs. W. W. Lyman, F. A. S. Foale, K. I. Jones and C. I. Nelson.

Alternates: The Rev. Messrs. J. T. MacGovern, C. E. Farrar, I. E. Baxter, E. A. Osborn; Messrs. F. H. Denman, E. S. Maddox, E. S. Corlett and J. T. York.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Parish House Remodeled.

The parish house of Emmanuel Church, Hastings, is undergoing extensive alteration, enlargement and improvement. Moved to a more suitable position, it will be dressed with a cement coating and a new roof. It will be enlarged by the addition of a commodious kitchen, fitted with a spacious stage in the auditorium; the parlors will be rearranged, a new furnace installed, and all the interior decorated. The basement will afford a large playroom for the children.

Diocesan Conference on Religious Education.

Most of the clergy of the Diocese in attendance at the celebration of Bishop McCormick's fifteenth anniversary, February 14, remained in Grand Rapids until the next day to attend the Corporate Communion, at which they could not be present on Monday. On the invitation of the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, of Grace Church, where the communion was celebrated, they met in the parish house for an all-day conference on Religious Education and to plan for following up the Diocesan program issued by the Department of the Presiding Bishop and Council. The conference was very helpful. It was found that nearly all the clergy are using the Christian Nurture Series, and that even the smallest schools value it.

Mrs. Sargent, of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, was in October elected a member of the National Council of the Church Service League. Since then she has been nominated by the Council and elected to membership in the Department of Religious Education of the Presiding Bishop and Council. Bishop Gailor has later appointed her one of four women of a committee of twenty-five to represent the Church at the meetings of the Federal Council of Churches.

Interesting Speakers at Grace Church: Dean William Lyon Phelps, Professor of English Literature at Yale, addressed the congregation at Grace Church, Grand Rapids, on January 29. He took for his text, "What shall I do to be saved?" and preached what is said to have been one of the finest sermons ever heard from this pulpit.

Dean P. C. Lutkin, of Northwestern University, also spoke in this church on January 23, greatly helping the people to appreciate and enjoy the New Hymnal which was put into use that day.

Mr. Edward Sargent, the rector's brother, of the Department of Religious Education, addressed a large meeting and dinner of the Men's Club, creating keener interest, a truer appreciation, and a clearer vision of the opportunity and duty of all to help the coming generation.

F. O. G.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Observes Washington's Birthday.

A supper conference at 6 o'clock and a recruiting service at 8 o'clock, with a good attendance at both, were the important features of the Washington Junior Local Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held at St. Andrew's Church on Washington's Birthday. The supper conference was open to all the clergy and confirmed boys and young men, and the 8 o'clock service was open to the public, with a special appeal to parents. A special program was arranged, with music by a portion of the Washington Cathedral choir and Mr. Edgar Priest at the organ.

At the supper an address of welcome was made by the Rev. J. J. Dimon, rector of St. Andrew's Church, and other addresses were made as follows: "The Why of Service," by Rev. Edgar Carpenter, Grace Church, Alexandria, Va.; "The How of Service," by the Rev. Charles McAlister, St. Matthew's, Hyattsville, Md., and "The Inspiration for Service," by Mr. William H. Church, St. Alban's School for Boys. At the recruiting service at 8 o'clock the preacher was the Rev. C. P. Sparling, rector of St. John's Church, Georgetown, who had as his subject "The Call of Service." Mr. Sparling is a member of the "Commission on Vocation and Recruiting."

Death of the Rev. Henry Thomas.

The Rev. Henry Thomas, former rector of St. Matthew's Parish, Hyattsville, Md., died early Saturday morning, February 26, at his home in Hyattsville. He had been connected with the parish for nine years.

Mr. Thomas was a native of Maryland, the son of John Caleb and Maria Hawkins Thomas. He is survived by his wife. He was graduated from Dickinson College in 1875 and received the degree of M. A. from Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., in 1880. He graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1878, when he was admitted to the diaconate and was ordained to the priesthood the year following. His charges included St. Peter's, Pooleville, Md.; Trinity Church, Martinsburg, W. Va.; St. Peter's, Smyrna, Del.; Calvary, Asheville, N. C.; St. Luke's, Newberry, S. C.; St. Michael and All Angels', of Washington, and St. Matthew's Parish, Hyattsville, Md. He retired from his last charge on account of ill health. Funeral services were held in Pinckney Memorial Church, Hyattsville, on Monday, February 28, and interment was at Beltsville, Md. Bishop Harding and a number of the clergy of the Diocese were in the chancel and assisted in the services.

Well Attended Lenten Services.

The noon-day Lenten services at Keith's Theater, under the auspices of the Laymen's Service Association, with the co-operation of the Washington Federation of Churches, have been well attended each day by the "down town" business men of the city. The speakers for the week of February 20 were Governor Leslie M. Shaw, Fred B. Smith, of New York City; Representative Barkley, of Kentucky, and the Rev. William Sunday, better known as "Billy Sunday." The services at St. John's every afternoon are also popular and are drawing large crowds. Epiphany Church is maintaining Lenten noon-day services, according to custom of many years, providing, as it does, opportunity for daily service in the very heart of the business section of the city. Many people take advantage of these helpful half-hours during their luncheon period, and numbers of men are always seen at these services. The preacher during the week of February 20 was the Rev. Dr. Henry R. Freeman, rector of St. John's Church, Troy, N. Y., and only brother of the new rector of the Church of the Epiphany. He also conducted on Wednesday night a "quiet hour" for the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Washington.

A lecture on cathedrals, abbeys and churches of England was given on Tuesday, March 1, in St. Thomas' Parish Hall by Rev. C. Earnest Smith, rector of St. Thomas' Church. The lecture was illustrated and dealt with some of the principal ecclesiastical buildings in Great Britain.

The Washington Cathedral choir, under the direction of Edgar Priest, cathedral organist, sang Maunder's cantata, "From Olivet to Calvary," at Trinity Civic and Community Church on Wednesday evening, March 2, at 8 o'clock. The Bethlehem Chapel has been found inadequate to accommodate the numbers who come to hear the choir on such occasions so that a larger church building was selected in order that all might enjoy it.

A service of "Supplication for the Reign of Love and Justice at home and abroad" was held for the Washington Schools for Girls by request of the Head Mistress Association at the Bethlehem Chapel, Washington Cathedral, on Sunday afternoon, February 27, at 4 o'clock. A number of schools in the city were represented by their students and faculties. The sermon was preached by Dr. James E. Freeman, of Epiphany Parish, and very beautiful music was rendered by the cathedral choir.

A Correction: The Samuel Philips bequest to the Diocese of Washington for missionary purposes is not $50,000, as previously stated in this column, but will provide an income amounting to a sum between $50,000 and $75,000. A committee has been appointed by the Bishop to administer any funds which may be immediately available, and a permanent canon for the administration of this fund will be appointed at the next Diocesan Convention.

M. M. W.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Prayer Service for Church Unity.

Ministers and laymen of all denominations met in old Christ Church, Philadelphia, and joined in the prayer service for unity, held Monday afternoon, February 21, under the direction of the Interchurch World Movement. There were no resolutions, no addresses and no sermons in this service; just a few score clergymen and laymen gathered to pray for unity. Familiar hymns were sung, and prayers for unity were offered by the Rev. E. Heyl Delk, a Lutheran minister; the Rev. Frank S. Parkin, of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Edward Y. Hill, of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. R. W. Miller, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and the Rev. A. C. Baldwin, of the Baptist Church. The Rev. J. B. Jennings read the Lessons, and the Benediction was said by Bishop Rhinelander.

Work Among Foreign-Born.

Unity between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Russian Church was emphasized Sunday night at a service in the Pro-cathedral of St. Mary. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Basil Ph. Kurdminoff and the Rev. Dr. George L. Richardson. The service was under the auspices of the Department of Work Among Foreign-Born Americans. A Russian choir sang.

The Commission on Work Among the Foreign-Born Americans of the Church has entered into an arrangement with Bishop Rhinelander and the Department of Missions of the Diocese to take the direction of work among Poles, Italians and Hebrews in Philadelphia. The Diocese is to provide all funds.

Missionary Mass Meeting.

The needs of the Home and Foreign Missions were discussed at the missionary mass meeting recently held in Witherspoon Hall under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of the Diocese. Bishop Rhinelander presided and gave a brief address of welcome.

Dr. Robert Patton, of the American Church Institute for Negroes, called attention to the poor equipment of the mission schools for the negroes in the South.

Bishop Nathaniel S. Thomas, of Wyoming, dwelt upon the great dearth of young men for the ministry. A few years ago, he said, one young man out of every 200 in this country entered the ministry. Now only one in 2,000 presents himself for the priesthood.

Bishop St. George Tucker, of Japan, said that no one could fail to realize the importance of missionary work in the East, not only from a religious but a practical standpoint. "The question is often asked," he said, "Will the people of the East give their allegiance to Christianity? I can only say that Christianity is recognized by Japan as a national religion."

Joint Meeting of Brotherhood of St. Andrew and Church Club.

At the joint meeting of the Philadelphia Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Church Club of Philadelphia in the Church House, February 22, in honor of Washington's Birthday, Bishop Garland presided, and appeals for more candidates for the Church ministry and for greater generosity and unselfishness among the people generally were made.

An address on "Fiddling While the World Burns" was made by A. Hunt Vautier, who was in active service during the war and who has since visited the greater part of Europe.

The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, president of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., spoke on "The Call to the Ministry."

Death of the Rev. Theodore Stroup.

The Rev. Theodore Stroup, vicar of the Chapel of the Redeemer, Andalusia, died on Thursday, February 24, of pneumonia, in his thirtieth year. Mr. Stroup was a native of Frankford and was educated in the public schools and the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Va. In 1918 he was ordained by Bishop Cheshire, of North Carolina, in which State he held a charge until about a year ago, when he was assigned to Andalusia, which is part of All Saints' Parish, Torresdale. His widow survives with one child. The funeral was held Saturday afternoon.

Removing the Furnishings of the Church House.

Work of removing the furnishings of the Church House at Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, which has been sold by the Diocese to the Chamber of Commerce, began February 25, when workmen started tearing out the pipe organ in the assembly room on the second floor. The organ will be removed to St. Titus Mission, Eighty-fourth Street and Tinicum Avenue. The organ was presented to the Diocese in 1898, by the late George C. Thomas, who played it himself at many meetings after it was installed.

The negotiations are under way for remodeling the Bishop's house on South Twenty-second Street, where the diocesan offices will be located when the present Church House is turned over to the Chamber of Commerce about May 1.

Recent Bequests to Church Institutions.

By the will of Miss Helen F. Massey, who died recently, many bequests are made to Church institutions. The estate is valued at over $3,000,000, and various private bequests and annuities are provided, after which the will makes the following among many public bequests:

To the Hospital of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the sum of $500,000 in trust, to keep the same invested and to apply only the income thereof for the purposes of the hospital.

To the Philadelphia Protestant Episcopal City Missions, $150,000, in trust, the income to be used for the purposes of the mission.

After directing the executor to provide for the perpetual care of the family burial lot in Laurel Hill Cemetery and to create a trust fund for that purpose, the testatrix devises the residue of her estate to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States in trust, to apply the income only for the purposes of the society.

R. R. W.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

Bishop Winchester Pleased With Conditions in the Diocese.

Bishop Winchester, in his address to the annual Council, which met in Fort Smith on January 26, spoke encouragingly of the condition of the Diocese, and of the earnest spirit which was pervading various parishes. The Nation-Wide Campaign and a Preaching Mission by Bishop Bratton, of Mississippi, had proved to be a great spiritual benefit. While Arkansas had not accepted the whole quota placed upon her, she met what she promised and gave to General Missions about three times as much as ever before in any year of her history. "I feel," said the Bishop, "that the Nation-Wide Campaign has just begun. God is behind this great movement—Christ has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never blow 'Retreat.' May it be our determination to go on with our assigned duty until the sword in our hand is broken at the hilt."

On account of a serious accident early in the Council year, the Bishop was unable to give more than about three months' active work in the Diocese, and he thanked the Diocese for their generosity and loving interest in enabling him to recuperate at Clifton Springs, N. Y., from which rest he was able to return with renewed vigor. He noted a marked improvement in the Sunday school work throughout the Diocese. The inability of the Presiding Bishop and Council to meet the askings of the Diocese was a great disappointment. In common with the whole Church, the problem of the scarcity of clergy confronted him. He needs eight earnest and able men in his mission fields, four of them colored, and the services of three workers for the Berry Mountain School for Boys.

"I must," added the Bishop, "say a word regarding the Helen Dunlap School. God has wonderfully blessed me in raising up helpers and contributors at most critical times in this institution, so I have learned to think of it as my 'School of Faith.' About five years ago I went to New York, and with the co-operation of Mrs. Biller (widow of Bishop Biller), consulted a number of prominent Christian women about the education of our mountain girls. As a result, these Christian women of New York got together and for four consecutive years contributed $1,000 annually, which enabled me to carry on the work. The Daughters of the American Revolution for a long time, and the Colonial Dames during the past year, have helped our girls. The branches of the Diocese have been most liberal in sustaining scholarships and in sending boxes of clothing. We are now seeing the results of this school throughout our Diocese in the young Christian womanhood we have educated.

"Since writing the above I have received $900 from the good women of New York, through the Nation-Wide Campaign, and $70 from auxiliary chapters, and turned the same over to Mr. Mabley, whose smile will last through the year. I beg the Diocese, through Sunday schools, as well as the Women's Auxiliary, to bear the Helen Dunlap School in mind."

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

Recruiting for the Ministry.

A service under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held in St. Paul's Parish House, Norfolk, on Washington's Birthday, February 22, at 8 P. M. This was one of a number of similar services being held throughout the United States in the interest of the increase of the ministry. Rt. Rev. Beverly D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, was the speaker of the occasion.

After expressing his appreciation of the interest the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was taking in the Church, and the happy thought that they had settled upon the birthday of Washington as a day to hold the services in connection with this growing need of the Church, he read from a letter of Colonel George Washington, serving under General Braddock, making an appeal for chaplains. After stating the need of the men in the army for religion and the fact that they were normally constituted, Colonel Washington wrote that "common decency required that chaplains be furnished to keep the men in touch with God and give them the privileges of the Church's service." Bishop Tucker brought out that there was no chaplain to bury General Braddock, and that Colonel Washington read the burial service from the Prayer Book of the Church of England. "Common decency," declared Bishop Tucker, "requires the children of the Church today to furnish the men for the ministry, so that our own people in this country might have the privileges of the Church, and obeying the command of our Lord that the gospel might be carried to all nations of the world."

The Bishop read from the insistent request of General Stonewall Jackson, who appealed for chaplains to minister to men in his army corps. He also recalled the urgency of General Robert E. Lee's request that men of God may be sent to keep before those who are in imminent danger the higher things of life.

These three men, great in military circles, expressed a common anxiety that the spiritual welfare of those under their command should be ministered to by men appointed to serve before God.

The Bishop related how it has been a tradition in the old families of Virginia that in every generation one or more should be furnished to represent the Church of their fathers in carrying the message of eternal love to their fellowmen. Coming down to our own day, the need of men in the ministry was emphasized by the practical fact that away from the centers of population as constituted in the cities, there are even whole counties in our Diocese in which there is no resident clergyman. Bishop Tucker stated that Bishops in other Dioceses were continually writing to him to furnish them men to fill the depleted ranks; and from across the sea came the everlasting cry of need for those who would carry the bread of life to nourish the souls of men and to become the means whereby the course of famine would be stayed. Looking squarely at the needs of all lands today, he could not escape the conclusion that "common decency" demands of the children of the Church that men go into the ministry and carry her precious treasures to the sheep who are looking up to be fed and have no shepherd, and to those who know not yet that the Shepherd of our souls lived and died for them.

It was a masterly appeal, the effects of which may not be written today, but in God's providence will bear fruit in the years to come.

Death of the Rev. A. L. Seiter.

The Rev. Arthur L. Seiter, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Meadowbrook, Norfolk, died Sunday night, February 20, of double pneumonia.

Funeral services were held in that church, Bishop B. D. Tucker and Bishop A. C. Thomson officiating, assisted by the Rev. Newton Middleton, of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, and Chaplain Huske, of the Naval Base.

The remains were sent to Chattanooga for burial, accompanied by Mr. R. N. Barrows, representing the vestry of the Church of the Good Shepherd. A second service was held at St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, the Rev. Loring Clark officiating.

The Rev. Mr. Seiter was a graduate of Sewanee, and was chairman of the Norfolk Clericus. During the war he was at Camp Lee, from which place he was called to be rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Meadowbrook. He leaves a wife and two children.

M. B. M.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop

N.-W. C. Appropriations.

The Executive Committee of the Nation-Wide Campaign of the Diocese of Virginia held a meeting last week and made appropriations as follows: Toward the rebuilding of St. Anne's Memorial Church, Nokesville, recently burned, $1,000; toward the purchase of lots for the mission at Highland Springs, Henrico County, $250; toward improvements at Wicomico Church, Northumberland County, $150; for the operating expenses of the Diocesan Church Periodical Club, $75. Other appropriations were postponed for further consideration.

To Rebuild St. Anne's, Nokesville.

The congregation of St. Anne's Memorial Church, Nokesville, King William County, the Rev. A. Stuart Gibson, rector, which was burned to the ground on February 12, are making plans for the rebuilding of the church. While no definite conclusions have as yet been reached, it is estimated that the cost of the rebuilding will amount to a figure in the neighborhood of $5,000. The insurance on the building which was burned, augmented by pledges made by the congregation, amount so far to about $2,500, and, as the Diocesan Nation-Wide Campaign Committee has appropriated $1,000 additional, it is hoped that the full amount needed for the reconstruction of the church will soon be available.

A striking incident in connection with the burning of the church was that a heavy wind, which was blowing at the time, was driving the sparks and heat of the burning building directly against a neighboring frame residence, which was the first of a number of frame residences very close together, and it seemed inevitable that if the first residence caught the whole block of buildings would be destroyed. The first residence seemed to be on the point of bursting into flames when a group of ladies of the congregation gathered a prayer meeting, asking that the direction of the wind might change. Within a very few minutes the wind had suddenly changed to another direction and the buildings were saved.

Mission Started at Highland Springs.

The Rev. W. S. Shacklette, minister in charge of Weddell Memorial Church, Richmond, has recently started holding services in Highland Springs, which is a thickly settled community on the Seven Pines trolley, within four miles of limits of the city of Richmond. A Sunday school has been established and a great deal of interest aroused in the establishment of a permanent mission. The people of the community have secured an option upon a tract of five lots fronting two hundred feet on the main street of Highland Springs, including the whole tract between two side streets. The cost of this tract will be $1,000. The people interested in the mission have pledged $500, the Nation-Wide Campaign has given $250, and the Bishop has appropriated $250 from the Bruce Fund, so that the property will be secured at once. It is planned to undertake at once the erection of the parish house.

Farewell Service for the Rev. R. A. Goodwin.

A farewell service, arranged by the clergymen of the Valley Convocation, of which the Rev. B .Duvall Chambers is dean, was held in honor of the Rev. Robert A. Goodwin, rector of Christ Church, Winchester, who has resigned to return to China, where he will have charge of the Kuling School, Kuling. The service was held on Sunday afternoon, February 27, in Christ Church, and the sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop of West Virginia.

Dr. Bowie Called to Minneapolis.

The congregation of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, are much disturbed on learning of the call extended to their rector, the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., from St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., to succeed the Rev. Dr. Freeman, and of the efforts being made by this congregation to secure his acceptance. Dr. Bowie has gone this week to Minneapolis to confer with the vestry there, but his friends in Richmond earnestly hope that he cannot be induced to leave St. Paul's.

The Rev. F. D. Goodwin, of Cople, Lunenburg and North Farnham Parishes, has left the hospital in Richmond, after a surgical operation, and expects to return to his active work next week.

A very successful preaching mission was conducted in Christ Church, Alexandria, the Rev. William J. Morton, rector, by the Rev. Dr. W. D. Smith, of St. Mark's Church, Richmond. The mission, which lasted a week, was largely attended, and Dr. Smith's talks were wonderfully helpful and interesting.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. S. Claiborne, Archdeacon of Eastern Tennessee, having been called by Bishop Morris to become Archdeacon of Northern Haiti, has accepted the call and has been appointed by the Department of Missions. Archdeacon Claiborne is widely known throughout the Church for his successful work among the mountain people of Tennessee.

The Rev. Clarence Parker, student chaplain at the University of Arkansas and rector of St. Paul's, Fayetteville, Ark., has been appointed by the Bishop Secretary of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education.

Bishop Fawcett, of Quincy, returned to his home on February 13 from the hospital in Detroit, and is now convalescent.

The Rev. Byron Holley has resigned the rectorship of the Church of the Redeemer, Biloxi, Miss., and accepted that of St. Mary's Church, Napa, Cal. Address accordingly after May 1.

The address of the Rev. Walter Marvine is changed from Ft. Monroe, Va., to 820 Corinthian Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Rt. Rev. Edward W. Osborne, D. D., retired Bishop of Springfield, has purchased a bungalow in San Diego, Cal., and writes that his health has improved. His address is 3915 Falcon Street, San Diego, Cal.

The Rev. Jerry Wallace, formerly rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Forest City, Ark., has accepted a call to Christ Church, Springfield, Ill., and has taken up his new work. His address for the present will be Christ Church Parish House, Springfield, Ill.

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, of Philadelphia, after a few weeks spent in Galveston, Tex., will speak at the noonday Lenten services in the Garrick Theatre, Chicago, and the week following will also speak at the services at the Y. M. C. A., in the same city.

The Rev. Peter Langendorff, after almost three years of splendid work as rector of St. Paul's Church, East St. Louis, has resigned and accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Hammond, Ind.

After a long period in the hospital, the Rev. William H. Haupt is convalescent, and has again entered the active ministry. He has charge of Park County Parish, Wyoming, with a mission group he had organized before his retirement, and which he has cared for while convalescent. His address continues at Deaver, Wyo.

Ordinations.

On Friday, February 25, Thomas Semmes Forbes was ordained to the Order of the Diaconate by the Bishop of Southern Virginia in St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, Va. The Rev. David W. Howard, D. D., presented the candidate, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Francis C. Steinmetz, S. T. D. Mr. Forbes will have charge of the Church of the Epiphany, Norfolk, and will also continue his work at the Norfolk Naval Base, where he has been a successful worker of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for some time.

Deaths.

The Rev. Paul Faude, rector of St. Joseph's Church, Detroit, died at Crestwood, N. Y., on February 16, after a long illness. He was the son of the Rev. Dr. John J. Faude, of Minneapolis. Mr. Faude is survived by his wife, who was Miss Claire Schayer, of Washington, and one son.

The Rev. Cyrus Olney Tillotson, rector emeritus of Calvary Church, and a member of the California diocesan staff for missions since 1909, died on February 8 at Seabright, Santa Cruz, Cal. The funeral services were conducted from Calvary Church.

Vestrymen.

The Rev. Harvey S. Fisher, in Carolina Churchman.

Whatever others may think or do who hold a similar office, I would have you be always mindful of the importance and dignity of your stewardship. Remembering that you are administrators of a portion of the estate of Christ, the Son of the living God, you cannot fail to give to your duties as a vestry the very best of your several abilities. Business methods should be—in fact, they must be—used, yet your work is not and cannot be a mere matter of business. Your solemn responsibility to God requires that in every discussion of the temporal affairs and interests of the parish, the one controlling thought should be: What would Christ have me to do with His estate? How would He have me administer it?

The parishioners have entrusted you with the responsibility which rests upon them as a whole, and have, therefore, the right to expect a faithful administration of that trust. You were chosen by them because they have thought you trustworthy and capable. They have the right to expect of you a proper estimate of the importance and a proper fulfilment of the duties of your office.

I think also that the parish which has so highly honored you has the further right to expect of you that by your devoutness of life, your regular attendance upon the public services of the Church, your manifested interest in every effort made by priest and people in behalf of the temporal as well as of the spiritual welfare of this portion of the Church of God, you become examples of steadfastness, faithfulness and perseverance, of which they may be justly proud. It goes without saying that a vestryman should be not only an occasional, but a regular communicant; that his attendance at the chief service on the Lord's Day should be the rule and not the exception. In a large measure the parish is judged by the conduct of its official representatives. The absence of the ordinary communicant may not be noticed; the absence of a vestryman is sure to cause remark.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

HISTORY WILL RENDER THE VERDICT.

The current week marks the passing of Woodrow Wilson from the stage of public events.

No man in modern times has had such bitter and vindictive enemies and few have had such extravagant admirers.

Had a bullet terminated his career just before or during the negotiation of the Peace Treaty, there is no doubt that his fame would have been equal to our martyred President, as it is, only the verdict of time will be able to fix the place that Woodrow Wilson will hold in history. It is certain that it will be an enviable one, and his administration may mark a distinct epoch in our annals.

No President since Andrew Jackson has been so entirely independent in thought, word and deed as has Mr. Wilson, and he has certainly set a record for breaking precedents.

His enemies may at least join his friends in wishing him a happy retired life.

NATURAL RESULTS.

This week we have read the account of the horse-whipping of a white Alabama farmer because he refused to join an organization known as the Renters' League. According to the newspaper account, this man was taken from his home to a wood not far from his house and there he was stripped and beaten, so severely that doctors testified that there were numerous cuts and bruises on his body. It is well to bear in mind that this farmer was a white man, and that he had committed no crime of any sort; that he was only exercising his own good judgment as a free citizen, as to whether or not he should join a non-political organization, and that the men who committed this dastardly act were all masked and clothed in garments which concealed their identity. As we have said, this took place in Alabama, which is one of our States where race prejudice exists—almost unchecked by the better class of white people. What happened to that white farmer is the natural result of fostering such organizations as the Ku Klux Klan, or any other society of a secret nature, which undertakes to assume the duties of law enforcement from behind masks. Such organizations are not only terror to the negroes, but they are an insult to our municipal and State governments which are in the hands of white people. They imply that these white officials are either incapable or incompetent, and that they need to be assisted in rendering service that they are supposed to be capable of giving to the public.

Aside from any moral question, these secret orders are a menace to the economic progress of the South. People are not going to invest their money in a section where the enforcement of the laws has to be supplemented by masked and sheeted men who are utterly irresponsible.

We are getting a good deal more advertising through the activities of the Ku Klux Klan than is good for us. Within the past month a photograph has appeared in the Literary Digest, showing automobiles filled with these men, who are too cowardly to disclose their identity, in front of the City Hall of one of our leading Southern cities. Unless vigorous steps are taken to suppress this iniquitous society, the fair name of the South will be discredited before the whole country. It is the Christian duty of every one to exert all influence possible to encourage public sentiment that will discountenance an organization which is afraid to show its face, or to acknowledge its own deeds.

JUDGE LINDSEY IN THE LIME-LIGHT AGAIN.

Up to the outbreak of the war there was no single figure in America that stood out with such a halo of heroism about it as did that of Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, Col.

In his book, "The Beast and the Jungle," he had made thousands of readers feel the thrill of the fight that he had carried on and was still carrying on against the big interests of Colorado.

In his long experience on the bench of a juvenile court he has learned many things. The most valuable of these is how to win the confidence of a child.

In order to retain that confidence when won, the judge believes that it must be respected. Therefore, with his characteristic courage he has refused to divulge a secret confided to him by a child, to whom he had given a pledge of secrecy. Rather than do this he has submitted to a fine of $500 or a jail sentence, preferring the latter.

In a statement over his own signature made in the Survey of February 12, Judge Lindsey calls attention to the fact that the decision against him in the Colorado Supreme Court was only given by a bare majority of one, and that that majority which was given by the vote of a man, who had been his bitter enemy and whose relatives he had exposed in the book referred to above. In passing upon Judge Lindsey's appeal, the court voted against him four to three, and the Supreme Court of the United States has refused him any redress; therefore it remains with the judge whether or not he shall pay the fine or go behind the bars. We quote the part of his own statement:

"We have established a system in this court of lifting the spell of fear, and then the truth comes in practically every case. But you cannot lift the spell of fear in many cases unless you enter into confidential relations with the child. It is better to get the truth his way than not to get it at all, or to get what courts generally get—a miserable lie.

In the midst of this work there came a mysterious murder case in Denver. A woman was said to have murdered her husband. The woman's small son surprised the prosecuting officers by suddenly appearing one day and declaring that not his mother, but he, did it. They said the boy was a liar. They brought him to me, as an expert in truth and falsehood. I got the truth out of that boy by lifting the spell of fear by my promise that I would not betray his confidence. But a very able and a very worthy and well-meaning prosecuting attorney, in his zeal to prosecute the mother, called me as a witness to impeach the testimony of the boy which acquitted the mother of the charge of murder.

I refused to betray the boy's confidence. If I had said that he told me the same story, and the next time I was called in some other case I refused to testify, it would have been assumed that I had been told a different story. I could only claim, in the interest of truth and justice, the privilege I contended for: That this confidence should be respected by the courts in the interest of truth and justice.

The lower court disagreed with me. I was found guilty of contempt and fined $500 and costs, with the usual ruling, that unless paid I should go to jail.

On appeal to the Supreme Court of Colorado, four out of seven judges held that technically I should have betrayed the child. Three of the judges, in dissenting, held as I here contend. But one of the four judges was one of my bitter enemies—one of whose relatives had figured in the Beast and the Jungle stories. This was the deciding vote. I therefore say that the decision of the Supreme Court of Colorado is a biased and unjust one and a blow to the child welfare work of this State, which I shall oppose with all the strength of my soul.

The Supreme Court of the United States, I understand, has held upon some technicality that they could not review the decision—the very unjust decision of our Supreme Court.

I would far rather go to jail—and rot in the cell—than to betray the confidence of a child and strike down the big principle we thus stand for which makes for truth and justice as against the present one which makes only for lies and injustice."

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

MARCH.

1. Tuesday.
6. Fourth Sunday in Lent.
13. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
20. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
24. Maundy Thursday.
25. Good Friday. Annunciation B. V. M
27. Easter Day.
31. Thursday.

Collect for Fourth Sunday in Lent.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that we, who for our evil deeds do worthily deserve to be punished by the comfort of Thy grace, may mercifully be relieved; through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

Our Redeemer.

Dear Lord, Who on the lonely mount
Didst foil the subtle tempter's power,
Fity, and hear our troubled plaint
For rescue in temptation's hour.

Our every frailty Thou dost know,
The heart of flesh to sin inclined;
Fix Thou our faith, our hope in Thee,
Our refuge sure, there peace to find.

Alone Thy conquest makes secure;
Through Thee we may victorious prove.
Help us to strive and to endure.
Lord, keep us steadfast in Thy love.
—Mary Welden, in Lutheran.

The Love of Country.

It is a common saying that every man of the city expects to own a farm and live in the country. There is a deep longing for the association with nature.

We are getting to be a nation of cities. It is not a good sign for the moral uplift of the world. Thomas Jefferson spoke of the city as "the sore spot of the body politic." City life is more or less enervating. It tends to soften the moral tissues. It has many advantages, but many dangers also. The father and mother whose boy, and especially whose girl, has gone to the city to live and labor, cannot help feeling that they have gone into a place of danger.

When we come to our Southland we find the large proportion of its population in the country. Some have estimated it as high as 75 per cent. And at the same time we find a people conservative and moral, cultivating the finer side of life, and not altogether swallowed up in money-making.

The love of the country is one of the primal instincts of Edenic birth. God set the first man to farming and taught him agriculture.

When God wanted to instruct a man in all the deep things of law, statesmanship and religion, He put him on the backside of an uninhabited land. There Moses thought over and thought out all those great facts he had acquired in his course at the University of On.

When Job was bowed down in despair, his foolish wife failing him, his friends joining in the chorus of condemnation, and his own heart confused within him, God took him out and showed him the wonders of nature in the wide expanses of the country. We have a higher example of the divine use of country life. Jesus gathered about Him the troubled, and led them out to the open air and the flowery field of the countryside, and showed them lilies blossoming in their unequaled beauty, the sparrows as they reared their young, the very grass that today is and tomorrow is fired under the oven, and taught men the minute and unceasing providence of God. The Church is concerned with people. The kingdom of God includes all parts of man's nature, his social, aesthetic, material and intellectual, as well as religious side. In fact, we cannot divide man up into water-tight and soul-tight apartments and say we have something to do with this and nothing with that.

What can increase the love of the country, render more satisfied the growing generation and keep on the farms the best of our youth?

The most compelling purpose in driving men to the city is love of associating with our fellowman. Then anything that satisfies this craving in our country will help.

What an opportunity here has the Church to develop and encourage anything that will bring the people together. Good roads, central buildings for social purposes in connection with the Church, bright acetylene lights, telephones ,consolidated schools with children carried miles to a really fine building and good school.

As we ride through the country and see the barn-like churches sitting back in the woods, cold and lonesome and dark and unpainted, can we wonder that the young people seek the bright light and cheerful surroundings of the city?

Why are the ministers leaving the country? Every denomination is complaining of absentee country pastors. It is extremely difficult to secure young ministers for country churches. It may be the seven years of luxurious life of our ecclesiastical cloisters, we call colleges and seminaries, have eaten out the toughened fibre that will enable the minister in the country to endure the lessened comforts. At any rate, it is a pitiful fact that the Church is running away from its largest population and neglecting its best source of supply. No greater mission can be given to a young minister than to take a whole county, it may be, and make it attractive and uplifted and happy in the development of a new country life and spirit.—Presbyterian of the South.

A Hero of Ireland.

"Spud" Murphy, a corporal, of Fall River, Mass., saw half a dozen forms stealing through the darkness toward his listening post "over there" one night. He warned his two companions. Stealthily they crept forward thirty yards and opened fire on a German raiding party, which scattered immediately. Then a grenade came and knocked Murphy unconscious.

Fortunately, it was dark, or Murphy would have been left, for the section west of Montdidier is too active to expose soldiers by removing wounded in daylight.

Murphy arrived, still unconscious, at a field hospital, several miles behind the lines, a few hours after he was wounded. His head, except the tip of his nose and mouth, was swathed in bandages and others were wrapped around his chest and ribs. The wound tag said that his left eye was gone, a fragment of the grenade, as large as a thumb, was in the back of his neck, and his lungs were punctured.

"Put him into bed," said the receiving surgeon. "Apply hot-water bottles. Can't operate now, but we may save him."

Several hours later the major commanding the hospital entered the ward and was surprised to hear the mummified Murphy speak. The corporal was puzzled to find himself in bed surrounded by other wounded men. The voice coming from the bandaged head asked:

"What is your name, buddy? I'm 'Spud' Murphy. Didn't I know you in the Philippines?" The same question was put to each wounded comrade near by.

"How are you feeling, corporal?" asked the major, approaching the bed.

"Fine and dandy," replied Murphy. "Gimme a cigarette."

"Better get a few hours' sleep now," advised the major.

The next morning the corporal was operated on. Pieces of iron were taken from almost all parts of his body. The blood was pumped out of his lungs. The hole in his chest was plugged and patched up. When he recovered from the effects of the ether an orderly put a cigarette in his mouth. The corporal stretched on his bed, watched the smoke through one blackened eye, and said:

"This is the life, ain't it, buddy?"

The surgeon smiled crookedly and "Spud" Murphy squinted at him with his one good eye.

"I know what you're thinking," he said, the cigarette dangling from his lower lip; "you're sayin' to yourself, 'This guy's done in almost—no more Hun huntin' for him—the lucky stiff.' But that's where you're way off, doc. I'm goin' to fool you—for I'm Irish."

"I wouldn't have believed it," replied the "doc" with a real smile.—Ladies' Home Journal.

"Be Near Me, Lord."

Be with me, Lord! My house is growing still
As one by one the guests go out the door;
And some who helped me once to do Thy will,
Behold and praise Thee on the heavenly shore.

Uphold my strength! My task is not yet done,
Nor let me at the labor cease to sing,
But from the rising to the setting sun
Each faithful hour do service to my King.

Show me Thy Light! Let not my wearied eyes
Miss the fresh glory of life's passing day,
But keep the light of morn, the sweet surprise
Of each new blessing that attends my way.

And for the crowning grace, O Lord, renew
The best of gifts Thy best of saints have had!
With the great joy of Christ my heart endue
To share the whole world's tears and still be glad.

—Selected.

More ministers are needed. Money is plentiful: men are scarce. What is the remedy? We cannot send men into the ministry; that is not our part. But we can "pray the Lord of the harvest" to send them, and that is just what Christians are told to do. Prayer will fill the gaps. What say the mothers?

About Confirmation.

No part of the Christian pastor's work is more important, nor more rewarding, than gathering together those who should receive confirmation and preparing them through careful weeks of diligent instruction and training for the great day when they shall renew the vows of their baptism and receive the promise and pledge of the manifold gifts of the Holy Ghost. Nothing should be allowed to interfere with this so great task. It should be taken in hand in such good season as to allow ample opportunity for all that is to be done; and the pastor should come to his classes unhurried, undisturbed by parish problems and worldly care, fresh in mind and spirit, ready to contend with all his might for the rightful shaping of the minds and hearts entrusted to his care. He should remember that the great Judge will hold him to account should hurt or hindrance come to Christ's little ones through his negligence or defaillance.

It is all too common for parishes to have large confirmation classes, but to receive no large increment of strength from them. In a few months, a year or so, many of those confirmed have disappeared from view. True, some have gone to college, some have moved to other parishes, but many have drifted away and are added to the great company of nominal church members. It cannot be doubted that wiser and more conscientious preparation for confirmation would do its part, no less than faithful aftercare, in preventing this waste and loss. Parents, god-parents and friends have a great responsibility in connection with confirmation. Why should they not go with the children to instructions, and why should they not do their part in helping to prepare the young Christian for a beautiful and promising entrance into the way and work of Christ?

In teaching others of the Christian life many a person has himself been made a better Christian, and in calling others to live and work for Christ one is himself in the way of coming into closer fellowship with the Master. In this season of the year, when the larger number of confirmations take place, all our people ought to be praying the prayer for faithful and true pastors, and pleading at the Throne of Grace for the spirit of fidelity on the part of all who have obligations to the boys and girls and young people of the Church.—Newark Churchman.

Annette's Golden Hours.

Annette sat out on the broad veranda of the Denton home. She swayed back and forth in the porch swing—her eyes far away and dreamy.

Summer time had slipped around again, and with it vacation and plans. "I mean to have a glorious summer," Annette had said to her best friend as they parted at the railway station, each taking their different ways after the closing exercises of Miss Norton's school.

"I mean to, too," Mary French replied, and then they had said good-bye until the fall. Two weeks had passed then, but Annette was recalling their conversation as she sat idly swaying back and forth.

She had been having a lovely time—automobiling to distant places, visiting the seashore, etc., and there were many other delightful trips ahead. The summer months are always made golden for Annette—always; but Mary French, her best friend, made the time golden for others—so some one who lived near her had told Annette—told her of the lives made happier back in that little village home because of the sweet unselfishness of the young girl. It was of this that Annette was thinking as she sat with a faw-away look in her deep blue eyes.

"Why, I—I—hardly know the people that live around me!" she exclaimed; "I wouldn't know what to do for them."

Across the cool veranda just then came a figure in white. It was Mrs. Denton, Annette's mother.

"The cream is frozen, dear," she said, "and Celia is making the chocolate dressing for the cake now. I told your father to stop by and bring Helen and Julia out for the week-end."

"Why, how lovely, mother," Annette cried. "You are always thinking up nice things for me."

Mrs. Denton smiled, but for the moment her thoughts seemed to be far down the broad, white road. "I wish old Mrs. Seaborn had some of the cream; if she only lived nearer, it wouldn't be so hard to get things to her." She was speaking as if to herself.

"Why," began Annette, a sudden inspiration seizing her; "why, let me take it, mother—right this minute."

"But—" answered Mrs. Denton; then Annette softly covered her lips with her hand.

"I'll have the pony hitched in the buggy, mother, dear—and we'll be there before the cream even begins to melt." Annette was gone and Mrs. Denton, with a smile on her face, packed the cream carefully.

"She is so fond of it, Celia, and today has been so warm—Miss Annette is going to take it over herself to Mrs. Seaborn."

An hour later Annette drove slowly homeward. Mrs. Seaborn had seemed so glad to see her that she had stayed longer than she had intended.

"Come again, dear," she said as Annette arose to go; "it has done me good to see a sweet young face. In the years gone by I dreamed beautiful dreams, too, even as you do now. It has made my heart lighter, seeing you in the glow of your early summertime."

Annette's eyes were misty as she drove away—and yet her lips were smiling. The wistful face that she had left behind was brighter. She would go to see her again, and yet many times during the summer.

There were others, too—yes, quite a good many more "shut-ins"—she could easily recall them, now since she had begun to think of such things. Those people that she scarcely knew that were around her—yes, she meant to know them now, and love them, too.

"I'm going to have a glorious time—I have so many plans, mother, for the old people, and—and—for all those who need it around us—we'll share our good things and times with them, won't we?"

Mrs. Denton nodded a glad acquiescence as the eager, flushed face looked into hers.

"I think I begin to understand why Mary French is so happy all of the time." Annette's voice dropped suddenly. "She makes the days brighter for those around her."

And the summer months and the days and the years were golden indeed for Annette after that.—Kathleen Hay, in Exchange.

Hastening Evolution.

Put a boy born of gentle white parents among Indians, and he will grow up like an Indian.

Let the child born of criminal parents have a setting of morality, integrity and love, and the chances are that he will not grow into a criminal, but into an upright man.

If a child with a vicious temper be placed in an environment of peace and quiet, the temper will change.

I am as certain of those great truths as I am of the great truths in the plant world. Put a plant into close quarters, without sunshine and room to grow normally, and you'll get a hoodlum plant!

The only place hoodlums grow is in dark, dry, cramped surroundings. Change those surroundings, put a little love and care and sunshine into their lives, and you get opposite results.—Luther Burbank, in Association Men.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Rosebud.

Henrietta Morgan.

Lovely rosebud, who will shield thee
From the chilling winds of night?
Who will gently clasp and hide thee
From the raindrops' cruel might?

Then the crimson-tinted rosebud—
Nature's pride and cherished one—
Soft uncurled its clinging leaflets,
Gazing upward at the sun.

Clearly seemed to speak, the rosebud,
Gazing upward at the sky,
"Fear I not the nightly terrors,
Gladly would I droop and die.

If for just a golden minute
God will let my beauty be
Like a song of joy to mortals
Looking upward, trying to see."

Judgment.

It usually takes a very little superficial thinking to erect a personal judgment seat in one's own mind. To it we seldom summon the person to be judged, but often entertain some very untrustworthy witnesses. Sitting in judgment with an absent defendant is hypocrisy. So many lives have been ruined by the circulation of stories, partly true, but which fail in telling the other side. Our hope of pardon before God is that He will hear and understand the "other side of our plea."

Some one has said that we have two ears and one mouth, to hear twice as much as we say. "All her listening was tempered with the sweetest judgment," said a friend about one who had gone. "She was so gracious in letting what would hurt another slip by. She could not recall a single unpleasant thing about a neighbor." It was regulated by a full measure of God's love. That should determine all our judgments.—Daily Bible.

Fasting.

Fasting is one of the lost arts. It is not a matter for Lent only, it is to be an exercise to train one for nearness to God. We are so apt to count fasting as abstinence from food. But it can apply to anything which has the power of attraction. It is the exercise of detachment which makes possible greater spiritual reality. So many lives are close to the shore line of worldliness, when the broad expanses of the ocean are inviting. "The pathway of life of great men is strewn all along by the things they have learned to do without."—Sunday School Times.

"Going requires a very close dependence upon God. One cannot be sent unless God can trust him to keep the material in the background. It is a caution for the organized Church, but far more for the individual disciples in the Church. The lesson is personal first."

For the Young Folks

Contrary March.

When March comes in like a lion,
  Roaring, growling,
Wind on the hill loud and shrill,
  Wind in the meadow howling;
Big trees tossed by the lashing gale
Right and left, like a lion's tail,
Bushes shaken in road and lane,
Tawny and wild like a lion's mane,
With a scratching of claws and a pad-
    ding of paws—
  Fierce and furious though he be,
He's going out like a lamb,
  You just watch and see!

When March comes in like a lamb,
  Gentle, easy,
Just a breath over field and heath
  Wagging and warm and breezy;
Soft buds bobbling all down the trail,
Short and white as a lambkin's tail,
Hedges and ledges blooming full,
Fluffy and fair as a lambkin's wool,
With a frisk of feet and a musical bleat—
  March will never remain like that.
He's going out like a lion;
  Hold on to your hat!

—Nancy Byrd Turner, in Youth's Companion.

For the Southern Churchman.

Grandma's Birthday Present.

F. E. L.

PART I.

Mary Jane sat on a low stool by the great blazing fire in the old-fashioned kitchen, thinking deeply. Grandmother was dozing in her easy chair, and the old cat sat on the rug, demurely blinking her eyes, as the flames danced up the chimney.

Grandmother's birthday was drawing near, and Mary Jane was busily pondering what she could give her. She would be seventy-five, and Mary Jane was anxious to give her something nice. Uncle Reuben and Aunt Tilly were making great preparations for the coming event, and Mary Jane wanted to have her part in the day's celebration.

She first thought of a spectacle case; but that wouldn't do. It was too little a thing, and, besides, the one grandma had was yet good. Then she remembered that there were some odds and ends of worsted in the attic, which grandmother had told her she might have. Why might she not crochet something for her, a wash-cloth, or a handkerchief bag, or—but nothing she could think of suited her. She wanted something big, something surprising.

Just then the clock struck six, and she remembered that Aunt Tilly had asked her to have the table set by the time she and Uncle Reuben came back, about six; so she jumped up and lighted the lamps, and soon had the table ready for tea.

"Mary Jane, haven't Tilly and Reuben come yet?" asked grandmother anxiously. "I wonder what keeps them so late. Look out and see if they are coming, child."

Mary Jane went to the window and peered out, but the snow was coming down so fast it was difficult to see anything outside in the deepening twilight.

"No, grandma, I don't see them. Oh! yes, there they are!" she joyously exclaimed, as she ran to the door to relieve Aunt Tilly of some of the many packages she had.

"Well, Aunt Tilly, are you almost frozen?" asked Mary Jane.

"Not quite, child; be very careful and don't let mother see that big bundle."

"I won't," said Mary Jane, as she cautiously slipped upstairs; and as she reached the top of the stair grandma came out into the hall.

"Why, Tilly, you are covered with snow! I didn't know it was snowing so; you must be very cold! Did you get my yarn?"

"Yes, mother," said Aunt Tilly, as she took off her cloak, "but I had to go all over town before I could find it."

Then came the opening of the bundles, for going to town was a great event now that money was so scarce. While Mary Jane and grandmother were investigating the contents of the bundles, Aunt Tilly was preparing the evening meal.

After this was over and Mary Jane had helped Aunt Tilly clear off the table, they settled down; Uncle Reuben with his paper and Aunt Tilly with her sewing.

"Mary Jane," said grandma, "won't you go upstairs and look in the closet in my room, in that box under the shelf, and bring my knitting needles? I want to set up Reuben's socks tonight."

"All right, I will be back in a minute," said Mary Jane as she darted off.

But she had some trouble finding them, for they were not where grandma had said. She rummaged around hunting for them, and in her search came across grandma's slippers.

"Dear me!" said Mary Jane to herself, "how old they look! And nearly worn out, too! Why couldn't I make her some? Oh! I wonder if I could! Wouldn't it be nice—that would be something real! They might not be so pretty as these once were, but they would certainly be warmer than these are now. If it only was morning, and I could begin them now, but—where are those needles! They are not here; maybe they are in her drawer." She looked, and there they were.

"I reckon you thought I had to make them," she said when she reached the sitting-room, "but I looked for them in your box and could not find them, then I thought I would look in your drawer, and here they are."

"Oh! thank you, child; I remember now; I put them in the drawer," said grandma, as she prepared to begin her knitting.

When Mary Jane's bedtime came she bade them all good-night and went upstairs. She slept in grandma's room, and when she got in safely upstairs she got out the slippers and examined them carefully. Yes, they were crocheted, and she was sure she could make some just like them.

She slept soundly and sweetly, for her heart was at rest; she had at last found something to do for grandma's birthday.

The next morning she was up bright and early, before grandma called her, and when grandma, as they were dressing, casually remarked, "I wish I had some more slippers; these don't keep my feet warm any longer," she smiled to think she could give something to grandma that she really wished for.

After breakfast she must help Aunt Tilly wash the dishes, churn, and do a thousand and one things before she could do what she wanted to; it was baking-day, too, so she was twice as long getting free.

But at last all was done, and Aunt Tilly said, "You may go now, child; you have helped me a great deal, and I won't keep you any longer."

Mary Jane at once darted off to the attic to look over her stock of worsted. She had never had any use for it, and had never even collected the balls and put them in her drawer in grandma's room with her other scraps.

There were several good-sized balls of the same dark color, and two of a pretty shade of yellow, that she thought might trim the slippers if the brown should give out. And soon she was crocheting away as busily as if her life depended on getting them finished that day.

She worked on until she became so chilled she could stay there no longer. Slipping quietly down into grandma's room, she got warm and smuggled one of the old slippers under her shawl and hurried back to her work. She did not get on so fast as she wished, having to ravel out several times before she could get it exactly right.

"Tilly, do you know where Mary Jane is? I want her to hold this hank of yarn for me," said grandma, sometime after Mary Jane had left the room.

"No, mother, I do not; but I will hold it for you. She is off somewhere doing something wonderful; she was so full of it this morning that I let her go before I had finished the baking," replied Aunt Tilly, as she put down her work and held the yarn for the old lady.

"Now, Tilly, you let that child off too much," remonstrated grandma, who had old-fashioned ideas, thinking a child ought never to be let off under any circumstances until she had finished everything.

"Oh! no, mother, she's a good child; always willing, and I think she deserves a little holiday now and then," said Aunt Tilly, as she put away her sewing and went downstairs.

"Well!" sighed grandma, "it's not the way I was brought up."

Just then Mary Jane entered and with deft hands was laying the cloth for the mid-day meal, when Uncle Reuben came in with a very downcast countenance, and as he hung up his coat and sat down by the fire he said, "Mother, I don't know what to do! Everything seems against us; the wheat is not doing well, the potatoes have frozen, and the best mare is sick. What can I do if she dies—and plowing time almost here, too. Ah! farming is a mighty poor business. Mighty poor!" he repeated, as he rose and left the room with the hot mash Aunt Tilly had prepared for the sick horse.

"Poor Reuben!" said grandma, half to herself. "I reckon he does have a hard time of it, sure enough!"

As Mary Jane listened she wished she could do something to make some money to help them; so Uncle Reuben need not work so hard; and Aunt Tilly try so hard to save.

After dinner was over and she was again free to work on her precious slippers, her thoughts wandered back to the conversation downstairs, and again she felt how nice it would be to do something to remove the look of care from Uncle Reuben's brow, and enable grandma to live in comfort all the rest of her days.

"Oh, me! I am right stiff, I have sat in one position so long," she said, with a yawn; and as she stretched herself out the ball rolled down off her lap. Reaching for it, she noticed the worsted was nearly gone and the paper on which it was wrapped was clearly in view. Working with a will, she soon had used up all of that ball.

"What a funny thing to wrap worsted on!" she exclaimed aloud, as she began to undo the funny little package. "It looks like it had something in it. Oh! mercy! what on earth can it mean!" she fairly shouted, as she unwrapped a queer little old handkerchief and several shining gold pieces rolled out.

(To be continued.)

Mrs. Tabby White Goes Shopping.

Mrs. Tabby White put on her new green bonnet and her best Paisley shawl. Then she took a note book and pencil from her pocket.

"Let me see," said Mrs. Tabby White, "what must I buy today?"

First she wrote down—

New mittens for the three little kittens.

"They do soil them so quickly!" said Mrs. Tabby White.

Next she wrote down—

Two bunches of catnip (very fresh).

One jug of cream (also very fresh).

And last she wrote—

A box of herrings.

"They will do nicely for tea," remarked Mrs. Tabby White.

Whereupon Mrs. Tabby White took her market basket, locked the door of her home, and started out for Peter Pumpkin's store.

On the way she met Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy.

"Where are you going, Mrs. Tabby White?" asked Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy.

"To Peter Pumpkin's store," said Mrs. Tabby White, "to do my morning's shopping. I am going to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream and a box of herrings."

"Oh me, oh my!" exclaimed Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy. "Is that so, Mrs. Tabby White? Are you, indeed? How I wish I had a bit of catnip. There's nothing my kittens like so well."

Mrs Tabby White went on and presently she reached old Dame Mouser's cottage, Old Dame Mouser was sitting in the front yard shelling peas.

"Where are you going, Mrs. Tabby White?" asked old Dame Mouser.

"To Peter Pumpkin's store," replied Mrs. Tabby White, "to do my morning's shopping. I am going to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream and a box of herrings."

"Oh me, oh my!" cried old Dame Mouser, "is that so, Mrs. Tabby White? Are you truly going to buy all those things? If only I had a jug of cream, I'd make a sauce for these peas. Creamed peas are very delicious, you know."

Mrs. Tabby White went on, and at the cross roads whom should she meet but young Mrs. Tiddle Cat out for a walk.

"I should like to know where you are going, dear Mrs. Tabby White?" said young Mrs. Tiddle Cat gaily.

"To Peter Pumpkin's store to do my morning's shopping," answered Mrs. Tabby White. "I am going to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream and a box of herrings."

"Why, Mrs. Tabby White," laughed young Mrs. Tiddle Cat, "that will be splendid! A box of herrings is a great treat. I should like some myself."

Mrs. Tabby White went on; and, as she walked very quickly and followed her nose, she soon came to Peter Pumpkin's store.

"Good morning, Mr. Peter Pumpkin,' said Mrs. Tabby White.

"Good morning, Mrs. Tabby White," answered Mr. Peter Pumpkin. "What can I do for you today?"

"I have come to buy some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream and a box of herrings," said Mrs. Tabby White. "They must all be fresh."

"I can accommodate you, ma'am," replied Mr. Peter Pumpkin. "I stock up every day and my prices are very low."

"That," agreed Mrs. Tabby White, "will please me greatly."

So Mr. Peter Pumpkin put into Mrs. Tabby White's basket some new mittens for the three little kittens, two bunches of catnip, one jug of cream and a box of herrings, and Mrs. Tabby White started home again.

After a time she came to Mrs. Tiddle Cat's house.

"It's a shame," thought Mrs. Tabby White. "I don't suppose that poor dear creature has a herring once a year. Really, I think I must give her these."

She ran into the yard and called, "Mrs. Tiddle Cat! Mrs. Tiddle Cat! Here is a box of herrings for you!"

Mrs. Tiddle Cat put her head out the window. "Why, bless your heart, Mrs. Tabby White," she said, "thank you kindly, thank you kindly."

Mrs. Tabby White went on. By and by she saw old Dame Mouser still sitting in the yard.

"It's certainly a pity," said kind-hearted Mrs. Tabby White to herself, "that old Dame Mouser never can get fresh cream. Really, I think I ought to give her this."

She held the jug of cream over the gate. "How should you like this jug of cream, Dame Mouser?" she asked.

"Very much, indeed," answered old Dame Mouser. "Thank you kindly, Mrs. Tabby White; thank you kindly."

Mrs. Tabby White went on. As she drew near Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy's house she heard, "Mee-ow, mee-ow"; then she heard another "Mee-ow, mee-ow"; then she heard lots more.

"It's Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy's kittens," thought Mrs. Tabby White. "Really, she needs this catnip more than I do."

So Mrs. Tabby White went up the path and rang Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy's bell; and she gave Mrs. Fuzzy Wuzzy every single bit of her catnip.

Then generous Mrs. Tabby White went home and all she had left in the basket were the new mittens for the three little kittens.

"Really," said Mrs. Tabby White, taking off her new green bonnet and her best Paisley shawl, "I must go shopping again tomorrow morning."

And Mrs. Tabby White did.—Susan Holton, in Presbyterian Banner.

Laughing Birds.

If you don't like being laughed at, I am sure you would not like a journey in an Australian forest. Perhaps you would suddenly hear a low cry of Yah, yah, yah! The cry grows louder and louder, and other cries join in, until you might think the forest was full of people laughing at you. But the sound comes from birds instead of people—queer birds called "Laughing Kingfishers."—Exchange.

Mrs. E. Prentiss, in one of her letters, used the significant expression, "Learning the mysterious art of prayer by an apprenticeship at the throne of grace."

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO

105 E. Broad Street

Richmond, Va.

Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen

Prompt and Reliable Service

Spring Styles

NOW READY

Have Your Old Hat Fixed Like New

Many customers use their old hats by having them made over for their children. We specialize on children's hats.

PARCEL POST DEPARTMENT AT YOUR SERVICE.

VERRA HAT WORKS

211 NORTH FIRST STREET

RANDOLPH 90

GRAIN, HAY, FEEDS

FIELD SEEDS AND BASIC SLAG

S. T. Beveridge & Co.

Office: 1217 East Cary Street

Warehouse and Elevator: Seventh and Byrd

Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS

Largest stock in the South

We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival

The Couper Marble Works

(Established 65 years)

264-268 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"The Store that Pleases"

FOR FURNITURE

Jones Bros. & Co.

Incorporated

1413-20 E. Main St., Richmond, Va

Jno. L. Williams & Sons

BANKERS and BROKERS

Eighth and Main (P. O. Box 565)

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Transact a general Banking and Brokerage Business. Deal in Southern Investment Securities. Negotiable Railroad and Municipal Bonds.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

IN THE REALM OF THE SUPERNATURAL

Or, A LOOK INTO SPIRITISM

By O. R. PALMER

A discussion of the spiritualistic manifestations, now growing more and more prominent, in the light of the Word of God. Illustrated by a most remarkable testimony of a believer delivered from demons' power. Price 27c. postpaid.

PHILADELPHIA SCHOOL OF THE BIBLE
1721-23 Spring Garden Street, Phila., Pa.

"Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem."

GIVE YOUR GOOD FRIDAY OFFERING

to the

JERUSALEM AND THE EAST MISSION

for Church work in Jerusalem, Haifa, Beirut and the Lebanon.

THE NEEDS ARE GREAT for relief and maintenance.

Give generously this year as a memorial to our late Secretary and Treasurer of the U. S. A., the Reverend John Heyward McKenzie, D. D., L. H. D.

Send remittances to the Secretary of your Province, or direct to The Right Reverend Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Church House, Phila., Pa.

SECRETARY OF PROVINCES

1. Rev. Dr. J. S. Littell, West Hartford, Conn.
2. Rev. Dr. B. W. R. Tayler, Schenectady, N. Y.
3. Rev. C. N. Tyndell, Williamsport, Pa.
4. Rev. J. B. Gibble, Burlington, N. C.
5. Rev. Dr. J. H. Hopkins, 5550 Blackstone Ave., Chicago, Ill.
6. Mr. W. B. Keiter, 131 E. 14th St., Minneapolis, Minn.
7. Rev. R. N. Spencer, 927 W. 34th St., Kansas City, Mo.
8. Mr. F. M. Lee, 485 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

WANTED Commission Agents And Dealers

To sell Nursery Stock—all kinds of fruit trees, ornamentals and plants. Beautiful illustrations supplied with full information on growing trees and plants. Two propositions offered. Commission agreement and confidential terms to dealers. Big profits. Only TRUSTWORTHY men need apply. Write today.

THE HOWARD-HICKORY CO.,
Box 584, Hickory, N. C.

Church Furnishings, Memorials, etc.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS

Highest grade instruments. In use in three thous. and churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is to be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.

M. P. MÖLLER
Hagerstown, Maryland

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stoles
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts
COX SONS & VINING
72 Madison Avenue New York

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
338 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis

For the Southern Churchman.

The Little Robin.

Anne Tunstall.

Poor robin flits from tree to tree
When snow is on the ground,
And naught but frost and ice is seen
For miles and miles around.

He searches in the bare tree tops
To find a bite to eat,
"You know, I must have food," he said,
"For my three birdies sweet

"How glad I'll be when spring is here,
And blossoms snowy white
Will cover all the fields and hills,
'Twill be a wondrous sight."

So robin waited patiently
Until his wish came true.
The birds flew back from Southern lands;
Robin was happy. Are you?

Happy Little Antonio.

Children are very much the same the world over. American boys and girls have much in common with the boys and girls of foreign lands. They have their play and their chores and their school, just as American boys and girls have. These facts are made strikingly clear in the reports that reach headquarters of the American Red Cross at Washington, concerning work of the Junior Red Cross among the children overseas.

Let us take a glimpse at the daily life of an average boy in Italy. Antonio gets up every morning at 6 o'clock and helps his mother dress his brothers and sisters, and get breakfact for them. The breakfast is black coffee, and sometimes there is dry bread, and on very rare occasions milk.

He then starts off for school, his books under his arm, greeting his comrades in a friendly, gracious way, for courtesy is inborn in the Italian peasant. At school he studies in a leisurely way. He loves drawing and makes many sketches. If he does not know his lesson no punishment befalls him; if he does know it, very good—usually he knows it. After his lunch of bread and soup he struggles over his arithmetic and at 5 o'clock he starts homeward softly singing some bit of music from an opera or a chanson.

Antonio's mother greets him warmly; she has many children and loves them dearly. Antonio hurries off to deliver the laundry for her or to perform some little duty, and when he returns the evening meal of polenta (corn meal and water) is ready.

So the days pass, one like another; until he enters the factory or the shop to work at his trade until the time comes for his period of military service. He must spend three years with the colors before he can begin carving his own career.

We have heard men quote this saying, "The Lord helps those who help themselves," as if this were in the Word of God. It is contrary absolutely to the Word of God. The Lord helps those who cannot help themselves, and the sooner men find out they cannot help themselves the sooner they will find the help of God. It is coming to the end of ourselves that really gets us to the place where God can help us.—Sunday School Times.

The Rev. M. E. Spatches will on March 1 become rector of St. Augustine's Church, Kansas City, Mo.

Too many have no idea of the subjection of their tempers to the influence of religion, and yet what is changed if the temper is not? If a man is as passionate, malicious, resentful, sullen, moody or romose after his conversion as before it, what is he converted from or to?—John Angell James.

Vapo-Cresolene

Established 1879

Used for more than forty years. The benefit derived from it is unquestionable.

FOR more than a generation we have been receiving grateful testimony to the virtues of this thoroughly tested and proven treatment. It stops violent coughing, and difficult breathing, assuring restful sleep because the antiseptic vapor carries healing with every breath. Booklet 43 tells why the diseases for which Cresolene is recommended yield to this simple and dependable treatment.

Vapo-Cresolene is sold by druggists

VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St, New York

The Richmond Mica Co.

Oldest Ground Mica Factory in the World

Manufacturers of

GROUND MICA OF UNSURPASSED PURITY AND LUSTRE

BY EXCLUSIVE PROCESS

Factory, 321-323 S. Ninth St.
Office, Cor. Eighth and Main Sts.
RICHMOND, VA.

R. Geissler, Inc.

56 West Eighth Street, New York

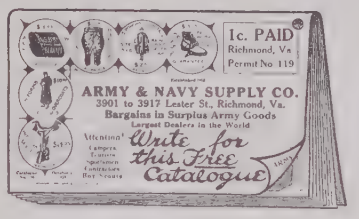
Memorials

FOR THE CHURCH

Furniture — Windows — Fabrics

To abort a cold and prevent complications take

Calotabs



The purified and refined calomel tablets that are nauseless, safe and sure.

Medicinal virtues retained and improved. Sold only in sealed packages. Price 35c.

U. S. ARMY GOODS

Useful articles for Farmers, Laborers, Sportsmen, Contractors and Boy Scouts in new and reclaimed Army Goods at rock bottom prices.

Army shoes, boots, shirts, breeches, sweaters, camping equipment etc.

Write today to DEPARTMENT P. for this FREE illustrated catalogue---Box 1835, Richmond, Virginia.

"If the Army used it we have it"

ARMY AND NAVY SUPPLY CO.
RICHMOND, VA.

Oriental Rugs Cleaned and Mothproofed

DO YOU KNOW that we will clean, mothproof and store all your Rugs under a guarantee against Moths? See this wonderful Department of our Fireproof Warehouse

W. Fred. Richardson
Security Storage Company, Inc.
Fireproof and Non-Fireproof Storage
Main and Belvidere Streets Randolph 845

There Are

many lines of business that we don't attempt to do, but we do Administer Estates and act as Trustee when called upon to do so.

It is our business, and therefore we are frequently called upon to act as executor or administrator, and trustee.

Our officers can and will give helpful suggestion along these lines.
Interviews are confidential and without charge.

As to drawing your will, see your attorney or ours.

Virginia Trust Company

The Safe Executor
Richmond, Va.

Sow D. & B.'s Tested SEEDS

Successful farming and gardening depends on sowing the right seeds. Those who sow our seeds know how good they are.

Ask for our catalogue, which gives full cultural directions and many helpful suggestions for gardening, and price list of our Farm Seeds.

Diggs & Beadles, Inc.
Seed Merchants
RICHMOND, VA.

Headquarters for Superior Seeds for the Farm and Garden

The Emerson Shoe
HONEST ALL THROUGH

Black and Dark Tan Men's Vici Kid Shoes
THE CORRECTOR
And
EMERSON LASTS
A $10.00 Shoe, Extra Special
at $7.25
Send us your size

Woodall & Quarles
7 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

R. L. Christian & Company
514-16 E. Broad St.
Richmond, Va.
Leading Fancy Grocer

AGENTS FOR
HUYLER'S CANDIES AND PETER'S SWISS MILK CHOCOLATE

Special attention given to out-of-town orders.
Catalogue mailed on application.

The Wing-Foot Electric Shoe Repair Shop
ALL KINDS OF GENERAL REPAIRING
Mail Orders a Specialty
Owned and Managed by T. A. BUNNELL
311 N. Second St. Phone Ran. 1286. W

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

FAMINE RELIEF.

For the convenience of our readers we publish the addresses of the treasurers of the various Relief Funds whose appeals for the starving, and especially for starving children, are so urgent and touching. The Southern Churchman will forward contributions to any of these, but to save time, postage and possibility of miscarriage, checks would better be sent directly to the treasurers as below:

Near East Relief (formerly "Armenian and Syrian Relief")—Cleaveland H. Dodge, No. 1 Madison Ave., New York City.

European Relief (Central and Eastern Europe)—Franklin K. Lane, 42 Broadway, New York City; or locally for Virginia, DeSoto Fitzgerald, 218 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Chinese Famine Relief—Remit through Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, Presiding Bishop and Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

We acknowledge the following additional contributions to the fund for the relief of the sufferers from famine in China:

H. W. Lewis, Jackson, N. C.....$10.00

PIPE ORGANS

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices.

LOANS, GIFTS AND GRANTS TO AID in building churches, rectories, and parish houses may be obtained of the American Church Building Fund Commission. Address its Corresponding Secretary, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. BARNABAS offers to laymen seeking the Religious Life opportunity of trying out their vocation and of caring for the sick poor. Address Brother Superior, Gibsonia, Pa.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I take this method of thanking my many clients for their past patronage, and assure them I am still selling Spirella corsets, and can be reached at the Wallerstein, Apartment 202, or by phone, Randolph 3694-W. MISS MYRTLE McDONNELL.

DON'T TRY ON YOUR NEW DRESSES over your old corset. Let us help you select and fit to you the corset that does greatest justice to your figure. The Corset Shop, 317 N. Fifth St. Mrs. A. J. Pyle, Prop. Phone Ran. 3397.

Doll Skirts Accordion Pleated Free. ASHBY B. PYLE, 315 N. 5th St. Hemstitching, Pinking and Button Covering.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGHEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 219 W. Broad St., Richmond, Va.

MISS M. M. TYLER

Invites you to inspect her line of GAGE Tailored HATS. Also the ADVANCE Showing of Spring Hats in the most attractive shapes.

209 N. FOUSHEE ST.

STAR CLEANING CO.

Richmond, Va., Cleaning, Pressing, Dyeing and Repairing. Prices reasonable; workmanship the best. Special attention given parcel post orders.

FLORIDA.

IF YOU WILL TELL US in your first letter what you want in Florida we will be glad to give you friendly, helpful advice. Ad publishers of Florida's leading farm journal; it is to our interest to help you get properly located. We have no land to sell and try to give absolutely unbiased, honest advice to those who seek a home in Florida. Address The Home Location Bureau, Florida Grower, Tampa, Fla., Box M.

NIAGARA METAL WEATHER STRIPS Saves 25 per cent. Fuel, Prevents Rattling Windows, keeps out Dust, Dirt and Storm.
CINCINNATI REVERSIBLE METAL AND WOOD FRAME SCREENS.
L. F. HEROLD,
2 N. 11th St., Richmond, Va.
Phone Randolph 3550.

SEEDS AND CARDS

25 POST CARDS, and FIVE 10-cent Packages Garden Seeeds, 25 cents, postpaid; 100 Post Cards, twenty 10-cent Packages Garden Seeds, Atlas New Europe, $1.00, postpaid. Address HOWARD SEED HOUSE, Windfall, Indiana.

HELP WANTED

WANTED—A COMPETENT MIDDLE-aged woman, white or colored, to cook and take entire charge for a family of four adults. Laundry done out. In the mountains of Virginia. House has modern conveniences. Good wages and a permanent home to the right person. Reply A, care Southern Churchman.

YOUNG WOMEN OF EDUCATION AND refinement wanted to enter the St. John's Hospital Training School for Nurses (Episcopal), Brooklyn, N. Y. Applicants required to have one year of high school or its equivalent. Course three years. A registered school of high standing. Nurses receive remuneration. Many social privileges. Home life pleasant. Graduates are now receiving $6.00 per day. Apply to St. John's Hospital, Albany and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y.

WANTED MATRON FOR INSTITUtional work. Address "T," care Southern Churchman.

WANTED FOR 1921-22 AS MASTER IN the Grammer Department of a Church school, an unmarried man with teaching and playground experience. Apply St Albans School, Washington, D. C.

WANTED PUPIL NURSES FOR A SPEcial course for one year in eye, ear and throat work, also post graduate nurses for a course of from four to six months. Certificates given at end of course. For further information apply to Superintendent Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital, 1147 Fifteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

WANTED—A COMPETENT LADY AS companion. Must be well educated, a good reader; also understand knitting. Age between 35 and 40; Episcopalian preferred. Address, stating full particulars, with references, Mrs. J. C. H., Buck Hill, South Richmond, Va.

LADY OF REFINEMENT DESIRES position in Church school as House-Mother; Experienced hostess. Address "Hostess" care Southern Churchman, Richmond. Va.

WANTED—BY A GRADUATE NURSE, A resident position in a school or with an invalid. R. N., care of this office.

WANTED—POSITION AS RESIDENT nurse in Church school for next term. Address Miss Blanche Corling, R. N., 714 Church St., Lynchburg, Va.

WANTED—MOTHER'S HELPER, ELDERly lady preferred; refined surroundings. Will pay expense of interview. Address Box 184, Alexandria, Va.

What a Dime Will bring You From the Nation's Capital

The little matter of 10 cts. will bring you the Pathfinder eight weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is an illustrated weekly, published at the Nation's center, for all the Nation; an independent home paper that prints all the news of the world and tells the truth; now in its 28th year. This paper fills the bill without emptying the purse; it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home which is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which puts everything clearly, strongly, briefly—here it is. Send 10c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation eight weeks. The 10c does not repay us, but we are glad to invest in new friends. Address:

Washington has become the World's Capital and reading the Pathfinder is like sitting in the inner council with those who mold the world's destiny.

THE PATHFINDER, 4008 Langdon Sta., Washington, D. C.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriage notices not exceeding 40 words, $1.00. Death notices, not exceeding 40 words, inserted free. Over 40 words at the obituary rate. Obituaries and resolutions, 20 cents per line. Six words to the average line.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday previous to the Saturday on which it is intended to be published.

Selden: Entered into life eternal February 10, 1921, HARIETT CAROLYN SELDEN, widow of Saunders Selden, formerly of Westover, Va., daughter of Thomas Coleman, of Halifax County, Va.

"These are they who have come out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

S.

Carter: Died, February 10, 1920, at the home of her daughter near Upperville, Va., MRS. KATE DENIS CARTER, for many years a faithful helper in the family of the late Mrs. Dr. R. E. Peyton, of Yelverton, Va.

Cuticura Soap Complexions Are Healthy

Soap, Ointment, Talcum, 25c. everywhere. For samples address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. V, Malden, Mass.

THE IRISH HOME RULE QUESTION.

Protestants of Ulster are opposed to "Home Rule," which is simply Roman Rule. This book is informing, awakening. Friends are contributing to send it to Congressmen, Governors and others. Are you a lover of the Bible, a Protestant? Read and circulate this book. Price 30c, 4 for $1. Order today.

PENTECOSTAL PUB. CO., Louisville, Ky.

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

You will find an OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLE, with its wonderful References and Helps, an invaluable aid in Bible study and in preparing your Sunday School lessons. The Helps are arranged in alphabetical order, like a dictionary They are accurate, comprehensive and up-to-date.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS
CATALOG UPON REQUEST
Oxford University Press American Branch
35 West 32nd Street New York City

RELIGIOUS BOOK WEEK
March 13-20—Put good books in your home, especially an OXFORD BIBLE, for every member of the family

John Ruskin considered the following chapters as the most helpful and the most important to his education. They were selected for him by his mother: Exodus 15 and 20; 2 Samuel 1, 5 and 17 to the end; 1 Kings 8; Psalms 23, 32, 90, 91, 99, 103, 112 and 139; Proverbs 2, 3, 8 and 12; Isaiah 58; Matthew 5, 6 and 7; Acts 26; 1 Corinthians 13 and 15; James 4; and Revelation 5 and 6.

She Would Never Say Please.

There was once a small child who would never say please,
I believe if you even went down on your knees.
But, her arms on the table, would sit at her ease,
And call to her mother in words such as these:
"I want some potatoes!" "Give me some peas!"
"Hand me the butter." "Cut me some cheese!"
So the fairies, this very rude daughter to tease,
Once blew her away in a powerful breeze
Over the mountains, and over the seas,
To a valley, where never a dinner she sees,
But down with the ants, the wasps and the bees,
In the woods she must live until she learns to say please.
—M. S. P., in St. Nicholas.

There are questions which nothing can answer but God's love, which nothing can meet but God's promise, which nothing can calm but a perfect trust in His goodness. There is shadow and mystery upon all the creation until we see God in it, there is trouble and fear until we see God's love in it.—Dr. Dewey.

Make a rule and pray God to help you to keep it, never if possible to lie down at night without being able to say, "I have made one human being, at least a little wiser, a little happier or a little better this day." You will find it easier than you think and pleasanter.—Charles Kingsley.

Men have walked for generations over hidden treasures that a spade plunge would unearth. Science stumbles over truth that waits to be unveiled. Invention lays her finger alongside the spring she seeks to touch, and misses it. All things lie near enough, if we but know how to look.—Mrs. Whitney.

Reliance
"Perfect Protection"
Continuous Income Means

$50 per week, for 52 weeks, while confined by sickness.
$50 per week, for 104 weeks, while disabled by accident.
$100 per month, for life, is totally and permanently disabled, by either accident or disease. No further premiums to pay in event of disability. No deductions from face of policy to offset indemnity received unde this lause
$50 per month to your beneficiary, for life—commencing immediately after your death, and $10,000 to your estate, or whomever you may designate, payable immediat ly upon death of above mentioned beneficiary.
$10,000 to your beneficiary in addition to all of above benefits in event your death results from accident.

H. S. RAWLINGS, General Agent
511 Mutual Building, Richmond, Va.

Can You Afford to Deny Yourself Such Protection?

Easter Fashions

Sounding a New Price Note

Easter is symbolical of awaking. It is applicable to the Easter season in the Store—a veritable hive of industry, ideas and fresh new apparel for the glorious Spring Season.

Interest has awakened anew in the Store's goods with the re-appearance of good-looking merchandise of recognized QUALITY and authoritative STYLE at prices strikingly moderate. There is no reason why any one should forego the pleasures of a charming Easter outfit with prices sounding this welcome note.

Women, Misses, Children—all are invited to view the radiant richness of the new modes.

Those who reside too far from the Store to visit it in person are invited to use our Mail Order Department. Write us for what you want.

Miller & Rhoads

"The Shopping Center" RICHMOND, VA.

JUST READY

More "FIVE-MINUTE TALKS"
By Walter R. Bowie, D.D.

SUNNY WINDOWS

Author of "The Children's Year"

AND OTHER SERMONS

Here is another volume of Dr. Bowie's talks to youngsters, all attractively suited to the child mind. The subjects are arresting themes, calculated to almost invariably catch the attention of boy or girl—while the treatment thereof is simplicity itself.

As the Record of Christian Work said: "Dr. Bowie's talks are capital—straight to the hearts of children, clever, interesting, helpful."

Cloth, $1.25 net

For Sale by
Southern Churchman Co., Richmond, Va.

The Symbol of Happiness

The bluebirds will soon be here, and so will spring. Start a Savings Account and, as in Materlinck's famous story, you will soon find in your own home the "bluebird"—in other words, CONTENTMENT. Money in the Bank is one of the ways to find it.

Planters National Bank, Main & 12th Sts.

Resources Over $20,000,000.00

You Can Send Your Boy or Girl to Any College in This State

At but small sacrifice to yourself through our "COLLEGE PLAN"

Ask or write for booklet

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK
Tenth and Main

"The Bank with the Three Doors of Opportunity"

Look Forward With Hope, Not Fear.

"God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved." If the great Father believed that there was a saving remnant in human nature worthy of consideration, worthy of His Son's life, then we must believe that, even in the face of all that we read and hear today, there are elements in our nature that once aroused and brought into active service, must make for a better world and a more wholesome one in the days that lie ahead. It is true, and we cannot blink the fact, that the post-war period, perhaps more than the actual war period, has disclosed in a conspicuously offensive way the frailties and weakenesses of human nature. Like all other post-war periods, it has been characterized by license in its most repellant forms. We do not attempt to gloss over the glaring and self-evident facts, but we do dare to maintain that, if we are to make progress in the future, we must take counsel of our hopes and not of our fears. The attitude of Jesus towards men and women who had made shipwreck of life is the only attitude that has ever succeeded in restoring men to normal habits of thought and practice. He did say to one who had tragically sinned, "Neither do I condemn thee," but let us not forget that He added, "Go and sin no more." We must remember that it is the spirit and method of the Master that constitute the secret of our success and efficiency in dealing with other weak mortals like ourselves. The world does not want at this time the word of stern condemnation. It is consciously heartsick and sinsick, and we are hopeful enough to believe that penitence and repentance are becoming more evident. We do not wish to hear the voice of the pessimist, nor will we believe with him that the world is to continue to decline and grow worse. We look forward with high expectancy to a better world, to more constant Christian service, to more neighborly helpfulness and to a life of greater service and unselfishness. Let us not carry over any unnecessary liabilities that have accrued during the past fateful months. Let us believe better things of men and women, and believing them, let us call them forth. We like those words of Henry Van Dyke. They constitute a fine suggestion for thought and practice to every one of us:

"Four things a man must learn to do,
If he would make his record true:
To think without confusion clearly,
To love his fellowmen sincerely,
To act from honest motives purely,
To trust in God and heaven securely."
—Rev. J. E. Freeman, D. D., in St. Mark's Outlook.

Death hath made no breach
In love and sympathy, in hope and trust,
No outward sign nor sound our ears can reach,
But there's an inward spiritual speech
That greets us still, though mortal tongues be dust.

It bids us do the work that they laid down,
Take up the song where they broke off the strain;
So journeying till we reach the heavenly town,
Where are laid up our treasures and our crown.
And our lost loved ones will be found again.

Memorials or gifts to be in place for this great Festival should be considered promptly so designs may be prepared for criticism and accepted and the work executed and erected in ample time for dedication.

J. & R. LAMB

Studios 23-25-27 Sixth Avenue, New York

EASY, PLEASANT, PROFITABLE

Others Find It So, Why Not You?

Here is your chance. If you have an hour or two a week to spare you can turn every minute of it into money by taking orders for subscriptions to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, the oldest Episcopal church paper published in America; endorsed by Bishops and Clergy, and by churchmen everywhere. Every dollar raised by subscription to be devoted to the betterment of the paper.

Liberal commission paid on each order and a generous bonus on your production.

JUST CLIP AND MAIL THIS COUPON

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
815 E. Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen: Please send me full details about your offer to subscription representatives.

Name_____ Town_____

Street, or R. F. D._____ State_____

How the Great Guest Came.

It happened one day at the year's white end,
Two neighbors called on their old-time friend:
And they found the shop, so meagre and mean,
Made gay with a hundred boughs of green.
Conrad was stitching with face ashine,
But suddenly stopped as he twitched a twine:
"Old friends, good news! At dawn today,
As the cocks were scaring the night away,
The Lord appeared in a dream to me,
And said, 'I am coming, your Guest to be!'
So I've been busy with feet astir,
Strewing the floor with branches of fir.
The wall is washed and the shelf is shined,
And over the rafter the holly twined.
He comes today, and the table is spread
With milk and honey and wheaten bread."

His friends went home; and his face grew still
As he watched for the shadow across the sill.
He lived all the moments o'er and o'er,
When the Lord should enter the lowly door—
The knock, the call, the latch pulled up,
The lighted face, the offered cup.
He would wash the feet where the spikes had been;
He would kiss the hands where the nails went in;
And then at the last would sit with Him
And break the bread as the day grew dim.

While the cobbler mused, there passed his pane
A beggar drenched by the driving rain.
He called him in from the stony street
And gave him shoes for his bruised feet.
The beggar went and there came a crone,
Her face with wrinkles of sorrow sown.
A bundle of fagots bowed her back,
And she was spent with the wrench and rack.
He gave her his loaf and steadied her load
As she took her way on the weary road.
Then to his door came a little child,
Lost and afraid in the world so wild,
In the big, dark world. Catching it up,
He gave it the milk in the waiting cup,
And led it home to its mother's arms,
Out of the reach of the world's alarms.

The day went down in the crimson west,
And with it the hope of the blessed Guest,
And Conrad sighed as the world turned gray:
"Why is it, Lord, that your feet delay?
Did You forget that this was the day?"
Then soft in the silence a Voice he heard:
"Lift up your heart, for I kept My word,
Three times I came to your friendly door;
Three times my shadow was on your floor.
I was the beggar with bruised feet;
I was the woman you gave to eat;
I was the child on the homeless street!"
—Edwin Markham, in "The Shoes of Happiness."

The very best people need our intercessions.—J. G. K. McClure.

Not Merely

a counting house, but a people's bank and a useful servant in this community.

We believe that it is the duty of any company which serves the public to be a builder of good will in its community, and that its success depends upon the efficiency of its service.

3% interest on savings and dormant accounts. Interest figured on daily balances.
Irrespective of its size, we invite your account.

Richmond Trust Company

Capital and Surplus, $1,200,000

Main and 7th Streets

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

ASSETS - - - - - - - - $2,744,156.41

Wm. H. Palmer, President
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary
J. M. Leake, General Agent
E. B. Addison, Vice-President
J. C. Watson, Treasurer
Wm. P. Hill, Asst. Genl. Agent

(Just Published)

The Gospel of Life

By the Reverend
PHILLIPS STANDISH GILMAN
Author of "The Church and the Individual," etc.
With an Introduction by
THE BISHOP OF EAST CAROLINA

A pithy book for a busy age, with a vital, practical message of divine truth for the attainment of HEALTH, HAPPINESS and HOLINESS.

READ THE FOLLOWING OPINIONS

"I pray that it may bring a fuller appreciation of all that the blessed Christ may mean to those who are willing to accept His promises and follow Him all of the way."—Bishop Darst.

"It is splendid."—Rev. H. B. Wilson, Society of the Nazarene.

"Spiritual, practical and full of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. Prof. S. A. Wallis D. D., Virginia Theological Seminary.

"Particularly apt and inspiring. The appendix is of tremendous value."—Rev. F. M. Wetherill, St. John's, Philadelphia.

Price, 75 Cents, Postpaid

The Southern Churchman Co.,

Richmond, Va.

O. Luetke's Art Works

Church Furnishings

IN METAL, WOOD, MARBLE, ETC.

Est. 1886. 328-332 7th Ave. New York

Service

That's what the nation-wide campaign asked of you.

Service—in your church, in your home, in your business. That's what you get when you buy your Furniture of Sydnor & Hundley.

Service, and a price commensurate with that service.

Sydnor & Hundley

FURNITURE

CARPETS DRAPERIES

HOT WATER HEAT

For Small Homes, Churches, Stores, Etc., Without Cellars

ARCOLA SYSTEM

R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO.

9 N. 7th St. Inc. Richmond, Va

NICK BULL'S MARKET,

Richmond's Leading Dealer in

FISH, OYSTERS, POULTRY and GAME

312 N. Sixth St., Richmond, Va.

Phone Randolph 1680

WE INVITE YOUR PATRONAGE

HOW TO HAVE THE BEST TIME WHEN YOU GO ABROAD

Take only the necessary things with you; buy the other things over there.

Take the lightest luggage that you can get along with.

Take advantage of everything that will lighten the strain of travel.

Take the best care of your health and, above all,

Provide yourself with Traveler's Checks or Letter of Credit from the

First National Bank

Richmond, Virginia

CHURCH PEWS

PULPIT FURNITURE

SUNDAY SCHOOL CHAIRS, BLACKBOARDS, ETC.

Virginia School Supply Company

2010-12 West Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

FOR QUICK SERVICE CALL RANDOLPH 1978-W

We Clean One Small Rug Free as a Trial

Electric Carpet Cleaning Co.

W. F. POAT

16 West Grace Street, Richmond, Va.

Carpets and Rugs Washed and Dried right on the floor!

Hamilton Beach method used exclusively—the nationally advertised way.

Called For and Delivered

Have You Made Your Will?

See G. Jeter Jones, Vice-President, about this now. All conferences confidential. Phone or write for appointment.

Merchants National Bank

11th and Main Streets, Richmond, Va.

"SAFEST FOR TRUSTS"

Unwise Handling of Money

There are still some people who either thoughtlessly or deliberately keep their money in secret places of their own, trying to protect it themselves instead of keeping it where money belongs, namely, in a strong bank.

The National State and City Bank—for over half a century a progressive Bank of the South—invites your accounts, small or large.

National State and City Bank

1111 E. Main Street, - - Richmond, Va.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA ISIN 1835

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 12, 1921. No. 11

A Parable

I went my way to meet the Angel Pain,
Down a dark valley path with shadowy sights,
That shut me from the cheerful, gleaming lights
Of hill and plain.

My heart was full of bitter discontent;
Surely I could not pass with willing feet
From the good strength I long had found so sweet;
Unwillingly I went.

I knew no presence save my own despair;
Its moanings seemed the only voices nigh,
When sudden on the silence smote a cry,
Almost a prayer.

There fell, as falls a garment, all my fears,
My doubts, my woe. Poor brother in distress!
I hushed and soothed and gave the tenderness
Of all my tears.

I dressed his wounds, I poured the oil and wine
Of human love; then set my face again
To meet the coming of the Angel Pain
And own his sign.

Slowly, as when the sunset glories cease,
A shadow fell across my pathway; slow
I knelt, I lifted weary eyes, and lo!
The Angel Peace!

—Nancy Byrd Turner.

EDUCATIONAL

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

Established A. D. 1823.

The ninety-seventh session will open on Wednesday, September 15th, 1920.

Special Students Admitted

For catalogue or other information, address the dean or Secretary.

Theological Seminary

Alexandria, Va.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The forty-third session opens September 22, 1920.

For catalogue and information, apply to

REV. C. B. BRYAN, Dean
Petersburg, Va.

The Virginian Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded and Epileptic.
Established 1892.
For terms and information, address
MISS M. GUNDRY

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-third year of this School for Boys opens September 15, 1921. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. HOXTON, B. A., Principal

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA

Prepares boys at cost for college and university Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountains of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to

REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia.

Founded by Bishop Alonzo Potter in 1862.

Special students admitted. Privilege of attending course of special study at the University of Pennsylvania.

For information address the Rev George G. Bartlett, S. T. D., Dean, 5001 Woodland Avenue.

ST. MARY'S, An Episcopal School for Girls

Founded 1842. Full College preparation and two years' advanced work. Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science and Business. 14 Modern Buildings, 25-acre Campus in mild Southern climate. Moderate rates. Address REV. WARREN W. WAY, Rector, Box 19, Raleigh, N. C.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY
Publishers
815 East Grace Street, - - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
E. B. ADDISON.....Vice-President
REV. E. L. GOODWIN, D. D.....Editor
REV. W. RUSSELL BOWIE, D. D..Associate Editor
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE.....Associate Editor
JOHN H. COOKE.....Managing Editor

Entered at the Postoffice in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE—After January 1, 1918, $3.00 per year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscription 3 months 50 cents, 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage 50 cents additional. Back numbers not over 3 months old 3) cents each, over 3 months old 25 cents each.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance, or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they are to go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS—Rates quoted on request. For Classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish, liberal commissions.

News concerning the church at large always welcome.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Be sure not to ask little of God."

What is morally wrong can never be politically right.—C. J. Fox.

God is never out of the reach of His children.

We all hate self when it crops out in somebody else.

It is the grain of truth that gives force to the lie.

"A thoughtful man will never set
His tongue a-going and forget
To stop it when his brain has quit
A-thinking thoughts to offer it."

Everybody naturally drifts. The time must come when those who have a purpose in life must stem the current and change their course. Lent is that time.

Grant us a larger vision of our task,
Sun-clear horizons of a day to be;
Not for ourselves Thy dearest gifts we ask,
But that world-weary souls may turn to Thee.

Our own unworthiness will appear great in proportion as we have communion with Christ. Self and Christ can never stand together; where He is, self lies in the dust. Pride will be trampled under foot, and every soul be filled with what John Newton termed "pleasing grief."—D. Thomas.

Our Lord is a patient hearer if you have anything to say, and He will speak to you as you are able to hear it, and if you cannot collect your thoughts, and your heart is hot within you—remember that with those groanings which cannot be uttered the Spirit maketh intercession for you.—R. S. Candlish.

Emerald Hodgson Hospital

—AND—
TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES
UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH
Sewanee, Tenn.

A Church institution where the best training to be had for development of Nurses. For further information, address,

REV. W. S. CLAIBORNE, Supt.

St. Christopher's School

(Formerly the Chamberlayne School)

A country Boarding and Day School for Boys under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia.

WESTHAMPTON, RICHMOND VA.

Tenth session begins September 22, 1920 Tuition in boarding department limited to twenty-two boys—$700.

For catalogue, address

Rev. C. G. Chamberlayne, Ph. D., Headmaster

ST. CATHERINE'S SCHOOL

Founded by
VIRGINIA RANDOLPH ELLETT
Westhampton - - Richmond, Va.

A country day school for girls under the direction of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia. College preparatory. Boarding department 503 W. Franklin Street. Eight-acre playground. Emphasis on health; out-door life.

MISS ROSALIE H. NOLAND, Principal

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

ST. HILDA'S HALL

CHARLES TOWN, W. VA.

The Chevron School for girls. Episcopal. In the Shenandoah Valley. College preparatory. Elective Courses. Music and Art, Athletics. Open air classes Individual instruction. $600.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL, Principal
(Former Principal Stuart Hall)

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

SUMMER QUARTER

First term, June 20 to July 30; second term, Aug. 2 to Sept. 3. Faculty, over 100; courses, over 300; attendance last year, 1856. Courses for teachers and college students. College credit. Degrees conferred on men and women. Most beautiful campus in America. Cost very reasonable. For catalogue and full information, write to

CHAS. G. MAPHIS, Dean, University, Va.

Virginia, Chatham. Box 13.

The Chatham Episcopal Institute for Girls

Music, Art, Domestic Science, Expression. Thorough preparation for all colleges. New buildings. Ten-acre campus. Athletics. Gymnasium. Terms moderate. Catalogue and views.

B. D. Tucker, D. D., President; Rev. C. O. Pruden, D. D., Rector; Miss Annie Marian Powell, A. B., Sweet Briar, A. M., Columbia, Prin.

"Thy Word, O Lord, like gentle dews,
Falls soft on hearts that pine;
Lord, to Thy garden ne'er refuse
This heavenly balm of Thine.
Watered by Thee, let every tree
Forth blossom to Thy praise,
By grace of Thine bear fruit divine,
Through all the coming days."

Southern Churchman

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

VOL. 86 RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 12, 1921. No. 11

GLORIA VICTIS!

On its surface appearance scarce any scene of American history has transcended in pathos the passing into the Capitol last Friday and out of it again of Woodrow Wilson. Into that place he had come at the high hours of the war to read the messages for which all the world held its breath to listen. There, more than any other man of his time, he had shaped the destiny of America and of the world in the moments of immeasurable choice. There he had come in the full vigor of his manhood, in every aspect of him the dominant and commanding leader of a mighty epoch. Last Friday Woodrow Wilson came again. But this time a different figure came. He came on the day that symbolized his defeat. He came at the side of the man in whose person was expressed the repudiation by the electorate of America of the things for which Woodrow Wilson had stood. He came, an old man, broken by his heroic exertion, with life spent and drained in the service of his country. Painfully he made his progress through the halls of the Capitol and out of it again to a life clothed no longer with authority.

Yet those who look beneath the surface will see something other than the pathos. They will see the grandeur that the coming years shall yet reveal. Long is the roll of those whose contribution to history has been made supremely not through their victories, but through their defeats. Woodrow Wilson has had the limitations incident to all this human personality of ours. Doubtless he has made his mistakes. But he has lifted up before the world an ideal of a better hope for all the nations, which once seen can never perish. He has lit a torch which, though his hands may fail, shall not lack of other hands to catch it up and hold it high. Of many of the mighty things that he has sought to do, of that interpretation of a new democracy both at home and abroad which he had seen and helped others to see, he can say, as has been said of all who fight for truth:

> "Who follow her, though men deride,
> In her strength shall be strong,
> Shall see her shame become her pride
> And join her triumph song."

WHAT LIES AHEAD?

All lovers of their country must have waited with deeply moved anticipation for the words which were to sound the keynote of the new administration, now coming into power in America. One great era of thought and purpose has come to its end. Another and an unknown chapter is to be written. What would the new President say? What guidance would he give for thought and hope? What encouragement would he bring to those who had dreamed great dreams of the meaning of America for the building of justice and peace among the nations of the earth?

To our thought the message is disappointing. It is positive in its denials and its repudiations. It is vague in the things which it affirms. It expresses a purpose clear enough where it comes to tearing down certain achievements of the administration that have gone before, but dim are the outlines of any constructive plan by which the architecture of the coming years shall be shaped. "Confident of our ability to work out our own destiny and jealously guarding our right to do so, we seek no part in directing the destinies of the Old World. We do not mean to be entangled. We will accept no responsibility except as our own conscience and judgment in each case may determine." Not in these words, nor in the rest of the text of the inaugural address, does there seem to be the enthusiasm of a genuine faith that there can be constructed such an association of nations as shall build the world-to-come on safer foundations than those upon which the old has rested.

The effect of a message can often be best indicated by marking the response which it calls out in the different elements which listen to it. As one reads the comment of the press, both in this country and abroad, the idealist finds reason for dismay in the fact that the inaugural address seems to bring confidence to selfish and reactionary elements, and sadness to those who have hoped most for the years ahead. The enemies of any form of a League of Nations are delighted. Men in America, and in other lands, whose idea of patriotism is linked with derision of any international ideal, find in it a confirmation of their views. The militarists in France like it because they think it means that no pressure of public opinion from the United States will interfere with the utmost exploitation of their advantage over Germany. And it is liked, no doubt, by such organs of opinion as the Chicago Tribune, which in an editorial printed just before the speech was made, concluded with this paragraph: "The United States is regarded as a confirmed adherent to the doctrine that it is 'more blessed to give than to receive.' We can change that to the doctrine that we'll give a square deal if we get one—and if we do not get one, we'll know the reason why."

That may be a sentiment with which the narrow demagogue will catch the plaudits of the crowd, but for men who think of all life in terms of the sovereignty of the ideals of Christ, it is gross and mean.

Yet happily this does not tell the whole story concerning the new President's message. We believe that it lacks constructive conviction, and that it will strengthen some influences which are hurtful and weaken the hands of better ones. But we do not believe this to be the real purpose of Mr. Harding. Without sureness, yet with good will, he is feeling his way toward a program of service. The partisan necessities of the campaign which destroyed the administration of Mr. Wilson accentuated Mr. Harding's note of denial, but when this triumphant partisanship has had its way, we believe that the pressure of a vast human necessity will increasingly be felt within his spirit to urge him forward to decisions which shall genuinely make for the peace of the world.

"We are ready," he says, "to associate ourselves with the nations of the world, great and small, for conference, for counsel, to seek the expressed views of world opinion, to recommend a way to approximate disarmament and relieve the pressing burdens of military and naval establishments. We elect to participate in suggesting plans for mediation, conciliation and arbitration, and would gladly join in that expressed conscience of progress which seeks to clarify and write the laws of international relationship, and establish a world court for the disposition of such justifiable questions as nations are agreed to submit thereto. In expressing aspirations, in seeking practical plans, in translating humanity's new concept of righteousness, justice and its hatred of war into recommended action, we are ready most heartily to unite; but every commitment must be made in the exercise of our national sovereignty.

It is easy to note the reservations in those words which make the progress toward an international order lame and halting, yet there is enough here for those who look to a new internationalism to rally round. This is no time for surrender on the part of those who are determined that the world shall not sink back into its old barbaric isolation, as though the frightful cost of "the war to end war" had never been paid. The stars in their courses fight on the side of all those who believe in progress and idealism. It is a time for courage and for confidence in the coming of a better era that shall not be denied.

INCREASE OF THE MINISTRY.

The Rev. John McGill, D. D.

This subject has been before the Church of God from the beginning.

It was known to Christ. It is twice recorded that He felt it, spoke about it and gave directions.

St. Matthew says, "And Jesus went about all the cities and the villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness. But when He saw the multitudes He was moved with compassion for them, because they were distressed and scattered, as sheep not having a shepherd.

"Then saith He unto His disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." St. Luke tells us, "Now after these things, the Lord appointed seventy others, and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place, whither He Himself was about to come. And He said unto them (as He had said unto the twelve), The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." The scarcity of laborers was on His heart. He felt it. He was moved to act in the matter. And both to the twelve and to the seventy He said, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into His harvest."

Doubtless His disciples felt as He did, and He saw the interest, the pity; but He also saw in their anxious faces the look of perplexity and of inquiry, "What is to be done about it?" And Christ's command touching the matter was, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest."

He tells His disciples and us:

First. The harvest is God's.

Second. It is God's part to send laborers.

Third: Man's part to pray.

Turn now to the next chapter of St. Matthew, "And He called Unto Him His twelve disciples and . . . These twelve Jesus sent forth and charged them, etc., etc."

Doesn't it seem as if an interim occurred between His charge to the disciples to pray and His sending them forth? And we wonder, did Jesus purposely defer sending them forth, in order that they, through prayer, would be the better prepared for the answer to that prayer, which was the sending them into the harvest? They had watched their Master, teaching and preaching, and healing the waiting anxious throngs; they had seen the great need of messengers to carry the glad tidings, and therefore they prayed, and when Christ called and sent them forth, it must have been just what they expected.

We venture to ask, Is there any danger of those who see and feel the great need of more laborers in God's harvest, "white" going to waste, for lack of laborers, in their anxiety to secure and send forth more laborers, appropriating to themselves that which, according to Christ, belongs exclusively to God? forgetting that the harvest is His, and the sending forth the laborers is His also?

Man's part is to pray; and only as we see the multitudes and their deep need, see them in company with Jesus, see them, ourselves among them, who so moved the great heart of Christ in heaven as well as on earth, that He came to bleed and die, bearing our sins in His own body to the tree, only so can we, will we pray.

Can we doubt that God would send such a blessing in answer to united earnest prayer that there would not be room enough to receive it?

And will not those in authority call for, appoint seasons in the parish, diocese and nation for such supplications?

THE TERROR IN CHINA.

Frances L. Garside.

If the hearts of the hearers are in the right place the cry of a child is heard around the world.

The hearts of those who are thinking seriously these days are in the right place. They have heard the cry of the child in Europe, and have given freely to alleviate its distress, and now that a similar wail—the wail of a starving baby—comes from China, they are putting every needless purchase in the scales and balancing it with life.

"In each of these three cities—Mukden, Peking and Tientsin—there are some peculiarly knotty problems to be solved, which stretch one's mind and heart to the limit," writes Miss Grace Coppock, Executive Secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association in China, "but for all these questions there is an answer, and as Christian coworkers, we shall find it. But there is one problem that is staring all the world in the face, and which makes every other difficulty look small by comparison—the twenty million men, women and children of North China who are on the verge of starvation."

Miss Coppock recently visited Tientsin. This city is not in the famine district. There is food there for those who have money to buy; and that they may beg the food, for few have money, there have crept down to Tientsin from the famine districts over 28,000 men, women and children. There was no room for them in the city, so on the outskirts they have dug homes in the mud, and this mud city is the scene of more misery than you, with a vivid imagination, can even faintly conceive.

Sick, diseased, in filthy rags, starving, and with only the bare ground to lie on, with the weather bitterly cold—there would be just and righteous indignation in any American town if a dog were so treated, but these are human beings—men and women and children, whose present plight is due to no fault of their own.

To make the situation worse, more of the hunger-hunted are coming, and as the people of the city feel that they cannot minister to more, a moat has been dug around this mud city and a high mud wall built, and on the other side of it men, women and children, who have crawled to Tientsin with the last vestiges of their strength, are perishing on the ground by the scores.

"A dollar," writes Miss Coppock, "will keep one person alive for a month. And when one learns that five dollars will keep one person from starving till the spring harvest, one becomes very thoughtful!"

The Y. W. C. A. in China is turning every energy toward the betterment of these people. It has ninety-six secretaries there, of whom seventy-four are American. All the staff are helping on relief committees, and in addition to their regular personal work, a school has been founded by the Association to house and care for girls from ten to sixteen who otherwise would be sold into slavery to provide food for their families.

The Association has a health program; work is done in all the large centers to protect the physical and moral welfare of the girl in industry; mothers are trained in giving better care to their babies; but what in the present crisis seems most important of all, is that the Association is leaving nothing undone that is within its power to alleviate the distress of those who are facing the horror of famine.

JAPAN---SOME IMPRESSIONS OF A MISSIONARY.

By Joseph L. McSparren, M. D.

At the present time we are much interested in the relations between Japan and the United States. On every hand we are asked the question, "What do the Japanese think of America?" The writer does not pose as an authority on things Japanese, but wishes to give some impressions received during a residence of some years in Japan, during which time he had the opportunity to travel extensively in China and Korea and to observe conditions having a direct bearing upon the present attitude of the Japanese toward the rest of the world—particularly toward the English-speaking nations.

Recently conditions in Japan have undergone a radical chage—a change that brings to the fore problems involving in their solution the destiny of the Japanese people. During the world war Japan found herself suddenly deluged with a great volume of trade, from which she reaped a harvest of profits unprecedented in her history. She ceased to be a debtor nation and has grown rich beyond the fondest dreams of the most extreme pre-war optimist. As a result of this great volume of trade at the close of the war, Japan found herself occupying a position in world trade greatly out of proportion to her economic development. Some of the Japanese foundly believed she would be able to hold this position, but she has been unable to do so for very obvious reasons. Since the war she, like ourselves, has suffered the effects of reaction, and today the trade outlook is distinctly discouraging as compared to the days immediately following the cessation of hostilities. In the meantime the nations, with the exception of Germany, who were too busy with war work to carry on their accustomed trade, are back in the field, and Japan finds herself in an unequal struggle for her very economic existence.

It should be borne in mind that the total area of the Japanese Islands is less than that of the State of Texas. In this area there are about 58,000,000 people. The country is generally mountainous and of volcanic origin; and probably less than 20 per cent. of the land is arable. At the present rate of increase the population will double itself in about ninety years. If by increased transportation facilities, greater diversity of agricultural products and improved methods, the output of foodstuffs were increased to its maximum possibility of development, it could not meet the demands of the increase in population for more than a few years. Japan must have a source of supply for her population, and from the present outlook in the adjacent continent of Asia, if she is to secure such a source of supply, she must first secure the necessary area and then create it by the thrift and industry of her citizens. Certainly there are no evidences of sufficient enterprise among the natives of the continent to meet the needs of the situation.

Not only is Japan restricted in area, but she is also restricted in natural resources. There is a notable deficiency of iron, wool, cotton and the precious metals.

Her supply of coal, oil and lumber is also limited. Of the important metals, copper alone is plentiful. This shortage of natural supplies forces Japan to depend on imports. This necessity has a direct bearing on both her economic life and her importance as a military source However, in the face of this serious natural limitation, Japan has astonished the world by her progress in modern civilization. It would be interesting to note the characteristics, individual and national, that have made this progress possible.

The anthropology of the Japanese is lost in obscurity. We are immediately struck by the variety of facial types to be found among them. These types display features ranging from the straight lines and graceful curves of the Greek to the thick lips, flat noses and receding brows of the Ethiopian. They are unquestionably a composite race probably sprung in the main from Mongol and Malay stock, with perhaps a strain of Aryan blood intermingled. Like other races of mixed blood, they are active, virile, prolific, intelligent and ambitious—qualities which, coupled with conspicuous acquired characteristics, give them the elemental factors necessary to a great people.

As a race the Japanese are proud. They take great pride in their unbroken dynasty running back for more than two thousand years, the origin of which is indeed lost in the obscurity o ftradition. They are proud of their unbroken national integrity. Not since the days of Ghengis Kan has an enemy attempted to invade their shores. When that great conqueror of Asia made the attempt he was quickly and decisively defeated. They are proud of their ancient glory and culture—a culture which had attained a high degree of development at a time when the forebears of Westerns were roving savages. With their pride of race the Japanese are intensely patriotic—perhaps not naturally more so than some other races, but from the cradle loyalty to the Emperor and love of country are so instilled into them by both precept and example that the result compels the admiration oft he world.

Temperamentally the Japanese are sensitive, retiring, suspicious, reticent, appreciative of a courtesy or kindness, and quick to resent an injury. They are egoistic to a degree all out of proportion to the merits of the case, and inclined toward selfishness like the rest of the human family. They are, as a whole, rather conspicuously lacking in that spirit of altruism which pervades, more or less, the nations which are the highest exponents of Christian civilization. Their business morals have often been called into question; but it must not be forgotten that they have adopted Western ideals in the conduct of business. The charge of untruthfulness which is so often laid at their door unfortunately has some basis in fact, but even in this particular it is my belief that they compare favorably with their Western neighbors. It must be said, however, that their habits of mind have given them a quality of indirectness and evasion that is often mistaken by the uninitiated for deception. In short, the Japanese in their elemental qualities are simply human—neither better nor worse than the rest of us. Certainly most of their bad practices of a political and commercial character and some of their bad personal qualities have been borrowed from the West. In making such a comparison as this we must not forget that the Japanese as a nation have no background of moral ideals based upon the principles of the moral law such as we have in the West.

It is with these general considerations in mind that we must view the commercial, economic, and political situation in Japan today. For the past thirty years or more Japan has been nominally a constitutional monarchy somewhat after the pattern of England. This government has been and is still far from representative. At the present time only a small percentage of the male adults have the suffrage. The cabinet is supposed to exercise the real power, but one gets the impression that over and above the government there are two forces stronger than any government or any cabinet. They are the elder statesmen—an institution peculiarly Japanese, and the high officers of the military and naval staffs. One cannot but think that the ultra-conservatism of the one and the love of the display of power of the other have done a good deal to hold back the nation from achieving that degree of greatness to which the high qualities of the people entitle her. There are, however, some hopeful signs. The people have had popular education for more than a generation, and the general level of information has been raised to a higher average than has been reached by most of the Western powers. This popular education is responsible for the present agitation for universal manhood suffrage; and under its influence there is being rapidly developed a representative press which will in future wield a great influence in moulding public sentiment. Heretofore the masses of the people have been content with ready-made opinions handed down from above by an inspired press, and one of the most hopeful signs of the times is that the people are rapidly getting into a position to think intelligently for themselves.

Prior to the restoration of the middle of last century the political, social and industrial life of Japan was similar to that of Europe in the Middle Ages. Under the feudal system the arts reached a high state of excellence, and the modern spirit of competition and the demand for quantity production were unknown. In new Japan conditions are very different. Imagine a nation with an industrial equipment similar to that of European States of the twelfth century, suddenly thrown into competition with modern nations of the nineteenth century. It seems incredible that Japan could overcome such a handicap and become a serious competitor for world commerce in the second decade of the twentieth century—yet that is exactly what she has done. However, she still lags sadly behind in the matter of industrial equipment, which at the beginning of the world war was entirely inadequate to meet the demands of the immense volume of trade that came to her. The result was quantity production—staggering quantities—with a shortage of factories, machinery and skilled labor. the inevitable result being a very poor quality of finished goods. Although inferior in quality, the goods were sold at good prices, due to a shortage of supply. For a time Japan was the only market in which certain essential manufactures could be procured, and her trade reached staggering proportions, far beyond what was justified by her economic status. The poor quality of Japanese goods so often complained of was not due primarily to commercial dishonesty, but rather to inadequate facilities. Of course dishonesty played its part, and it was taken full advantage of by the unscrupulous. This sort of thing, however, was not confined to the Japanese. In that particular we had some rather large beams in our own eye, but not large enough to obscure the mote in the eye of our Japanese brother. At any rate, I dare say our own record does not justify us in the indulgence of any feelings of self-righteous superiority.

As a result of the victory of the Allies, Germany has ceased to be a serious competitor in Oriental trade. But in the place of Germany the United States has established a mercantile marine and is making a bid for world commerce, so that in getting rid of one formidable rival Japan has got another and a greater. This new factor in the world trade is a nation with a great reserve of raw materials, with the best industrial equipment, with a mercantile marine rapidly equaling the greatest and with a great supply of skilled men to manufacture the best goods and carry on modern trade to the best advantage. There is a three-cornered rivalry in the Oriental markets between England, America and Japan. At the first glance it would seem that Japan has the advantage of the others, but in reality she has not. With her proximity to the Asiatic continent, her similarity of race, and to some extent of language, her familiarity with the customs of Asiatic peoples, and her almost unlimited supply of comparatively cheap labor, Japan is truly in a position of natural advantage. But this advantage is more than offset by her lack of raw materials, her inadequate industrial equipment, the scarcity of skilled labor, and the absence of fixed standards of quality of manufactured products. For these very good reasons she is unable to compete with Western nations on equal terms. Furthermore, she will be unable in the near future to advance her industrial position to the standards of excellence of nations like England and America. This means that Japan must face the keenest competition on unequal terms. Unless there is some remedy for this condition it forebodes ill. Can a nation with the character and ambition of Japan sit meekly by and be forced to undergo a slow but sure economic death? That is just the prospect before her. Beside this question, the questions of immigration, race prejudice and the like wane into insignificance.

Another thing that makes the situation particularly galling to the Japanese at this time is the fact that Japan has assumed all the responsibilities of Germany in the East with the consequent enormous expense, and now finds herself likely to be robbed of the economic rewards by two nations who are bette rfitted to carry on that she is. She was robbed of the fruits of the Russian war by a concert of European nations; and this time it seems that the commercial balance of power will force her to give place. This is possibly the most serious problem that Japan has had to face in her modern history, and it is the lurking fear of the result that has been responsible for the attitude of suspicion toward the United States. Very little if anything has been said about this fear, and the Japanese would probably deny its existence, but nevertheless it is a very real factor lying behind the relations of Japan with the West.

The result of this three-cornered competition is hard to foretell. It depends largely upon the commercial policy of the United States. If America will be content to drop back to her pre-war positions of isolation and practical non-participation in world carrying trade, the situation will probably ease up of itself and England and Japan will compete for the China trade. On the other hand, if America adheres to the policy of a large mercantile marine, with its necessarily large navy, the outlook for Japan is gloomy. She will not only be compelled in that case to compete on a commercial footing with superiorly equipped peoples, but the old-time race for naval power will have to go on. England and America may be able financially to keep this up, but I am quite certain that if Japan is able to keep anywhere near the front it will be, as heretofore, at the expense of much needed internal development. Of course no one question for a moment the right or the desirability of America's expanding her commerce. In reality, many Americans believe that her future greatness demands that she do so. Japan seems to be in a most unfortunate economic position, for which no one in particular is to blame. She is the victim of circumstances over which she has no control. What is the answer? I don't know. If any one can give it I should like to know it. Will there be a resumption of the old policy—which by the way has never been abandoned—of definite spheres of influence in China?If so, how will this be reconciled with the policy of the open door? And in such an event what will be the effect of public opinion in China? One wonders if the time will ever come when the love of the Golden Rule will prevail against the almighty dollar.

Japan has no desire to conquer the world. She is not a victim of the "super-man" conceit. Everywhere in America there seems to be an impression that she wants to fight the United States. As a matter of fact, I believe she would do all in her power, honorably, to avoid such a conflict. I candidly believe that there is more anti-Japanese feeling in America than there is anti-American feeling in Japan. And worse still, there is no reason for it. The national policy of Japan in the past has been, and is now, actuated by considerations of self-defense. The restricted area and conjested population of Japan make necessary an outlet. Her dependence upon maritime trade requires that she shall be assured a market for her products. Is it anything but justice that she should have as a nation these essential requirements; and is not the effort to secure them a justifiable effort. If Asia is to be the dumping-ground of the nations, Japan, because of her demonstrated political and economic superiority to the other peoples of the East, is entitled to whatever legitimate opportunities that field affords. In fact, she has the first claim to it. In this connection her peculiar position in the East has been formally recognized by our own State Department. This recognition was a long step in the direction of seeing the other fellow's point of view. We could still go a good deal further in helping Japan out of a difficult and dangerous situation. We should make an effort to understand sympathetically the vital problems Japan is facing. There is a good deal we can do to help without at the same time jeopardizing our own interests. If the United States and Japan could agree upon a policy of co-operation in the development of the undeveloped peoples and resources of the East, it would be a most happy solution of a difficult and delicate situation. There is every reason why the two nations should act thus in accord and do all in their power to foster and perpetuate friendly relations. Japan needs both our sympathetic understanding and our practical help. The effort of Mr. Lamont in connection with the China Consortium is a step in the right direction. Let us have more of such co-operation and less of groundless suspicion and unreasoning prejudice.

LES REVENANTS.

(Ghosts.)

By An Octogenarian.

Who are these that knock at Memory's door?
"We are the souls of the years that are past;
The bright, strong years that you knew before;
We have come back to you now at last."

O spare me! I cannot face you now,
I am content; O let me be!
Ye were pleasant comrades once I trow,
O blessed years, that were friends with me.

But now I pray to turn away,
For the light on your brows that was so fair,
Casts a shadow upon this still, calm day,
That makes its dimness harder to bear.

So the years turned back, and I barred the door;
But I thought I heard them laugh as they fled;
(There were merry years in days of yore),
Perchance they mocked me; but one of them said:

"Courage, faint heart! for a day may come
When you will not shrink from the brightness we wore,
For the light of the Everlasting Home
Will pale all the glories that went before."

Lent is "an honest-to-goodness" attempt to train the child of God along the formative ways of his faith, following much the same lines wherein the children of the world find their training in temporal affairs. The same wisdom should cry in the openings of the same gates. In these days vocational training means hard work, resolute attention and very little luck. These forty days, so full of prayer and praise and worship and sacraments and teachings, would seem to make the very moss-covered bricks of God's house to shine with His presence, and to give birth to the very highest ideals of the Christian life. It would be well to let the world know that we have the deepest sense of "values," too. Lent comes to fruitage through the experience of the Church, and, properly used, should teach us how to judge the true value of events and things. Many slump here because they form no ideals as the unit of measure. Whether any ideal may be reached in this world, is of little consequence, but whether we have ever tried to reach after an ideal higher than ourselves is of fearful importance.

The world's insistence on a knowledge of "value" as an essential for success has been learned in a hard school of experience and failure—a kind of Lent, dreary enough. The Lent into which we are asked to enter is golden with the promise of spiritual attainment if we are ready to learn. —Rev. F. H. T. Horsfield, in Carolina Churchman.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

"STUPID CONSERVATISM."

Mr. Editor: We Episcopalians are frequently accused of conservatism, of ultra-conservatism and of super-conservatism, by those not altogether friendly to us, but it remained for one of us, the Rev. J. Paterson-Smyth, to charge us with "stupid conservatism." In his most readable book, "A People's Life of Christ" (which, by the way, we would all do well to read), this frank writer says, in connection with Christ's departure into the spirit-world: "Unfortunately, in our stupid conservatism we retain the phrase as in our early prayer books, 'He descended into hell,' and therefore people misunderstand and avoid it."

It is well known that in some of our sister churches the phrase has been entirely deleted. What a pity this should be! While the phrase as it stands is indeed obnoxious, still the teaching that it conveys is most significant. It is the only answer we have to the legitimate question, "What benefit accrued to those who had departed before the Christ came—what opportunity did the 'dead,' the 'departed,' have to accept Christ?" A less ambiguous and more pleasing term should certainly be settled upon and generally adopted. I had a woman to withdraw two children from our Sunday school because, as she said, "You people are teaching the little ones that Jesus went to hell!" And when it is put that way who can blame the good but mistaken woman? To her unenlightened mind it meant just that!

Paterson-Smyth goes on to say: "This solemn statement has become the 'Lost Article of the Creed,' and popular theology leaves out the most wonderful chapter in the life of Christ amongst men. In the innocent early English, 'the hell' meant the unseen, the 'covered in.' In the old English game of forfeits, 'the hell' was where laughing girls hid to escape being kissed, and to this day I believe in country parts of Devon a thatcher who 'covers in' is still called a 'hellier.' Theologians are not always blessed with common sense. The old phrase with its terrible later meaning remains in the Creed, and each generation of children has to be taught that it should read, 'He descended into the unseen, into the world of the departed—in the great waiting life after death.'"

Perhaps some day we shall take up just such matters as this and properly adjust them. The Church would be the richer if it would prove itself a bit less conservative and a bit more adaptable to the age and to modern sentiment and terminology.

THOMAS F. OPIE.

Red Springs, N. C.

NEAR EAST RELIEF: ADDITIONAL FUNDS NEEDED.

Mr. Editor: Our Publicity Committee has requested me to write you expressing our appreciation of your past co-operation with Near East Relief, and acquainting you briefly with our plans for the immediate future.

Your publicity work has saved lives! At least 1,000,000 people, including over 100,000 orphaned children, are living today who would have perished had it not been for the assistance that you and other editors gave.

During the past weeks and months we have endeavored to recognize the urgent claims of Europe, China and other relief funds, and have refrained from pressing our appeal upon the public. The result is that our obligations now exceed our resources.

In addition to the regular maintenance of our orphanages and medical work, we are faced with the requirements of hundreds of thousands of refugees who have once more been ejected by military operations from their temporary abodes to face the icy winds of the open country. We must again put the case of Armenia and the Near East before the American public.

You have been most generous in the past. We write now to express our hope that we may have your continued co-operation in our effort to save the orphans and the remnants of those oppressed subject races.

C. V. VICKREY, General Secretary.

1 Madison Ave., New York, Feb. 28, 1921.

THE LENTEN OPPORTUNITY.

If we have really swept aside our ordinary occupations and thoughts in any real way, it is that we may look in upon our own lives and souls, which our ordinary thoughts and occupations hide from us at other times, and see them as they really are.

The abandonment of any thoughts or occupations is not something that is good in itself, unless the things which we give up are intrinsically bad, and then we ought to have nothing to do with them at any time, in Lent or out of it.

It is the sight of ourselves which our simplified life in these weeks will give us that makes them valuable.

So is it when a man for a few moments or a few days breaks through the cloud of crowded businesses that hide his soul from his own eyes and really sees himself.

And when a man sees himself he always sees sin.

That is what gives Lent its sad and penitent color.

Think what Lent, the days of self-sight, would be if it were not so.

If men, pausing from their busy life and looking in upon the self that lived the life, found nothing there but perfect obedience and unbroken goodness, then with what a humble but perfect joy these weeks would be filled; and when they were over, how men would take up their active work again, with only a new thankfulness to the God who had kept them so pure and with new trust that He would still preserve them! But now how different it is!

He who would estimate himself must estimate his sin.

We must understand it before we can understand ourselves, as we must understand salt before we can understand the sea; as we must know what fire is before we can comprehend the sun.

And so Lent becomes the season of sadness and repentance, with the hope that is always born of thoroughness and earnestness burning underneath and keeping it from gloomy wretchedness.

They say in England that as the wind blows on Ash Wednesday, so it will blow the whole of Lent. Oh, if our Lord would send us deep, true, simple thoughts of sin, making us see how the chance of it is bound up in our very manhood, how the warning of it sounds through all our life, how the doing of it is something on whose brink we are always walking, and how the forgiveness of it is ready in the merciful hands!

Oh, that all this might be with us so thoroughly that these coming weeks might be filled to the brim with seriousness and thoughtfulness and fear and hope!

Then, indeed, God's blessing should be upon our Lent.

Oh, may He grant it, for Christ's sake!—Phillips Brooks.

THE WORLD'S BIBLE.

We are the scoffer's creed;
We are the sinner's gospel,
Christ has no hands but our hands
To do His work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in His way;
He has no tongues but our tongues
To tell men how He died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to His side.

We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the Lord's last message,
Given in deed and word;
What if the type is crooked?
What if the print is blurred?

What if our hands are busy
With other work than His?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurement is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things His lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help Him
And hasten His return?

—Annie Johnson Flint.

"The success of our Christian life, the noblest triumph of our personality, must come from keeping ourselves ever ready to hear and heed the voice of God. Whether our path be humble and restricted by narrow limitations, or whether it be along the high places of far-reaching influence, the voice of God must mean to us the supreme guidance of our lives. And if we live humbly and faithfully before God, we shall not fail to know the voice of our heavenly Father in the plain and simple duties of every-day life."

Church Intelligence

National Committee of the Church Service League.

The second annual meeting of the National Committee of the Church Service League was held at Church Missions House on Friday, February 18. All but six of the thirty-five members were present. In the absence of the president, Miss Elizabeth Matthews, Mrs. John W. Howell, first vice-president, presided.

Reports showed that thirty-nine Diocesan Councils of the Church Service League have been organized by their respective Bishops, and that there is no province without at least one Diocesan Council. Of the five provinces already organized three sent delegates to the meeting, as follows: Province 2, Mrs. A. S. Phelps; Province 4, Miss Nannie Hite Winston; Province 5, Mrs. G. P. T. Sargent.

A new leaflet submitted by the Committee on Co-operation was adopted and will be issued at once.

The future policy and plans of the Church Service League in both diocese and parish were discussed at length.

Dr. Milton, of the Nation-Wide Campaign Department, and Mr. Lathrop, of the Department of Christian Social Service, addressed the committee at the afternoon session.

The officers elected for the coming year are as follows: President, Mrs. A. S. Phelps; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. John M. Glenn, Mrs. George A. Strong, Miss Elizabeth Matthews, Mrs. John W. Howell; Secretary, Mrs. Paul Sterling; Treasurer, Miss Lucy C. Sturgis; Executive Committee, the officers and Miss Frances W. Sibley and Miss Grace Lindley.

The next meeting of the National Committee will be held on Friday, April 29.

H. P. H.

Hobart College Centennial.

In June, 1922, Hobart College at Geneva, N. Y., will celebrate its centennial. In 1822 Hobart, the only college in Western New York, and one of two colleges in New York State that are affiliated with the Church, was granted a charter as Geneva College. In 1854 the name was changed in honor of Bishop Hobart.

On its hundredth anniversary Hobart finds itself, like many other small colleges, suffering from insufficient endowment. Hobart, with its co-ordinate institution for separate instruction of women, William Smith College, has now the largest student enrollment in its history, but it needs more funds especially to pay adequate salaries to its faculty, to increase its equipment, and to continue its work in education and religion.

A million dollars has been set as the sum that is needed to put the college upon a permanent foundation. The trustees, alumni and friends of Hobart are, therefore, uniting in an organized endeavor to celebrate fittingly the centennial by raising the money in cash or pledges by June, 1922. Such a fund is absolutely necessary if Hobart is to continue its work.

In Hobart's hundred years it has given to the Church fifteen Bishops, nine of whom are living. Of eleven Bishops consecrated in 1920 four were Hobart men. Twenty per cent. of living Hobart graduates are clergymen. Hobart has given to the clergy 356 priests. Thirty-three per cent. of last June's graduating class are students for Holy Orders. Hobart graduates outnumber the graduates of any other Church college in the General Theological Seminary.

A committee in charge of raising the money has been organized for the campaign, and has offices in Coxe Hall on the Hobart campus, named after the late Bishop Arthur Cleveland Coxe. Mr. Frederick W. Herendeen, of Geneva, a man of wide experience in business organization, is director of the campaign. With him are associated as members of the Hobart College Centennial Committee the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, of Rochester; Mr. John K. Walker, of Buffalo; Mr. Theodore J. Smith, of Geneva; President Bartlett and Professor Milton H. Turk. There is a staff of assistants installed in offices in Coxe Hall, where, or to President Bartlett, all communications should be directed.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Work Among Cotton Mill Operatives: The La Grange Settlement.

Of course the whole Church knows about the splendid work the Church has been doing here among the mill operatives of the Callaway interests. This work was developed under the Rev. H. D. Phillips and carried on by him and his brother, the Rev. Robert T. Phillips, for fifteen years. This is the pioneer work among Southern mill workers. All other mill work, whether Church or industrial, has largely been guided by the development of this work.

The time came, however, when the Board of Trustees thought it wise to sever the relations between the Church and the mills, and, after turning over to the mills the settlement's property and work, the La Grange Settlement ceased to exist.

But that was not an end to the Church's work among the mill operatives here. In fact, it was merely our liberation from relationships that had become a hindrance to the Church's interests. We are free today to carry out the Church's program in the Church's own way.

Our program is based upon the idea of catechetical instruction. We have two women workers, the best in the Church, I am sure, who are registered nurses as well as trained church workers. One of these workers, Miss Steele, is a trained teacher of many years' experience. We have two services and a session of the Church school in each of our churches every Sunday. Miss Steele gives an instruction at one of these services, which is a lay service. She considers the entire congregation her Church school class and teaches them in her splendid way the Church and the things we stand for.

The Church school is extended to the five days of the week through the kindergarten and two days of the week through our instruction class of boys and girls in the higher courses. We use the Christian Nurture series and are trying to put it to the test of good teachers and regular attendance of the pupils. We have a Teacher Training class that meets weekly, a Girls' Friendly, a Woman's Auxiliary, a chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, meeting weekly. We give two confirmation lectures each week and are trying hard to have a class always under instruction so as to have the Bishop with us every two months. The main idea of our visiting program is to carry with us the Bible and Prayer Book into every home. We work at this five days to the week.

The results of the past sixty days justify us in believing that we have the correct idea for our work. Many of these results are incorporated in the report I made the Bishop covering the activities of the past three months. The good feeling towards us in the community, the growing interest of the people, their hunger for just the thing the Church alone can supply, the splendid confirmation class of seventeen on the First Sunday in Lent, the twenty-seven persons we baptized and received into the Church Quinquagesima Sunday cannot be told in any report. The folks are coming into the Church by families. In the class I have presented the fathers and mothers and all the children of confirmation ages of four families were confirmed. Two other families were completely united in the Church, and beginnings were made in several other families. One family who had been under instruction moved away to a town twenty miles below us. The man of the family had been one of the Church's bitterest enemies, like St. Paul before his conversion. Put a friend of the Church got Smith to come to a service. He has been coming ever since. He and Mrs. Smith came up for confirmation, driving forty miles for the privilege of witnessing to their faith through confirmation.

A complete list of our needs would look something like the following:

Equipment.

Seating for 300 people, cost. Extension of basement for room	$1,500.00
Two toilets and lavatories	175.00
Acme moving picture machine	200.00
Stereopticon	50.00
Pianola	600.00
	$2,525.00

Personnel and Expenses—Monthly.

Two additional workers, $50 each	$ 100.00
Milk for children's lunch	12.00
Kindergarten general expenses	10.00
Automobile running expenses	20.00
	$ 142.00

The Bishop of Atlanta has authorized me to make special appeals to friends of the work for any and all of the above needed funds. Your subscription to this work may be sent as a special through the Department of Missions, in which case please designate it for work of the La Grange Episcopal Missions, or you can send it to the Bishop of Atlanta or directly to me.

J. W. Fulford, Vicar.
La Grange, Ga., Feb. 28, 1921.

GEORGIA

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

A community revival will be held in Augusta during the month of April, with Gypsy Smith, Jr., as leader, and the rector of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. G. S. Whitney, showed his sympathy and support by having one of the united prayer meetings in his parish church, with the consent of the Bishop of the Diocese. The movement is largely in the hands of laymen, and the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. led the congregational singing with the full vested choir in the stalls. The rector gave a few words of welcome to the congregation, which was composed of representatives of all the other communions in the city, mentioning the fact that one hundred and seventy years ago the first Christian services in the colony of Augusta were held in St. Paul's, expressing his pleasure that the Christian people of Augusta were worshipping and praying as one congregation. Prayers were offered by the ministers of the Methodist and Christian Churches, and the sermon was preached by a Presbyterian minister. The spirit of the whole service was reverent and devout, and the impression was so profound that there have been requests by members of every denomination in the city that a similar service be held at St. Paul's.

The Rev. Henry Russell Talbot, canon residentiary of the National Cathedral, Diocese of Washington, visited Savannah March 1 to 7, holding meetings in the interest of the National Cathedral Association, showing slides of those parts of the building that are completed, and the architect's plans, and organizing a local committee for carrying forward the publicity work for promoting the building of the Cathedral.

St. John's Church, Savannah, held a mission the week of March 1 to 7, and crowded congregations heard the missioner, Archdeacon Percy C. Webber.

The first meeting of the Albany Archdeaconry for the year 1921 was held in St. John's Church, Bainbridge, February 1 and 2. A new feature of the program was a visit by two of the clergy each day at the noon hour to the Georgia, Florida and Alabama Railway shops, the county jail and the county farm, at which time a brief service was held and a short address made to the men, and in the afternoon two of the clergy visited the two hospitals and spoke to those who were well enough to be visited. Services were held morning and evening, and the business sessions were in the afternoons. A special service was held for the children and Sunday school teachers. Archdeacon J. B. Lawrence gave a review of the book of the Rev. R. H. Charles, Archdeacon of Westminster, "The Revelation of St. John."

E. D. J.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

Organization of Church Service League.

At the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese at Carlisle on February 8 a Diocesan Council of the Church Service League was organized at the request of the Bishop. The officers are: President, the Bishop of the Diocese; Chairman, Mrs. A. M. Drinkwater, Williamsport; Secretary, Mrs. H. S. Knight, Sunbury; Treasurer, Miss Vera Randall, Harrisburg. Two women from each of the various organizations in the Diocese were appointed to represent the Woman's Auxiliary, the Girls' Friendly Society, the Daughters of the King, the Church Periodical Club, the Church School Service League, the Altar Guild; and five were appointed to represent the Church at large. Meetings will be held in Harrisburg at the call of the Bishop from time to time.

Memorial Tablets Unveiled in St. John's, York.

On Sunday, February 27, two tablets were unveiled in St. John's Church, York, in memory of two former rectors who died in their rectorship, the Rev. Charles James Wood and the Rev. Arthur Russell Taylor, D. D. One was inscribed:

"In memory of the Rev. Charles James Wood, rector of this parish from October 1, 1894, to May 9, 1906. Eminent in scholarship, broad in sympathies, distinguished in achievement, lover of men."

The other is inscribed:

"In memory of the Rev. Arthur Russell Taylor, D. D., rector of this church, under whose ministrations and leadership from October 19, 1906, to January 7, 1918, this parish greatly prospered. Renowned as author, revered as rector, beloved as a man."

The Rev. Arthur Chilton Powell, D. D., a former rector, now of Baltimore, preached a historical sermon.

At the service in the evening memorial addresses were made by two clergymen who had been closely associated with the clergymen who were commemorated. The Rev. William Gamble gave intimate touches of the life of the Rev. Mr. Wood, and the Rev. Fremont N. Hinkel spoke of Rev. Dr. Taylor's personal charm.

It is interesting to note that St. John's, York, figures in the early history of the State. It is a tradition that General Washington, being in York over Sunday, went to the church, knocked at the door, and failed to obtain admittance, the clergyman in charge being elsewhere that day. Its bell called the Continental Congress to its sessions while sitting in York in 1777-1778. The body of Colonel Thomas Hartley, patriotic soldier and statesman, lies beneath the walls. The remains of Major John B. Clark, an officer of the Revolution, are interred in the churchyard. The headquarters of General Gates while in York was but a short distance from the church. Irving, in his "Life of Washington," gives the text of a letter sent by Wilkinson to Horatio Gates, challenging the latter to a duel "behind the English Church."

L. F. B.

SPOKANE

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Holy Week services will be held at the Pantages Theatre, Spokane, during the noon hour, the first three days of which will be taken by Bishop F. W. Keator, of Olympia. These services are open to all, and are along the lines of Christian unity, with all the churches co-operating.

The Rev. Lindley H. Miller, the chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, Spokane, has published a six-page leaflet, which is proving very beneficial to the patients, and contains, besides some excellent spiritual counsel, a few suggestive prayers along the lines of healing. Mr. Miller's tactful kindly visitation is much appreciated not only by Church people, but by others who have been thus brought within the reach of his ministry. At the end of the leaflet the notice is given, "The chaplain will be glad to visit you if you will leave word at the office or with your nurse. Kindly tell him if you wish him to say prayers with you, or for you." The writer of this article feels such a notice to be in perfect good taste, and commends the chaplain to the prayers of all interested in hospital work. St. Luke's Hospital is being enlarged to accommodate a greater number, for the premises are all too small to meet the demands being made upon it.

The Rev. H. H. Mitchell, of Colfax, has accepted a call to Moscow, Idaho, and has entered upon his duties.

The Rev. E. R. Allman, the new vicar of St. Paul's, Kennewick, reports steady growth and increased interest, the Sunday school has been reorganized and the choir enlarged and more efficient than for some years past.

Steven's Hall is the name of the latest addition to the work of St. James' Church, Spokane, and is meeting a long felt need in connection with the Sunday school and social activities of this locality.

NEWARK

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Canon Missioner: The Rev. Hugh D. Wilson has been elected by the Cathedral Chapter Canon Missioner for the care of the Diocesan missionary work, the Nation-Wide Campaign, etc. This carries out the plan for associating with Trinity Church, Newark, as the Cathedral Church of the Diocese, real Diocesan work, while the building of the Cathedral and establishment of what is ordinarily associated with it must lie in the future. There are now four clergymen bearing the title of Canon Missioner, having their full support, three of them with automobiles, giving their whole time to the oversight and direction of important departments of Diocesan work. They are the Rev. Dr. Cooder, ministering in all the public institutions, prisons, hospitals, asylums, etc., of Essex County; Rev. S. G. Dunseath, in charge of the Social Service work of the Diocese; Rev. Gabriel Farrell, of the Department of Religious Education, and Rev. Hugh S. Wilson, of the Diocesan missionary work, especially in some fifty mission churches. Each one has very definite and real work in hand, with monthly meetings of their boards.

St. Barnabas' Hospital has recently received several substantial bequests, and others are dependent upon contested wills.

Mr. Alfred G. Evans, of Madison, left for the Diocese his large house and ample grounds and the residue of his estate for a home for orphan children.

Trinity Church, Newark, and Grace Church, Union Hill, have received bequests of $2,000, and the missions at Ridgefield and Fairview of $1,000 each, so the custom of remembering the Church in making wills seems happily increasing.

Rev. Luke White kept his fifth anniversary as rector of St. Luke's Church, Montclair, at the New Year. The record of work and giving of the parish is remarkable. St. Luke's has given its full quota in the Nation-Wide Campaign, one year being asked for $23,000 and giving $30,000. The outside gifts last year of the parish were $27,300, including gifts for special purposes, and the total income was $101,000. Large confirmation classes have been presented, a church for colored people provided, and the position of the parish in the community greatly strengthened in many ways.

NEW MEXICO.

Rt. Rev. F. B. Howden, D. D., Bishop.

The Navajo Indian Mission.

At the annual convocation of New Mexico, held last February, Bishop Howden spoke as follows concerning the Navajo Indian Mission, near Farmington:

"In our Indian work the San Juan Mission Hospital has carried on its beneficent ministrations and steadily deepened the foundation necessary to establish, in order to win the Indian's confidence in our purposes and in our missionaries. The physical breakdown of Miss Ireland, which made it necessary for her to retire from the work last June, was a serious blow to the nursing and field visiting service, which the mission was carrying on. Her self-sacrificing devotion to the Navajos and her perfect fearlessness of desert conditions and primitive social standards made this missionary specially valuable for a service of exacting qualifications. It is a cause of much gratification that in the emergency which Miss Ireland's retirement created we have been fortunate enough to secure another nurse in the person of Miss Sara McIntyre, who seems to possess the qualities necessary for this sort of work. During the year the long hoped for well was finally drilled and an abundant supply of water was found. The funds for the Mary Hart Memorial School for Indian children have reached a point where we can begin the erection of this new building."

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Chas. D. Williams, D. D., Bishop.

Pageant Presented in Jackson.

A beautiful presentation of the pageant, The Modern Magi, was rendered at St. Paul's Parish House, Jackson, Rev. W. L. Kinsolving, minister in charge, Sunday night, February 27.

About a hundred costumed children and young people took part, and perhaps one or two hundred persons were turned away, unable to find even standing room in the three connecting large halls of the building all thrown into one. The pageant, as written by Miss Lucy Gibson and Mrs. E. E. Osgood, of Richmond, Va., was revised by the Rev. W. L. Kinsolving.

February 20 a class of sixty-three was presented in this parish to the Bishop of Michigan, the Rt. Rev. Charles D. Williams. St. Paul's is the only Episcopal Parish in Jackson, a city of nearly 50,000. The parish has three mission points attached, and a total adherence of much over a thousand.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Woman's Auxiliary: The regular monthly meeting of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held on Tuesday, March 1, at St. Margaret's Church. Routine business was attended to and reports read. An item of especial interest was a report of the way an auxiliary branch had been developed in one of the rural communities of the Diocese. Twenty-five people had shortly before gathered at Holy Trinity Church, Connellsville, Prince George County, to discuss ways and means of forming and increasing in numbers a branch of the Auxiliary. Of these many were women of other denominations. It was decided to make an effort to get five women in each community throughout a certain rural district to work for the Auxiliary, with a general chairman for all and occasional meetings of all units. In this way enthusiasm, interest and co-operation would be gained which would be otherwise impossible. Ten of the twenty-five were present at the meeting at St. Margaret's and reported that all effort until fall would be put upon the organization and that work for the boxes would be regularly taken up with the autumn season. All present at the meeting were most enthusiastic about this new way of meeting the rural problem, which has always been a great one in Auxiliary affairs, as well as in matters pertaining to the general Church.

A plea for the Near East was given by Mrs. Stephens, who described it as "Our Lord's own land crying to us."

Mrs. Hutchinson, of Newark, N. J., gave an interesting talk on how a Social Service League had been formed in her own parish. Representatives of all departments of the Church's work had been called together for the settlement of a certain parish matter, and out of this a Social Service League with a wonderful opportunity for co-operation and fellowship had been spontaneously formed. Mrs. Hutchinson also explained the successful working out of the Supply Box system in her Diocese, attributing its success largely to the fact that the work had been placed under one who had had wide experience in the distribution of Red Cross materials and supplies. Mrs. Hutchinson begged that the young people be brought into the Auxiliary work more in the future.

There were twenty-seven parishes represented at this meeting, with 129 present. A communication from Miss Davis, of Virginia, was read, stating that Mrs. Eley would speak at the Alexandria meeting of the Virginia Auxiliary on May 4, 5 and 6. The Washington Branch voted to invite her to speak here on May 3. The next meeting of the Auxiliary, which will be on the first Tuesday in April, will be held at Christ Church, Georgetown.

Christian healing services are being held regularly on Tuesdays at Epiphany and St. Stephen's Churches. Such services in the Diocese have been held regularly, without exception, since the visit of Mr. Hickson to Washington, about a year ago.

Some of the visiting clergy in the Diocese on Sunday, March 6, were Rev. William J. Morton, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Alexandria, at St. Mark's Church; Rev. Ronalds Taylor, college chaplain of the University of Maryland, at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, and Dr. Peirce, President of Kenyon College, at the Washington Cathedral.

The mid-day services at Epiphany Church and Keith's Theatre, and the afternoon services at St. John's, Sixteenth and H, are meeting with marked success in point of attendance. At all three ministers and laymen of other denominations are speaking from time to time, and these services seem to be having a unifying effect upon the Church people of Washington.

Dr. Freeman, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, was the speaker at the mid-day services at Trinity Church, New York, during the week of March 6.

Maunder's "From Olivet to Calvary" will be sung by the Cathedral choir, under the direction of Edgar Priest, Cathedral organist, on the afternoon of Palm Sunday at the Washington Cathedral. Many went to Trinity Church on the night of March 2 to hear this cantata, and by its repetition on Palm Sunday opportunity to hear it will be given to the many who were not able to go to Trinity.

The District of Columbia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists were the guests of the Chapel of the Good Shepherd and Lewis & Hitchcock, organ builders, on Tuesday evening, March 1, when the new organ recently installed there was thrown open to the members of the Guild to play and enjoy. The builders and the Chapel of the Good Shepherd are to be congratulated upon the making and possession of an instrument of such beauty of tone, perfect balance and adaptability to the worship of God through the avenue of music.

M. M. W.

KENTUCKY

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop.

Young People's Conference.

For the first time in the history of Councils in the Diocese of Kentucky the young people had a very definite and enthusiastic part. On the night after the Council proper had completed its business the boys and girls (of fifteen years and over) of Louisville and several of the suburbs gathered in the Cathedral House for a buffet supper and conference. Two hundred and fifty of them came, at the invitation of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, whose guests they were for the supper. The Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, Provincial Secretary for Religious Education, was in Louisville for the meeting and led the conference. Five organized Young People's Societies were then at work, and Mr. Tucker called for reports from the presidents of each of these. Community singing was a feature of the meeting. The conference closed with a preparatory service for the Holy Communion, and the next morning, Sunday, January 30, at 7:30, a Corporate Communion for the young people was held in the Cathedral.

Three additional societies have been organized since the conference, again proving that enthusiasm is most contagious. The societies in Louisville have joint meetings four times a year, which gives the members a decided sense of unity and a fine feeling of diocesan and Church loyalty. The watch-words of the young people's movement are Prayer, Fellowship, Study and Service. In their programs, their social gatherings and their service for community and Church at large. This four-fold ideal is kept ever before them. This is an organization "of, for and by" the young people. In their programs the members themselves take the leading parts, with occasional outside speakers to bring messages of inspiration and broader interest. Meetings are held Sunday evenings, in most cases twice a month, and are followed by a very light supper, after which, in parishes where there is an evening service, the members go into the service.

At the conference just described it was proposed that a bulletin be published by the combined societies, to contain accounts of work done, of plans which have proved successful in various places, and general news of young people's work. A committee is at work on this now, and it will be issued soon. This is an interesting experiment; if it proves successful the bulletin will probably be published quarterly. Those most vitally interested in the work are hoping now, with the extension of the organization to every big parish and one mission in Louisville, to undertake plans for coordinating the programs of the societies. There will be a committee of the young people which will serve as a clearing house for plans, etc., will foster new organizations, and will, we hope, be able to do bigger things than the individual societies could do, working separately.

Kentucky is awake, as the whole Church is coming to be, to the tremendous problem of making religion real and vital to the boys and girls of the Church. Only through the realization of the living personality of Jesus Christ can this be accomplished. If this ideal can be held up before our Young People's Societies, and in some measure attained to, the future of the Church is assured.

MARYLAND

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

A Veteran Churchman.

At the recent convention of the Diocese the Bishop in his Episcopal address paid this tribute to a well known and widely honored Churchman:

"No other act of the Executive Council I know will be received with quite so great pleasure as the creation of the office of "Chancellor" (under authority of Section 3, Canon 8), and the unanimous election of Mr. Joseph Packard to fill it. For half a century Mr. Packard has been not only a member of this Diocesan Convention, but during most of that time has also been the Moses who always delivered it from arbitrary bondage and led it out of every wilderness of confusion. During the recess between conventions this "man named Joseph a counsellor; a good man, and a just; who also himself waited for the kingdom of God" (St. Luke 23:50-51) has been the Bishop's familiar friend, adviser and guide, lo, these many years, and it is most fitting that on this fiftieth successive annual occasion of his presence here I should present him to you as the "first Chancellor" of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Maryland, the Diocese he loves so well and where he is so dearly loved in turn by every member of it and by the Bishop more than by all others, because the Bishop owes him more than do all others.

This was followed by the presentation of a testimonial to Mr. Packard by the convention.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robt. C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Mrs. Wm. G. Pendleton, wife of the Rev. Wm. G.P endleton, D. D., rector of the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, was killed, and Dr. Pendleton seriously inured in an automobile accident near Lynchbjurg, Tuesday night, March 8. Mrs. Pendleton was Miss Maria Dawson, of Alexandria, and was well known throughout Virginia. The sympathy of Dr. Pendleton's many friends will go out to him in his bereavement.

The Rev. J. R. Ellis, of Yancy, Va., who a few months ago accepted a call to Peddler Mills, will enter upon his duties in his parish about the first of April. He is now convalescing after an operation at the King's Daughters' Hospital in Staunton.

The Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, who has for the past few years been one of the masters and the chaplain of the Virginia Episcopal School, in Lynchburg, has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Wytheville. He will enter upon his duties early in June.

The Bishop and Executive Board have decided to publish a diocesan paper. Its title will be the "Southwest Episcopalian," and the first issue is due about this time. The Bishop is editor-in-chief, and the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, of Staunton, is the managing editor.

The Rev. George H. Toop, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, has been the speaker for the noon-day Lenten services at the Roanoke Theatre, Roanoke, Va., during the past week. His talks have been both helpful and inspiring, and a large attendance has greeted him at each service.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

The Rev. Clarence Parker, rector of St. Paul's, Fayetteville, and student chaplain at the University of Arkansas, at the March meeting of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Arkansas was elected Secretary of the newly created Department of Religious Education, and was also chosen to head the sub-Department of Publication. In February Mr. Parker was placed upon the Executive Committee of the Washington County, Ark., Chapter, A. R. C., at the same time being retained upon the Committee on Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick (Public Health Nursing).

MISSOURI

Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. F. Johnson, D. D., Ceadjutor.

Suspension: On February 25 Rev. Frederic G. Williams, a Presbyter of the Diocese of Missouri, was received into the Roman Catholic Church.

Pursuant to the provisions of Canon 37, the Bishop of Missouri on March 3 suspended him for the period of six months.

NEW YORK.

Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D.,
Bishop-Elect.

St. Bartholomew's Parish was compelled to go to law to get the balance of a $500,000 endowment bequest coming to it from the Harkness people. The sum of $200,000 was paid promptly, and then the claim set up that the parish ought to add other gifts from other people. The court decided in the parish's favor, and the entire half million is now in hand. In the Year Book just issued the rector, the Rev. Dr. Parks, gives warm praise to Mr. Albert G. Milbank, clerk of the vestry and a lawyer, for services.

Dr. Parks reminds that this sum is but a beginning. More and more is the wisdom of the site selection of St. Bartholomew's showing, as on all fronts of Park Avenue, above and below the church, wonderful arrays of beautiful apartments are erecting and being occupied. A new feature of parish work is a Sunday afternoon social hour, following Evensong, with Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson as leader. It seems there remains a debt of $65,000 yet upon the church, and Dr. Parks observes that when it is consecrated, the debt being paid, "we may be able to express on faith that the tabernacle of God with men." This he says because of the unsettled conditions obtaining in the world.

The list of volunteer workers Dr. Parks places at 620, the communicants at 3,560, the Sunday school at 1,063, and the clubs in membership at 1,328. Under the summary of parish receipts total $600,165 is given, and loan operations at $107,800 more. Besides all this, there were special gifts of $27,500 for missions, $22,700 for Nation-Wide Campaign, and other funds totaling with these $52,350. The rector handled $89,400 in special gifts.

The Church Club opened its rooms this winter on Saturday afternoons to lectures, followed by social hours. The response has been beyond expectation, both in interest shown in addresses and numbers attending. The Rev. Dr. Stuart L. Tyson will give the addresses during March, relating to Bible exposition. It is announced that the club plans a reception and dinner to Dr. Manning following his consecration.

C.

ERIE.

Life Work Conferences and Church School Institutes will shortly be held throughout the Diocese by the Rev. Messrs. A. W. S. Garden, L. L. Reilley, Harold Jenkin, E. J. Owen, J. A. Vaughn and G. B. Matthews.

A beautiful chime of bells was placed some time ago in the tower of Christ Church, Oil City, the Rev. Dr. E. J. Reilley, rector. The late Bishop Israel blessed them and made a strong address.

The special election for the second Bishop of Erie will be held in the Cathedral, Erie, on April 12. Special prayers have been set forth by the Standing Committee to be used in public worship and private devotions.

R. S. R.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Rev. George C. Rafter.

The Rev. George Charles Rafter entered Life Eternal in Cheyenne on Saturday, February 27, 1921, after an illness of but a few hours. His peaceful death was a fitting close to his long and useful life on earth in the service of his Lord and Master. He had recently celebrated his eighty-second birthday, on which occasion hundreds paid tribute to the character and influence of their beloved friend. A short while after, these same friends assembled to pay the last tribute to their shepherd of many years, and to express their thankfulness for the example of this servant who, "having finished his course in faith, now rests from his labors."

Dr. Rafter was born in the Province of Quebec on November 5, 1838. He received his B. A. Degree from Kenyon College in 1863. He was ordained deacon in 1866 by Bishop Kemper, and advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Kerfoot in 1867. The first fourteen years of his ministry were spent in Pennsylvania. He came West in 1880, ministering in Central City and Golden, Col. In 1882 he left Golden to become the rector of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, and remained in the service of this church until his death. His life in Cheyenne covered a period of twenty-two years as rector and seventeen years as rector-emeritus, during which time he has officiated at 292 marriages, 310 burials and 579 baptisms.

In 1886 Dr. Rafter laid the cornerstone of the present St. Mark's. In 1892 his health was somewhat impaired and he was granted a year's leave of absence, which he passed in England and the Holy Land, spending Christmas in Jerusalem. In 1904 he resigned as rector of St. Mark's and became the rector-emeritus. The honors which have come to him cannot be enumerated, but among them may be mentioned the chaplaincy of the Senate of the Wyoming State Legislature, which post he had held almost continuously since 1883. He was high in Masonry, and was well known in every good work.

At 9 A. M. on Wednesday, March 2, a memorial celebration of the Holy Communion was held, and the body lay in state in the chancel from 10 to 3. At 4 o'clock the burial service was read by the Rev. Charles A. Bennett, rector of St. Mark's. The clergy of the district were vested and in the sanctuary. Members of the vestry acted as pall-bearers, and the choir sang favorite hymns of Dr. Rafter. The church was filled with friends, among them Bishop McGovern and Father Hartman, of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Cheyenne, and the Greek priest of the Eastern Orthodox Church in Denver, having jurisdiction in Wyoming. Interment was in Lakeview Cemetery, Cheyenne, and as the commitment was said the long, level rays of the setting sun brought forcibly to mind the words of the glorious hymn sung but a few moments before—

"The golden evening brightens in the West,
Soon, soon to faithful warriors cometh rest."

L. M. T.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. W. Cabell Brown, D. D., Bishop

Woodrow Wilson Urges Support of His Alma Mater.

Woodrow Wilson, University of Virginia alumnus of the class of '81, in one of his last unofficial acts before relinquishing the presidency, urged alumni and friends of education to support the University of Virginia's $3,000,000 Centennial Endowment Fund, which opened this week.

Mr. Wilson's letter is as follows:

The White House.

Mr Dear Mr. Doble:

Allow me to express my very deep interest in the efforts to collect the Centennial Endowment Fund of the University of Virginia. I should suppose that there will be a very general interest in this effort, for the service of the University of Virginia, not only to the State, but to the nation, is so well known. There are very few institutions of which it can be said, as it can be said of the University of Virginia, that two-thirds of its graduates enter some form of public service, and there are very few so admirably adapted to mediate between North and South by reason of their position and tradition. The University of Virginia is particularly adapted to play such a part and is in a very real sense a national institution.

Hoping that the efforts to secure this fund will be abundantly successful, I am,

Cordially and sincerely yours,
WOODROW WILSON.

For the Building Fund of St. Cyprian's Mission.

Fifty singers, selected from the best colored singers in Richmond, will render the beautiful cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," on Thursday night, March 24, at St. Philip's Church, for the benefit of the struggling St. Cyprian's Mission, for the buildings and grounds on which to erect an adequate place of worship, since the quarters they now occupy are not sufficient for the growing congregation. The cantata will be rendered at St. Philip's Church, as St. Philip's is desirous to do all in its power to help St. Cyprian's Mission. The cantata is under the training of and direction of the Rev. Edward Ellis, Jr., who is now in charge of the mission. The congregation is anxious to raise $500 to place in the hands of the Bishop and Archdeacon of the Diocese for the early beginning of the building, and is appealing to the friends in the Diocese to help by attending St. Philip's Church on the evening of the rendition of the cantata. There will be no charges, but a silver offering will be taken, and it is hoped all interested in the work will contribute, as circumstances may permit. All who may not attend can send all donations for St. Cyprian's Mission, either by check or by cash, to the Rev. G. McLaren Brydon, Archdeacon of the Colored Work of the Diocese of Virginia, Old Dominion Trust Building, Richmond.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Dr. Frank S. Cookman has just returned, with Mrs. Cookman, from service of nearly six months in Europe. For six weeks last summer Dr. Cookman served in All Saints' Church, Sapcote, in Leicestershire, where as an American priest he was shown many attentions. Large congregations greeted him. For four and a half months he served St. Luke's Chapel in the Latin quarter of Paris.

The Rev. Louis Ernest Durr, rector of St. Mary's Church, Hillsboro, O., has resigned his parish, effective at once, and plans to dedicate his life to service in the famous leper colony on Molokai Island, in the Hawaiian group.

The Rev. Walter E. Cook on March 1 became City Missionary in Rochester, N. Y.

The Rev. Charles K. Weller, of Jacksonville, Ala., has accepted a call to become rector of St. Andrew's Church, Scott's Bluff, Neb., and expects to take charge on March 15. After that date his address will be 1931 First Avenue, Scott's Bluff, Neb.

The Rev. Albert R. Parker, recently transferred from the reserve force to the regular navy, and assigned for duty to the Island of Samoa, leaves Hampton Roads with his family on March 10, for a twenty-one day trip to his destination via Panama and San Francisco.

The Rev. Harvey B. Marks, who received a unanimous call to Trinity Church, Chambersburg, Pa., Diocese of Harrisburg, has resigned his charge at Danville, Pa., and entered upon his new work the third Sunday in Lent.

The Rev. Malcolm Taylor becomes Executive Secretary of the Province of New England on April 15. On February 15 he completed fifteen years' service with St. Thomas' Church, Taunton, Mass. He will reside in Taunton until summer.

The Rev. J. H. Townsend, retired, may be addressed at Camden, N. J.

The address of the Rev. L. Norman Tucker is now 7507 Kelly Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Deaths.

The Rev. Sanford Taylor Brewster, retired priest of the Diocese of Sacramento, died at his home in Corning, Cal., on January 31, being over seventy years of age. His funeral services were conducted by the Rev. E. A. Osborn.

The Rev. William Benjamin Tyng Smith, a retired priest of the Diocese of New Hampshire, died suddenly on February 6 at "Fairmead," his home in Charlestown, N. H. Funeral services held in St. Luke's Church, Charlestown, on Ash Wednesday, were conducted by the Bishop of New Hampshire, assisted by the Rev. Richard W. Dow, rector of St. Luke's. Interment was in the churchyard at West Claremont, beside his parents.

The Rev. Frederick H. Oehler, for many years a clergyman of the Diocese of Minnesota, died on February 14 of tuberculosis, at one of the State sanitaria, where he had passed the last few months of his life. Mr. Oehler's last parish was at Willmar, of which he took charge in 1918.

Acquired Limitations.

It is a common fault to be on the outlook for limits which we may place on worship and service and giving—the cultivation of the minimum. Then, as a consequence, the less we do, the more easily we excuse ourselves for our lack of interest, when, in truth, it is a lack of sincerity and fidelity.

What limitations we place upon our worship! The less we devote ourselves, the less we are impressed by God, the less we feel the uplift of inspiration, the more feeble the desire to worship, and the fainter the call of religion. There is such a thing as the sacrilege of neglect, of belonging to God and making Him a dishonored God. We make our own habits of worship and they will, if we will, draw us nearer to God. Or we may so neglect our privileges and our duties that we get no comfort or help from our religion, a kind of Christianity which does not increase our strength, but reveals our weaknesses. Neglected prayers, neglected Bible, neglected communion, mean a neglected God, and peace never comes to the soul which never seeks nor strives. To say that we cannot find time for these things is not true when we do find time for the things which we want and seek and find. Why not be honest with ourselves and say that we do not sincerely try? Why not admit that our indifference, where it exists, is the result of our neglect? Why not confess that we have substituted other things and acquired habits of carelessness amounting to denial? Why not be frank and candid and freely acknowledge that we have arrived at this state, "All for self and none for Thee"? This would reveal the true condition, and the exposure of the cause would make clear to a courageous soul what he had to fight against—a limitation which exists in himself.—Bishop C. E. Woodcock.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

THE MONUMENT AROUND US.

Not long ago the writer listened to an argument against the divinity of Christ, in which the speaker took as his subject "How the Gospels Were Written."

Of course, he laid special emphasis on St. Mark's record, which gives no account of the birth of the Saviour. And equally, of course, this speaker discounted as much as possible St. John's account, in which the identity of Christ with the Father is so repeatedly asserted. "This gospel," he said, "was written for doctrinal purposes."

Now the interesting thing about the divinity of Christ is that we can lay aside the Fourth Gospel, and all the gospels and the books of the entire Bible, and still conclusively prove the divinity of Christ.

The method would be that which has been employed to express the greatness of Sir Christopher Wrenn as an architect. Over the northern entrance to St. Paul's Cathedral in London we find his name, the date of his birth and death, and beneath, these few aLtin words, "Si monumentum requuiris, circumspice" ("If you require his monument, look around you").

As one looks at that wonderfully beautiful and massive structure with its great dome more than three hundred and sixty-five feet high, surrounded by thirty other steeples of varying heights and sizes, all in perfect proportion and symmetry, each to the other one feels that indeed here is a tribute greater than could be expressed in any rhetorically worded eulogy.

So today we may say to any who doubt the divinity of Christ, "Look around you," and you will find on every hand a monument that is more impressive than logically phrased and worded arguments, than historical proofs of the authenticity of the gospels, or than any scientific demonstration of the possibility of a virgin birth.

In order to feel the force of this demonstration of divinity, let us look back to the Saviour as He appeared, for instance, there in the temple court when He exclaimed, "I am the light of the world."

There He was a young peasant without any learning or culture surrounded by a few friends from the same class in life as Himself. None of them apparently equipped with anything to make a permanent impression upon the world. A couple of years or so later this same young Peasant Prophet was executed on the cross, dying a felon's death between two malefactors. This, from the worldly point of view, is the start that Christianity had.

Today "look around you," in any city of this country, which is half way around the world from where those words were spoken by that young Carpenter, on a continent not then known to exist.

What are our largest and most beautiful buildings today? They are the churches which are dedicated to this young Carpenter.

At the time He said that He was the light of the world the cross was a badge of disgrace. Today it is enshrined in the most sacred places, and is the object of veneration and ornamentation.

Next to our churches, our most expensive buildings are the hospitals. Sometimes we overlook the fact that they form a very important part of the present day monument to Christ. The Persians and Egyptians of old had great wealth and luxury, the Greeks had learning and wisdom to which no other people has ever attained, the Romans had a governmental organization that has hardly been equaled since, but in none of these countries was there a hospital. It was the followers of that Poor Peasant, Who said He was the light of the world, who first established places for the care and relief of the sick.

Every Y. M. C. A. building, too, is a part of this monument that you see around you.

If one turns to our government buildings we shall find Christ enshrined therein.

We have three great departments in our political organization—executive, judicial and legislative—and if we search we can find Christ in all of them.

The head of the executive department is a man who is an earnest and devout follower of the Peasant Who said He was the light of the world, and his Secretary of State and chief adviser is the son of a minister.

A supreme court with greater authority than any other judicial body in the world heads our judiciary department, and every single member of that august body has to take his oath of office upon the Book which tells of the coming of Him who died that ignominious death upon the cross.

The United States Senate and House of Representatives compose the legislative department of our government, and if one reads the Congressional Record, which gives the daily doings of those two law-making bodies, it will be seen that no matter what may be the press of business there, though the questions to be decided may involve the issues of war and peace, nothing is done until a prayer is offered to that Deity whom Jesus said was His Father, through the name of Christ.

Every time one dates a letter he unconsciously acknowledges the supremacy of Christ. We write "March 6, 1921." What do we mean by that 1921? We mean that it is 1,921 years since the coming of this young Carpenter into the world.

So we are sure that He has literally become the centre of all human events. Everything either dates B. C. (before Christ), or Anno Domini (in the year of our Lord). Even the dating of a letter by an idol worshipping Japanese or an agnostic Bolshevist is a silent tribute to the divinity of the Saviour, and contributes to that monument which you can see if you look around you.

Now, in conclusion, let me ask our readers if they think that such a structure as this, with its foundations laid so deep and so broadly, could have been built or could be standing upon a lie?

Yet that is what is claimed by those who consider St. John's gospel to have been written for doctrinal purposes, and who deny the truth of St. Luke's account of the birth of Jesus Christ.

Those persons who have succeeded in erecting so many startling proofs of the universal power of Jesus Christ here and now in every direction and department of our business and political life built upon that foundation, and it is just as hard to believe that such a structure should have been reared and be standing today upon a falsehood as it is to believe in a virgin birth.

He Knoweth the Way.

I know not—the way is so misty—
The joys or the griefs it shall bring,
What clouds are o'erhanging the future,
What flowers by the roadside shall spring;
But there's One Who will journey beside me,
Nor in weal nor in woe will forsake,
And this is my solace and comfort,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

I stand where the crossroads are meeting,
And know not the right from the wrong;
No beckoning finger directs me,
No welcome comes to me in song;
But my Guide will soon give me a token,
By wilderness, mountain or lake;
Whatever the darkness about me,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

And I know that the way leadeth homeward
To the land of the pure and the blest,
To the country of ever fair summer,
To the city of peace and of rest;
And there shall be healing for sickness,
And fountains life's fever to slake;
What matters if still I go homeward?—
"He knoweth the way that I take."

—Selected.

What silences we keep year after year
With those who are most near to us and dear;
We live beside each other day by day,
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full, sweet word that lies within our reach
Beneath the common ground of common speech.

Family Department

COLLECT AND CALENDAR.

MARCH.

1. Tuesday.
6. Fourth Sunday in Lent.
13. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
20. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
24. Maundy Thursday.
25. Good Friday. Annunciation B. V. M
27. Easter Day.
31. Thursday.

Collect for Fifth Sunday In Lent.

We beseech Thee, Almighty God, mercifully to look upon Thy people; that by Thy great goodness they may be governed and preserved evermore, both in body and soul; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

A Mother's Prayer.

Gene Scott Wright.

Give Thou Thine angels charge, O Lord,
To keep them, one and all,
The dear ones that I leave behind,
And let no ill befall.
Go with the workers to their work
And keep them straght and true,
Be near them in their several homes,
And in their outings, too.

And then the little ones, dear Lord,
Who on our care rely,
Who on Life's threshold tiptoe stand
With eager heart and eye—
For whom Tomorrow brings no thought
Which clouds their bright Today,
Forbid, forbid that aught should spoil
The gladness of their way.

For scarcely Youth can claim his own
Ere Manhood overtakes
With burdens for both heart and brain,
And for the soul that wakes.
Have mercy on Thy children, Lord,
Both small and great, I pray,
And let Thine angels keep their guard
Each step, and all the way.

For The Southern Churchman.

The Value of Human Suffering.

Eugenie du Maurier.

There are days in life's diary which have fairly burned themselves ineffaceably into our memories. All of us have had our dark and cloudy days, our days of rain and storm. All have seen days when adversity, bereavement, sickness, poverty, disappointment, sadness and weariness filled all our atmosphere. One small instant and our outward circumstances were changed, and we with them. Oh, all of us have had such days! And all of us remember their sting and their misery. Then we wondered, perhaps, whether there was a God at all. In the weight of our woe we forgot that for us were pronounced the sweetest benedictions that fell from the Saviour's lips, "Blessed are they that mourn," "Blessed are you when they shall revile you," "Blessed are you when men shall hate you," are all directed to life's unfortunates, to the wounded and to the beaten, to those that have tasted the bitterness of life's cup to the full. And could it be otherwise? Could we expect Him who "was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" to be fully known save by those who had gone through the wine-press of sorrow and suffering?

Christ died a failure, in the estimation of the world, yet that failure became the triumph that overcame the world. Sorrow, in justice, oppression, hatred and malice apparently crushed Him down; but they are, as they ever must be, the marks of His greatest strength. Through them He elevated all men into the power of becoming the sons of God. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the desert, so must the Son of man be lifted up." "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all things to myself." To His poor, unlettered followers, He must have appeared mad when He made this assertion. Yet the ages that have run their course since then have proven that He was correct in His statement.

The great majestic figures of history were men who knew pain and persecution. The Church was in her fairest and purest stage when subjected to the fires of oppression and cruelty; for only under the stress of these could the blood of martyrs become the seed of Christianity. So it always was, and so it always shall be. The size of any man's life in Christ is not measured by the things he has wrung from the world, but by the gold he has extracted from the smelter of life's anguish and misery. Even as the tree grows firmer and statelier by the fierceness of the wind's might against it, so no life in Christ can ever know its power to save by opposition. Men build their souls for eternity not on the shifting sands of ephemeral joy and of living along the line of least resistance, but on the persecutions, the difficulties and the trials which the love for Christ forced them to meet. The crosses are their thrones in Christian greatness, even as the cross on Calvary became the throne of grace revealing to the whole world the riches of the divine love.

The first lesson we must learn is that our trials, sorrows and tribulations are given us to purify our souls from the dross of worldliness and sin, to make our lives the better for God and His kingdom. As long as a man is healthy and his life is free from trouble, losses and disappointments, he is apt to forget God and His law. Years of unbroken worldly success and happiness mean, in the majority of cases, the smothering of the noblest spiritual feelings. In the world, we become of the world; we begin to die to religion and to God. He no longer plays His part in our schemes of things; and we grow wilful, proud and rebellious. Then comes the check. Loss of health, of friends, or of worldly goods plunges us from happiness into darkness of despair and loneliness. We are withdrawn from the world and the world from us. Then we see things in their due perspective, in all their worth before God. And we know now that the life of all sunshine is not the life of Christ. Then all the things of the world prove stale, flat and unprofitable, and we feel ourselves no longer drawn to them; for now that we are beaten down, they have lost their capacity for filling the void of our soul's real yearning. God has interfered in time. He sent our affliction to extract the poison from our being. And He has rid us of the baneful influence that in time would have destroyed us, body and soul. Did you ever see a sculptor at work? Before him rests a large block of marble. With chisel and mallet he cuts off a rough edge here and trims the surface there. Days and days of incessant hammering and rubbing throw that piece of marble into shape. Slowly the features appear. And a masterpiece is made. And so it is with God. With the chisel of suffering and the mallet of misfortune, He is fashioning us into the image of His own divine Son. In no other way could He form us. He had to break in order to build.

So when chastisement comes, let us welcome our hours of misery as sacred hours. Let us seize upon them and grasp them, and not let them go until they have left us their meed of blessing. They arouse the soul as nothing else could, and make it once more think of the joy of dwelling in the Father's house and the sweets that are there.

The blind man could never have prayed as he did, could never have been so persevering, could never have had such faith and trust, had he not been unfortunate. Had his circumstances been otherwise, he would probably have been part of the prayerless, worldly, doubting crowd that followed close upon the heels of the Master. It was only when the stress of great want pressed heavily upon him that the prodigal son began to think of his father's home which he had left for a life of sin. In the case of the straying soul God employs His crosses and afflictions to bring it back to Himself. Conversions have been wrought by joy and success. But the soul has been made to live better for God more often by sickness and weariness and disappointment. Pain, death, sorrow, loss, all are God's ways of disciplining us into strength and energy. He visited us, not to harden, but to correct; not to torture and degrade, but to amend; not to burn, but to melt.

Unfair.

That great word "squareness" ought to have a place in our religion. We are much mistaken if we suppose that it is a merely secular word and has nothing to do with what is spiritual. If the apostles never used it they none the less had that virtue always in mind, and they never soared into heights of ecstasy without first planting their feet firmly on the most honorable and generous treatment of their fellowmen. The grace of fair dealing exhales from every page of the New Testament, and the Christian life as it develops there. If they do not speak of it by name it is because they not only have it, but go way beyond it.

You are on the solid ground of social contacts which are just and generous before you are borne on eagle wings into the heights of vision. If they ever found themselves being unfair, and they did, those apostolic men started with shame and made swift work of their self-correction. Peter was often unfair, and we have the story of how he not only came to be the knower of the divine nature, but also of times when he was just dead wrong and caught in unfairness toward men and brethren. Jacob was the unfairest of men from his birth, from his very birth scheming and contending with his brother, and always with somebody, till at last he was brought right and contended with God to bring all kinds of blessing down upon men.

It kills religion if a so-called spiritual man is found unfair with his fellowmen. He may go far above other men in his range of thought, but if he lets this become an excuse for careiessness about small, plain, common duties his whole religion is vitiated. Yet men have used as an excuse for ignoring little obligations the fact that they were thinking of such high things that these lesser things did not matter. The apostles made the highest doctrine keep step with the lowliest duties. Without any sense of incongruity Paul goes in a breath from the glories of celestial life and resurrection to a collection for the saints. The man who believes in the near coming of our Lord, if he is to adorn his doctrine, ought to be found more careful, attentive, delicately observant and sensitive than any other man about life's little duties of squareness and honor. To him more than to any one else we ought to have the right to look for scrupulous and generous regard of fairness and honesty, faithful labor and care for others.

Men who would never allow themselves to be unfair in the obvious dealings of life, and would start sensitively at any charge of unscrupulousness, do nevertheless become more unfair than they suspect in ways with which no one will ever charge them. Perhaps it is after all in directions where no one will ever accuse us that we may fail worst. Few will ever bring against us the charge of prayerlessness, and yet altogether the greatest harm we ever do may be in prayer withheld, and it may be here that we impoverish the life around us more than in any other way. Samuel felt this when he said, "Far be it from me that I should sin against Jehovah by ceasing to pray for you." He was sensitive to that possibility. Much as his other services to his people were worth (and they had stopped), and little as the nation deserved after their treatment of him, there was one thing he would not do, and that was stop praying for them. The unfairness of not using that great gift which he knew so well was the best he had, smote him, and he could not refuse it.

Yet many who would be the soul of honor about doing all that is expected of them in material ways think it will not be felt or noticed if they slack up on their praying. There is nobody to upbraid us when we let it go, no one to praise us when we keep it up; it is all unseen and hidden, for the most part unspoken of; but none the less it is altogether the mightiest thing we ever do for people, and the withholding of it is the sorest loss we ever occasion them. The unfairness of which nobody will ever directly complain is the one for which a true man will upbraid himself the worst. Nobody may notice the lack (at once), but we know we are not giving our best. We are not dealing fairly with people.

The crowds who surrounded Jesus in the early days of His ministry would never think of asking Him to retire and pray for strength. They would more likely ask Him not to do any such thing, but rather to give them every moment. They would never ask a question about how that full tide of strength and loving service was to be kept full. But Christ knew that it would be unfair to them if He did not daily refill His life at its source in His Father. So He did for them better than they could ask or think.

The truly spiritual man will never think it fair to do no more than people ask of him. He will insist on thinking better of their needs than they do. That will be a part of his honor toward them. He will wince under their praise when they are quite contented with what he is doing, but when he himself knows that they have not yet had his best.

We may put it to ourselves in higher ways, but sometimes our whole spiritual nature is enriched by just using this common, modest question, Is it fair? Is it fair for a man who has a Christian faith not to use it constantly and in all the avenues of his life for the benefit of his fellows? They may seem not to care in the least whether he has a Christian faith or not: outwardly they may act as if it were the last thing they ever thought of; but all the time they need it, and down in their hearts they crave that those who have it will show it and let it out. If we have a faith we owe it to our fellows to let them have all the advantage of it which we can possibly arrange for them.

Unfair! Men who will not be moved by any other appeal will sometimes be struck by that. They do not mean to be unfair.—Sunday School Times.

Bethany Hymn.

"That our daughters may be as the polished cornes of the Temple."

Lord, Thy daughters pray Thee,
Make us one and all
Like the polished corners
Of the Temple wall;
Keep us firm and steadfast
Where Thou bidst us stay,
Valiant in endurance,
Ready to obey.
Lord, Thy daughters pray Thee,
Fit us one and all
For the polished corners
Of Thy Temple wall.

Strong to bear the burden
Of the upper stones,
Strong to stand the tempest
When it shrieks and moans;
We grow weak and weary
Wrestling hard with wrong
With Thy strength, O Saviour,
Thou canst make us strong.
Lord, Thy daughters pray Thee,
Fit us one and all
For the polished corners
Of Thy Temple wall.

Marble from the quarry,
Rough and dull of hue,
Must be ground and polished,
Beautiful and new:
Father, Thou Who willest
That our souls grow fair,
May we suffer gladly
All Thou bidst us bear.
Lord, Thy daughters pray Thee,
Fit us one and all
For the polished corners
Of Thy Temple wall.

When our eyes are opened
In the Light above,
We shall know the glory
Of Thy power and love:
All these stones, with labor
Wrought and fitted well,
Make a habitation
Where Thyself may'st dwell.
Lord, Thy daughters pray Thee,
Fit us one and all
For the polished corners
Of Thy Temple wall.

—Author Unknown.

Young Japan Restless.

"Change is seething in Japan, although the surface of things has not changed much," writes Miss Ruth Ragan, representative of the Y. W. C. A. in Japan, who recently arrived in Tokyo, after four years of absence in this country. "I have been amazed to find in the home of a Japanese acquaintance the latest and most radical of Socialist writings, and they are read by both husband and wife. When I left Japan several years ago the words "labor" or "social problems" could not have been mentioned without fear of arrest and of more to follow."

Among the students in Japan, there is a growing spirit of dissatisfaction with many of their teachers, with the kinds of lessons, and with things in general. A Japanese graduate of the Imperial University told Miss Ragan that many of the teachers are of the order of old Japan, and are content with dead things, that they are not helping young Japan prepare itself for life. "Young Japan is beginning to think for itself," he said. "Shackles are going off every day in Japan now. No one who has not lived through the old order of things can realize the change."

Miss Ragan is located in Tokyo, where she is developing health and recreational work for Japanese girls.

Be Brave.

Be brave to live. Desponding heart heart be strong—
Strong to submit, to trust, to wait;
Our God is true, although His times be long
And hope's fulfilment late.

And thee He loveth; stronger love is not;
Earth cannot give a peace so deep,
Then calmly live, take patiently thy lot,
And God thy spirit keep.

—W. R. H.

The Supreme Sacrifice.

The American destroyer Cassin had been for days on the hard patrol duty off the Irish coast, convoying merchant vessels and hunting submarines, and then suddenly there sounded the call of the lookouts who had sighted a German U-boat on the surface five miles away. The Cassin put on all steam and dashed for it at full speed, with her crew at their battle stations. The submarine saw her coming and submerged; not even a ripple showing her location when the destroyer reached the spot.

For half an hour the Cassin searched the area, zigzagging back and forth, when the commanding officer sighted a torpedo coming at high speed four hundred yards away, headed to strike the vessel amidships.

Commander Vernou rang for emergency full speed ahead on both engines, put the rudder hard over and was just clear of the torpedo's course when it broached on the surface and turned sharply toward the vessel. The torpedo was now heading for the stern, where the deadly depth charges are placed.

Osmun K. Ingram, gunner's mate, first class, took in the situation at a glance. There was no way of avoiding the blow. If it struck there, with the deck piled with high explosives, the ship would be blown up, with the loss probably of all on board. At least the man who was there when the torpedo hit could not hope to survive. But the only hope for the ship was to get those depth charges out of the way.

Like a flash Osmun Ingram dashed down the deck and rolled the huge bombs overboard. The instant they went into the water the torpedo struck. Ingram was blown to pieces. He had known his fate, but he had saved his ship. And that's the story behind the name on the bow of one of our newest destroyers today—the Ingram—a ship floating the Stars and Stripes and named for an enlisted man. "For there's no rank in sacrifice."—Selected.

Since we love eminence so much, let us seek it where it is to be found; let us seek that which will last forever. O! the admirable ambition, that of reigning eternally with the Son of God, and to be seated forever on the same throne with Him.—Fenelon.

For the Young Folks

The Town of Don't You Worry.

There's a town called Don't You Worry,
On the banks of River Smile,
Where the Cheer-Up and Be Happy
Blossom sweetly all the while.
Where the Never-grumble flower
Blooms beside the fragrant Try
And the Ne'er Give-Up and Patience
Point their faces to the sky.

In the Valley of Contentment,
In the province of I-Will,
You will find this lovely City
At the foot of No-Fret Hill.
There are thoroughfares delighted
In this very charming town,
And on every hand are shade trees
Named the "Very Seldom Frown."

Rustic benches quite enticing
You'll find scattered here and there,
And to each a Vine is clinging
Called the Frequent Earnest Prayer.
Everybody there is happy
And is Singing all the whole,
In the town of Don't You Worry
On the banks of River Smile.

—Christian Herald.

For the Southern Churchman.

Grandma's Birthday Present.

F. E. L.

PART II.

"Oh!" cried Mary Jane, "I wonder if I have found the money grandma has so often told me about—and the diamond ring of great-grandmother's—yes, here it is," she said to herself, as she found a tiny little box, and on opening it saw the sparkle of the diamond.

"Yes, I know this must be what grandma told me about. I remember she said, when they heard the Federal troops were coming, old Uncle James came and told her that she and the children had better go to a cabin a mile or two from the house, and he would stay and hide the valuables, and not tell her where, so, if asked about them, she could truthfully say she did not know where they were.

"Oh, isn't it lovely. To think I should have found all these things after so many years! And, now, I have a present for grandma, sure enough! How pleased she will be, and Uncle Reuben will not have to worry any more. I am so glad I've found them, but I will finish the slippers anyhow, because if it had not been for them I should never have found the things."

Before the war the Masons had been able to live in ease and comfort; with a well-cultivated farm, and entirely comfortable dwelling, and a goodly sum laid away for a rainy day. The ready money in gold and a few jewels, faithful old "Uncle James" had undertaken to put out of the way of the approaching enemy, after getting the family in safety out of the house.

After the war was over and peace again reigned the Masons almost hourly expected "Uncle James" to come or send them tidings of their hidden treasure, but they had waited in vain. Their faith in the fidelity of "Uncle James" had never wavered, but after a year or more had passed without any news of him they had supposed him dead; and had to face the gloomy outlook, with the savings of many years gone and a mortgage on the farm.

As the years went on and still no tidings came, they ceased to look for "Uncle James," and when Reuben grew old enough to take the responsibility of the farm they did away with as much outside help as possible, and settled down quietly in their straitened circumstances.

And another member had been added to the household, when little Mary Jane was left an orphan at ten years of age. At the time she came they had a servant named Mary, and so the little Mary grew into "Mary Jane," to make the distinction. The child was a real help to Aunt Tilly, a comfort to grandma in her declining years, and quite a pet with Uncle Reuben, entertaining him in the evenings after he had read his paper.

As matters had grown worse, rather than better, they had not been able to reduce the mortgage, and now, with the wheat not doing well, the potatoes frozen, and the best mare sick, Uncle Reuben was in the depths of despair.

Such was the state of things when Mary Jane found the treasure hid in the worsted that cold winter's day.

After she had admired the diamond and turned the gold pieces over in her hands several times, she suddenly remembered that it was a week yet before grandma's birthday. And if she should tell them now it would help everything and raise everybody's spirits to know the lost treasure was found—but she felt she really could not tell them until grandma's birthday.

She next began to consider where she could hide the things where no one would be likely to find them, and finally put them in a little box, which she wrapped up in some old rags and hid in a corner. She tried to go on with her crocheting, but she was so excited she just could not work, so she hid her work safely away and went downstairs

But the household was not in harmony with her jubilant spirits; everything was gloomy; even the old cat seemed to understand the state of things, looking duller and sleepier than ever, and Mary Jane felt a chill come over her the minute she entered the room, so she quietly sat down on her favorite seat, the low stool by the fire.

In a few minutes Aunt Tilly came in from milking and began to prepare for supper. Mary Jane lighted the lamp and set the table; and things looked a little brighter, indoors at least, by the time Uncle Reuben came in. But the gloom settled worse than ever when he said:

"Well, mother, the old horse is dead!"

Nobody spoke a word; Mary Jane saw the tears in Aunt Tilly's eyes, and feeling her own very near the surface, she rushed hurriedly up to her room and threw herself on her bed, exclaiming:

"Oh, I am so miserable!" I wonder if I ought to tell them now? It would be so nice to wait until grandma's birthday!"

"I will ask Jesus what to do," she thought as she knelt down by the side of her bed and prayed a simple little prayer for guidance. Then quietly she went downstairs again.

It was the most doleful meal she had ever seen in that house. Nobody said anything, except that Uncle Reuben remarked that the interest on the mortgage would be due in just one week. He had expected to pay it with the money from the potatoes; but now he supposed the farm must be mortgaged more heavily, and they might be in the poor-house by this time next year.

Mary Jane brightened up at the thought that grandma's birthday would be in time to pay the interest and prevent increasing the mortgage.

During the days that followed Mary Jane worked faithfully and patiently, until the eve of the eventful day, when the precious slippers were finished. They were brown with a yellow border which Mary Jane thought beautiful. The worsted had just held out. Each ball had contained more glittering gold and jewels, until she had quite a considerable pile stored away in her corner.

At last the longed-for day dawned, and Mary Jane was so happy she could scarcely contain herself.

"A happy birthday, and many happy returns, grandma!" she fairly shouted, as she ran up to the bedside to give grandma a birthday kiss.

"Not a very happy one, I am afraid, dear," said grandma, with a sigh.

"Oh, yes, grandma, I 'spect you will be happy," said Mary Jane with a twinkle of fun in her eyes.

But grandma only sighed again, little suspecting the glad surprise awaiting her.

At breakfast grandma was to receive the gifts prepared for her. Mary Jane had put the money and jewels in the slippers, and they looked very queer, all stuffed out in the most peculiar fashion.

"What ails you, Mary Jane?" said Aunt Tilly, wonderingly. "I never saw you in such a state."

But Mary Jane only danced about the more, as she said, "You will know before long. Please, can't I call grandma?"

"Yes, child, everything is ready," said Aunt Tilly.

As she spoke, grandma and Uncle Reuben came in. "Well!" said grandma, "I seem to be having a birthday after all." But there was a tinge of sadness in her voice as she asked the blessing.

First she opened Aunt Tilly's present, a nice warm comfort, which grandma said was just the thing she had longed for. She was equally pleased with Uncle Reuben's foot-stool, saying it would be "such a comfort."

Then came the slippers. Mary Jane held her breath in suppressed excitement.

"Did you make them, Mary Jane? They are so warm and nice," grandma said; "but—mercy's sake! What on earth does this mean!" she exclaimed as she ran her hand into one of them and pulled out a handful of gold pieces.

"What on earth, indeed!" exclaimed Aunt Tilly and Uncle Reuben at once.

Then came the whole story. And, as grandma pressed Mary Jane to her heart with tears in her eyes, she whispered, "God bless you, my child; you have made my declining years to be peaceful and happy. I will prize the slippers highly, because my little girl made them for me, and hid such a lovely secret in them, too."

Be a Bit of Sunshine.

Work a little, sing a little,
Whistle and be gay;
Read a little, play a little,
Busy every day;
Talk a little, laugh a little,
Don't forget to pray;
Be a bit of merry sunshine
All the blessed day.

—Selected.

Teddy.

Teddy was a most energetic and serious-faced bulldog. He belonged to Mr. and Mrs. Bowie, Pacific Coast Bible missionaries, who started from Portland, Ore., in a wagon for a long journey across the mountains and plains. They carried Bibles in many languages to be sold and distributed to the ranchers whose homes were scattered along the road, and to the miners and loggers whose camps were in the mountains.

